Mehta's virtuoso account of the Alpine Symphony (1975) was among the best Strauss he gave us, and he is supported by recording quality that is wide in range and rich in detail. His account of the Symphonia Domestica is not quite so successful – it gives the impression that he has relocated Strauss's domestic household to a well-lit penthouse in downtown Manhattan. There is no doubting the quality of the orchestral playing, nor of the (1969) recording, both of which remain impressive. Previn's account of the rare Parergon, based on themes from the symphony, which was written for Paul Wittgenstein in 1924, is a complete success. Previn gives the VPO its head in repertoire that they know inside out, and Gary Graffman proves an eloquent soloist. The DG sound is first class. Dorati's digital Macbeth is very well played and brilliantly recorded, though other versions have offered sharper characterization.

Also sprach Zarathustra, Op. 30 (DVD version)

🔑  Sony DVD SVD 46388. BPO, Karajan – MOZART: Divertimento 17 **(*)

By the time Karajan conducted the concert celebrating the 750th anniversary of the founding of Berlin, he was already ailing, as one registers from his painful progress to the podium each time; once there, however, the electric intensity of his conducting never falters in passionate commitment to this great Strauss work, always a favourite of his. Though the hushed close makes this a subdued sort of celebration. Karajan's control is emphasized in the total silence at the end, until his subtle signal of release for the applause to begin, at which the audience responds with fervour. It is a help that the DVD offers ample index points separating the sections. This DVD is short measure but is still indispensable.

Also sprach Zarathustra; Death and Transfiguration

🔑  Telarc CD 80167. VPO, Previn (without Don Juan)

Previn draws magnificent playing from the Vienna Philharmonic in powerful, red-blooded readings of the symphonic poems, and the recording is among Telarc's finest. Strongly recommended for anyone wanting this particular coupling, and enjoying spectacularly voluptuous sound-quality.

Also sprach Zarathustra; Death and Transfiguration; Don Quixote; Ein Alpensinfonie; Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40; Metamorphosen; Sinfonia domestica

Ⓝ  Sony DVD 886971954469. BPO, Karajan

Karajan had a special way with this composer, as we are reminded in these DVD performances, sensitively handled by the video director and of course stunningly played. The Metamorphosen is moving, even if Karajan's pioneering set with the Vienna Philharmonic had even greater immediacy of feeling. Death and Transfiguration is also marvellously played and has genuine grandeur and nobility. These performances belong in any good collection. Unaccountably (and unforgivably) the two soloists in Don Quixote are not credited either in the skimpy booklet, on the sleeve, or on the screen.

Also sprach Zarathustra, Op. 30; Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61389-2. Chicago SO, Reiner

() Testament mono SBT 1183. VPO, Krauss

These were the first stereo sessions the RCA engineers arranged with Fritz Reiner, after the company had taken over the Chicago Orchestra's recording contract from Mercury, and the series of records they made with Reiner and his players in Orchestra Hall remain a technical peak in the history of stereo recording and the impressive feeling of space it conveyed. Later reissues have improved on its definition but none has done so with the stunning success of the present transfer. Ein Heldenleben shows Reiner in equally splendid form. There have been more incisive, more spectacular and more romantic performances, but Reiner achieves an admirable balance and whatever he does is convincing. If anything, the recording sounds even better than Also sprach and the warm acoustics of Orchestra Hall help convey Reiner's humanity in the closing pages of the work.

Clemens Krauss brings the heroic sweep, the contrasts and delicacy of texture and the breadth of Ein Heldenleben before one's eyes. There is a nobility here (and, for that matter, in Zarathustra too) that not every Strauss conductor conveys.

Aus Italien, Op. 16; Don Juan, Op. 20

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Oehms OC 631. V. RSO, De Billy

The Vienna Radio Symphony Orchestra (founded in 1969) is a first-class ensemble, with a rich, yet brilliant, string patina, and excellent wind soloists, and Bertrand De Billy's account of Aus Italien is full of warmth and colour, while the musical characterization is excellent. It is coupled with a splendidly vibrant performance of Don Juan, exhilarating in its vigour and compelling flow of adrenalin. The horns are passionately thrusting in the big climax, matched by the thrilling ardour of the strings. The recording is very good; but it is superior when played as a SACD, with the back speakers adding extra ambient lustre to the sound picture.

Aus Italien; Die Liebe der Danae (symphonic fragment); Der Rosenkavalier: Waltz sequence 2

(BB)  Naxos 8.550342. Slovak PO, Košler

On Naxos, a very well-recorded and vividly detailed account of Aus Italien with an excellent sense of presence. The orchestra plays very well for Zdeněk Košler both here and in the ten-minute symphonic fragment Clemens Krauss made from Die Liebe der Danae and in the Rosenkavalier waltz sequence. The Slovak Philharmonic is a highly responsive body, with cultured strings and wind departments and, given the quality of the recorded sound, this represents a real bargain.

Aus Italien, Op.16; Metamorphosen for 23 Solo Strings

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 10218X. RSNO, Järvi

Aus Italien is early and does not do the composer the fullest justice. The orchestra seems at home in the score, giving the finale a certain Celtic lilt. Metamorphosen finds Järvi's account deeply felt and ardent, and the Scottish strings convey the underlying angst of the music with moving passion: they also play very well indeed. The recording is rich, expansive and natural. All in all, a great success and attractively priced.

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (Suite, Op. 60); Dance Suite (after Couperin)

🔑 (BB)  ASV COE CD COE 809. COE, Leinsdorf

Erich Leinsdorf is an unexpected conductor in this repertoire; although he has not quite the light touch of a Beecham, he enjoys the advantage of the superb wind soloists and ensemble of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe, whom he directs with genuine style and affection. The coupling is ideal, for Strauss's Dance Suite, arranged from keyboard pieces of Couperin, has much anachronistic charm. The suite from Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme has two numbers not included by Beecham, the Courante and the exquisitely played Entry of Cleonte. Altogether a most successful coupling, very well recorded.

(i) Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (Suite, Op. 60); (i; ii) Don Quixote, Op. 35; (i) Ein Heldenleben; (iii) Metamorphosen

🔑 (BB) ((*)) EMI mono/stereo Gemini 3 71502-2 (2). (i) RPO, Beecham; (ii) with Paul Tortelier; (iii) New Philh. O, Barbirolli

Strauss's incidental music for Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, with its pastiche poise and elegance, was surely custom-made for Beecham, whose performance is full of delightful touches, yet with plenty of energy when called for, as in the portrayal of The Fencing Master. The 1947/8 Abbey Road recording is clear and faithful, but rather dry, and the lack of stereo warmth and amplitude is even more noticeable in the climaxes of Don Quixote in the later part of the work. But this is again an inimitably detailed Beecham reading, made special by the tenderly refined contribution of Paul Tortelier. Beecham's 1961 Ein Heldenleben is in stereo, of course, and the performance is immensely vigorous yet tender and sensuous when the music calls for it. Barbirolli's Metamorphosen, too, is a fine one. The playing of the New Philharmonia strings is most eloquent, with a warm glow and an intense valedictory feeling. In both these works the advantages of stereo are obvious.

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (incidental music); (i) Ein Heldenleben

🔑 * EMI 3 39339-2. BPO, Rattle; (i) with Braunstein

It says much for Sir Simon Rattle's achievement in Berlin that the result in this live recording offers the keenest rivalry for the recordings of his great predecessor, Herbert von Karajan, for whom Ein Heldenleben was a favourite work. The heroic opening section already establishes the extra warmth and expressive flexibility of Rattle's approach. What remains a constant is the opulence of the Berlin Philharmonic sound, bringing out the subtlety of Rattle's control and the refinement of the orchestra's playing. Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme is a generous coupling, bringing the overall timing of the disc to an exceptional 82 minutes. The engineers, though working in the Philharmonie as in Heldenleben, have rightly balanced the microphones to give a much more intimate result with this chamber ensemble in a performance that delightfully captures the light-heartedness of this music.

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme: Suite, Op. 60; Symphonia domestica, Op. 53

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1184. VPO, Krauss

Remarkably few allowances need be made for the 1951 recording of the Symphonia domestica. Krauss had given it its Viennese première in 1922, and this was its first (and for many years only) LP recording. This has a special authenticity of feeling and richness of response that disarm criticism. Krauss conducted many early performances of the suite from Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme and this unforgettable (1952) account has wonderful lightness of touch and delicacy of feeling. Its charm is quite irresistible.

Burleske for piano and orchestra

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46768-2. Grimaud, Berlin State O, Kurt Sanderling – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 1 in D min. ***

Hélène Grimaud is not only an impressive Brahms interpreter but a virtuoso of no mean order. She dispatches the Richard Strauss Burleske with great aplomb and, with the help of Sanderling, finds much character in the music. Good recording too.

(i) Capriccio: Sextet (arr. for strings); (ii) Don Quixote, Op. 35; (iii) Feuersnot: Love Scene. Die Frau ohne Schatten: Symphonic fantasy. Metamorphosen; (iv) Der Rosenkavalier: First & Second Suite of Waltzes; (iii) Salome: Dance of the Seven Veils; (iv) Till Eulenspiegel

Ⓝ  Australian DG Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 480 0478 (2). (i) Stuttgart CO, Münchinger; (ii) Machula, Concg. O, Haitink; (iii) Dresden State O, Sinopoli; (iv) Concg. O, Jochum

Sinopoli is an excellent Straussian and, in the mid-1990s, he achieved very impressive results with the Dresden Orchestra with very sensuous playing, not least in Salome's Dance, where ravishing string-tone is perfectly married to his moulded and flexible style. The Love Scene from Strauss's very first opera, Feuersnot, is drawn from the closing pages of the opera, a delectable passage that ought to be better known. The Symphonic Fantasy from Die Frau ohne Schatten was put together in 1946 at a time when complete performances of this favourite among his operas looked unlikely. Again Sinopoli's concentration and the fine playing of the orchestra, sumptuously recorded, give cohesion to an obviously sectional piece. The strings of the Staatskapelle Dresden also produce a magnificent sonority in Metamorphosen, and the DG engineers do them proud. There are some splendid things in Haitink's performance of Don Quixote. Although it does not match the heady, intoxicating flamboyance of either of the Karajan versions, the orchestral playing is still superb. Machula does not quite touch the depths of Fournier in the Don's dying peroration, but he has great dignity and beauty of tone. The 1974 recording remains impressive. Jochum's early (1960s) account of Till Eulenspiegel is excellently characterized, and the Waltz sequences from Der Rosenkavalier are stylishly enjoyable. Münchinger's richly recorded Sextet from Capriccio is very enjoyable too.

Horn Concertos 1 in E flat, Op. 11; 2 in E flat

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67782-2 [Angel 5 67783-2]. Brain, Philh. O, Sawallisch – HINDEMITH: Horn Concerto; Concert Music ***

(i) Horn Concertos 1; (ii) 2; (iii) Oboe Concerto; (iv) Duet Concertino for Clarinet & Bassoon

 DG 453 483-2. (i) Janezic; (ii) Stransky; (iii) Gabriel; (iv) Schmidl, Werba; VPO, Previn

(i) Horn Concertos 1-2; (ii) Duet Concertino for Clarinet & Bassoon; Wind Serenade in E flat, Op. 11

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 573 5132. (i) Pyatt; (ii) Farrall, Andrews; Britten Sinfonia, Cleobury

Dennis Brain's performances are incomparable. Sawallisch gives him admirable support, and fortunately the latest EMI CD transfer captures the full quality of the 1956 mono recording.

David Pyatt gives a ripely exuberant performance of the first of Strauss's two Horn Concertos. The more elusive first movement of the Second Concerto is shaped – often quite subtly – in an attractively rhapsodical style, while the finale brings heady, lightly tongued bravura. The outer movements of the gently rapturous Duet Concertino are presented with enticing delicacy of texture, and the slow movement again brings a most touchingly doleful opening solo, this time from the bassoonist, Julie Andrews. Cleobury and the Britten Sinfonia give sensitive support throughout, and the early Serenade is always fresh, never congealing, helped by the naturally balanced recording, made in the Henry Wood Hall, Southwark.

On DG some glorious music-making, relaxed, unforced and full of expressive delights. The virtuosity is at no time self-regarding and everybody appears to be enjoying themselves. The sound, too, is as natural as the music-making. A most welcome addition to the catalogue.

Oboe Concerto in D

🔑 (BB)  ASV CD COE 808. Boyd, COE, Berglund – MOZART: Oboe Concerto ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3955-2. Hanták, Brno PO, Vogel (with MOZART: Oboe Concerto) – MARTINŮ: Oboe Concerto **

Douglas Boyd winningly brings out the happy glow of Strauss's inspiration of old age, and the ebb-and-flow of his expression with its delicate touching in of the characteristic flourishes in the solo line sounds totally spontaneous. His warm oboe tone, less reedy than some, equally brings out the Rosenkavalier element in this lovely concerto. The coupling with Mozart is uniquely apt and, with warm, well-balanced recording, the gentle contrast of romantic and classical in this work is delectably conveyed.

In the Supraphon recording, Hanták is placed right on top of the microphone (as he is in the Mozart), which gives a certain 'squawkiness' to his tone. The orchestra too is on the fierce side, although these defects of balance are reasonably tameable on a flexible reproducer. The performance is vivid and forthright, not quite relaxed enough, but by no means insensitive.

Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 8

🔑  ASV CDDCA 780. Xue Wei, LPO, Glover – HEADINGTON: Violin concerto *** ❁

With Jane Glover and the LPO warmly sympathetic accompanists, Xue Wei makes a very persuasive case for this very early work of Strauss, with its echoes of Mendelssohn and Bruch.

Death and Transfiguration; Don Juan; Till Eulenspiegel

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62790-2. VPO, Furtwängler – SMETANA: Vltava ***

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1383. Philh. O, Karajan – WAGNER: Tannhäuser: Venusberg music ()

Don Juan and Till Eulenspiegel come from 1954, some months before the onset of deafness brought Furtwängler's career to an end, while Death and Transfiguration was recorded in Vienna in 1950. They are performances of commanding stature and have the glowing sonorities, naturalness of utterance and mastery of pace that characterized Furtwängler at his best. The EMI recordings still sound glorious despite their age, though climaxes in Death and Transfiguration are distinctly opaque.

Karajan's Till and the Don were recorded in the Kingsway Hall in 1951 with Walter Legge producing, and Death and Transfiguration followed 18 months later. Sound that is over half a century old can still convey a sense of freshness and sparkle. The Wagner makeweight (with the same venue and recording team) comes from 1954 and is of the same order of inspiration.

Death and Transfiguration; Metamorphosen for 23 Solo Strings

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG 410 892-2. BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 80008-2. Philh. O, Klemperer – MAHLER: Symphony 9 ***

Karajan's digital coupling of Death and Transfiguration and the Metamorphosen is one of his very finest records. This famous CD is now available at mid-price.

Both performances excite the greatest admiration. With Klemperer the work for strings has a ripeness that exactly fits Strauss's last essay for orchestra, while Death and Transfiguration is invested with a nobility too rarely heard in this work.

Death and Transfiguration; Ein Heldenleben; Salome: Dance of the 7 Veils

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 67891-2. Dresden State O, Kempe

Kempe and the great Dresden Orchestra at their finest. Death and Transfiguration is marvellously characterized. Similarly Salome's Dance is sinuously compelling but less voluptuous than with some versions, while Ein Heldenleben glows with life, and the closing pages have a special kind of rapt intensity. The excellent recordings from the early 1970s, made in the Dresden Lukaskirche, have been splendidly remastered by Andrew Walter.

(i) Death and Transfiguration; Symphonia domestica; (ii) Salome's Dance of the Seven Veils

Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 53511. (i) Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) Phd. O, Ormandy

Szell's Death and Transfiguration has the most compelling atmosphere and the triumphant closing pages are the more effective for Szell's complete lack of indulgence. The recording has been vastly improved in the present transfer, with Cleveland's Masonic Temple providing a richly expansive ambience. The Symphonia domestica, recorded in 1964, is less naturally balanced but the performance brings such powerful orchestral playing, with glorious strings especially in the passionate Adagio, that criticism is disarmed: there is certainly no lack of body here. The programme ends with an extraordinarily voluptuous Philadelphia performance of Salome's Dance. Ormandy directs with licentious abandon, and the orchestra responds with tremendous virtuosity and ardour, unashamedly going over the top at the climax.

Divertimento (after Couperin) for Small Orchestra, Op. 86

(BB)  Warner Apex 7559 79675-2. NYCO, Schwarz – SCHOENBERG: Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra after Handel ***

Strauss's Divertimento draws on sixteen of the keyboard pieces of François Couperin and scores them for small orchestra. The result is expressive, witty and tangy by turns in this very spirited account by the New York Chamber Orchestra under Gerard Schwarz. With vivid recordings and an unexpectedly entertaining Schoenberg/Handel coupling, this is well worth exploring.

Don Juan (Rehearsal and Performance; DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) EuroArts DVD 20172188. VPO, Boehm

It is good to see Karl Boehm on video. His rehearsal, however, is relatively without incident, mainly a painstaking concentration on detail. However, the performance, when it finally comes, is very impressive, not over the top, but full of vitality, missing nothing in the score and carrying complete spontaneity.

Don Juan, Op. 20

Ⓝ  Testament (ADD) SBT 1378. BPO, Szell – SCHUMANN: Symphony 2 ***

Ⓜ  Decca 475 8225. V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan – HOLST: The Planets ***

It is fascinating to hear Szell's live account of Don Juan, much warmer and less tightly controlled than his studio recordings, but with the same electricity and concern for clarity of texture. Recorded in the Phiharmonie in Berlin, the sound of the strings in the great love theme is ravishing, and so is the great horn climax in the middle of the piece, ripe beyond any rival. Excellent stereo radio sound.

Karajan's Decca recording of Don Juan, recorded in the Sofiensaal in 1960, is still among the finest versions. The sound of the Vienna Philharmonic is more leonine than that of the Berlin Philharmonic but does not lack either body or attack, and this Don has great zest and passion.

Don Juan, Op. 20; (i) Don Quixote, Op. 35

🔑 ✿ * RCA SACD (ADD) 88697 046042. Chicago SO, Reiner; (i) with Janigro

Reiner was a masterly Straussian, and Don Juan dates from the earliest days of stereo (1954); it is most famous for the sensuously erotic central section with its coitus triste, and for its superbly thrilling climax in which the great horn then leaps out unforgettably, thrustfully and opulently echoed by the strings. Don Quixote too is a top recommendation, and this 1959 version was one of the very finest of RCA's Chicago Symphony Hall recordings. Antonio Janigro plays stylishly and with assurance, and his touching contribution to the close of the work is distinguished. The new SACD transfer brings out the most refined detail; indeed, the inner clarity is astonishing, with the cello ideally balanced, though there is no loss of amplitude at climaxes.

Don Juan; Ein Heldenleben

(BB) () Dutton Lab. mono CDEA 5025. Concg. O, Mengelberg

(i) Don Juan; (ii) Ein Heldenleben; (iii) Till Eulenspiegel

🔑 Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 48272. (iii) Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) Phd. O, Ormandy

Don Juan, Op. 20; Feuersnot: Love Scene

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1255. VPO, Cluytens – WAGNER: Siegfried idyll, etc. ((*))

Don Juan; Metamorphosen; Der Rosenkavalier: Waltzes; Till Eulenspiegel

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 45826-2. Dresden State O, Kempe

Szell's Don Juan delights ear and senses by its forward surge of passionate lyricism, the whole interpretation founded on a bedrock of virtuosity from the remarkable Cleveland players. Till is irrepressibly cheeky and here the recording acoustic is almost perfect, with a warm glow on the tone of the players and every detail – and Szell makes sure one can hear every detail – crystal clear, without any loss of momentum or drama.

Ormandy's Ein Heldenleben is an engulfing performance, and the composite richness of tone and the fervour of the playing, from the Battle section onwards, bring the highest possible level of orchestral tension, finally relaxing most touchingly for the fulfilment sequence. The 1960 recording is more two-dimensional, less full, than the Cleveland recordings (which, surprisingly, were made as early as 1957) but is still appropriately spacious.

André Cluytens was rather taken for granted (at least on this side of La Manche) during the 1950s when these recordings were made. He took the Vienna Philharmonic on tour to the United States, making this inspiriting account of Don Juan with them in 1958. It was not released in Britain at that time (no doubt the catalogues were awash with alternatives), but it is well worth while catching up with it now, particularly in this splendid new transfer.

Willem Mengelberg and the Concertgebouw Orchestra were jointly the dedicatees of Richard Strauss's most ambitious orchestral work, Ein Heldenleben. They give a heartfelt performance, freely spontaneous and expansive, with old-fashioned string portamento intensifying the warmth. The splendid Dutton transfer is clear on detail with plenty of body and fair bloom on top. The Don Juan recording of 1938 is even more cleanly focused.

Don Quixote, Op. 35

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66913-2. Rostropovich, BPO, Karajan (SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto)

 EMI (ADD) 5 55528-2. du Pré, New Philh. O, Boult – LALO: Cello Concerto in D min ***

(i) Don Quixote; (ii) Horn Concerto 2

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 725-2. (i) Fournier; (ii) Hauptmann; BPO, Karajan

(i) Don Quixote; Don Juan, Op. 20; Till Eulenspiegel, Op. 28

() Testament mono SBT 1185. (i) Fournier, Moraweg; VPO, Krauss

The Karajan/Rostropovich account of Don Quixote is predictably fine. This now comes recoupled with Schumann's Cello Concerto as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' series, which the latter performance (with Bernstein) certainly is not. A sad mismatching! But the performance is also available below on a recommendable Double differently coupled.

Fournier's partnership with Karajan is also outstanding and so is the 1966 recording. It is of DG's very finest quality, with remarkable transparency, yet plenty of warmth and a believable perspective. The great cellist brings infinite subtlety and (when required) repose to his part, and Karajan's handling of the orchestral detail is quite splendid. The finale and Don Quixote's death are very moving. Norbert Hauptmann's account of the more florid of Strauss's two Horn Concertos is ripely assured with a most eloquent and touching Andante.

A magnificent Don Quixote from Clemens Krauss and his eminent soloist which encapsulates the essence of Strauss's score, and this performance with that aristocrat of cellists, Pierre Fournier, has a special nobility and authority. Both Don Juan and Till Eulenspiegel were recorded in 1950 (the Don Quixote in 1953) and are superbly characterized. In the latter, Krauss clearly does not regard this as just a conductor's showpiece but puts characterization before orchestral display.

Jacqueline du Pré's Don Quixote comes in a studio recording, dating from 1968, which has been lovingly pieced together from long-buried tapes. No doubt du Pré with more time would have sharpened up some of the bravura passages, but in its tenderness and poignancy this reading is unsurpassed. The lyrical dialogue between Sancho Panza and Quixote in the third variation has a heartfelt warmth, with Herbert Downes a fine partner on the viola. Above all, the final death scene is more yearningly tender than on any rival recording, a magical example of her art.

(i) Don Quixote; Ein Heldenleben; Symphonia domestica

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 4 76903-2 (2). BPO, Karajan; (i) with Rostropovich

Rostropovich dominates artistically. His Don is superbly characterized, and the expressiveness and richnss of tone he commands are a joy in themselves. Ein Heldenleben, superbly recorded a year earlier, again offers a performance which shows a remarkable consistency of approach on Karajan's part and an equal virtuosity of technique, and even greater sumptuousness of tone on the part of the Berlin Philharmonic compared with the earlier DG performances, while the playing is gloriously ardent. The Symphonia domestica is equally admirably served by a recording from one more year earlier. The playing is stunningly good and the sumptuous Berlin strings produce tone of great magnificence. Altogether a superb triptych for reissue in EMI's Karajan Collection, the only snag being that the Symphonia domestica involves a side-break immediately before the finale.

(i) Don Quixote, Op. 35; Romance in F; (i) Cello Sonata in F, Op. 6

 RCA 74321 75398-2. (i) Isserlis, Bavarian Radio SO, Maazel; (ii) Hough, Maazel (piano)

Steven Isserlis on RCA is an ardent soloist and is even more impressive than he was in his earlier recording with Edo de Waart (Virgin). He makes a glorious sound and characterizes each variation with flair and is well partnered by an anonymous Sancho Panza, presumably the first violist of the Bavarian Orchestra. It is among the best of the recent Dons though it does not displace the likes of Rostropovich or Fournier (both with Karajan). One of the other attractions of the disc is a vibrant account of the early Cello Sonata with Stephen Hough as a splendid partner. Very good sound.

Duet Concertino (for clarinet & bassoon)

(BB)  ASV COE CD COE 811. Hosford, Wilkie, COE, T. Fischer – COPLAND; MOZART: Clarinet Concertos ***

As with the Copland coupling, Richard Hosford and the strings of the COE open the Duet Concertino beguilingly, and the bassoonist Matthew Wilkie is equally seductive in his introductory solo in the Andante, while both soloists intertwine engagingly in the finale. Thierry Fischer and the COE provide a highly atmospheric backcloth and the recording is warm and beautifully balanced.

Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40 (DVD version)

⊶ * RCO Live DVD RCO 04103, or Surround Sound SACD RCO 04005. Concg. O, Jansons; (DVD – V/D: Hans Hulscher – with Documentary 'The Sixth Maestro' – introducing Mariss Jansons as the orchestra's conductor)

Jansons's magnificent Concertgebouw performance of Ein Heldenleben comes in a superb SACD recording in natural surround sound which, with four speakers, captures the richness of the Concertgebouw acoustic and gives the orchestra the most sumptuous and detailed presentation in a live performance which is unsurpassed in adrenalin flow, refinement of detail, and glorious playing. The DVD offers the special visual treat of the magnificent Concertgebouw as a backcloth for great music-making and at the same time provides first class sound (though not quite as opulent as the CD) plus a vivid pictorial survey of the performance, which is both rewarding and interesting in a score as diverse and detailed as Ein Heldenleben, as the camera follows the orchestra's involvement.

Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40 (CD versions)

Ⓝ ✿  Testament SBT 1430. BPO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 4 in B flat ***

Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 65285-2 (2). LSO, Barbirolli – MAHLER: Symphony 6 **(*)

Ein Heldenleben; Feuersnot: Liebszene; Intermezzo: Träumerei am Kamin; Salome: Dance of the Seven Veils

() Testament mono SBT 11147. RPO, Beecham

Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40; Till Eulenspiegel

Ⓝ  Signum SIGCD 148. Philh. O, Dohnányi

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49555-2. Chicago SO, Barenboim

(i) Ein Heldenleben; (ii) Till Eulenspiegel; (iii) Salome: Dance of the Seven Veils

(BB) () Dutton CDBP 9737. (i) Bav. State O; (ii) Berlin State Op. O; (iii) BPO; composer

This Karajan Heldenleben was recorded at the Royal Festival Hall when the Berlin Philharmonic came to London in April 1985. The performance can only be described in superlatives and the Testament sound is similarly impressive. In his sleeve-note Richard Osborne speaks of its wonderful sonority, 'lambent in its beauty, never cloying or opaque'. And that is spot on!

Dohnányi's Ein Heldenleben is richly evocative, and exceptionally well detailed, with Radoslav Szulc outstanding in his representation of the hero's wife as a delightfully capricious but seductive heroine/partner. Excellent live recording in the Royal Festival Hall, and the moment when the Hero ventures into battle brings some of the most viscerally thrilling side-drum playing on record. Yet the great melody of apotheosis offers a glorious, rapturous finality at the close. Till Eulenspiegel too is effectively portrayed as a sprightly, endearing rogue, with refined Philharmonia playing a particular pleasure.

Recorded in 1990, shortly before Barenboim took over the Chicago Orchestra, this Elatus reissue is an extremely worthwhile account, particularly at its bargain price. Barenboim propels the music onwards and never allows the tension to sag: the Battle is fast, almost Scherzo-like, and the whole performance is both splendidly conceived and brilliantly executed. A very well-balanced and richly detailed recorded sound, too.

Sir John Barbirolli recorded Ein Heldenleben at Abbey Road in 1969, not long before his death, and here he sets the seal on his Indian summer in the recording studio. All the tempi are slow, even by his latter-day standards. He luxuriates in every moment of this opulent score (his occasional groans of pleasure sometimes punctuating the score) and the LSO, in superb form, follows him with warmth and ardour through every expressive rallentando. The result has the inescapable electricity of a great occasion.

Strauss returned to DG to record this wonderfully humane account of Ein Heldenleben with the Bavarian State Orchestra. Siemens had developed a new recording process which extended the frequency range, and no previous transfer has ever reproduced its sound quite so vividly. The playing Strauss produces is characterized by such unforced virtuosity and naturalness of feeling that it is put quite in a class of its own. The Dance of the Seven Veils and Till Eulenspiegel both come from the late 1920s and are less revelatory.

Beecham's 1947 account remains a model of its kind: authoritative, marvellously paced and beautifully transparent in its textures. A glorious performance which long held sway until Karajan's 1959 account came along. The other Strauss excerpts were recorded in the late 1940s before the advent of the mono LP.

Joseph's Legende (complete ballet by John Neumeier; DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4315. Judith Jamison, Kevin Haigen, Karl Musil, Franz Wilhelm, V. State Op. Ballet, VPO, Hollreiser (Dir: John Neumeier)

The original version of Joseph's Legende for the Ballets Russes, choreographed by Fokine, was a 'costume ballet' in which there was very little dancing, so John Neumeier rethought the project, and this spectacularly exotic production, with costumes and set to match, is the result. The choreography is a mixture of traditional and new ideas which has been greatly acclaimed. Before the sinuous seduction of young Joseph by Potiphar's wife, he has a marvellously extended pas de deux with the Angel who at the end is to 'take him away and lead him to his destiny' and this (at least partly because of the radiant costuming) is the highlight of the evening. Potiphar's wife is sensuous enough and certainly convincing, but her choreography is less overwhelming. What must be said is that the dancing of the young Kevin Haigen as Joseph and of Karl Musil as the Angel is riveting, and the Vienna Philharmonic under Hollreiser gives a gloriously expansive account of Richard Strauss's score.

Josephslegende (ballet score; complete)

 Channel Classics Surround Sound SACD CCS SA 24507. Budapest Festival O, I. Fischer

Strauss's extraordinary work is heard here for the first time complete on CD, gloriously played in sumptuous surround sound. The full score has much variety of colour and feeling and, although it is undoubtely inflated, it is also richly sensuous and spectacular. The scene when young Joseph, knowing nothing of what is to come that night, dances for Potiphar and his wife is most delicately scored. There are fascinating reminders here of Strauss's other works, from An Alpine Symphony to Salome, and when Fischer's performance is so powerfully involving, this is surely a remarkable addition to the catalogue, even if the music does go over the top at times.

Metamorphosen for 23 Solo Strings

🔑 * Chan. 9708. Norwegian CO, I. Brown – TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir de Florence ****

 EMI 5 56580-2 (2). VPO, Rattle – MAHLER: Symphony 9 ***

 Delos DE 3121. Seattle SO, Schwarz – HONEGGER: Symphony 2; WEBERN arr. SCHWARZ: Langsamer satz ***

Iona Brown's performance has a powerfully passionate impetus that is wholly spontaneous, with intense valedictory feeling in the shading down of the closing pages, which has wonderful concentration. The Chandos recording is outstandingly fine.

Rattle with the Vienna Philharmonic, producing string sounds of magical beauty, brings out the visionary intensity behind this late flowering of Strauss's genius, sustaining its long span masterfully. Warm, atmospheric sound. An excellent coupling for Mahler's Ninth.

Gerard Schwarz's account of Strauss's elegiac threnody is as deeply felt and dignified as it is unhurried, and it should be heard. The listener is completely drawn into its world and, although it does not supersede the Kempe or any of the the Karajan accounts except perhaps in terms of recorded realism, it deserves to be recommended alongside them. At 32 minutes it may be the slowest Metamorphosen on disc, but it is certainly one of the best.

Symphony 2 in F min.; (i) Romance in F (for cello & orchestra); (ii) 6 Lieder, Op. 68

Ⓜ  Chan. 10236X. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Hulse; RSNO, Järvi

This early symphony may give little idea of the mature composer's style, but the skill of the writing is astonishing, not least the instrumentation. Järvi paces the score with real mastery and gets very good playing from the Royal Scottish National Orchestra. The glorious Brentano Lieder, Op. 68, date from 1918 and Strauss transcribed them for orchestra in 1941. Eileen Hulse produces some beautiful tone and is sensitively supported throughout. The Romance was another early work which Strauss abridged when he scored it for orchestra. It is charmingly nostalgic, and most persuasively played here. Not core repertory this, but a disc for Straussians.

Till Eulenspiegel

Ⓑ () Dutton Lab. mono CDEA 5013. Boston SO, Koussevitzky – BERLIOZ: Harold in Italy ((*))

Till Eulenspiegel, recorded in 1945, makes a spectacular fill-up to Koussevitzky's pioneering account of the Berlioz, another fizzing performance, both warm and brilliant, very well transferred in sound both full-bodied and airy.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in F, Op. 6

Ⓝ () Testament (ADD) SBT 1419. Piatigorsky, Pennario (with CHOPIN: Sonata in G min., Op. 65; MENDELSSOHN: Cello Sonata 2 in D, Op. 58)

The Cello Sonata is early Strauss and does not find him in the first flow of inspiration. But Piatigorsky is so eloquent an advocate that you are almost persuaded that it is better music than it is. This Piatigorsky recital is altogether exceptional and beautifully transferred.

Piano Quartet in C min., Op. 13

 Black Box BBX 1048. Lyric Piano Qt – TURINA: Piano Quartet in A min., Op. 67 ***

By general consent the Piano Quartet in C minor is not great Strauss, but it is well played and recorded here and coupled with another rarity by Turina. A disc for those with a taste for offbeat repertoire.

Serenade for Wind; Sonatina 1 in F for Wind (From an Invalid's Workshop); Suite in B flat for 13 Wind Instruments; Symphony for Wind (The Happy Workshop)

🔑  Royal Academy RAM 034 (2). Ac. Symphonic Wind Ens., Bragg

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22015 (2). London Winds, Collins

These fresh, new performances from the Royal Academy of Music's Symphonic Wind Ensemble are superb in every way, spontaneously paced by Keith Bragg, and played by eager young musicians who are all expert instrumentalists and know how to blend as well as take solos. The recording is first class, both sonorous and clear. This is now a first choice for these endearing works which Strauss obviously wrote for pleasure.

The London Winds on Hyperion are fairly closely observed by the microphone-balance and the effect is clearly defined and dramatic. The playing has the strongest impulse, the autumnal feeling less apparent in the Serenade. But one cannot help being caught up by playing that is so vividly robust and vital, and by no means lacking in warmth and affection. Even if there is a touch of over-projection, inner detail is clear and many will like the extra bite on the sound.

Serenade in E flat, Op. 7; Sonatina in F (From an Invalid's Workshop); Suite in B flat, Op. 4.

 MDG 304 1173 Ens. Villa Musica.

These civilised and genial pieces are a joy and splendidly played here by the Villa Musica Ensemble. One marvels afresh at the inventiveness, skill and culture of Strauss's writing for wind instruments. Demonstration sound.

String Quartet in A, Op. 2

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55012. Delmé Qt – VERDI: Quartet **(*)

The Strauss Quartet is early and derivative, as one might expect from a 16-year-old, but it is amazingly assured and fluent. The Delmé version is well played; however, although the basic acoustic is pleasing, the sound-balance remains a little on the dry side.

(i) Metamorphosen (arr. for string septet); Capriccio: Prelude

 Nim. NI 5614. Brandis Qt., with Küssner, Schwalke – SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht ***

Metamorphosen (arr. for string septet); Capriccio: Prelude; Piano Quartet, Op. 13

 Hyp. CDA 67574. Nash Ens.

The first ideas for Metamorphosen came to Strauss as a string septet. In 1990, Strauss's pencil sketch came to light and, with the aid of that and the definitive score, Rudolf Leopold has carefully reconstructed the original. The Brandis Quartet and three Berlin colleagues play with magnificent artistry and eloquence, both here and in the opening sextet from Capriccio. The Nimbus sound is first class.

Metamorphosen loses little in its reduction for string septet in the hands of the Nash Ensemble: its sonorities are full and vivid, its emotional eloquence very telling. The Capriccio Prelude is hardly less successful. But what makes this disc worth considering is the splendidly alive and vivacious account of the Piano Quartet (the Scherzo scintillates in the hands of Ian Brown) which emerges as a far finer work than hitherto suspected. Really first-class recording makes this collection very appealing.

Violin Sonata in E flat, Op. 18

🔑 * Erato 8573-85769-2. Repin, Berezovsky – BARTÓK: Romanian folk dances; STRAVINSKY: Divertimento ****

The sheer sweep and intensity of the extraordinary Repin–Berezovsky partnership brings a captivating reading. It is arguably the best we have had since the days of Neveu and Heifetz.

Enoch Arden, Op. 38 (melodrama for narrator and piano)

(*) VAI Audio (ADD) VAIA 1179-2 (2). Vickers, Hamelin

Jon Vickers, the narrator on VAIA, recommends (in English) how so 'soul-satisfying' a piece gives a powerful reminder of 'the timeless truths of Love, Patience, Fidelity and Steadfastness'. In his declamation he makes a persuasive case for the piece, but even Marc-André Hamelin, equally persuasive, cannot mask the fact that the piano-writing in its illustrative naivety has much in common with the accompaniments for silent films, which soon after became so popular. The live recording (with much applause beforehand) is aptly atmospheric.

CHORAL MUSIC

(i) An den Baum Daphne; (ii) Der Abend; Hymne, Op. 34/1–2; (iii) Deutsche Motette, Op. 62; (iv) Die Göttin im Putzzimer

 Chan. 9223. (i) Lund, Lisdorf, Copenhagen Boys' Ch.; (iii) Kiberg, Stene, Henning-Jensen, Cold; (i-iv) Danish Nat. R. Ch., Parkman

This disc brings very good performances of some very beautiful and curiously little-known music. The engineers produce a realistic sound too.

VOCAL MUSIC

Lieder (complete songs for male voice)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 7 63995-2 (6). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

Fischer-Dieskau and Moore made these recordings of the 134 Strauss songs suitable for a man's voice between 1967 and 1970, tackling them in roughly chronological order. With both artists at their very peak, the results are endlessly imaginative, and the transfers are full and immediate, giving fine presence to the voice.

4 Last Songs

(*()) Testament mono SBT 1410. Flagstad, Philh. O, Furtwängler – WAGNER: Tristan: Prelude and Liebestod, etc. *()

This historic recording of the world première of the Four Last Songs, at the Royal Albert Hall on 22 May 1950, is seriously flawed in the sound, with a scrunching background. Yet the drama of the occasion and the glorious, rock-steady sounds of Flagstad's voice are clearly identifiable in this excellent transfer of lacquer originals. The songs come in a different order from what is now usual, with Beim Schlafengehen performed first, not third. With the important Wagner excerpts recorded at the same concert, an important issue.

4 Last Songs; Orchestral Lieder

🔑 ✿ * EMI (ADD) 566908-2. Schwarzkopf, Berlin RSO or LSO, Szell

(i) Four Last Songs. Orchestral Lieder: (ii) Das Bächlein; (i) Cäcilie; Freundliche Vision; Frühlingsfeier; Gesang der Apollopriesterin; (ii) Liebeshymnus; Morgen; Das Rosenband; (i) Verführung; Waldseligkeit; (ii) Wiegenlied

Ⓝ  Australian DG Eloquence 480 0414. BPO, Abbado, with (i) Mattila; (ii) Schäfer

(i) 4 Last Songs; Orchestral Lieder: Befreit; Cäcilie; Muttertändelei; Waldseligkeit; Wiegenlied. Der Rosenkavalier: suite

Ⓜ (*) RCA 82876 59408-2. (i) Fleming; Houston SO, Eschenbach

(i) 4 Last Songs; Cäcilie; Morgen; Meinem Kinde; Ruhe, meine Seele!; Wiegenlied; Zueignung; (ii) Ach Lieb, ich muss nun scheiden; Allerseelen; Befreit; Du meines Herzens Krönelein; Einerlei; Heimliche Aufforderung; Ich trage meine Minne; Kling!; Lob des Leidens; Malven; Mit deinen blauen Augen; Die Nacht; Schlechtes Wetter; Seitdem dein Aug'; Ständchen; Stiller Gang; Traum durch die Dämmerung; Wir beide wollen springen; Wir sollten wir geheim sie halten; Die Zeitlose

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. 475 8507. Norman; with (i) Leipzig GO, Masur; (ii) Parsons

(i) 4 Last Songs; (ii) Du meines Herzens Krönelein; Ruhe, meine Seele; Zueignung

() BBC mono BBCL 4107-2. (i) Jurinac, BBC SO, Sargent; (ii) Ludwig, Parsons (with BRAHMS: Ständchen; Wiegenlied ) – MAHLER: Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, etc.

(i) 4 Last Songs; (ii) Arabella (opera; excerpts); (i) Capriccio (opera): Closing Scene

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 85825-2. Schwarzkopf (i) Philh. O, Ackermann; (ii) Metternich, Gedda, Philh. O, Von Matačic

4 Last Songs; (i) Arabella (excerpts); Ariadne auf Naxos: Ariadne's Lament; Capriccio: Closing scene

🔑 Ⓜ () Decca mono 467 118-2. Lisa della Casa; (i) with Gueden, Schoeffler, Poell; VPO, Boehm, Moralt; Hollreiser

(i; ii) 4 Last Songs (Vier letzte Lieder); Operatic Scenes & Arias: (i; iii; iv) Arabella: Er ist der Richtige nicht für mich . . . Aber der Richtige; (i; iii; v) Der Richtige so hab'ich still zu mir gesagt . . . So wie Sie sind . . . Und du wirst mein Geliebter sein; (i; iii; vi) Das war sehn gut, Mandryka; (i; ii; iv; vi) Ariadne auf Naxos: Ein schönes war; Es gibt ein Reich; (vii) Capriccio: Intermezzo & Closing Scene

(BB) (*()) Regis mono RRC 1192. Lisa della Casa; (i) VPO; (ii) Boehm; (iii) Moralt; (iv) Gueden; (v) Schoeffler; (vi) Poell; (vii) Elderling, O, cond. den Hertog.

Vier letzte Lieder; Capriccio: Interlude; Morgen mittag um elf; Salome: Ach, du wollst mich nicht deinen Mond küssen lassen.

 EMI 3 78797-2 Stemme & soloists, ROHCGO, Pappano

Schwarzkopf's 1953 mono version of the Four Last Songs comes with both its original coupling, the closing scene from Capriccio, also recorded in 1953, and the four major excerpts from Arabella which she recorded two years later. The Four Last Songs are here less reflective, less sensuous, than in Schwarzkopf's later version with Szell, but the more flowing speeds and the extra tautness and freshness of voice bring equally illuminating performances. Fascinatingly, this separate account of the Capriccio scene is even more ravishing than the one in the complete set, and the sound is even fuller, astonishing for its period.

The power of Jessye Norman's singing the Four Last Songs reminds one of the first ever interpreter, Kirsten Flagstad. In concern for word detail Norman is outshone by Schwarzkopf (unique in conveying the poignancy of old age), but in the Four Last Songs and in the orchestral songs the stylistic as well as the vocal command is irresistible, with Cäcilie given operatic strength. In the 1985 recital with Geoffrey Parsons, Norman brings heartfelt, deeply committed performances, at times larger than life, which satisfyingly exploit the unique glory of her voice. The magnetism of the singer generally silences any reservations, and Geoffrey Parsons is the most understanding of accompanists, brilliant too. Excellent recording.

Lisa della Casa with her creamily beautiful soprano was a radiant Straussian, as these precious excerpts demonstrate. Her account of the Four Last Songs (given in the original order, not that usually adopted) has a commanding nobility. Ariadne's Lament also receives a heartfelt performance, soaring to a thrilling climax, and the Arabella duets with Gueden, Schoeffler and Poell are hauntingly tender. For this superb reissue the transfer has been vastly improved; both voice and orchestra and the ambience of the Grosser Saal in the Musikverein are faithfully caught, with no lack of bloom.

In the alternative Regis collection the transfers have smoothed the original Decca mono sound, although Decca's own remastering is preferable. The main interest of this CD is that the live (1953) Capriccio excerpts with Anton Elderling and conducted by Johannes den Hertog are new. Here the sound is more restricted, with thin, papery violins. An intriguing disc nevertheless, for the glorious voice comes over in its full richness. This collection is without texts and translations but is enticingly inexpensive.

This is very much a portrait of Nina Stemme, richly creamy vocally in partnership with Pappano, at times warmly moving as in the Four last Songs (Frühling is especially memorable) at others thrillingly, fiendishly dramatic as in the finale from Salome, which is almost over the top, or intense with inner feeling as in the Capriccio excerpt, which includes the Moonlit intermezzo. Comparison with other older, more celebrated versions, is not always to the advantage of this new compilation, but in its own right it is very rewarding, and superbly recorded.

Karita Mattila, with Abbado and the Berlin PO providing sensuously beautiful support, gives one of the most moving of all the many recordings of Strauss's Four Last Songs. She is at once youthfully ardent, yet poised and controlled, floating her loveliest, creamy tone in breathtaking pianissimos, as at the start of the final song, Im Abendrot. She touches the deeper emotions behind these valedictory pieces, using a wide tonal and dynamic range. Consistently she brings out their mystery in singing the more intense for being live. The fill-ups were recorded in the studio, bringing performances just as commanding. The original release, which offered only 50 minutes' playing time, has been impressively filled up by five extra songs, beautifully sing by Christine Schäfer.

Renée Fleming with her rich, mature soprano gives warmly sympathetic readings of the Four Last Songs, thrilling in climaxes as the voice is allowed to expand, and full of fine detail, even if these readings lack the variety of a Schwarzkopf. The five separate orchestral Lieder also bring a wide expressive range, with Waldseligkeit beautifully poised, and ending boldly on Cäcilie. The singer is not helped by the way that Eschenbach makes the accompaniments seem a little sluggish, polished though the playing is. Something of the same lack of thrust marks his account of Strauss's own arrangement of the Rosenkavalier excerpts, despite beautiful playing from the Houston Orchestra. How much more welcome would it have been to have had extra items from the singer.

Coupled with outstanding items from Christa Ludwig, Sena Jurinac's historic version of the Four Last Songs was recorded at a Prom in 1961 with Sargent conducting the BBC Symphony Orchestra. All four songs are faster than usual, even faster than in Jurinac's earlier live broadcast performance of ten years before, recorded in Stockholm and issued by EMI. Defying rather rough mono sound, the result is ardent and animated rather than meditative, almost operatic and not at all valedictory. The Strauss songs with Christa Ludwig accompanied by Geoffrey Parsons come from a Wigmore Hall recital of 1978, with the glorious voice flawless in legato. As a first encore, Zueignung wins storms of applause.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 585 9032. Keenlyside, Martineau

Simon Keenlyside follows up the success of his fine Schubert recital (now also reissued on CfP) with this excellent collection of Strauss Lieder, beautifully sung, again with Malcolm Martineau a most sensitive accompanist. Try the highly distinctive, intimate reading of Ständchen ('Serenade'), with Keenlyside singing almost in a half-tone and with Martineau playing magically. The fine-spun legato of Waldseligkeit and the poise of Meinem Kinde are equally impressive. Keenlyside uses a head voice for the gentle top notes of Allerseelen ('All Saints' Day') but then finds plenty of power, sharply focused, in songs like Befreit. The sequence is rounded off with two exhilarating songs, Cäcilie and Herr Lenz (with its pun on the name Strauss – nosegay). No texts are provided in its Classics for Pleasure release.

Lieder

 Hyp. CDA 67588. Schwanewilms, Vignoles

Anne Schwanewilms's soprano is sweet and pure, ideally suited to singing Strauss songs, particularly the early ones. This collection, devised by her accompanist, Roger Vignoles, is presented in chronological order, leading up to the creepily disturbing Ophelia Songs, with their wild use of key, almost atonal. As Vignoles explains, there are a number of favourites here, including All' mein gedanken, Ruhe meine Seele and Waldseligkeit, but other little-known ones are just as rewarding. An outstanding contribution to an important series.

OPERA

Die Aegyptische Helena (complete)

 Telarc CD 80605 (2). Voigt, Tanner, Shafer, Grove, Robertson, NY Concert Chorale, American SO, Botstein

This Telarc version, made live in New York in 2002, is the finest yet. The role of Menelaus is arguably the finest he ever gave to a tenor, very well sung here by Carl Tanner. What the New York recording triumphantly brings out is the melodic sumptuousness of Strauss's score, wonderfully crafted throughout, with orchestral writing of a richness that even Strauss never surpassed. Where the conductor, Leon Botstein, scores is the extra warmth he finds in the score, helped by rich, digital sound. The new set also scores heavily in having Deborah Voigt, whose richness and command are a joy, with even the most challenging top notes firm and pure. She is well matched by Celena Shafer as Aithra, singing with consistent freshness and clarity. Jill Grove is the wonderfully resonant contralto in the improbable role of the Omniscient Seashell (adviser to Aithra), with Christopher Robertson as Altair, prince of the Atlas Mountains, and Eric Cutler as his son, Da-ud.

Arabella (complete DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3263. Fleming, Larsen, Kleiter, Weigel, Zürich Op. Ch. & O, Welser-Möst (Stage Director: Götz Friedrich; V/D: Felix Breitsch)

 Warner DVD 0630-16912-2. Putnam, Brocheler, Rolandi, Sarfaty, Korn, Lewis, Bradley, LPO, Haitink (Dir.: John Cox; DVD Dir.: John Vernon)

 DG DVD 073 005-9. Te Kanawa, Wolfgang Brendel, McLaughlin, Dessay, Kuebler, Dernesch, McIntyre, Met. Op. Ch. and O, Thielemann (Producer: Otto Schenk. V/D: Brian Large)

Renée Fleming truly makes an ideal Arabella, beautiful of person and voice, and with a natural freshness of characterization. One watches and listens avidly as she meets her 'Mr Right', equally impressively personified by a slightly gaunt but very convincing Morten Frank Larsen. Julia Kleiter, too, is perfectly cast as Zdenka; and when the opera has reached its happy ending and Fleming has sung her lovely closing scene, one is left with a warm romantic glow. Sets and costumes are admirably in period, and Welser-Möst directs the orchestra with proper Straussian romantic warmth, giving his excellent singers admirable support. Highly recommended.

The Warner DVD offers a live recording of a classic Glyndebourne production of Arabella with handsome, realistic sets by Julia Trevelyan Oman. In this 1984 performance Bernard Haitink, then music director at Glyndebourne, draws ravishing playing from the LPO in support of an outstanding cast with not a single flaw. Ashley Putnam makes a tall and imposing Arabella, at once pretty and girlishly eager, yet with a natural dignity and a vocal command that makes her performance magnetic, with the set-piece solos and duets deeply moving. Opposite her, John Brocheler is a formidable Mandryka, handsome and heavily bearded, with a clean-cut voice that has just a hint of grit in it, aptly so. As Zdenka Gianna Rolandi cuts a vivacious, eager figure, even if her tiny stature next to the imposing Putnam makes it unlikely that even the simple-minded Matteo (superbly sung by Keith Lewis) would mistake her for Arabella even in bed. John Vernon's video direction, using many helpful close-ups, adds to the impact. It is inadequate that only the briefest synopsis is given on the box, with no booklet provided.

One of the great strengths of this DG live production is the conducting of Christian Thielemann, who was then just emerging as a new star among Strauss conductors. He is at once thrustful and emotional, drawing ripe sounds from the orchestra. Dame Kiri Te Kanawa gives a convincing dramatic account of the title role and is in glorious voice, producing ravishing sounds in her big numbers, even more charming when observed in close-up. She obviously relishes the sumptuous production, which is as traditional as could be, with grandly realistic sets by Gunther Schneider-Siemssen. The stage direction is by Otto Schenk, who shows appropriate respect for Hofmannsthal and Strauss's wishes, and the intelligence of the public.

The Mandryka of Wolfgang Brendel carries conviction even if he looks somewhat older than he should (mid-thirties). His voice is strong, firm and unstrained in a rather intimidating yet ultimately vulnerable characterization, and Marie McLaughlin is poignantly convincing as Zdenka, the younger sister forced to adopt the role of boy. Donald McIntyre and Helga Dernesch are vividly characterful as Arabella's parents, and in the second act Natalie Dessay as the Fiakermilli is full of character, and she makes much of her brief appearance at the ball, bright and brilliant in her showpiece.

The balance favours the voices and not all the wealth of orchestral detail registers, but the recording is aptly rich and full-bodied. The visual side of the production is first rate. As usual Brian Large's camera is pointing exactly where one wants it to point. Strongly recommended.

Arabella (complete; CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7731 (2) Della Casa, Gueden, London, VPO, Solti

Della Casa soars above the stave with the creamiest, most beautiful sounds and constantly charms one with her swiftly alternating moods of seriousness and gaiety. Perhaps Solti does not linger as he might over the waltz rhythms, and it may be Solti too who prevents Edelmann from making his first scene with Mandryka as genuinely humorous as it can be. Edelmann otherwise is superb, as fine a Count as he was an Ochs in the Karajan Rosenkavalier. Gueden, too, is ideally cast as Zdenka and, if anything, in Act I manages to steal our sympathies from Arabella, as a good Zdenka can. George London is on the ungainly side, but then Mandryka is a boorish fellow anyway. Dermota is a fine Matteo, and Mimi Coertse makes as much sense as anyone could of the ridiculously difficult part of Fiakermilli, the female yodeller. The sound is brilliant.

Ariadne auf Naxos (complete; DVD versions)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW OPAAN. Magee, Mosuc, Saccà, Volle, Breedt, Zürich Op. O, Dohnányi (Stage Dir: Claus Guth, TV Dir: Thomas Grimm)

() Arthaus DVD 100 170. Anthony, Martinez, Koch, Villars, Junge, Adam, Semper Oper Ch., Dresden State O, C. Davis. (Producer: Marco Arturo Marelli. V/D: Felix Breisach.)

(*) DG DVD 073 028-9. Norman, Battle, Troyanos, King, Netwig, Dickson, Laciura, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (V/D: Brian Large)

In Zürich, Claus Guth presents the piece in modern dress, with the main opera after the Prologue set in a restaurant, with dozens of tables. It works reasonably well, even if the magic of Strauss's score is in no way mirrored in the visual presentation. Casting is first rate, with the Zerbinetta of Elena Mosuc stealing the limelight with an account of her big aria which prompts an ovation. Emily Magee's Ariadne is hardly less fine, ranging impressively and with full, creamy tone, and Michelle Breedt as the Composer in the Prologue sings movingly too. Roberto Saccà as Theseus has happily little of the gruffness of the Heldentenor, yet is amply powerful enough. Christoph von Dohnányi as conductor proves a passionate Straussian.

We are at odds about the Arthaus DVD Ariadne auf Naxos, recorded live at the Semper Oper in Dresden. R.L. feels that for most collectors it will be a complete turn-off. The setting is in a present-day museum of modern art whose visitors wander in and out of the gallery throughout the whole opera to mightily distracting effect. The performance is not particularly distinguished vocally either, save for Sophie Koch's Composer. The best of the others are John Villars's Bacchus and Theo Adam's Music Master, and the orchestra make a pretty sumptuous sound under Sir Colin Davis. The intrusive silliness of the production makes it difficult to sit through this performance once, let alone a second time!

E.G. on the other hand feels that Sir Colin Davis, at his most inspired, directs a glowing performance with a cast of young singers who respond superbly, both to the conducting and to the imaginative stage direction of Marco Arturo Marelli. The Prologue, updated to the 20th century, takes you behind the scenes of an impromptu theatre, with a piano centre-stage and with a washroom half visible behind. The costumes, also designed by Marelli, add to the atmosphere of fantasy. The Composer, characterfully sung by Sophie Koch, heartfelt in the final solo, rightly provides the central focus, with his new passion for Zerbinetta well established. The main opera follows without an interval. The scene is neatly changed before our eyes to a picture gallery during a private view.

Central to the performance's success is the radiant singing of Susan Anthony as Ariadne with her firm, creamily beautiful voice. The sparky Zerbinetta of Iride Martinez, vivaciously Spanish-looking, unashamedly shows off in her big aria, both vocally in her dazzling coloratura and in her acting. Jon Villars is a powerful, unstrained Bacchus in the final scene, with the commedia dell'arte characters all very well taken too.

Levine's DG recording of the opera (see below) had been made only a year earlier in Vienna with Anna Tomowa-Sintow as Ariadne, Agnes Baltsa as the Composer and Kathleen Battle as Zerbinetta. This is straight and unfussy in its staging, and the video production by Brian Large could not be more expert and unobtrusive (save for one or two close-ups of Jessye Norman's larynx). Tatiana Troyanos's Composer is quite superb, and neither Battle nor Norman can be faulted vocally, even if some will find the former's charm a bit overdone. No complaints about the men either, even if James King's Bacchus is a mite strained on some of his top notes. James Levine is a fine musician, but the orchestral playing has all too little of the finesse and subtlety of Kempe or Karajan and the orchestral textures are nowhere near as refined as they achieve.

Ariadne auf Naxos (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 475 6674 (2). J. Norman, Varady, Gruberová, Asmus, Bär, Frey, Leipzig GO, Masur.

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) EMI mono 5 67077-2 (2) [5671562]. Schwarzkopf, Schock, Rita Streich, Dönch, Seefried, Cuénod, Philh. O, Karajan

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 77073-2 (2). Wachutka, Woodrow, Komlosi, Kutan, San Carlo, Naples O, Kuhn

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 08824-2 (2). Janowitz, Geszty, Zylis-Gara, King, Adam, Schreier, Dresden State O, Kempe

In the Philips CD version, Jessye Norman's is a commanding, noble, deeply felt performance, ranging extraordinarily wide; if she does not find the same raptness, the inner agony that still makes Elisabeth Schwarzkopf's performance unique, she yet provides the perfect focus for a near ideal cast. Julia Varady as the Composer brings out the vulnerability of the character as well as the ardour in radiant singing. The Zerbinetta of Edita Gruberová adds an extra dimension to previous recordings in the way she translates the panache of her stage performance into purely aural terms for recording. It is a thrilling performance and, even if the voice is not always ideally sweet, the range of emotions Gruberová conveys, as in her duet with the Composer, is enchanting. Paul Frey is the sweetest-sounding Bacchus on record yet, while Olaf Bär as Harlekin and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau in the vignette role of the Music-Master are typical of the fine team of artists here in the smaller character parts. Masur proves a masterly Straussian and he is helped by the typically warm Leipzig recording, with sound rich and mellow to cocoon the listener, yet finely balanced to allow you to hear the interweaving of the piano as never before in 20th century imitation of a continuo.

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf makes a radiant, deeply moving Ariadne, giving as bonus a delicious little portrait of the Prima Donna in the Prologue. Rita Streich was at her most dazzling in the coloratura of Zerbinetta's aria and, in partnership with the harlequinade characters, sparkles engagingly. But it is Irmgard Seefried who gives perhaps the supreme performance of all as the Composer, exceptionally beautiful of tone, conveying a depth and intensity rarely if ever matched. Rudolf Schock is a fine Bacchus, strained less than most, and the team of theatrical characters includes such stars as Hugues Cuénod as the Dancing Master. The fine pacing and delectably pointed ensemble add to the impact of a uniquely perceptive Karajan interpretation. Though in mono and with the orchestral sound a little dry, the voices come out superbly.

The modestly priced Arte Nova version can also be strongly recommended. The cast is a strong one, with Elisabeth-Marie Wachutka outstanding as Ariadne, sweet and pure over the widest range, and bringing girlish passion to the role, culminating in a heartwarming account of Ariadne's final solo in response to Bacchus, the excellent clear-voiced Alan Woodrow. Aline Kutan is a similarly impressive Zerbinetta, matching more starry rivals, brilliant in coloratura with a winning sparkle. Though the harlequinade characters are inevitably less polished in their ensembles than in a studio recording, the fun of the piece comes over well, as well as the atmospheric beauty of the Naiads' music. The one snag is the miscasting of Ildiko Komlosi as the Composer. It is a rich, warm contralto rather than a mezzo, satisfying enough vocally except under pressure, but too feminine for this trouser role. Yet the thrust of a live performance makes this a highly competitive version at super-budget price. The German libretto is included but, alas, no translation.

Kempe's relaxed, languishing performance of this most atmospheric of Strauss's operas is matched by opulent 1969 EMI recording. Janowitz sings with heavenly tone-colour (marred only when hard pressed at the climax of the Lament) and Zylis-Gara makes an ardent and understanding Composer. Sylvia Geszty's voice is a little heavy for the fantastic coloratura of Zerbinetta's part, but she sings with charm and assurance. James King sings the role of Bacchus with forthright tone and more taste than many tenors. Those who remembers Karajan's mono set with Schwarzkopf will not find this ideal, but there is warmth and atmosphere here in plenty. The reissue comes with full libretto.

(i) Ariadne auf Naxos (excerpts); Lieder: (ii) Befreit; Einerlei; Hat gesagt; Morgen!; Schlechtes Wetter; Seit dem dein Aug'; Waldseligkeit

🔑  Testament (ADD) SBT 1036. Lisa della Casa; with (i) Schock, BPO, Erede; (ii) Peschko

The 1959 stereo recording is full and immediate, bringing out the glories of Lisa della Casa's creamy soprano but failing to convey the full, atmospheric beauty of the music, notably in the echo chorus of Naiads. Della Casa had earlier recorded Ariadne's Lament for Decca, but this is even more powerful. The first excerpt is of the opening of the entertainment from the overture through to Ariadne's first solo. There follow her second solo, Ein Schönes war, and the Lament, while the last extended excerpt has the whole of the final scene from the entry of Bacchus. Rudolf Schock, as in the Karajan version, sings nobly, and Erede brings out the lyrical warmth of the writing. Della Casa is less imaginative in the Strauss Lieder but still sings very beautifully and persuasively. The faithful and full Testament transfers bring out the wide range of the recording, tending to emphasize sibilants in the singing.

Capriccio (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 354. Te Kanawa, Hagegård, Troyanos, Braun, Kuebler, Keenlyside, Sénéchal, Travis, San Francisco Op. O, Runnicles (Dir: Lawless; DVD Dir: Maniura)

🔑 * TDK DVD DVWW OPCAPR (2). Fleming, Henschel, Trost, Finley, von Otter, Hawlata, Tear, Banks, Paris Nat. Op. O, Schirmer (Dir: Robert Carsen, V/D: François Roussillon)

With evocative sets by Mauro Pagano and in-period 18th-century costumes by Thierry Bosquet, Stephen Lawless's production for the San Francisco Opera will delight traditionalists. In this live (1993) performance, Donald Runnicles is the deeply sympathetic conductor inspiring an outstanding cast with no weak link. Kiri Te Kanawa not only sings gloriously with a continuous flow of full, warm sound, she acts most movingly. Håkan Hagegård as the Count, her brother, is a big, burly figure, bumbling enough in his over-acting to make the rehearsal scene with Tatiana Troyanos as a characterful Clairon both funny and believable. The rival duo of poet and composer is superbly taken by David Kuebler as Flamand and Simon Keenlyside as Olivier, vocally and visually handsome, with Victor Braun as La Roche, Maria Fortuna and Craig Estep as the Italian soprano and tenor ideally cast, and with even the role of the Major Domo very strongly sung by Dale Travis, and with the veteran Michel Sénéchal masterly in the cameo role of the prompter, Monsieur Taupe. For sheer Straussian beauty, evocatively presented, it would be hard to match the rendering here of the final scene. First-rate sound and excellent documentation in the accompanying booklet, as usual with Arthaus DVDs.

For Robert Carsen's production at the Paris Opera in 2004, Renée Fleming as the Countess is at her radiant peak, in golden voice, and the Count of Dietrich Henschel is vocally perfect and strongly characterized. The rivals, poet and composer Flamand and Olivier, are equally fine, with Rainer Trost's heady tenor set against Gerald Finley's perfectly focused baritone. Anne-Sofie von Otter as Clairon makes a wonderfully histrionic actress. In the cameo role of Monsieur Taupe, the Prompter, Robert Tear could not be more characterful, with Franz Hawlata as a formidable La Roche, the stage director, and Barry Banks doing an amusing parody as the Italian tenor. The updating to modern dress is generally undistracting. The final scene with its moonlight interlude makes a radiant conclusion, with Fleming even transcending what has gone before, singing with beauty, power and purity.

Capriccio (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ (*) EMI mono 5 67394-2(2) [567391-2]. Schwarzkopf, Waechter, Gedda, Fischer-Dieskau, Hotter, Ludwig, Moffo, Philh. O, Sawallisch

 Forlane UCD 268052 (2). Lott, Allen, Kunde, Genz, von Kannen, Vermillion, SWR Stuttgart Vocal Ens. & Radio SO, Prêtre

(*) Orfeo C 518 992 I (2). Tomowa-Sintow, Schöne, Büchner, Grundheber, Jungwirth, Schmidt, Ridder, Scarabelli, Ballo, Minth, VPO, Stein

In the role of the Countess in Strauss's last opera, Elisabeth Schwarzkopf has had no equals on CD. This recording, made in 1957 and 1958, brings a peerless performance from her, full of magical detail both in the pointing of words and in the presentation of the character in all its variety. Not only are the other singers ideal choices in each instance, they form a wonderfully coordinated team, beautifully held together by Sawallisch's sensitive conducting. As a performance this is never likely to be superseded. Excellent documentation and a full libretto.

Recorded at a series of concert performances in Mannheim in 1999, the Forlane set, with Prêtre an understanding Straussian, offers vivid, immediate sound, giving extra intensity to this inspired 'conversation-piece' on the subject of opera. Central to the set's success is the inspired portrayal of the Countess by Dame Felicity Lott in one of her great roles. Her feeling for the idiom is unerring, and though the closeness of the recording brings out the occasional unevenness under pressure, this will delight Dame Felicity's many admirers. With Thomas Allen ideally cast as the Count, with Gregory Kunde as the composer, Flamand, and Stephan Genz as the poet, Olivier, the supporting cast is first rate, with voices cleanly focused, and conversational exchanges beautifully timed. This team yields only to the even more sharply characterful one on EMI.

The Austrian Radio recording from Orfeo offers a warm, rich performance in satisfyingly full sound, made the more compelling for being taken live at a Salzburg Festival performance in August 1985. Tomowa-Sintow sings with poise and tenderness, with the rest of the cast making a strong team. Outstanding is Trudeliese Schmidt as the flamboyant actress Clairon, and Horst Stein is inspired by the beauty of the score to conduct with more passion than in studio recordings. No libretto is provided, only a detailed synopsis, a serious shortcoming in this of all operas with its complex interchanges.

Capriccio, Op. 85: String Sextet

 Hyp. CDA 66704. Ens. – BRUCKNER: String Quintet ***

 Chan. 9131. ASMF Chamber Ens. – ENESCU: Octet in C; SHOSTAKOVICH: 2 Pieces for String Octet ***

The opening sextet from Strauss's last opera, Capriccio, makes an excellent fill-up to the Bruckner String Quintet on Hyperion. Obviously readers are unlikely to buy the Bruckner for the sake of such a short work, even though it is of great beauty, but those who do will be rewarded by some fine music-making and recording.

The autumnal preface to Capriccio is also the expertly played fill-up to Enescu's remarkable Octet; very well recorded it is, too.

Daphne (complete; CD version)

🔑 * Decca 475 6926 (2). Fleming, Botha, Schade, Youn, Larsson, WDR Ch. & O, Cologne, Bychkov

Daphne really requires a girlish-sounding soprano in the title-role, and Renée Fleming might in principle seem too mature-sounding a singer. In fact, she copes beautifully with the high tessitura of the role, and she produces her clearest, brightest tone, making this a very enjoyable version of an opera which exploits her acting powers in this Decca set, with bright, cleanly focused sound backing Bychkov's urgent and sensuous reading, the result is very convincing. Johan Botha as Apollo sings with a rather pinched sound, but the notes come over cleanly and powerfully enough, and he is well contrasted with the mellifluous tenor of Michael Schade as Leukippos, and the mezzo, Anna Larsson, brings out rich tones in the role of Gaea.

Elektra (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 048. Marton, Fassbaender, Studer, King, Grundheber, V. St. Op. Ch. & O, Abbado

(*) TDK DVD DVWW OPELEK. Johansson, Diener, Lipovšek, Muff, Schasching, Zürich Op. House Ch. & O, Dohnányi (Dir: Martin Kasej, V/D: Felix Breisach)

Eva Marton recorded Elektra with Wolfgang Sawallisch in 1990, but the present account comes from a Vienna performance of the preceding year with Abbado conducting. The performance has enormous intensity: both Marton's Elektra and Fassbaender's Klytemnestra stay long in the memory, and all the remaining characters are triumphantly realized, not least Franz Grundheber's blood-thirsty Orestes. Marton makes the most of the intent, obsessive, powerfully demonic Elektra and has enormous dramatic presence.

Harry Kupfer's production is gripping. The setting is dark though not quite as dismal as Götz Friedrich's 1981 production with Rysanek and Varnay under Boehm on a Decca LD. Musically, this is an exciting and concentrated account, and the camera is musically handled by Brian Large. He has an unerring feel for directing our attention where it needs to be, and many collectors will feel that this is an essential acquisition, alongside the Sinopoli CD set.

Recorded at the Zürich Opera House in December 2005, Christoph Dohnányi's powerful conducting and the singing of a fine cast make this TDK account of Strauss's Elektra magnetically compelling. Eva Johansson has a sharp cutting edge to her soprano, entirely apt for the role, well contrasted with the much sweeter Chrysothemis of Melanie Diener. In this modern-dress setting, Elektra with her wild blonde hair emerges as a terrifying drop-out, already at the start driven to near madness. She is clearly set against the much more feminine and controlled sister, Chrysothemis, and the formidably powerful and sinister Klytemnestra of Marjana Lipovšek. The only disappointment is in the casting of Alfred Muff as Orestes, with his fluttery baritone not mellifluous enough for the climactic moment of recognition by Elektra. At that point Johannson scales her voice down and in her emotional relief purifies her tone. In the small role of Aegisthus Rudolf Schasching makes his mark well. The set is like a modern prison, stylized and undistracting enough.

Elektra (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 8231 (2). Nilsson, Collier, Resnik, Stolze, Krause, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 09190-2 (2). Marton, Lipovšek, Studer, Winkler, Weikl, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Sawallisch

Nilsson is almost incomparable in the name-part, with the hard side of Elektra's character brutally dominant. Only when – as in the Recognition scene with Orestes – she tries to soften the naturally bright tone does she let out a suspect flat note or two. As a rule she is searingly accurate in approaching even the most formidable exposed top notes. One might draw a parallel with Solti's direction – sharply focused and brilliant in the savage music which predominates, but lacking the languorous warmth one really needs in the Recognition scene, if only for contrast. The brilliance of the 1967 Decca recording is brought out the more in the newest digital transfer, aptly so in this work. The fullness and clarity are amazing for the period.

Sawallisch may miss the full violence of Strauss's score which the fierce Solti so brilliantly captures in his vintage Decca version; but, with its warm, wide-ranging sound, his account conveys more light and shade, more mystery. Eva Marton in her characterization of the tormented heroine similarly finds more light and shade than Birgit Nilsson did for Solti, but the voice spreads distressingly under pressure. Notably disappointing is the failure of both singer and conductor to convey the full emotional thrust of Elektra's radiant solo after the great moment of recognition between her and her brother, Orestes (Bernd Weikl in fine, incisive voice). Marjana Lipovšek's Klytämnestra is among the finest on record, and Cheryl Studer as Chrysothemis, well contrasted in bright clarity, has wonderful moments, notably in her solo after the murders.

(i) Elektra: Soliloquy; Recognition scene; Finale. Salome: Dance of the seven veils; Finale

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 67900-2. Borkh, Chicago SO, Reiner; with (i) Schoeffler, Yeend, Chicago Lyric Theatre Ch.

With Borkh singing superbly in the title-role alongside Paul Schoeffler and Francis Yeend, this is a real collector's piece. Reiner provides a superbly telling accompaniment; the performances of the Recognition scene and final duet are as ripely passionate as Beecham's old 78-r.p.m. excerpts and outstrip the complete versions. The orchestral sound is thrillingly rich, the brass superbly expansive. Reiner's full-blooded account of Salome's Dance is very exciting too, and Borkh is comparably memorable in the final scene. No Straussian should miss this disc.

Feuersnot (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ  Arts 47546-2 (2). Varady, Weikl, Bergere-Tuna, Tölz Boys' Ch., Bav. R. Ch., Munich RO, Fricke

Feuersnot, Strauss's second opera, which was first given in 1901, is an allegory with an element of satire, set in medieval times. Like his first (Guntram) it is opulently scored, and in three compact Acts tells its story of Kunrad, a young sorcerer who, when rejected and ridiculed, puts a curse on the town, extinguishing all fire and light. The performance is a fine one, with Bernd Weikl as Kunrad and Julia Varady as Dimut, his beloved, the Mayor's daughter - both outstanding. Heinz Fricke directs a warmly expressive performance in well-balanced digital radio sound. Recommended.

Die Frau ohne Schatten (complete; DVD version)

 TDK DVD DVWW OPFROS. Seiffert, DeVol, Titus, Martin, Lipovšek, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Sawallisch (Dir: Einosuko Ishikawa, V/D: Andreas Mazur)

Recorded in Nagoya in Japan, when the Bavarian State Opera was on tour in November 1992, the TDK DVD offers a striking production in which the Japanese director Ishikawa has translated this symbolic story of the empress who is seeking to obtain a shadow (symbol of fertility) into a Japanese and oriental setting. So the Emperor and Empress and the courtiers are presented in Japanese costume, while the Dyer and the Dyer's Wife are in Arab costume. The role of the Emperor, sung by the Heldetennor Peter Seiffert, and the Empress, sung by Luana DeVol, are both excellent in these very demanding roles, with Marjana Lipovšek superb in the sinister attendant role of the nurse. Equally effective are Alan Titus as Barak the Dyer, and Janis Martin as his wife. This is a difficult opera to sustain over its contorted plot, but Wolfgang Sawallisch is a master Straussian, shaping each phrase and building each climax unerringly, bringing out drama and atmosphere, with the magnificent choir and orchestra of Bavarian State Opera. The production ends with a charmingly symbolic setting of a Japanese bridge in gold, with the Emperor and Empress on top and the Dyer and his wife below. There may be overtones in the visual production of Turandot or even of Mikado, but the result is most compelling. The set's only snag is that no synopsis is included in the accompanying booklet.

Die Frau ohne Schatten (CD version)

🔑 ✿ * Decca 436 243-2 (3). Behrens, Varady, Domingo, van Dam, Runkel, Jo, VPO, Solti

In the Heldentenor role of the Emperor, Plácido Domingo, the superstar tenor, gives a performance that is not only beautiful to the ear beyond previous recordings but which has an extra feeling for expressive detail, deeper than that which was previously recorded. Hildegard Behrens as the Dyer's wife is also a huge success. Her very feminine vulnerability is here a positive strength, and the voice has rarely sounded so beautiful on record. Julia Varady as the Empress is equally imaginative, with a beautiful voice, and José van Dam with his clean, dark voice brings a warmth and depth of expression to the role of Barak, the Dyer, which goes with a satisfyingly firm focus. Reinhild Runkel in the key role of the Nurse is well in character, with her mature, fruity sound. Eva Lind is shrill in the tiny role of the Guardian of the Threshold, but there is compensation in having Sumi Jo as the Voice of the Falcon. With the Vienna Philharmonic surpassing themselves, and the big choral ensembles both well disciplined and warmly expressive, this superb recording is unlikely to be matched, let alone surpassed, for many years. Solti himself is inspired throughout.

Guntram (complete)

Ⓑⓑ  Arte Nova 74321 61339-2 (2). Woodrow, Wachutka, Konsulov, Scheidegger, Marchigiana PO, Kuhn

Strauss's very first opera, set in the age of chivalry, is an opulent piece, unashamed in its high romanticism. On the Arte Nova label Gustav Kuhn conducts a warm, thrustful performance, recorded live at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, with the rich orchestral tapestries beautifully caught in open, refined sound, only occasionally disturbed by audience noises. Alan Woodrow makes a strong Guntram, with his firm Heldentenor tone only occasionally strained. Elisabeth Wachutka with her fruity soprano sounds too mature for the heroine, Freihild.

Intermezzo: Symphonic Interludes

 Chan. 9357. Detroit SO, Järvi – SCHMIDT: Symphony 1 ***

Neeme Järvi is an underrated Straussian and here he proves equal to the very best. He and his Detroit musicians give a thoroughly persuasive account of the interludes Strauss extracted from Intermezzo, and this comes as a generous fill-up to Schmidt's derivative but delightful First Symphony. Strongly recommended.

Intermezzo (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Warner NVC Arts DVD 50-51442-8857-2-9. Lott, Pringle, Caley, Gale, Glyndebourne Festival Op. Ch., LPO, Kuhn (Stage Director: John Cox; V/D: David Buckton)

This is as perfect a realization of Strauss's conversation piece as one could possible imagine, and it is even more enjoyable for being performed in Andrew Porter's brilliant English translation. Felicity Lott looks ravishing and sings delightfully as Christine, John Pringle is perfectly cast as her husband, Robert, and Ian Caley makes a winningly ingenuous foil as the young baron. John Cox's 1920s sets and costumes are ideal (notably Felicity Lott's dresses) and the production values are what every stage director should seek, and few find. Moreover, the clever alignment with the composer's own domestic situation is neatly achieved. Gustav Kuhn directs the complex orchestral accompaniments with great skill and the LPO is in sparkling form. If only all opera productions were as beautifully realized as this!

Die Liebe der Danae (complete)

🔑 * CPO 999 967-2 (3). Grundheber, Schöpflin, McNamara, Uhl, Zach, Chafin, Behle, Fleitmann, Kiel Op. Ch. & PO, Windfuhr

(*) Telarc CD 80570 (3). Flanigan, Coleman-Wright, Smith, Lewis, Saffer, NY Concert Chorale, American SO, Botstein

Die Liebe der Danae is an ingenious conflation – originally suggested by Hugo von Hofmannsthal – of two myths involving gold, the legend of Midas and the golden touch, and Jupiter's seduction of Danae in the guise of golden rain. Where the account under Ulrich Windfuhr consistently scores is in the dramatic bite of the performance, with singers on stage conveying each confrontation of character more convincingly than is ever likely in a concert performance. Though Botstein is a formidable Straussian, Windfuhr is even more warmly idiomatic, conveying a surge of warmth at the big climaxes, and his singers too seem to understand the idiom far more clearly than their American counterparts. Standing out from an excellent cast is the magnificent Jupiter of Franz Grundheber, weightily Wagnerian like a latter-day Wotan; and Robert Chafin in the tenor role of Midas is also splendid. Manuela Uhl as Danae has a bright, clear soprano, which she shades down seductively in gentler passages such as the meeting with Midas, but she tends to sound inflexible under pressure. Her counterpart on Telarc is sweeter and easier on the ear. Though in precision of ensemble the chorus on stage cannot match the American chorus in concert, the singers regularly convey an extra warmth in compensation, adding to the impact of the big choral moments.

Leon Botstein, a dedicated advocate of the piece, conducts a loving performance with his excellent cast. As Danae, Lauren Flanigan has ample richness and power, yet remains girlish, while Hugh Smith makes an engaging Midas, fresh and unstrained, with Peter Coleman-Wright in the difficult role of Jupiter repeating his formidable Garsington interpretation. The quartet of queens – all of them, like Leda and Semele, seduced by Jupiter in their time – and the quartet of kings are beautifully integrated, and Lisa Saffer is outstanding as Xanthe, Danae's maid, who has just one ravishing and very demanding duet with her mistress in Act I. First-rate chorus work. Though the clean if rather dry recording fails to do justice to the sumptuous scoring, with voices to the fore, the result is still magnetic, although the CPO set is a clear first choice.

Der Rosenkavalier (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 073 4072 (2). Lott, von Otter, Bonney, Moll, Hornik, V. St. Op. Ch. & O, Carlos Kleiber. (Producer: Otto Schenck, V/D: Horant Hohlfeld)

🔑 * EMI DVD 5 44258-9 (2). Nina Stemme, Kasarova, Hartelius, Muff, Zürich Op., Ch. & O, Welser-Möst. (Producer: Sven-Eric Bechtolf, V/D Dir: Chloé Perlemuter, Sets: Rolf Glittenberg)

* TDK DVD DVWW-OPRC (2). Pieczonka, Kirchschlager, Persson, Hawlata, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Bychkov (Dir: Robert Carsen, V/D: Brian Large)

Carlos Kleiber has spoken of Felicity Lott as his ideal Marschallin, and she is probably currently as unrivalled in this role as was Schwarzkopf in the 1950s. She does not wear her heart on her sleeve, and her reticence makes her all the more telling and memorable. The other roles are hardly less distinguished, with Anne Sofie von Otter's Octavian splendidly characterized and boyish, while Barbara Bonney's Sophie floats her top notes in the Presentation of the Rose scene with great poise and impressive accuracy. Kurt Moll's Ochs, a splendidly three-dimensional and subtle reading, is one of the highlights of the performance. Otto Schenck's production deserves the praises that have been lavished on it, and Rudolf Heinrich's sets are handsome. Carlos Kleiber gets some ravishing sounds from the Vienna Philharmonic, and his reading of the score is as Straussian and as perfect as you are likely to encounter in this world. The sound is very natural and lifelike, not too forward, and with a good perspective.

The competing Zürich Opera production, recorded a decade later, is also outstanding in every way. Nina Stemme is a superb Marschallin, a sophisticated portrayal, but with deep underlying feeling which is so affecting in the great closing trio. Vesselina Kasarova's Octavian has a most engaging boyish quality while her richly contrasted mezzo blends perfectly with Malin Hartelius, an enchanting Sophie, whose exquisite singing in the Silver Rose scene is unforgettable. Alfred Muff is a splendid three-dimensional Baron Ochs, clumsily oafish, yet believably real. Moreover he has a rich, deep bass voice.

But there are many other plus points. As a backcloth for Marianne Glittenberg's lavish costumes, Rolf Glittenberg's sets are a visual delight, from the Marschallin's elegant bedroom of Act I to the colourful following kitchen scene where the nervous Sophie hides in the cupboard until her Cavalier persuades her to step out, and in the ravishingly sung final trio, one is made well aware of the conflicting emotions of the Marschallin, and the two lovers, who cannot believe what is happening. Franz Welser-Möst conducts comparably elegantly, yet with ardour (the Waltz music is gorgeous), and the orchestral playing is richly responsive. But the opera's close is very moving indeed. Excellent sound and the all-essential subtitles are splendidly managed.

Der Rosenkavalier is a remarkably lucky opera on DVD, for the 2004 Salzburg Festival production, richly and sensitively conducted by Semyon Bychkov, is very fine indeed, and compares well with its illustrious predecessors. It is set a little forward in time from usual, in the early years of the 20th century, but costumes and settings are lavish and visually appealing. The cast has no weak link. Adrianne Pieczonka looks exactly right as the Marschallin and sings and acts very movingly throughout, especially in the closing scene. The very boyish Angelika Kirchschlager is perfectly cast as Octavian and, like the lovely Sophie (Miah Persson), sings very beautifully: the presentation of the silver rose scene is exquisite. Franz Hawlata as Baron Ochs is less of an oaf than usual, a believable characterization, self-important, self-indulgent, and at first supremely self-confident until he is spectacularly demolished. Brian Large's video direction is near-perfect (especially in the great Trio) and the orchestra plays gloriously throughout. Very enjoyable indeed.

Der Rosenkavalier (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67605-2 (3). Schwarzkopf, Ludwig, Stich-Randall, Edelmann, Waechter, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan

🔑  EMI 3 58618-2 (3). Te Kanawa, von Otter, Rydl, Grundheber, Hendricks, Dresden Op. Ch., Dresden Boys' Ch., Dresden State O, Haitink

(*) Decca (ADD) 417 493-2 (3). Crespin, Minton, Jungwirth, Donath, Wienr, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.111011/13 (3) Reining, Jurinac, Gueden, Weber, Dermota, Vienna PO, and State Op. Ch, Erich Kleiber

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 3007 (3) Reining, Jurinac, Gueden, Weber, Dermota, Vienna PO, and State Op. Ch, Erich Kleiber

Karajan's 1956 version, one of the greatest of all opera recordings, is in a class of its own, with the patrician refinement of Karajan's spacious reading combining with an emotional intensity that he has rarely equalled, even in Strauss, of whose music he remains a supreme interpreter. Matching that achievement is the incomparable portrait of the Marschallin from Schwarzkopf, bringing out detail as no one else can, yet equally presenting the breadth and richness of the character, a woman still young and attractive. Christa Ludwig with her firm, clear mezzo tone makes an ideal, ardent Octavian and Teresa Stich-Randall a radiant Sophie, with Otto Edelmann a winningly characterful Ochs, who yet sings every note clearly.

Vocally the biggest triumph of Haitink's beautifully paced reading is the Octavian of Anne Sofie von Otter, not only beautifully sung but acted with a boyish animation to make most rivals sound very feminine by comparison. If the first great – and predictable – glory of Dame Kiri's assumption of the role of the Marschallin is the sheer beauty of the sound, the portrait she paints is an intense and individual one, totally convincing. The portrait of Sophie from Barbara Hendricks is a warm and moving one, but less completely satisfying, if only because her voice is not quite so pure as one needs for this young, innocent girl. Kurt Rydl with his warm and resonant bass makes a splendid Baron Ochs, not always ideally steady, but giving the character a magnificent scale and breadth. Whatever the detailed reservations over the singing, it is mainly due to Bernard Haitink that this is the most totally convincing and heartwarming CD version of Rosenkavalier since Karajan's 1956 set. This recording, unlike the Karajan, opens out the small stage cuts sanctioned by the composer.

The current remastering of the Solti Der Rosenkavalier from the late 1960s has brought the most striking improvement in the sound among all the Decca reissues of his Strauss opera series and there is now body and ambient warmth, so essential for this gloriously ripe score. The VPO strings have a lovely sheen, yet inner detail is glowingly clear. Crespin is here at her finest on record, with tone well focused; the slightly maternal maturity of her approach will appear for many ideal. Mandfred Jungwirth makes a firm and virile, if not always imaginative Ochs, Yvonne Minton a finely projected Octavian and Helen Donath a sweet-toned Sophie. Solti's direction is fittingly honeyed, with tempi even slower than Karajan in the climactic moments. The one serious disappointment is that the great concluding Trio does not quite lift one to the tear-laden height one ideally wants. Even so this Rosenkavalier offers much to ravish the ear.

Decca's set conducted by Eric Kleiber was the first ever complete recording of Rosenkavalier, and it has long enjoyed cult status. Sena Jurinac is a charming Octavian, strong and sympathetic, and Hilde Gueden a sweetly characterful Sophie, not just a wilting innocent. Ludwig Weber characterizes deliciously in a very Viennese way as Ochs; but the disappointment is the Marschallin of Maria Reining, very plain and lacking intensity. She is not helped by Kleiber's refusal to linger; with the singers recorded close, the effect of age on what was once a fine voice is very clear, even in the opening solo of the culminating trio. And ensemble is not good, with even the prelude to Act I a muddle.

The Naxos transfer, meticulously made by Mark Obert-Thorn, irons out some of those inconsistencies as well as some electronic clicks and some distortion, and also offers full sound, a little more detailed but with some fizz occasionally and some veiling of voices in places.

The Regis version offers full, warm sound, less detailed and with a more noticeable surface-hiss, making it rather less recommendable. None of the three gives the strings of the Vienna Philharmonic their full bloom. Only the Decca Legends issue offers the libretto, with Naxos and Regis providing instead detailed synopses linked to the index points.

Der Rosenkavalier (abridged; highlights from early recordings)

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110191-2 (2). Lehmann, Olszewska, Schumann, Mayr, VPO, Heger

Mark Obert-Thorn's meticulous transfer of the original 78s of this classic opera set has the voices just as vivid as on EMI's own transfer, tending to bring out more clearly the variable balances and volume-levels which marked the original. The performance remains peerless, with all four principal soloists at their peak. That makes the substantial 43-minute appendix specially valuable, with alternative performances by Lehmann and Richard Mayr set against recordings by such rivals at the time as Barbara Kemp a superb Marschallin, Alexander Kipnis an Ochs even more powerful than Mayr, with Richard Tauber masterly in the tenor aria of Act I (omitted in the main set of excerpts) and Conchita Supervia a delectable Octavian opposite the Sophie of Maria Ferraris singing in Italian. The selection is rounded off with live recordings of the final trio and part of the duet made at the Theater der Unter den Linden in 1928 with Barbara Kemp, Delia Reinhardt and Marion Claire – a wonderful historic document.

Der Rosenkavalier (highlights)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 65571-2. Schwarzkopf, Ludwig, Stich-Randall, Edelmann, Waechter, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 3 93372-2 (from above set with Te Kanawa, von Otter, Hendricks, Dresden State Op., Haitink)

On EMI we are offered the Marschallin's monologue to the end of Act I (25 minutes); the Presentation of the silver rose and finale from Act II; and the Duet and Closing scene, with the Trio from Act III, flawlessly and gloriously sung and transferred most beautifully to CD. A superb disc in every way.

The set of highlights with Te Kanawa plays for 76 minutes, and many will count the disc good value as a sampler.

Der Rosenkavalier (highlights; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3022. Kenny, Montague, Joshua, Tomlinson, Shore, Mitchell Ch., Kay Children's Ch., LPO, Parry

This generous 80-minute selection from Der Rosenkavalier, sung in English, reflects the strength of English National Opera's highly successful stage production. David Parry paces the score most persuasively, and the orchestral sound is aptly sumptuous, if a little clouded on detail. The selection of items, concentrating on the beginnings and endings of Acts, cannot be faulted, except that John Tomlinson's strongly characterized Baron Ochs – with nobility part of the mixture – is represented only by the end of Act II, with its great Waltz theme. One snag is, that the recording tends to exaggerate the singers' vibratos, intrusively so only with Yvonne Kenny as the Marschallin. She is strong but not very warm with such a noticeable flutter in the voice. On the other hand, Diana Montague is a winningly expressive Octavian, and Rosemary Joshua a sweet-toned Sophie. The booklet includes full text in the English version of Alfred Kalisch.

Der Rosenkavalier Suite

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4038. Hallé O, Barbirolli – HAYDN: Symphony 83 in G min. (La Poule); LEHÁR: Gold and Silver; JOHANN STRAUSS JR: Emperor Waltz, etc. ****

A glorious performance from Barbirolli with the kind of affectionate attention to detail which all but disguises the fact that this is a musical patchwork. The Hallé horns and strings excel themselves in a performance that is full of uninhibited ardour, yet the Presentation of the Rose sequence is lovingly tender, and the final Trio full of bliss.

Salome (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 973 4339. Stratas, Beirer, Varnay, Stratas, Weikl, soloists, VPO, Boehm (Producer: Götz Friedrich)

(*) Warner NVC Arts DVD 9031 73827-2. Malfitano, Estes, Rysanek, Hiestermann, Deutsche Op. Ch. and O, Sinopoli (Dir: Petr Weigl, V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ  TDK DVD DVWWOP-SALOME. Michael, Vermillion, Bronder, Struckmann, La Scala, Milan, O, Harding (Stage Director: Luc Bondy; V/D: Emanuele Garofalo)

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA 0996D. Michael, Schuster, Moser, Volle, ROHCG O, Jordan (Stage Director: David McVicar; V/D: Jonathan Haswell)

We have long treasured Karl Boehm's 1976 performance on LaserDisc (where it lacked English subtitles) and it is splendid that it now appears on so excellent a DVD transfer. Quite frankly it is the best Salome either on CD or DVD. Teresa Stratas really looks the part as well as singing it (she has been acclaimed as the finest singing-actress of the day) and the rest of the cast is superb. Astrid Varnay's depiction of Herodias is masterly, as is Hans Beirer's Herod. Above all, Götz Friedrich's production evokes the atmosphere and dramatic intensity of Strauss's opera, and one can only echo the New York critic who declared it 'one of the most successful musical-theatrical performances I have ever seen'. Friedrich serves the score to perfection: his production is miles removed from the 'dustbin on Mars' set favoured by so many directors nowadays. This eclipses all rivals.

Recorded in 1990 at the Deutsche Opera in Berlin, the Warner DVD offers a powerful and warmly expressive performance under Giuseppe Sinopoli, the counterpart of his outstanding CD recording. Catherine Malfitano is an abrasive Salome, confident from the start, knowing exactly what she wants, and not at all girlish as she snarls out her demands or curiously asks the age of the prophet imprisoned in the cistern below. Simon Estes in his prime is a powerful Jokanaan, noble and handsome as he stands tall. Horst Hiestermann characterizes well as Herod and sings accurately, even if his voice is never beautiful, while Leonie Rysanek – earlier a great Salome – here gives a classic performance as Herodias, searingly compelling in her imperious way. The others make a first-rate team, well directed against the stylized white sets like great blocks of concrete. Malfitano is seductive in the Dance of the Seven Veils, and grows obsessively lascivious when fondling the head of the Baptist, repulsively so.

Neither of the two new Salomes, with both, astonishingly, featuring the young, lithe Nadia Michael – a new star in the name-role – matches our current recommendations, so well directed by Karl Boehm and Sinopoli respectively. The Covent Garden producer Luc Bondy is concerned with animation and keeps the heroine on the move, not just in her famous dance routine. The costumes are not entirely convincing, but the singing is uniformly quite impressive, with Nadia Michael and Peter Bronder's Herod the more memorable. Daniel Harding conducts sensuously and the orchestra plays with Italianate warmth. The camerawork is acceptable but isn't very consistent.

Not surprisingly, David McVicar's Covent Garden production seeks to impress – and indeed horrify – with lots of blood and a near naked executioner. The colourful sets amplify the decadence, and Salome's dance is sensuously managed. Indeed, Nadia Michael's Salome can sing and dance with comparable flair and accuracy. Thomas Moser's Herod is genuinely moving and makes a good foil for his sensuously attractive Salome. The orchestra plays splendidly under Philippe Jordan and Jonathan Haswell's photography is more imaginative than the work of his colleague at La Scala.

Salome (complete)

🔑 * DG. 431 810-2 (2). Studer, Rysanek, Terfel, Hiestermann, German Opera, Berlin, Ch. & O, Sinopoli

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7528 (2). Nilsson, Hoffmann, Stolze, Waechter, VPO, Solti

🔑  Chan. 9611 (2). Nielsen, Hale, Goldberg, Silja, Danish National RSO, Schonwandt

Ⓜ  EMI 567080-2 (2) [5671592]. Behrens, Bohme, Baltsa, van Dam, VPO, Karajan

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.111014/5. Goltz, Kenny, Patzak, Dermota, Braun, VPO, Krauss

The glory of Sinopoli's DG version is the singing of Cheryl Studer as Salome, producing glorious sounds throughout. Her voice is both rich and finely controlled, with delicately spun pianissimos that chill you the more for their beauty, not least in Salome's attempted seduction of John the Baptist. Sinopoli's reading is often unconventional in its speeds, but it is always positive, thrusting and full of passion, the most opulent account on disc, matched by full, forward recording. As Jokanaan, Bryn Terfel makes a compelling recording début, strong and noble, though the prophet's voice as heard from the cistern sounds far too distant. Among modern sets this makes a clear first choice, though Solti's vintage Decca recording remains the most firmly focused, with the keenest sense of presence, especially in the newly remastered version.

Birgit Nilsson is splendid throughout; she is hard-edged as usual but, on that account, more convincingly wicked: the determination and depravity are latent in the girl's character from the start. Of this score Solti is a master. He has rarely sounded so abandoned in a recorded performance. Waechter makes a clear, young-sounding Jokanaan. Gerhardt Stolze portrays the unbalance of Herod with frightening conviction, and Grace Hoffman does all she can in the comparatively ungrateful part of Herodias. The vivid CD projection makes the final scene, where Salome kisses the head of John the Baptist in delighted horror (I have kissed thy mouth, Jokanaan!), all the more spine-tingling, with a close-up effect of the voice whispering almost in one's ear. Full documentation.

With an outstanding cast, the Chandos version, superbly recorded in cooperation with the Danish Broadcasting Corporation, stands out among modern digital versions. Inga Nielsen is a superb Salome, pingingly precise in her vocal attack, with an apt hint of acid in the voice but always firm, with no shrillness. The result is a portrayal with all the strength needed, not least for the unrelenting malevolence at the end, but leaving one with the impression of a character still young. Robert Hale is a characterful and expressive, if at times gruff, Jokanaan, and the Heldentenor Reiner Goldberg and the veteran Anja Silja, make an exceptionally strong, well-characterized duo as Herod and Herodias. Smaller roles are also well cast.

Hildegard Behrens is also a triumphantly successful Salome. The sensuous beauty of tone is conveyed ravishingly, but the recording is not always fair to her fine projection of sound, occasionally masking the voice. All the same, the feeling of a live performance has been captured well, and the rest of the cast is of the finest Salzburg standard. In particular José van Dam makes a gloriously noble Jokanaan, and in the early scenes his offstage voice from the cistern at once commands attention. Karajan – as so often in Strauss – is at his most commanding and sympathetic, with the orchestra, more forward than some will like, playing rapturously. This is a performance which, so far from making one recoil from perverted horrors, has one revelling in sensuousness.

However on Naxos Mark Obert-Thorn has made one of his miraculous transformations of the sound, somehow adding lustre and body to the strings, and without losing vividness of wind and brass detail, giving the whole recording, voices and orchestra alike, added ambient warmth. The set comes with a cued synopsis, costs less than the Decca, and is much preferable. It certainly demonstrates what a great conductor Krauss was. Moreover the set's bonus is an extra 53 minutes of four legendary historical recordings of music from Salome (from 1907–49).

Salome (sung in English)

Ⓝ () Chan. 3157 (2). Bullock, Graham-Hall, Burgess, Wegner, Philh. O, Mackerras

Alas, this English-language version of Salome has little going for it as Susan Bullock is frankly inadequate in the key role, the voice neither sensuous nor beautiful enough, nor really commanding. The rest of the cast are adequate but little more than that, and by far the best feature of the recording is the rich orchestral tapestry provided by the Philharmonia Orchestra who play so dramatically and sensuously for Mackerras. Incidentally, the famous Salome's Dance is played for a second time, in its concert version, as an extra item.

Die schweigsame Frau (complete)

(*) Orfeo C 516 992, (2). Böhme, Mödl, McDaniel, Kusche, Grobe, Grist, Schädle, Loulis, Peter, Proebstl, Bellgardt, Strauch, Horn, Schreiber, Bav. State Ch. and O, Sawallisch

Recorded live at the Bavarian State Opera in July 1971, the Orfeo performance consistently demonstrates the mastery of Sawallisch as a Strauss interpreter. The orchestral sound is atmospheric if rather thin, and stage noises are often intrusive, but one can still readily appreciate how perfectly Sawallisch paces the score. Reri Grist is a charming heroine, with the edge on her bright soprano making her the more compelling as a scold. Kurt Böhme right at the end of his long career sings most characterfully as the old man, Sir Morosus, with the supporting team consistently strong. An enjoyable alternative to Karl Boehm on DG. Disappointingly, no libretto is provided, only a synopsis.

COLLECTIONS

Arias from: (i) Die Aegyptische Helena; (ii) Ariadne auf Naxos; (i) Die Frau ohne Schatten; Guntram; Der Rosenkavalier; Salome. (iii) Lieder: Allerseelen; Freundliche Vision; Schlangende hertzen; Wie Sollten wir geheim

Ⓑ  RCA 2-CD 74321 88687-2. L. Price; with (i) Boston SO or New Philh. O, Leinsdorf; (ii) LSO, Cleva; (iii) Garvey (piano) – PUCCINI: Arias ***

Leontyne Price, always at her finest in Strauss, here gives generous performances of an unusually rich collection of Strauss scenes and arias, strongly accompanied by Leinsdorf (or by Cleva in Ariadne). Recorded between 1965 and 1973, Price was still at her peak, even if occasionally the voice grows raw under stress in Strauss's heavier passages. It is particularly good to have rarities as well as such regular favourites as the Empress's awakening in Die Frau ohne Schatten, one of the finest of all the performances here. The four Lieder make an attractive encore, although no translations are provided, and the documentation is poor.

'Strauss's Heroines': Arabella, Act I: Duet. Capriccio: Moonlight Music and closing scene. Der Rosenkavalier, Act I: closing scene, Act III: Trio and finale

🔑  Decca 466 314-2. Fleming, Bonney, Graham, VPO, Eschenbach

Under the title 'Strauss's heroines', this ravishing disc offers a generous collection of the most seductive scenes in the Strauss operas. In the end of Act I of Rosenkavalier, Renée Fleming and Susan Graham come near to matching the example of Elisabeth Schwarzkopf and Christa Ludwig as the Marschallin and Octavian. Then, sadly, the Act III Trio has Christoph Eschenbach opting for an absurdly sluggish speed, but the singing is superb, and so it is in the lovely duet between the sisters in Arabella and the magical closing scene of Capriccio, where Fleming is at her most moving. Opulent sound to match.

Arias and scenes from: Ariadne auf Naxos; Capriccio; Die Liebe der Danae; Salome

 Orfeo C 511991A. Varady, Bamberg SO, Fischer-Dieskau

Recorded just before Julia Varady's retirement in 1999, still at the height of her powers, this wide-ranging collection of excerpts contains some of the most magnificent Strauss singing in years. The wonder is that any soprano can range so wide, while producing the most beautiful, full and even stream of sound, whether in the closing scene of Salome, in Ariadne's monologue and lament, in the heroine's big Act III solo from Die Liebe der Danae or as the Countess in the closing scene of Capriccio. Helped by the understanding conducting of her husband, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau – who contributes a solitary line of singing as Major Domo at the end of Capriccio – she sings with consistent fervour. This Salome may not be as sinister as many in kissing the lips of John the Baptist – the sound is too beautiful for that – but the poise as well as the power and the detailed expressiveness are magnetic. Excellent sound to match.

STRAVINSKY, Igor (1882–1971)

The Stravinsky Edition:* Vols. 1–7, Ballets, etc.: (i) The Firebird; (i) Fireworks; (iii) Histoire du soldat; (i) Petrushka; (iv, iii) Renard the Fox; (i) The Rite of Spring; (i) Scherzo à la russe; (ii) Scherzo fantastique; (v) The Wedding (Les Noces); (vi) Agon; (i) Apollo; (i) Le Baiser de la fée; (i) Bluebird (pas de deux); (vii) Jeu de cartes; (viii) Orphée; (ix, i) Pulcinella; (ii) Scènes de ballet. Ballet suites: (i) *Firebird; Petrushka; Pulcinella

Vols. 8/9, Symphonies: (i) Symphony in E; (ii) Symphony in C; (i) Symphony in 3 movements; (x, ii) Symphony of Psalms; (i) Stravinsky in rehearsal: Apollo; Piano Concerto; Pulcinella; Sleeping Beauty; Symphony in C; 3 Souvenirs

Vol. 10, Concertos: (xi, i) Capriccio for Piano & Orchestra (with Robert Craft); Concerto for Piano & Wind; (xii; i) Movements for Piano & Orchestra; (xiii; i) Violin Concerto in D

Vol. 11, Miniatures: (i) Circus Polka; Concerto in D for String Orchestra; Concerto for Chamber Orchestra, 'Dumbarton Oaks'; (ii) 4 Etudes for Orchestra; (i) Greeting Prelude; (ii) 8 Instrumental miniatures; 4 Norwegian moods; Suites 1–2 for Small Orchestra

Vols. 12/13, Chamber music and historical recordings: (iii) Concertino for 12 Instruments; (xiv; xv) Concerto for 2 solo Pianos; (xv; xvi) Duo concertante for Violin & Piano; (xvii; xviii) Ebony Concerto (for Clarinet & Big Band); (iii) Octet for Wind; (xix; iii) Pastorale for Violin & Wind Quartet; (xv) Piano Rag Music; (xviii) Preludium; (xx; iii) Ragtime (for 11 instruments); (xv) Serenade in A; (iii) Septet; (xii) Sonata for Piano; (xxi) Sonata for 2 Pianos; (xviii) Tango; (xxii) Wind Symphonies

Vols. 14/15, Operas and songs: (xxiii; iii) Cat's cradle songs; (xxiii; xxiv) Elegy for J. F. K.; (xxv; ii) Faun and shepherdess; (xxvi; iii) In memoriam Dylan Thomas; (xxvii; iii) 3 Japanese Lyrics (with Robert Craft); (xxvii; xxix) The owl and the pussycat; (xxvii; iii) 2 poems by K. Bal'mont; (xxx; i) 2 poems of Paul Verlaine; (xxiii; i) Pribaoutki (peasant songs); (xxiii; i) Recollections of my childhood; (xxviii; xxxi) 4 Russian songs; (xxxvii) 4 Russian peasant songs; (xxiii; iii) 3 songs from William Shakespeare; (xxvii; i) Tilim-Bom (3 stories for children); (xxxii) Mavra; (xxxiii) The Nightingale

Vols. 16/17, (xxxiv) The Rake's Progress

Vols. 18/19, Oratorio and Melodrama: (xxxv; i) The Flood (with Robert Craft); (i) Monumentum pro Gesualdo di Venosa (3 madrigals recomposed for instruments); (vii) Ode; (xxxvi) Oedipus Rex; (xxxvii; xxxviii, i) Perséphone

Vols. 20/21, Sacred works: (x) Anthem (the dove descending breaks the air); (x) Ave Maria; (xxxix; x, i) Babel; (xxviii; xxvi; x, iii) Cantata; (xl) Canticum sacrum; (x; ii) Credo; (x, iii) Introitus (T. S. Eliot in Memoriam*); (xli) Mass; (x; i) Pater noster; (xlii; i) A Sermon, a narrative & a prayer; (xliii; i) Threni; (x, i) Chorale: Variations on: Vom Himmel hoch, da komm ich her (arr.); *Zvezdoliki

Vols. 22, Robert Craft conducts: (xliv, i) Abraham and Isaac; (iii) Danses concertantes; (xlv) Double Canon: Raoul Dufy in memoriam; (xlvi) Epitaphium; (i) Le Chant du rossignol (symphonic poem); (i) Orchestral Variations: Aldous Huxley in memoriam; (xlvii) Requiem Canticles; (i) Song of the Nightingale (symphonic poem)

Complete Stravinsky Edition

(BB)  Sony 88697 103112 (22). (i) Columbia SO; (ii) CBC SO; (iii) Columbia CO; (iv) Shirley, Driscoll, Gramm, Koves; (v) Allen, Sarfaty, Driscoll, Barber, Copland, Foss, Sessions, American Chamber Ch., Hills, Columbia Percussion Ens.; (vi) Los Angeles Festival SO; (vii) Cleveland O; (viii) Chicago SO; (ix) Jordan, Shirley, Gramm; (x) Festival Singers of Toronto, Iseler; (xi) Entremont; (xii) Rosen; (xiii) Stern; (xiv) Soulima Stravinsky; (xv) Igor Stravinsky; (xvi) Szigeti; (xvii) Goodman; (xviii) Columbia Jazz Ens.; (xix) Baker; (xx) Koves; (xxi) Gold, Fizdale; (xxii) N. W. German RSO; (xxiii) Berberian; (xxiv) Howland, Kreiselman, Russo; (xxv) Simmons; (xxvi) Young; (xxvii) Lear; (xxviii) Albert; (xxix) Craft; (xxx) Gramm; (xxxi) Di Tullio, Remsen, Almeida; (xxxii) Belinck, Simmons, Rideout, Kolk; (xxxiii) Driscoll, Grist, Picassi, Smith, Beattie, Gramm, Kolk, Murphy, Kaiser, Bonazzi, Washington, D. C., Op. Society Ch. & O; (xxxiv) Young, Raskin, Reardon, Sarfaty, Miller, Manning, Garrard, Tracey, Tilney, Sadler's Wells Op. Ch., Baker, RPO; (xxxv) Harvey, Cabot, Lanchester, Reardon, Oliver, Tripp, Robinson, Columbia SO Ch., Smith; (xxxvi) Westbrook (nar.), Shirley, Verrett, Gramm, Reardon, Driscoll, Chester Watson Ch., Washington, D. C., Op. Society O; (xxxvii) Gregg Smith Singers, Smith; (xxxviii) Zorina, Molese, Ithaca College Concert Ch., Fort Worth Texas Boys' Ch.; (xxxix) Calicos (nar.); (xl) Robinson, Chitjian, Los Angeles Festival Ch. & SO; (xli) Baxter, Albert, Gregg Smith Singers, Columbia Symphony Winds & Brass; (xlii) Verrett, Driscoll, Hornton (nar.); (xliii) Beardslee, Krebs, Lewis, Wainner, Morgan, Oliver, Schola Cantorum, Ross; all cond. composer. (xliv) Frisch; (xlv) Baker, Igleman, Schonbach, Neikrug; (xlvi) Anderson, Bonazzi, Bressler, Gramm, Ithaca College Concert Ch., Gregg Smith; cond. Craft

On these 22 budget-price discs you have the unique archive of recordings which Stravinsky left of his own music. Almost all the performances are conducted by the composer, with a few at the very end of his career – like the magnificent Requiem canticles – left to Robert Craft to conduct, with the composer supervising. In addition there is a handful of recordings of works otherwise not covered, mainly chamber pieces. With some recordings of Stravinsky talking and in rehearsal (included in the box devoted to the symphonies) it makes a vivid portrait.

Of the major ballets, Petrushka and The Firebird are valuable, but The Rite is required listening: it has real savagery and astonishing electricity. (It is also available in a separate issue – see below.) The link between Jeu de cartes from the mid-1930s and Stravinsky's post-war opera The Rake's Progress is striking, and Stravinsky's sharp-edged conducting style underlines it, while the Scènes de ballet certainly have their attractive moments. If Orpheus has a powerful atmosphere, Apollo is one of Stravinsky's most gravely beautiful scores, while Agon is one of the most stimulating of Stravinsky's later works, and here the orchestra respond with tremendous alertness and enthusiasm to Stravinsky's direction. The recording of Le Baiser de la fée is a typical CBS balance with forward woodwind. However the splendid performance overcomes such a technical drawback. Stravinsky's recording of Pulcinella includes the vocal numbers, while in the orchestra the clowning of the trombone and the humour generally is strikingly vivid and never too broad. Similarly with the chamber scoring of the suite from The Soldier's Tale, the crisp, clear reading brings out the underlying intense emotion of the music with its nagging, insistent little themes. There is a ruthlessness in the composer's own reading of Les Noces which exactly matches its primitive Russian feeling, and as the performance goes on so one senses the added alertness and enthusiasm of the performers. Renard is a curious work, a sophisticated fable which here receives too unrelenting a performance. The voices are very forward and tend to drown the instrumentalists.

In the early Symphony in E flat, Op. 1, the young Stravinsky's material may be comparatively conventional, but in this definitive performance the music springs to life. Each movement has its special delights to outweigh any shortcomings, while in the Symphony in Three Movements Stravinsky shows how, by vigorous, forthright treatment of the notes, the emotion implicit is made all the more compelling. The Columbia Symphony plays superbly and the recording is full and brilliant. Stravinsky never quite equalled the intensity of the pre-war 78-r.p.m. performance of the Symphony of Psalms, but the later, stereo version is still impressive. It is just that, with so vivid a work, it is a shade disappointing to find Stravinsky as interpreter at less than maximum voltage. Even so, the closing section of the work is very beautiful and compelling. The CD transfers of the American recordings are somewhat monochrome by modern standards but fully acceptable.

The iron-fingered touch of Philippe Entremont has something to be said for it in the Capriccio for Piano and Wind, but this performance conveys too little of the music's charm. The Movements for Piano and Orchestra with the composer conducting could hardly be more compelling. Stern's memorable account of the Violin Concerto in D adds a romantic perspective to the framework. But an expressive approach to Stravinsky works marvellously when the composer is there to provide the bedrock under the expressive cantilena.

The Dumbarton Oaks Concerto with its obvious echoes of Bach's Brandenburgs is one of the most warmly attractive of Stravinsky's neoclassical works, all beautifully played and acceptably recorded. The Octet for Wind of 1924 comes out with surprising freshness and if the Ragtime could be more lighthearted, Stravinsky gives the impression of knowing what he wants. The Ebony Concerto, in this version conducted by the composer, may have little of 'swung' rhythm, but it is completely faithful to Stravinsky's deadpan approach to jazz.

In Le Rossignol the singing is not always on a par with the conducting, but it is always perfectly adequate and the recording is brilliant and immediate. Mavra is sung in Russian and, as usual, the soloists – who are good – are too closely balanced, but the performance has punch and authority and on the whole the CD quality is fully acceptable. The songs represent a fascinating collection of trifles, chips from the master's workbench dating from the earliest years. There are many incidental delights, not least those in which the magnetic Cathy Berberian is featured.

The Rake's Progress has never since been surpassed. Alexander Young's assumption of the title-role is a marvellous achievement, sweet-toned, accurate and well characterized. In the choice of other principals, too, it is noticeable what store Stravinsky set by vocal precision. Judith Raskin makes an appealing Anne Trulove, John Reardon is remarkable more for vocal accuracy than for striking characterization, but Regina Sarfaty's Baba is marvellous on both counts. The Sadler's Wells Chorus sings with great drive under the composer, and the Royal Philharmonic play with warmth and a fittingly Mozartian sense of style to match Stravinsky's surprisingly lyrical approach to his score. The CDs offer excellent sound and are available separately.

The Cantata of 1952 is a transitional piece between Stravinsky's tonal and serial periods. However, of the two soloists, Alexander Young is much more impressive than Adrienne Albert, for her voice brings an unformed choirboy sound somehow married to wide vibrato. The Canticum sacrum includes music that some listeners might find tough (the strictly serial choral section). But the performance is a fine one and the tenor solo from Richard Robinson is very moving. The Bach Chorale Variations has a synthetic modernity that recalls the espresso bar, though one which still reveals underlying mastery. The Epitaphium and the Double canon are miniatures, dating from the composer's serial period, but the Canon is deliberately euphonious.

The Mass is a work of the greatest concentration, a quality that comes out strongly if one plays this performance immediately after The Flood, with its inevitably slack passages. As directed in the score, trebles are used here, and it is a pity that the engineers have not brought them further forward: their sweet, clear tone is sometimes lost among the lower strands. In The Flood, originally written for television, it is difficult to take the bald narrations seriously, particularly when Laurence Harvey sanctimoniously keeps talking of the will of 'Gud'. The performance of Oedipus Rex, too, is not one of the highlights of the set. Perséphone, however, is full of that cool lyricism that marks much of Stravinsky's music inspired by classical myths. As with many of these vocal recordings, the balance is too close, and various orchestral solos are highlighted.

Of the items recorded by Robert Craft, the Requiem canticles stands out, the one incontrovertible masterpiece among the composer's very last serial works and one of the most deeply moving works ever written in the serial idiom. Even more strikingly than in the Mass of 1948, Stravinsky conveys his religious feelings with a searing intensity. The Aldous Huxley Variations are more difficult to comprehend but have similar intensity. Valuable, too, is the ballad Abraham and Isaac.

Agon; Apollo (complete ballets); Symphony in 3 Movements; The Firebird (ballet): Finale

Ⓝ (*) BBC mono BBCL 4253-2 BBC SO, composer

This is a recorded broadcast, made in the Royal Festival Hall on 10 December 1958, during the composer's visit to London. Stravinsky felt great trepidation about the event: 'two very difficult works never played by the BBC Orchestra which take much time to rehearse'. But the concert came up trumps, especially the very beautiful account of Apollo, one of the composer's most inspired later works. The more intractable serial work, Agon, not everybody's favourite, also came off well, as did the colourful and vibrant Symphony in 3 Movements. The recording is mono but very faithful to the BBC strings in Apollo.

Apollo (Apollon musagète); Le Baiser de la fée (complete; ballet & Divertimento); (i) Capriccio for Piano & Orchestra; Concerto for Piano & Wind Instruments; Le Chant du rossignol; Circus Polka; 4 Etudes; The Firebird (complete; ballet); Petrushka (1911 version; complete); Pulcinella (suite and (ii) complete ballet); Rite of Spring; Scherzo à la russe; Soldier's Tale (suite); Suites 1 & 2; Symphony in C; Symphony in 3 Movements; Symphonies of Wind Instruments; (iii) Les Noces (ballet-cantata); (iv) Symphony of Psalms; (v) Mavra; (vi) Renard

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 467 818-2 (8) SRO, Ansermet; with (i) Magaloff; (ii) Tyler, Franzini, Carmeli; (iii) Retchitzka, Devallier, Cuénod, Rehfuss, Diakoff, Geneva Motet Ch.; (iv) Choeur des Jeunes & Ch. of R. Lausanne; (v) Carlyle, Watts, Sinclair, Macdonald; (vi) English, Mitchinson, Glossop, Rouleau

Having begun his Stravinsky recordings for Decca during the days of ffrr 78s, Ansermet finally undertook his major survey with the coming of stereo. Apollon Musagète, the complete Firebird ballet and the two Piano Concertos – with Nikita Magaloff in fine form – date from as early as 1955, yet the recording still sounds remarkably well, and if in the concertante works Ansermet's direction lacks some of the bite and sharp wit that this neoclassical music needs, they follow an authentic tradition from Parisian music-making between the wars.

The Firebird was highly praised by us for its clarity of detail when it first appeared, although we commented on the lack of body to the upper strings. Undoubtedly Ansermet's later Philharmonia recording (not included here) is finer still, better played and with richer sound, but this remains impressive for its time.

Le Chant du rossignol and the Pulcinella Ballet Suite followed in 1956, both showing Ansermet at his interpretative best. The recordings, too, were considered demonstration-worthy in their day, with The Song of the Nightingale showing how clearly and beautifully Decca could cope with a big Stravinsky orchestra, while Pulcinella showed even more impressively how a small chamber group of instruments could be projected with vivid realism.

The 1957 Petrushka also set high standards of clarity and vividness, although the Swiss violins were not flattered by the close microphones and, fine as it was, Ansermet's performance did not quite match his earlier 78 version (available in a fine Dutton transfer – see below) in dramatic and emotional vividness. It was soon to be upstaged by Dorati's famous Mercury version. The Rite of Spring, however, recorded in the same year, was a performance of great integrity. Ansermet's scrupulous insistence on maintaining the score's natural balance brought an awe-inspiring relentlessness and a wild primitive beauty.

In 1960 came the Symphony in C, strongly played, and often incisive, but the companion Symphony in Three Movements lacks a feeling of strong rhythmic vitality, and is without the fullest impetus. However, the clean stylish account of The Soldier's Tale, given (1961) sound of tingling immediacy, is matched by the fine performance of the haunting Symphonies for Wind Instruments, where Ansermet's warmth more than compensates for any lack of tautness.

The Quatre Etudes (from 1962) have considerable subtlety, and the Suites are enjoyable in a spontaneous, extrovert way. Both show the lighter side of Stravinsky, and Ansermet plays them with spirit and style. However, there is something curiously heavy and lethargic about his account of the Symphony of Psalms, even though this account is better than the earlier version on 78s (see Dutton reissue below). Fortunately the well-projected recording adds sharpness to a reading which might otherwise have sounded flat.

In Les Noces, recorded that same year, Ansermet fails to capture the essential bite in Stravinsky's sharply etched portrait of a peasant wedding. The hammered rhythms must sound ruthless and here they are merely tame. This was followed with complete versions of Le Baiser de la fée (in 1963), and Pulcinella (with vocal numbers) in 1965, neither of which was as successful as the earlier recordings of the Fairy's Kiss Divertimento and the Pulcinella Ballet Suite, primarily because of moments of slackness and under-par orchestral playing. However, yet again Ansermet's warmth and the splendidly vivid recording help to project the music in spite of the inadequacies of the playing.

The series culminated in 1964 with Mavra and Renard (where one enjoys the clear English). Both were a great success, vividly performed and brilliantly recorded. Here more than usual Ansermet caught the sort of toughness one recognizes in the composer's own performances of his music, and the haunting yet light-hearted Scherzo à la russe, with its bouncing main theme, is a splendid bonus.

(i) Apollo; (ii) The Firebird; Petrushka (1911 score); The Rite of Spring (ballets; complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 438 350-2 (2). (i) LSO, Markevitch; (ii) LPO, Haitink

Apollo (Apollon musagète) (1947 version); Firebird: Suite (1945 version); Jeu de cartes; Petrushka (1947 version); The Rite of Spring

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca 473 731-2 (2). Concg. O, or Cleveland O; Chailly

Apollo; Orpheus (ballets)

🔑  ASV CDDCA 618. O of St John's, Lubbock

The ASV issue offers an ideal coupling, with refined performances and excellent recording. The delicacy of the rhythmic pointing in Apollo gives special pleasure, and there is a first-rate solo violin contribution from Richard Deakin.

Markevitch's gravely beautiful reading of Apollon musagète here comes with Haitink's strikingly refined account of the other key ballets. In The Firebird the sheer savagery of Katshchei's Dance may be a little muted, but the sharpness of attack and clarity of detail make for a thrilling result, while the magic and poetry of the whole score are given a hypnotic beauty. In Petrushka the rhythmic feeling is strong, especially in the Second Tableau and the finale, where the fairground bustle is vivid. The natural, unforced quality of Haitink's Rite also brings real compulsion. Other versions may hammer the listener more powerfully, thrust him or her along more forcefully; but the bite and precision of the LPO playing here are most impressive, as throughout the set, while the recording's firm definition and the well-proportioned and truthful aural perspective make it a joy to listen to. Outstanding value.

The Double Decca anthology is rather more notable for Decca's demonstration-quality sound than for Chailly's interpretations, but the orchestral playing itself remains outstanding throughout. In this somewhat indulgent reading of Apollo, the score's refined neoclassicism is muted in favour of opulent warmth, and some of the ballet's rhythmic profile is lost, especially in the celebrated Pas de deux, which is far more voluptuous here than with Karajan. Chailly is more naturally at home revelling in the rich Rimskian colours of the extended 1945 Firebird Suite, which includes the delectable Pantomimes. The explosive entry of Katshchei is riveting and the expansive finale could not be more voluptuous.

Jeu de cartes, recorded in 1996, is released here for the first time. The performance is impressive. Chailly's Petrushka is vividly characterized, and he brings a genuine pathos to Petrushka's cell scene. The Decca engineers provide glittering detail, yet make full use of the warm Concertgebouw ambience. With speeds faster than usual – markedly so in Part Two – Chailly's taut and urgent reading of The Rite of Spring is gripping throughout, and bass-drum enthusiasts will find that it plays its part with a precision and resonance to startle the listener. If, with Chailly's urgent pacing in Part Two, there is less contrast than usual in the final Sacrificial Dance, there is no doubting the intrinsic power of the reading overall. Moreover, Decca have given it sufficient cueing points for the first time. For audiophiles, this collection is a real Stravinskian bargain: the second CD lasts over 81 minutes.

(i–ii) Le Baiser de la fée (ballet; complete); (i; iii) Ode; (iv) Symphonies of Wind Instruments; (i; ii) Symphony in E flat, Op. 1; (i; iii) Symphony in C; Symphony in 3 Movements

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 ADD/DDD 241-8 (2). (i) RSNO; (ii) Järvi; (iii) Gibson; (iv) Nash Ens., Rattle

Le Baiser de la fée (divertimento)

🔑 * Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 061. Russian Nat. O, Jurowski – TCHAIKOVSKY: Suite 3 ***

(i) Le Baiser de la fée (divertimento); Le Chant du rossignol; (ii) Dumbarton Oaks Concerto; (iii) Petrushka (1911); The Rite of Spring

Ⓑ (*) RCA 2CD stereo/mono 74321 84609-2. (i) Chicago SO, Reiner; (ii) NDR SO, Wand; (iii) Boston SO, Monteux

On Chandos Strauss's deft scoring of Le Baiser de la fée is a constant delight, much of it on a chamber-music scale; and its delicacy, wit and occasional pungency are fully appreciated by Järvi, who secures a wholly admirable response from his Scottish Orchestra. The ambience seems exactly right, bringing out wind and brass colours vividly. As for the symphonies, even when compared with the composer's own versions, the performances by the Royal Scottish Orchestra – in excellent form under Sir Alexander Gibson – stand up well, with Järvi directing the early E flat work equally impressively. The vivid naturalness of the splendid 1982 digital recordings compensates for any slight lack of bite. The cool, almost whimsical beauty of the Andante of the Symphony in Three Movements is most subtly conveyed, and the inner movements of the Symphony in C are beautifully played. Moreover the Nash Ensemble's perceptive account of the Symphonies of Wind Instruments under Rattle does not let the side down. It is good to have also as a bonus the Ode in memory of Natalia Koussevitzky, which has an extrovert, rustic Scherzo section framed by short elegies.

The young Russian Vladimir Jurowski offers performances of both works that are as near ideal as one can imagine, electric in tension to give the illusion of live music-making. In the Stravinsky Divertimento, Jurowski steers a nice course between bringing out the romantic warmth of the Tchaikovsky sources from which Stravinsky took his material (songs and piano pieces) and the neoclassical element in his style of the 1920s. So the chugging rhythms on horns in the most memorable section of the second movement convey jollity in their springing step, while the pointing of contrasts in the final Pas de deux, the longest of the four movements, brings yearning warmth in the big lyrical moments and wit in the faster sections. Exceptionally vivid sound, recorded by Pentatone's Dutch engineers in Moscow, which sounds superb in surround sound.

Reiner's Chicago recordings of Le Baiser de la fée and Le Chant du rossignol are legendary. The latter is praised below, where it is coupled with Rimsky's Scheherazade; the equally delightful Fairy's Kiss Divertimento has character and life as well as much charm, with the Pas de deux beautifully done. The overall performance has great atmosphere, with distinguished woodwind and brass contributions, helped by the astonishingly vivid 1958 Chicago recording. Wand's hardly less engaging account of the Dumbarton Oaks Concerto, played with great geniality and finesse, is also most naturally recorded in an attractive acoustic.

For Petrushka and The Rite of Spring RCA have turned to Monteux, who conducted the première of the latter. But not to his Paris Conservatoire stereo performances. Instead they have chosen the alternative Boston versions, which are much better played. The Rite dates from 1951 and is mono, with a recording which harshens at climaxes. But the performance powerfully captures the wild intensity of the ballet's violent pagan ritual, and, just as tellingly, projects the hauntingly mysterious evocation of the opening of the second part.

The Boston recording of Petrushka is stereo and dates from 1959. There is still an edge to the sound at climaxes, but the Boston acoustic adds its ambient glow throughout, and the performance is extremely lively, with memorable solo contributions in the central tableaux and a particularly exciting and dramatic account of the final scene, all the bustle of the Shrovetide carnival brilliantly conveyed.

(i) Capriccio for piano and orchestra; Concerto for Piano and Wind Instruments; Movements for piano and orchestra. Piano Music: Les cinq doigts; 4 Études, Op. 7; 3 Movements from Petrushka; Piano-Rag Music; Scherzo; Serenade in A; Sonata for Piano (1924); Sonata in F sharp min.; Souvenir d'une marche boche; Tango; Valse pour les enfants.

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86073-2 (2) Michel Béroff; (i) Orchestre de Paris, Ozawa

This classic set comes from the 1970s when Béroff was astonishing the musical world with his dazzling virtuosity and musicianship. Although most of this repertoire is well represented on disc, this issue remains a highly satisfying and competitive one, still a first choice. The three Concertos (or rather two concertos and a capriccio) are also first rate and well accompanied by Seiji Ozawa and the Orchestre de Paris.

(i–ii) Capriccio for Piano & Orchestra; (iii) Jeu de cartes; (iv) Danses concertantes; (ii) Scènes de Ballet; (v) Variations

(BB)  Naxos 8.557506. (i) Wait; (ii) O. of St Luke's; (iii) Philh. O; (iv) 20th Century Classics Ens.; (v) LPO; all cond. Craft

The Jeu de cartes with the Philharmonia Orchestra is exhilarating and gives much pleasure. Probably the best thing on the disc is Scènes de Ballet, which has rarely been given with greater charm and wit. Very good sound.

Le Chant du rossignol (Song of the Nightingale) (symphonic poem – see also The Firebird)

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 769-2 (2). Berlin RSO, Maazel – RAVEL: L'heure espagnole; L'enfant et les sortilèges; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol ***

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 66377-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade *** ❁

Le Chant du rossignol, which Stravinsky made from the material of his opera, deserves a much more established place in the concert repertoire. Maazel is nothing if not dramatic, but above all he revels in the glittering orchestral detail and the marvellous atmosphere this score commands. The Berlin Radio Orchestra produces a feast of chimerical glowing colours, and the DG engineers of the time surpassed themselves. It is well coupled with Ravel's two delightful neoclassical operas and Maazel's superb Berlin Philharmonic version of Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio espagnol from the same period.

On its new SACD format Reiner's 1956 Chant du rossignol brings astonishingly vivid sound, full of presence, an excellent coupling for his strong and dramatic reading of Scheherazade. Where this transitional work – composed over two separate periods – can seem lacking something in thrust, Reiner's virile, sharply focused reading relates it more clearly to the Rite of Spring. The virtuosity of the playing and the clarity of the direction are arresting, while the glittering detail of the orchestral palette in the work's five titled (and here cued) closing sections is most evocative.

Le Chant du rossignol

Ⓝ (*) Häns. CD.93234. SW German RSO, Bour – TCHAIKOVSKY: Sleeping Beauty: Suite, etc. **(*)

Le Chant du rossignol is drawn from Stravinksy's early opera, Le Rossignol, making an attractive filler for the Tchaikovsky suites. Excellent performances, with Ernest Bour making one of his last appearances before his death.

Le Chant du rossignol; Firebird Suite

 DG 477 7175. NYPO, Maazel – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Rapsodie espagnole ***

Recorded live at the Avery Fisher Hall, this recording points the way to the future, as it comes from digital downloads taken from New York concerts. The sound is spectacular, Le Chant du rossignol very crisply detailed, if a littler close, but the Firebird is in the demonstration bracket, very naturally balanced indeed. It is a superb performance, dramatic and full of warmth and colour, with the finale beginning with a magical pianissimo and building to a magnificent climax.

(i) Concerto for Piano and Wind; Fireworks (DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 314. (i) Toradze; Rotterdam PO, Gergiev (with DEBUSSY – Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien ) (Dir: Rob van der Berg, V/D: Peter Rump) – PROKOFIEV: Scythian Suite, Op. 20 (with Rehearsal) *** ✿

Alexander Toradze is as impressive an exponent of Stravinsky as he was of the Prokofiev concertos he recorded with Gergiev and the Kirov Orchestra for Philips, and while the main interest of this DVD is the Prokofiev coupling, this well-planned concert is very rewarding throughout and stimulating to watch.

Concerto for Piano & Wind

() British Music Society mono BMS 101 CDH. Mewton-Wood, Hague Residentie O, Goehr – BLISS: Concerto  ✿; SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Concerto 1 ()

Edward Sackville-West placed this record as one of two recordings that serve as the 'best memorial of his [Mewton-Wood's] style', and certainly the partnership here with Walter Goehr is very impressive indeed. It is the central Largo one especially remembers, wonderfully cool and beautiful, immediately offset by the brilliance of the finale. The recording of the piano is very good, and the orchestra has more body than in the Bliss coupling.

Concerto for Strings in D

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 435-2. BPO, Karajan – HONEGGER: Symphonies 2–3 *** ✿

Karajan's version of the Concerto in D for Strings – written within a few months of the Honegger Symphonie Liturgique, with which it is coupled – may strike some listeners as not quite acerbic or biting enough, but the finesse and lightness of touch of the Berlin strings and their rhythmic legerdemain are a delight. The recording is first class.

(i) Concerto in D for Strings; Danses concertantes; Dumbarton Oaks Concerto in E flat; 4 Etudes; (ii) 4 Norwegian Moods; (iii) Orchestral Suites 1–2. Chamber music: (iv) Concertino for 12 instruments; Epitaphium; L'Histoire du soldat (suite for violin, clarinet and piano); Octet; Ragtime; Pastorale; 3 Pieces for Solo Clarinet; Septet; (v) Concerto for 2 Pianos

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Double Decca (DDD/ADD) 473 810-2 (2). (i) Montreal SO, Dutoit; (ii) Cleveland O, Chailly; (iii) SRO, Ansermet; (iv) European Soloists Ens., Ashkenazy; (v) Ashkenazy & Gavrilov

Apart from the two Suites for Orchestra, which Ansermet recorded in 1961, these performances come from various times between 1987 and 1996 and, apart from their musical excellence, are superbly recorded. Of particular value is the Concerto for Two Pianos, written in the early 1930s, with Ashkenazy and Gavrilov. The European Soloists are a first-class group who give wonderfully alert and vital accounts of the Octet and the Concertino for Twelve Instruments. Dutoit and his Montreal players are on very good form, too, in the Dumbarton Oaks Concerto and the Danse concertantes. In every respect this collection cannot be recommended too highly.

Violin Concerto in D

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 425 003-2. Chung, LSO, Previn – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concertos 1–2 ****

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony SMK 87996. Lin, LAPO, Salonen – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concertos 1–2 **** ✿

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 6572-2. Perlman, Chicago SO, Barenboim – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2 ***

Ⓜ  DG 477 5376. Mutter, Philh., Paul Sacher – BARTÓK: Violin Concerto 2 (*); DUTILLEUX: Sur le même accord ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 445-2. Perlman, Boston SO, Ozawa – BERG: Concerto; RAVEL: Tzigane ***

 Sony SK 89649. Hahn, ASMF, Marriner – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto ***

Kyung-Wha Chung is at her most incisive in the spicily swaggering outer movements which, with Previn's help, are presented here in all their distinctiveness, tough and witty at the same time. In the two movements labelled Aria, Chung brings fantasy as well as lyricism, conveying an inner, brooding quality.

As in the two Prokofiev concertos, so in the Stravinsky

Cho-Liang Lin plays with power and warmth, while Salonen terraces the accompaniments dramatically, with woodwind and brass bold and full. The Prokofiev coupling is outstanding too.

Perlman's Warner performance, recorded live in 1994, is more compelling than his earlier studio recording, with Barenboim adding to the urgency and energy. Far more Stravinskian wit is conveyed in the outer movements, with rhythms more bouncy and with phrasing more seductively individual.

DG restore Anne-Sophie Mutter's brilliant 1988 account of the Stravinsky and her 1991 Bartók to circulation, coupling it with a new work by Dutilleux. The recording is spacious and well focused with Ms Mutter not too prominently placed in the aural picture. A very good performance and recommended alongside though not necessarily in preference to Kyung-Wha Chung, Cho-Liang Lin and Perlman.

Perlman's precision, remarkable in both concertos on the DG disc, underlines the neoclassical element in the outer movements of the Stravinsky, while the two Aria movements are more deeply felt and expressive. The balance favours the soloist, but no one will miss the commitment of the Boston orchestra's playing, vividly recorded. The Ravel Tzigane has now been added for good measure.

The opening of Hilary Hahn's reading of the Stravinsky Concerto is the more striking in its power because of the close balance of the violin, intensifying the impact of the very fast tempo she adopts. Her playing is phenomenal in its precision, but anyone used to more conventional readings such as Chung's will find it sounding very hectic. Hahn, needless to say, in the two arias brings out the full meditative depth of the music. The result is to underline the toughness of the work.

(i) Violin Concerto; The Rite of Spring

Ⓜ () Medici Masters mono MM020-2. (i) Grumiaux; Cologne RSO, Fricsay – BARTÓK: Divertimento for Strings ()

These recordings on Medici Masters come from the early 1950s, so audiophiles should be warned. Fricsay's Rite and the Bartók Divertimento are somewhat special, very fresh and authentic in feeling, and, of course, Grumiaux was a marvellously aristocratic artist.

Dumbarton Oaks Concerto; 8 Instrumental Miniatures; (i) Ebony Concerto

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 405-2. (i) Arrignon; Ens. InterContemporain, Boulez – BERG: Chamber Concerto ***

The playing of the Ensemble InterContemporain is very brilliant indeed. There is much to enjoy in these performances, which are spiced with the right kind of wit and keenness of edge, and even those who do not normally respond to Boulez's conducting will be pleasantly surprised with the results he obtains here.

(i) The Firebird; (ii) Orpheus; (i) Petrushka (1947 version); The Rite of Spring (ballets; complete)

Ⓜ (*) Ph. 464 744-2 (2) (i) Concg. O; (ii) LSO, C. Davis

An outstanding set. Sir Colin Davis directs a magically evocative account of the complete Firebird, helped not just by the playing of the Concertgebouw Orchestra (the strings outstandingly fine) but by the ambience of the hall, which allows inner clarity, yet gives a bloom to the sound, open and spacious, superbly coordinated. Similarly the Philips recording of Petrushka (although not so well balanced as Firebird) reveals details of the rich texture that are often obscured.

Davis has his idiosyncrasies in The Rite of Spring (one of them his strange hold-up on the last chord), but generally he takes a direct view and the result is strong, forthright and powerful. Orpheus is much less frequently heard and even Davis's excellent account cannot create a richness of colour to match its companions. The recording is warm and very natural, if not so lustrous at those made in the Concertgebouw, but that is partly the effect of the composer's scoring.

(i) The Firebird (ballet; complete; choreography: Mikhail Fokine); (ii) Les Noces (choreography: Bronislava Nijinska; (DVD versions)

🔑 ❀ * Opus Arte DVD OA 0832 D. (i) Benjamin, Cope, Rosato, Drew; (ii) Yanowsky, Pickering and members of Royal Ballet; ROHCG O, or 4 Pianos, cond. Carewe. (V/D: Ross MacGibbon.)

A moving and well-directed visual record, totally free from attention-seeking camerawork, brings these two marvellous ballets in their original choreography back to life, as if one had the privilege of visiting Diaghilev's Ballets Russes. The dancing is of the highest standard, led by Leanne Benjamin's Firebird, and costumes and sets are visually equally memorable. There are two important bonuses, in addition to the rehearsal footage. Those who have treasured their TV recordings of Stravinsky's own appearance with the New Philharmonia Orchestra at the Royal Festival Hall in 1965 when he was 83 will cherish the DVD transfer, which has much-enhanced definition, both visually and aurally. Finally there is a hilarious description by David Drew of Nijinska's visit to Covent Garden to mount Les noces in the late 1960s.

The Firebird; Petrushka (ballets; complete with choreography by Michael Fokine and costumes and sets adapted from the original Ballets Russes production by Anatoly and Anna Nezhny; DVD versions)

🔑 ❀ * Decca DVD 079 322-9. Nina Ananiashvili, Andris Liepa, Ekatrina Liepa, Victor Yeremenko, Tatiana Beltskaya, Gediminas Taranda Bolshoi, Sergey Petukhov, Vitaly Breusnko, State Academic Theatre O, Andrey Chistiakov (Dir: Andris Liepa) – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade ***

Both the authentic Bolshoi productions of The Firebird and Petrushka are very spectacular indeed, as are the costumes and sets. The presentation is vividly and colourfully handled, and Nina Ananiashvili is a truly sparkling Firebird, dancing very gracefully. The handsome Prince Ivan, Andris Liepa (who later transforms himself into the puppet, Petrushka), has little to do but be resourceful and court his beautiful Princess. The entry of Katshchei (Sergey Petukhov) is truly demonic: the grotesque make-up and bizarre costumes create a gothically evil atmosphere, and he is a wonderfully malignant ogre. When the Prince finds the huge golden egg that contains Katshchei's soul and smashes it, all the stone images around become human again and can be the guests at Ivan's wedding to the most radiant tune of all.

In Petrushka the opening Shovetide Fair scene fills the huge Bolshoi stage with myriad different characters and vividly colourful events, all happening simultaneously; but at the centre is the Magician/Showman's stage, from which Petrushka, the Moor and the Ballerina emerge to dance into the audience. The drama of Petrushka's unrequited love for the Ballerina, who prefers the Moor, begins almost immediately and reaches its peak in Petrushka's cell. This is the one miscalculation of the production, for the cell scene is not nearly claustrophobic enough. However, Andris Liepa is a very touching Petrushka, and his murder (and the puppet substitution) is effectively managed, while the final ghost appearance is splendidly dramatic. Both ballets are entertaining to watch, but one continually reflects that Stravinsky's music is far, far greater and more imaginative than the choreography.

The Firebird (ballet; complete; DVD version)

 TDK DVD DV-VPOVG. VPO, Gergiev (includes Gergiev talking on Prokofiev and Stravinsky) (Dir and V/D: Brian Large) – PROKOFIEV: Symphony 1 (Classical), Op. 25; SCHNITTKE: Viola Concerto ***

This is, of course, not the performed ballet as above, but an orchestral performance of Stravinsky's glittering score, filmed at the Salzburg Festival in 2000. Gergiev has an excellent rapport with his players and the performance is most impressive, both musically and, thanks to an excellent balance, aurally. The complete score is recorded here, and if there are times when one feels Gergiev could give his players just a little more time (the Dance of the Princesses), this is still a very fine reading, with superb playing from the Viennese. The performance is enhanced by the visual direction which, as so often with Brian Large, directs the listener's eyes where his ears want them to be. The sound itself is extremely vivid.

The Firebird (ballet; complete; CD versions)

🔑  Ph. 446 715-2. Kirov O, Gergiev – SCRIABIN: Prometheus ***

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2700. VPO, Dohnányi – BARTÓK: Two Portraits, Op. 5. *

The Firebird (ballet; complete); Le Chant du Rossignol; Fireworks; Scherzo à la russe; Tango

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Mercury (ADD) 432 012-2. LSO, Dorati

Mercury's electrifying 1959 version of The Firebird is perhaps Dorati's finest recording, and one of the great recordings of all time. It sounds as fresh and as vivid as the day it was made; the brilliantly transparent detail and enormous impact suggest state of the art modern sound, rather than something which is now 50 years old! Only the sound of the massed upper strings reveals the age of the original master, although this does not spoil the ravishing final climax: the bite of the brass and the transient edge of the percussion are thrilling. The performance sounds completely spontaneous and the LSO wind playing is especially sensitive. The recording of Stravinsky's glittering symphonic poem The Song of the Nightingale is hardly less compelling – urgent and finely pointed – and the shorter pieces come up in a blaze of colour and energy.

The complete Firebird (on Philips) played by Russian artists has, as one might expect, a strong sense both of atmosphere and theatre, and Valery Gergiev manages the transitions between sections, dramatic characterization and contrasts with consummate mastery. The orchestra play with effortless virtuosity and are recorded with remarkable realism and definition. The coupling, Scriabin's Prometheus, can hold its own alongside most rivals.

For a score as magical as The Firebird a recording can be too clear, and the digital sound in Dohnányi's version tends to be too analytical, separating the threads in a way which prevents the music from making its full evocative effect. That said, there are many good things in this performance, and those who enjoy sound for sound's sake will like it for that reason, for it is indeed impressive, and it is good to have it available again.

The Firebird (complete); 4 Etudes; Petrushka (1947 version; complete); Scherzo à la russe (2 versions: for jazz band; for orchestra); Symphony in 3 Movements

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 85538-2 (2). CBSO, Rattle

Strong, clean and well played, Rattle's CBSO version of The Firebird is forthright and positive rather than atmospheric, looking forward to the Rite of Spring rather than back to Russian nationalism. The recording is warm and full, but this is not one of Rattle's most inspired recordings. His reading of Petrushka brings out the sturdy jollity of the ballet, contrasting it with the poignancy of the puppet's own feelings. Rattle and his players benefit in clarity by their use of the 1947 scoring, finely detailed to bring out many points that are normally obscured. In the Symphony in Three Movements, done with comparable power, colour and robustness, Rattle brings out the syncopations and pop references with great panache. The two versions of the Scherzo à la russe then make a fascinating comparison – both given with Rattle's usual flair, infectiously bouncy. The Four Studies provide another light-hearted makeweight.

The Firebird; Petrushka (1947) (ballets; complete)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557500 Philh. O, Craft

Vividly recorded and played with fire and warmth by the Philharmonia, Robert Craft's generous coupling of the complete Firebird and Petrushka ballets makes an outstanding bargain on the Naxos label. The clarity of sound brings out the extra transparency of Petrushka in the revised 1947 scoring, with well-sprung rhythms in the dance movements, and with the Russian Dance biting in its impact. The complete

Firebird of 1910 is advertised as the first recording of the original version, but the differences with the usual 1910 score amount to no more than the inclusion of two long valveless trumpets on stage playing a single note in places. Nonetheless, Craft inspires a taut performance which holds the structure together, while bringing out the atmospheric beauty of this warmest of Stravinsky's scores, while Katshchei's Infernal Dance has all the bite and weight you need. Helpfully, there are copious tracks to help identify the narrative, 22 in Firebird and 17 in Petrushka.

(i) The Firebird (complete); (ii) The Rite of Spring (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Sony SMK 89875. Columbia SO, composer

Stravinsky's own (1961) version of Firebird is of far more than documentary interest, when the composer so tellingly relates it to his later work, refusing to treat it as merely atmospheric. What he brings out more than others is the element of grotesque fantasy, the quality he was about to develop in Petrushka, while the tense violence with which he presents such a passage as Katshchei's Dance clearly looks forward to The Rite of Spring. That said, he encourages warmly expressive rubato to a surprising degree, with the line of the music always held firm. But the revelatory performance here is The Rite of Spring, for Stravinsky's own (1960) reading has never been surpassed as an interpretation of this seminal 20th-century score. Over and over again, one finds passages which in the balancing and pacing (generally fast) give extra thrust and resilience, as well as extra light and shade. The digital transfer may be on the bright side, but brass and percussion have thrilling impact, sharply terraced and positioned in the stereo spectrum.

(i) The Firebird (original, 1910 version); (ii) The Rite of Spring; (i) Symphonies of Wind Instruments; (ii; iii) Perséphone (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 4 82106-2 (2). (i) LSO; (ii) LPO; Nagano; (iii) with Anne Fournet (narrator), Rolfe Johnson, LPO Ch. & Tiffin School Boys' Ch.

Kent Nagano's vividly detailed LSO recording of the original Firebird score is a top recommendation, with its apt coupling of the original (1920) score of the Symphonies of Wind Instruments, divertingly cool, with sonorities and textures keenly balanced. Nagano's reading of The Rite of Spring has similar qualities. If it is less weightily barbaric than many, the springing of rhythm and the clarity and refinement of instrumental textures make it very compelling, with only the final Danse sacrale lacking something in dramatic bite.

The only rival for Nagano's Perséphone – with its spoken narration described by the librettist, André Gide, as 'a melodrama in three scenes' – is the composer's own version, and the contrasts are extreme. Where Stravinsky himself – at speeds consistently more measured – takes a rugged, square-cut view, Nagano, much lighter as well as more fleet, makes the work a far more atmospheric evocation of spring. The playing and singing are consistently more refined, and the modern digital recording gives a warm bloom, while the sung French sounds far more idiomatic for everyone. The narration of Anne Fournet brings out all the beauty of Gide's words, with Anthony Rolfe Johnson free-toned in the taxing tenor solos. All in all, a highly recommendable Virgin double.

The Firebird (ballet; complete; 1910 version); Symphonies of Wind Instruments (1947 revision)

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI 2-CD 5 20969-2 (2). LPO, Welser-Möst – Oedipus Rex ***

In The Firebird the LPO play very beautifully indeed, creating magically atmospheric textures, and they are superbly recorded too. The snag is a lack of sustained tension in the gentler music, although the climaxes are vivid enough. Welser-Möst, however, finds plenty of wit in the Symphonies of Wind Instruments, also splendidly played.

The Firebird: Suite (1919 version)

 DG 437 818-2. O de l'Opéra Bastille, Chung – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade ***

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80039. Atlanta Ch. & SO, Shaw – BORODIN: Prince Igor: Overture; Polovtsian Dances ***

Myung-Whun Chung gets very musical results from his players and there are many imaginative touches. The sound has great warmth and richness, but the perspective is absolutely right too.

Robert Shaw achieves a vivid and atmospheric reading of Stravinsky's famous suite. The Round Dance of the Princesses is played very gently to maximize the shock of the entry of Kastchei, and the very wide dynamic range of the recording achieves the most dramatic impact both here and in the closing pages of the finale. With its equally spectacular coupling, this disc is designed to please those wanting to show off their reproducer – and this it will certainly do.

Ballets: The Firebird (suite; 1919 version); Jeu de cartes; Petrushka (1911 version); (i) Pulcinella (1947 version); The Rite of Spring

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 085-2 (2). LSO, Abbado; (i) with Berganza, R. Davies, Shirley-Quirk

The highlight on this DG Double is Petrushka, while both the Firebird Suite and Jeux de cartes are given stunning performances. The LSO plays with superb virtuosity and spirit. The neoclassical score of Pulcinella is given a surprisingly high-powered reading, and not just the playing but the singers too are outstandingly fine. Abbado's feeling for atmosphere and colour is everywhere in evidence, heard against an excellently judged perspective. There is a degree of detachment in Abbado's reading of The Rite of Spring, although his observance of markings is meticulous and the orchestra obviously revels in the security given by the conductor's direction.

The Firebird Suite (1919 version); Petrushka (1947 version; complete); Scherzo à la Russe

🔑 * Telarc CD 80587. Cincinnati SO, Järvi

Paavo Järvi's Telarc coupling of the Firebird Suite and Petrushka is outstanding in every way, with the Cincinnati orchestral playing superb throughout. The Telarc recording, balanced by Jack Renner, offers demonstration sound which can be enjoyed for its natural perspective as well as for its impressive amplitude and range of dynamic.

The Firebird Suite (1919 version); Petrushka; (i) Symphony of Psalms

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9700. LPO, Ansermet; with (i) LPO Ch.

Here are three celebrated recordings which dominated the immediate post-war catalogue, restored in altogether outstanding transfers. The set of Ansermet's Petrushka was hailed by Alec Robertson (not Robinson, as given in the notes) as 'the most sensational advance in recording we have yet'. The Symphony of Psalms was the first recording since Stravinsky's own, somewhat primitive, Paris recording from the early 1930s and was again a revelation. Self-recommending.

(i) The Firebird (suite; 1919 score); (ii) The Rite of Spring

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) 516240. (i) NYPO; (ii) LSO; Bernstein – PROKOFIEV: Scythian Suite (*)

Bernstein's Rite (1972) was recorded with quadraphonic 'surround sound' in mind. Although it does not have the pinpoint precision of some other versions, the electric intensity is never in doubt. The Firebird Suite (1957) is in most ways better recorded: more open, better defined and with rather greater depth.

Firebird Suite (1945 version); The Rite of Spring

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1276. RPO, Simonov

Yuri Simonov directs highly individual and certainly enjoyable performances of both ballets, which are warm and idiomatic rather than bitingly brilliant, bringing out the Russian elements and echoes of Rimsky-Korsakov, Stravinsky's teacher. The Rite of Spring is not barbaric, even though rhythms are sprung persuasively, and the playing is always alert. But the recording is superb, allowing one to hear inner textures. In the Firebird Simonov adopts daringly broad speeds for the closing section. The great horn solo is gloriously done.

Histoire du Soldat (Suite); Pastorale, Op. 5; Renard (Burlesque); Scherzo à la Russe; Song of the Volga Boatmen; 3 Pieces for Clarinet; Pour Picasso. Vocal Music: 2 Belmont Songs; Berceuses du Chat; 3 Japanese Lyrics; Pribaoutki

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557505. Instrumental & Vocal Soloists, O of St John's or Philh. O, Craft

The Pastorale (in the composer's arrangement for violin and woodwind) opens this collection with a gentle, wistful charm. Written originally as a vocal piece in 1908, it introduces Robert Craft's collection of early works dating from 1911 to 1918, the exception being the brazen arrangement of the Scherzo à la Russe which Stravinsky re-orchestrated for the Paul Whiteman Band in 1944. The most familiar work here is the Histoire du Soldat Suite, given an animated, boldly characterized performance, with splendid playing from the orchestral soloists. But Renard creates a similar dynamic instrumental character, with the vividly histrionic vocal participation (Stravinsky wrote the libretto himself) impressively well sung and exuberantly full of ribald wit. It is presented at top speed with sharp accuracy and bravura by the present group, laced with bizarre barnyard effects from the orchestra. The Three Pieces for Clarinet are miniatures of sharp originality. The two Belmont Songs are lyrical and beautiful, and the Three Japanese Lyrics are sinuously seductive, all exquisitely sung by Susan Narucki. These are provided with translations, but the four Pribaoutki are not. Here Catherine Ciesinski brings out their bold Russian folk derivation, with the composer's scoring ever ear-tickling. The four Berceuses du chat are equally memorable, with stealthy clarinet colouring. The programme ends with the Song of the Volga Boatmen, boisterously scored, and played with enthusiasm by the Philharmonia Orchestra. All these performances offer first-class playing from a galaxy of artists and spirited, crisply detailed direction from Robert Craft, who also provides excellent notes. The recording cannot be faulted, except perhaps for a rather backward balance of the soloists in Renard.

(i) Les Noces; (ii) Oedipus Rex

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557499. (i) Wells, Bickley, Ewing, International Piano Qt., Tristan Fry Percussion Ens.; (ii) Lane, Cornwell, Wilson Johnson, Greenan, Fox (speaker); (i; ii) Simon Joly Ch., Philh. O, Craft.

This first issue in the Robert Craft collection to be issued on Naxos provides an exceptionally generous coupling of two of Stravinsky's supreme masterpieces in excellent versions superbly recorded. Craft, the composer's amanuensis in his later years, began conducting as a loyal helper of Stravinsky, but here he reveals himself as much more, an inspired interpreter who can reveal the fire and freshness of these two works, in performances of high voltage superbly recorded. The distinctive timbre of Les noces with its four pianos and percussion is vividly caught, and the Western singers capture the Russian idiom well with a rustic tinge. Oedipus Rex is just as powerfully projected with Edward Fox as narrator in English and Martyn Hill in the title role dramatic if under strain at times, as is Jennifer Lane as Jocasta.

Petrushka (1911 score; complete; CD versions)

🔑 (*) Testament mono SBT 1139. Philh. O, Stokowski – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade **

🔑 Ⓜ () Somm mono SOMMCD 027. SRO, Ansermet – ROSSINI: La boutique fantasque *** ❀

Ⓜ () RCA mono 09026 63303-2. Boston SO, Monteux – FRANCK: Symphony in D min. *** ❀

Stokowski's Petrushka with the Philharmonia Orchestra is superb. The orchestral playing is exciting and full of colour. It is almost as impressive as his famous pre-war set with the Philadelphia Orchestra – and that is saying something. It is coupled, however, with a somewhat idiosyncratic Scheherazade, but is still indispensable.

In November 1949, when Ansermet's ffrr Decca recording of Petrushka was made, the Suisse Romande Orchestra was in better shape than when he made his stereo Stravinsky discs in the later 1950s. Overall the performance, besides being better played, is more gutsy than Ansermet's later stereo version. Its strikingly vivid quality and sense of the dramatic is brought about by everything being sharply focused in strong primary colours, a tribute to the engineering as well as the performance, and it is only the inherent thinness in the upper range of the violins that gives cause for complaint.

As he conducted the ballet's première, it is good to have Monteux's 1931 Boston recording at last satisfactorily remastered, with the sound now vivid and the Boston ambience more of an advantage than a drawback. The performance has undoubted flair and is very well played.

Petrushka (1911 score; complete); The Rite of Spring (ballets; complete)

🔑 Ⓑ () Sanctuary Living Era mono AJC 8554. SRO, Ansermet

Older readers re-encountering Ansermet's famous pioneering 1946 version of Petrushka in this very faithful transfer will share our astonishment at the way this extraordinarily vivid performance and recording has remained in the memory in every detail. It is a true classic of the gramophone. Indeed, the sense of the drama inherent in the engineering and performance alike is unforgettable. Everything is sharply focused in strong primary colours in front of the listener, and more than half-a-century after the LP first appeared, the immediacy of the sound in this remarkable score remains unsurpassed, so that one soon puts aside the well remembered thin, 'whistly' edge on the fortissimo upper strings. The Rite of Spring, recorded a year later, still retains the stereoscopic detail, sense of drama and spontaneity for which the conductor was famous in the recording studio.

Petrushka (1947 score; complete)

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2686. VPO, Dohnányi – BARTÓK: The Miraculous Mandarin **(*)

Dohnányi directs a genial and well-paced reading, slightly lacking in sparkle and imagination but revealing the VPO as a band very sympathetic to repertoire not normally associated with it. Though the piano and trumpet might with advantage have been placed closer, the (1977) sound is generally of Decca's best late analogue quality.

(i) Petrushka (1947 score); (ii) Pulcinella (suite)

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony 82876 78749-2. NYPO, Bernstein (with talk by Bernstein)

(*) Testament SBT 1156. (i) New Philh O; (ii) Philh. O; Klemperer

Leonard Bernstein's 1969 performance of Petrushka is among the most involving and warm-hearted on record. Bernstein goes to the emotional heart of the score, without violating Stravinsky's expressed markings except in a couple of minor instances. The panoply of the fair music, the inbred hysteria of the puppet's rage and, above all, the tragedy of the death are here conveyed with unrivalled intensity, and the vivid recording adds to the compulsion of the performance. Fortunately the coupling, recorded a year later, is equally distinctive, stylish and with playing of subtlety and precision fully worthy of Stravinsky's witty Pergolesian pastiche; and for good measure this reissue includes a talk by Bernstein discussing Stravinsky's approach to the score of Petrushka.

Following a concert performance in 1967, Klemperer insisted on recording Petrushka. EMI initially edited together a finished copy that was rejected. What Stewart Brown of Testament has done is to investigate the original tapes, and put together a recording drawn from the first day's sessions instead of the third – sharper and more intense. The result is a fascinating version, strong and symphonic rather than atmospheric, and magnetic from first to last. Vivid recording, full of presence. The Pulcinella Suite of four years earlier has already appeared on CD, an attractively fresh performance, not quite as biting as that of Petrushka.

(i) Pulcinella (complete); Danses concertantes

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553181. (i) James, Bostridge, Herford; Bournemouth Sinf., Sanderling

The Naxos complete Pulcinella ballet is fresh and alert and with the impact of the crisp, clean ensemble reinforced by full and immediate sound on an apt chamber scale. This was one of the very first recordings made (in 1993) by the tenor Ian Bostridge, and the heady beauty of his voice is superbly caught in such vocal numbers as the Serenata. The other soloists are also good. A full text and English translation are given, and it is good to have the far later Danses concertantes (1941–2) as a valuable makeweight, done with equal point and polish. Strongly recommended.

The Rite of Spring (ballet; complete)

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 463 613-2. BPO, Karajan – PROKOFIEV: Symphony 5 ****

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 477 7160. BPO, Karajan – BARTÓK: Concerto for Orchestra **(*)

The Rite of Spring; Symphony of Psalms

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60120-2. Ch. & O de Paris, Barenboim

The Rite of Spring; Symphony in 3 Movements

🔑 * Tudor SACD 7145. Bamberg SO, Nott

Outstanding new performances of both works. Jonathan Nott and the transformed Bamberg Symphony Orchestra are riding high at the moment in their superb surround sound recordings for Tudor. The music is very strongly characterized and full of personality, the Rite both magically evocative and rivetingly incisive, not as violent as some versions, but still very compelling indeed. The Symphony in Three Movements is mellower and has both warmth and spirit. The sound really is state-of-the-art even if reproduced on a normal CD player without rear speakers.

Barenboim's coupling of an exciting and atmospheric Rite of Spring and a bitingly eloquent Symphony of Psalms dates from 1987 but has only recently reappeared on Elatus. The resonant recording, if not sharply detailed, brings spectacular results in the ballet, including impressive contributions from the timpani and bass drum, and is even better focused and balanced in the Symphony of Psalms, where the Paris Choir sings powerfully and committedly, with the lovely closing Hallelujahs particularly telling. The orchestral contribution, too, with its French woodwind colouring, is full of character, and this fine performance can be considered alongside Bernstein's (see below), although the latter is still a preferable choice.

Karajan's approach may have excitement but, next to other more extrovert accounts, it sounds a bit too smooth and civilized. His attention to detail is striking, but at the expense of sheer elemental strength, though it is interesting to hear such a sophisticated reading of this score. The recording is technically outstanding, with its vivid projection counteracting the high degree of reverberation. Not a top recommendation, but an interesting performance with integrity, which will not disappoint Karajan admirers, and those coming new to it will certainly see the work in a different light.

The Soldier's Tale (L'histoire du soldat; complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Vanguard (ADD) SACDATMSC 1559. Madelaine Milhaud, Aumont, Singher, Instrumental Ens., Stokowski

 Chan. 9189. Haugland, SNO, Järvi

(i) The Soldier's Tale (complete); (ii) Dumbarton Oaks Concerto in E flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.55366-2. D. Thomas, Soames, Keeble, & Instrumental Ens.; (ii) N. Ch. O; Ward

This surprisingly neglected score is heard here for the first time on CD as the composer intended. It might be questioned why Vanguard chose a woman as narrator, but Milhaud's wife had already acted in a similar role in a concert performance of Stravinsky's Persephone under the composer's direction, and she received his imprimatur. She was also able to record the piece in the original French as well as English, and her diction is both clear and histrionically involving, even reminding one a little of Dame Edith Sitwell in Walton's Façade. The rhyming libretto was the work of the Swiss writer Charles Ferdinand Ramuz, who had provided the French text for Les Noces. The two actors playing the Soldier (Jean Pierre Aumont) and the Devil (a dominating Martial Singher) are excellent; the latter produces a remarkable falsetto while in the guise of the old clothes woman. Whether the piece works or not only the listener can decide, but the performance is certainly first rate and full of life. Throughout, Stokowski magics Stravinsky's vivid score, making the most of its lyrical warmth as well as the more abrasive Devil's music, which has plenty of rhythmic bite. The septet of expert instrumentalists was recorded (in 1967) on three tracks – the narration separately, as it had to be bilingual. The solo violinist (Charles Tarrack) and the trumpeter (Theodore Weis) are fully up to the considerable demands placed on them (the Tango, Waltz and Ragtime are delightfully played), and here everything is expertly combined to make a most convincingly balanced SACD, with each item of music separately cued. This may be an eccentric artistic amalgamation, but it includes the whole of Stravinsky's score, and is aurally fascinating. The sound is remarkably vivid and immediate.

With recording ideally balanced, intimate but not too dry, with fair bloom on voices and instruments, Nicholas Ward on Naxos offers a crisp and well-lifted account, with seven stylish players from the Northern Chamber Orchestra. Using the idiomatic English version of Michael Flanders and Kitty Black, the three actors characterize well without exaggeration. From the full chamber orchestra the Dumbarton Oaks Concerto makes a generous and apt coupling, similarly crisp and persuasive

Aage Haugland takes a forthright view, with the Devil given a crypto-French accent as a very oily character. Where the Chandos scores is in the sharp focus of the performance, generally brisk and taut at fast speeds, helped by a close recording which yet has plenty of air round the sound.

Symphony in 3 Movements; Symphony in C; (i) Symphony of Psalms

Ⓝ  EMI 2 07630-0. BPO, Rattle; (i) with Berlin R. Ch.

Rattle is less strident in the Symphony in 3 Movements than Boulez, but more polished, more civilized, and without loss of bite. The Symphony in C is even finer – a performance of great intensity and urgency. The Symphony of Psalms is ideal, too, and beautifully sung. Altogether this is a very impressive triptych indeed and superbly recorded.

Symphony in 3 Movements; Symphonies of Wind Instruments; (i) Symphony of Psalms

(*) DG 457 616-2. BPO, Pierre Boulez; (i) with Berlin R. Ch.

The Symphony in Three Movements brings a violent approach from Boulez, with the Berliners relishing the jazzy outbursts of the outer movements and the warmth of the central slow movement. An unexpected but revelatory disc. The results are refined rather than biting in the Symphony of Psalms and Wind Symphonies, where Boulez's restraint combined with beautifully moulded ensemble gives way to dramatic power only at key climaxes. The poignancy of the Wind Symphonies is reinforced, and the beauty of the Symphony of Psalms culminates in a glowing account of the final apotheosis, one of Stravinsky's most sublime inspirations.

'The Final Chorale' – a documentary about the Symphony of Wind Instruments (DVD version)

 Ideale-Audience DVD 3. Netherlands Wind Ens., de Leeuw – SCHOENBERG: 5 Orchestral Pieces ***

This is a most illuminating feature (available from www.ideale-audience.com.) that follows the musical development of the Symphonies of Wind Instruments, composed in 1920 in memory of Debussy, and explores what makes them so profoundly original. The exposition by Frank Scheffer has clarity and insight, and there is some archival material and a highly interesting interview with Robert Craft. Splendid playing, as one might expect, from the Netherlands Wind Ensemble under Reinbert de Leeuw.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Ballad; Chanson russe; Danse russe; Divertimento; Duo concertante; Pastorale; Suite italienne

🔑  Chan. 9756. Mordkovitch, Milford

Lydia Mordkovitch, truly Russian, defies the idea of Stravinsky as a cold composer, finding radiant intensity even in the neoclassical Duo concertante, notably in the lovely final Dithyrambe. This was a work Stravinsky wrote for himself to play with the violinist Samuel Dushkin, and the other pieces, all lighter, are arrangements he also made for their recitals, based on some of his most approachable works. So the ballets Pulcinella and The Fairy's Kiss prompted respectively the Suite italienne and the Divertimento, while the other shorter pieces culminate here in a fizzing account of the Danse russe from Petrushka.

Concertino; Double Canon; 3 Pieces for String Quartet

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 67550-2. Alban Berg Qt – DEBUSSY; RAVEL: String Quartets **(*)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554315. Goldner Qt – SZYMANOWSKI: String Quartets 1–2 ***

Ⓜ  Wigmore Live WHLive 0012. Ysaÿe Qt – DEBUSSY; FAURÉ: Quartets ***

Stravinsky's original titles for the Three Pieces were Danse, Excentrique and Cantique, with the second an etching of the contortions of the famous clown Little Tich, and the third a Russian chant. The playing of the Alban Berg Quartet has tremendous bite and grip, and the music's spare lyricism and irony is indelibly caught, as is the rhythmic energy and bustle of the Concertino. The economic Double Canon is dedicated to the memory of the painter Raoul Dufy, and this short valediction is touchingly realized. First class, vividly present recording.

On Naxos Stravinsky's bright and brittle miniatures for String Quartet, with their compressed and cryptic arguments, make a striking contrast with the rich and exotic quartets of Szymanowski. The excellent Goldner Quartet play them with dramatic bite, underlining that contrast. Excellent sound.

As part of the Wigmore Hall recital by the Ysaÿe Quartet, these Stravinsky rarities, so interesting and diverting, also make an admirable foil for the two great French Quartets.

Divertimento

 Erato 8573-85769-2. Repin, Berezovsky – BARTÓK: Romanian folk dances; STRAUSS: Violin Sonata ***

On Erato Repin and Berezovsky give a performance of immense character and elegance, and ideally balanced.

3 Pieces for String Quartet

🔑  ASV CDDCA 930. Lindsay Qt – DEBUSSY; RAVEL: Quartets **(*)

A vital, finely etched performance of these delightful pieces from the Lindsays. A good fill-up to thoughtful and vigorous accounts of the Debussy and Ravel Quartets. Good recordings.

Suite italienne for Cello & Piano

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82067-2. Mørk, Vogt – MIASKOVSKY; PROKOFIEV; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonata; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonata ***

Suite italienne for Violin & Piano

 BIS CD 336. Thedéen, Pöntinen – SCHNITTKE: Sonata; SHOSTAKOVICH: Sonata ***

Stravinsky made several transcriptions of movements from Pulcinella, including the Suite italienne for both cello and alternatively violin and piano. The performances by Torleif Thedéen and Roland Pöntinen are felicitous and spontaneous, and they are afforded strikingly natural recording.

Truls Mørk and Lars Vogt also give a very lively account. It is a welcome makeweight for their eloquent accounts of the Shostakovich, Miaskovky, Rachmaninov and Prokofiev Sonatas, and this budget reissue is very strongly recommended.

PIANO MUSIC

Concerto for 2 pianos; 3 Easy Pieces for piano 4 hands; 5 Easy Pieces for piano 4 hands; Ragtime; (i) From 5 fingers; Tango; Valse des fleurs

 KML DVD 1112/3. Katia & (i) Marielle Labèque – DEBUSSY: En blanc et noir

This issue offers two discs, one a straightforward CD, the other a DVD, though the latter does not include Ragtime, the three movements from The Five Fingers or the Valse des fleurs. The Concerto for two pianos was one of Stravinsky's favourite compositions and the Labèques play it marvellously. Skip the gimmicky DVD, or throw it out.

Solo piano music

Circus Polka; 4 Etudes; Piano Rag Music; Ragtime; Scherzo; Serenade; Sonata; Sonata in F sharp min.; Tango; Valse pour les enfants. Piano transcriptions: Le Chant du rossignol (probably made by Arthur Lourié); 3 Movements from The Firebird (trans. Agosti); 3 Movements from Petrushka; Symphonies for Wind Instruments (arr. Arthur Lourié)

🔑 Ⓑ  Nim. NI 5519/20. Jones

The piano was Stravinsky's indispensable work-tool. He thought of it as 'a utility instrument which sounds right only as percussion', but Rubinstein convinced him otherwise, and it was for Rubinstein that he transcribed the Three Movements from Petrushka. Martin Jones plays them vividly, and is particularly evocative in the central Chez Pétrouchka (as he is in the Firebird finale). The other piano transcriptions, wanted for use at ballet rehearsals, were made by others. Le Chant du rossignol is very orchestral and prolix, but again Martin Jones finds atmospheric magic in the third and final tableau.

The earliest work here is the charming Scherzo with its rhythmic hoppity-jump, while Jones relishes the full-blooded Tchaikovskian romanticism of the F sharp minor Sonata, an entirely uncharacteristic but very enjoyable student work from 1903–4: its simple Andante is touching. The Etudes of 1908 move into the world of Scriabin and the Valse pour les enfants is rather like Poulenc, but the Piano Rag Music and the engaging Ragtime (1918–19) are harder-edged and more typical.

The Sonata (1924) with its cool, almost Ravelian Adagietto and the delightful Serenade (1925) are perhaps Stravinsky's two finest solo works, and ought to be much better known. The much later and beguiling Tango (1940) contrasts with the Circus Polka (1942), which, with its parody of Schubert's Marche militaire, brings an element of the bizarre. Martin Jones readily encompasses the wide range of these pieces.

Piano music: Circus Polka; 4 Etudes, Op. 7; Piano Rag-Music; Scherzo; Serenade in A; Sonata (1924); Sonata in F sharp min.; Sonata (1924); Tango

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570377. Sangiorgio

While the Piano Rag-Music and Tango have an undoubted quirky rhythmic vitality and charm, it would be difficult for the uninformed listener to pin down the composer of the two Sonatas with their attractive slow movements, or indeed the four flamboyant Etudes. Victor Sangiorgio plays everything here with great character and virtuosity, and in some pieces he is even more successful than any of his previous rivals. He also benefits from vivid and present recording (originally from Collins) and excellent notes. A truly indispensable record which is thoroughly rewarding.

3 Movements from Petrushka

 RCA 82876 65390-2. Evgeny Kissin – MEDTNER: Sonata-Reminiscenza (*); SCRIABIN: 5 Preludes; Sonata 3 ***

Kissin is a wonderful pianist – of that there is no question. However, those who recall the celebrated Gilels recording of Petrushka may find some touches here just a shade self-regarding. Even so, this is pretty memorable.

Piano Sonata; Piano-rag Music; Serenade in A

🔑  Chan. 8962. Berman – SCHNITTKE: Sonata ***

Boris Berman is an artist of powerful intelligence who gives vivid and alertly characterized accounts of all these pieces. Excellent piano sound, too. Strongly recommended.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Babel; Cantata; Mass; Symphony of Psalms; 3 Russian Sacred Choruses

(BB)  Naxos 8.557504. Gregg Smith Singers, Simon Joly Chorale, Philharmonia O, Craft; (i) with Wilson-Johnson (narrator)

This was one of the first discs that Robert Craft recorded in his Stravinsky series, with the Symphony of Psalms as the centrepiece for a varied group of sacred choral pieces. Though it offers a clean, intense reading of the main work, it reaches full power only in the glorious final movement. The other works all come in clear, direct readings, with David Wilson-Johnson the Narrator in the strange movement, Babel, that Stravinsky wrote on commission from the publisher Nathanial Shilkret, illustrating the Bible story of the Tower of Babel. The programme opens with three haunting Russian Sacred Chorales which are immediately appealing and as idiomatic as one can expect from non-Russian singers. The recordings were made over a decade, between 1992 and 2002. Full documentation by Craft, but no texts.

(i) Cantata on Old English Texts; Mass; (ii) Les Noces

🔑 * HM HMC 801913. Sampson, Parry & soloists, RIAS Kammerchor, MusikFabrik, Reuss

Stravinsky, an ardent believer and a member of the Russian Orthodox Church, wrote the Mass for himself and for liturgical rather than concert use. It has an archaic feeling, but it is gloriously lyrical and inspired, the plangent harmonies giving it dramatic bite, especially in the thrilling Sanctus, while the Agnus Dei is raptly beautiful in the same way that the 'Alleluias' at the end of the Symphony of Psalms are so memorable.

The Cantata, too, opens unforgettably and is lyrically inspired throughout, using four verses from A Lyke-Wake Dirge, interspersed with polyphonic Ricercari allotted to solo voices and accompanied by celestial flutes, oboe, cor anglais and cello.

Les Noces simulates a folk wedding, and its special feature is exuberant rhythmic joy, which is just what this new Harmonia Mundi performance so exhilaratingly captures. Then, of course, there is that haunting tolling bell at the end, which somehow confirms that the ritual is archaic but eternal. The performance here is directed with superb exuberance by Daniel Reuss; when listening to it, you'll also discover where Orff's Carmina Burana came from. The Cantata and Mass are equally beautifully sung, with the glorious Carolyn Sampson standing out among the excellent soloists. The recording is in the demonstration class.

OPERA

Oedipus Rex (with narration in English)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * CfP 585 0112. Dowd, Herincx, Blackburn, Johnson, Remedios, Richardson (nar.), Sadler's Wells Op. Ch. (men's voices), RPO, C. Davis

In 1960 the Sadler's Wells Opera Company (predecessor of the ENO) had one of its most spectacular successes when Colin Davis as Music Director conducted a revelatory production of Oedipus Rex, directed by the legendary Michel St Denis. What till then had generally been regarded as a dry, over-intellectual piece, not helped by using a Latin text, was triumphantly revealed as an overwhelming, vitally dramatic opera, defying convention. Davis and his team went into the recording studio the following year – with the opera company's orchestra replaced by the RPO – and this thrilling account of Stravinsky's score resulted. In full, immediate sound, vividly transferred to CD, there is a hit-you-between-the-eyes quality which reflects the original stage experience, with each member of the cast singing challenging music with heartfelt commitment. The involvement is intensified by the nobly formalized narrations of Sir Ralph Richardson, preparing one for the colourful, energetic performance. There is no more red-blooded version of this opera than this, with Ronald Dowd a powerful, cleanly focused Oedipus, deeply affecting in his two climactic solos, Invidia fortunam odit, and the final, agonized Lux facta est – all is revealed. Patricia Johnson is similarly firm as Jocasta, with a balefully dark chest register, and Raimund Herincx as Creon, Harold Blackburn as Tiresias and the young Alberto Remedios in the tiny role of the Shepherd all bear witness to the vocal and dramatic strengths of the company at that time. It is astonishing that this superb recording has been buried for many decades, making this vividly immediate CD transfer doubly welcome on the CfP label.

Oedipus Rex (with narration in French)

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI 2-CD 520969-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Lipovšek, Tomlinson, Miles, LPO Ch., LPO, Welser-Möst – Firebird etc. **(*)

Franz Welser-Möst and the London Philharmonic take an expressive rather than a severe neo-classical view. The singing of the men of the London Philharmonic Choir is less incisive than that of their principal rivals, but is satisfyingly weighty, and the soloists are on balance among the most involvingly characterful of any, led by Anthony Rolfe Johnson, magnificent as Oedipus, weightily heroic but inflecting words meaningfully. Marjana Lipovšek brings mature warmth and substance to the role of Jocasta, while John Tomlinson as Creon and John Mark Ainsley as the Shepherd are outstanding too. Only the brisk, prosaic French narration of Lambert Wilson sells the listener short.

(i) Oedipus Rex; (ii) Symphony of Psalms (CD versions)

Ⓜ * Sony (ADD) 88697 00819. (i) Kollo, Krause, Troyanos, Harvard Glee Club, Boston SO; (ii) English Bach Festival Ch., LSO; all cond. Bernstein

Recorded in 1972, not long before Bernstein transferred allegiance from CBS to DG, these performances of the two supreme masterpieces of Stravinsky's inter-war years make a formidable coupling. In Oedipus Rex, with Michael Wagner an excellent narrator (naturally pronouncing it 'Eddipus' in the American way), the casting is exceptionally strong in what is a severely stylized opera, a work which increasingly reveals its emotional heart. The two principal soloists are outstandingly fine – René Kollo excitingly heroic as Oedipus and Tatiana Troyanos affecting as Jocasta – and there is no serious weakness among the others either, with the chorus shading the repetitions of the closing pages beautifully. Bernstein's view of the Symphony of Psalms is not as austere and ascetic as the composer's own; instead, there is a grandeur and a powerful sense of atmosphere, strong and intense, ending with a tender account of the final Laudate Dominum, one of the most beautiful inspirations in all Stravinsky. First-class singing and playing from the Bach Festival Chorus and the LSO. The recording too has both clarity and range.

(i) Oedipus Rex (with narration in French); Symphony of Psalms

Ⓜ (*) Sup. SU 3674-2 11. (i) Desailly (nar.), Zidek, Soukupová, Bermann, Haken, Kroupa; Prague Philharmonic Ch., Czech PO, Ančerl

Ančerl's account of the Symphony of Psalms is beautifully sung but suffers from rhythmic heaviness in all three movements, for he fails to sustain his rather slow tempi, notably in the finale. The phrasing is not as flexible as it might be but, with good choral recording, the result is still moving, especially at the close. Oedipus Rex is a different matter, and it understandably won a Grand Prix du Disque in 1968. There is a degree of expressiveness in the phrasing that might not please the composer himself but Ančerl has at his disposal a large group of virtuoso singers, and the result is sharp and committed: the precision of discipline is much more acute than in Stravinsky's performance. The Czech soloists too are not only movingly eloquent but bring a Slavonic timbre which is not at all inappropriate in this work with its lingering traces of Russian influence. The recording quality is very natural, and so is the CD transfer. There are two snags: the text is provided but no translation, and there are no internal cues to separate out the spoken narrative, only a single band between Acts I and II.

The Rake's Progress (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Warner DVD 3984 22352-2. Fedderly, Hendricks, Hagegård, Asawa, Swedish R. Ch. & O, Salonen (V/D: Inger Aby)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0991D (2). Claycomb, Kennedy, Shimell, Peckova, La Monnaie Ch. & SO, Ono (Dir: Robert Lepage)

The Warner DVD version offers not a regular staging but a filmed version, made in Sweden with a strong trio of principals. The tenor Greg Fedderly makes a handsome Tom, with a clean, well-focused voice, opposite the provocative soprano Barbara Hendricks, not quite the innocent maiden of an ideal casting, but vocally strong. Håkan Hagegård on his home territory is a formidable Nick Shadow, smooth and sinister. Exceptionally, the bearded lady, Baba the Turk, is played by a man, Brian Asawa, certainly characterful. The sound is bright and forward to reinforce the incisiveness of Esa-Pekka Salonen's conducting. Documentation is poor, with only a synopsis and a brief list of chapters.

Recorded live at La Monnaie in Brussels, Robert Lepage's production presents a bare, updated view of Stravinsky's memorable opera, with an excellent cast led by the Anne Trulove of Laura Claycomb, with Andrew Kennedy a clean-cut Rake and William Shimell a formidable Nick Shadow, arriving as a sinister motorcyclist. It works well, largely through the singing and the lively conducting of Kazushi Ono, though there are few if any overtones of Hogarth. It is the sort of production best experienced with one's eyes closed!

The Rake's Progress (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony (ADD) SM2K 46299 (2). Young, Raskin, Reardon, Sarfaty, Miller, Manning, Sadler's Wells Op. Ch., RPO, composer

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.660272/3 (2). Garrison, West, Cheek, Woodley, White, Lowery, O of St Luke's, Craft

🔑  DG 459 648-2 (2). Bostridge, York, Terfel, Robson, Howells, von Otter, Monteverdi Ch., Gardiner

🔑  Erato 0630 12715-2 (2). Hadley, Upshaw, Lloyd, Ramey, Collins, Bumbry, Lyon Opéra Ch. & O, Nagano

Ⓜ (*) Decca 475 7005 (2). Langridge, Pope, Walker, Ramey, Dean, Dobson, L. Sinf. Ch. & O, Chailly

Stravinsky's own recording of The Rake's Progress has many elements of the original Sadler's Wells production. The casting is uniformly excellent with the Rake of Alexander Young dominating but Judith Raskin an attractive heroine. Regina Sarfaty's Baba is superbly characterized and her anger at being spurned just before the 'squelching' makes a riveting moment. The composer conducts with warmth as well as precision, both chorus and orchestra respond persuasively.

It was Robert Craft, Stravinsky's devoted amanuensis, who was behind the composer's own second recording of the Rake, made in London on his last visit with a largely Sadler's Wells cast. Here, in this 1993 recording made in New York, he follows what he has learned from the composer in an electrifying account, very well cast and recorded, making this an outstanding bargain. Jon Garrison is a clear, strong Rake with plenty of character in coping with the malicious help of the devilish Nick Shadow. 'This beggar shall ride,' he brazenly claims when first appreciating his new wealth. John Cheek as Nick is wonderfully sinister. As Anne Trulove Jayne West is not so characterful, but she sings with all the necessary combination of purity and power. First-rate performances from the other principals too, notably Wendy White as Baba the Turk, the Bearded Lady. Arthur Woodley as Father Trulove and Melvin Lowery as Sellem the auctioneer are not quite so characterful, but they sing well. Every word in Auden and Kallman's brilliant and ingenious libretto is crystal clear, also a tribute to the balance engineers, and the precise, staccato contributions of chorus and orchestra add to the impact of the whole performance.

Gardiner's incisive direction brings extra sparkle to the rhythmic neoclassical writing and conveys a hushed intensity in the many tender moments of this moral tale. Ian Bostridge's lyric tenor might seem light for the role of Tom but with fine pointing of words he underlines the Rake's vulnerability, the ease with which he gives way to temptation. Bryn Terfel makes a seductive Nick Shadow, strong and sardonic, singing superbly, and the young American Deborah York sings with golden tone and dazzling flexibility as Anne, untroubled by high tessitura. The rest of the team is equally strong, with Anne Sofie von Otter making Baba the Turk the most eloquent nagger. Well-balanced recording.

Kent Nagano, with his Lyon Opera forces and an outstanding cast of soloists, directs a fresh and crisp account. In the title-role Jerry Hadley, with his fresh, clear tone, is aptly youthful-sounding and brings out the pathos of the final scenes when struck insane by Nick Shadow. Samuel Ramey is powerful and sinister in that devilish role, as he was in the earlier, Chailly version, and Dawn Upshaw makes a tenderly affecting Anne Trulove, bringing out the heroine's vulnerability. Robert Lloyd as Trulove and Anne Collins as Mother Goose are both very well cast, and the veteran Grace Bumbry makes a fruity Baba the Turk. Excellent ensemble from the Lyon Opera chorus, though the balance is a little backward. Otherwise first-rate sound.

Richard Chailly draws from the London Sinfonietta playing of a clarity and brightness to set the piece aptly on a chamber scale without reducing the power of this elaborately neoclassical work. Philip Langridge is excellent as the Rake himself, very moving when Tom is afflicted with madness. Samuel Ramey as Nick, Stafford Dean as Trulove, and Sarah Walker as Baba the Turk are all first rate, but Cathryn Pope's soprano as recorded is too soft-grained for Anne. Charming as the idea is of getting the veteran Astrid Varnay to sing Mother Goose the result is out of style. The recording is exceptionally full and vivid but the balances are sometimes odd: the orchestra recedes behind the singers and the chorus sounds congested, with little air round the sound.

Le Rossignol (complete; DVD version)

(*) Virgin Classics DVD 5 44242. Dessay, Simcic, McLaughlin, Urmana, Grivnov, Scjagidulli, Naouri, Mikhailov, O & Ch. de l'Opéra de Paris, Conlon (a film by Christian Chaudet)

This is very much a film – and not a filmed performance of the opera. Christian Chaudet is inventive – perhaps too inventive, as he draws attention away from the music and towards the visual presentation. Natalie Dessay makes a splendid nightingale, and the remainder of the cast is very good, too. James Conlon gets a sensitive response from the fine Orchestre de l'Opéra de Paris. It can certainly be enjoyed without the distraction of vision, but we can imagine others preferring the wonderful post-war account by Janine Micheau, conducted by André Cluytens and available on Testament, which still sounds marvellous. Not even Stravinsky's own recording surpasses it.

SUK, Josef (1874–1935)

Asrael Symphony, Op. 27

() Sup. mono 11 1902-2 (2). Czech PO, Talich – DVOŘÁK: Stabat Mater (*)

Václav Talich's pioneering mono account from the early 1950s has great intensity of utterance and poignancy and provides a link with the composer himself. Talich knew him well and conducted many Suk premières. The sound is very acceptable for the period, and it is a pity that it comes harnessed to a less successful Dvořák Stabat Mater.

(i) Asrael Symphony in C min., Op. 27; (ii) A Fairy Tale, Op. 16; Praga, Op. 26; (i) The Ripening; (ii) A Summer's Tale, Op. 29; (i; iii) Epilogue

Ⓑ  Sup. SU 3864-2(4). Czech PO; with (i) Neumann; (ii) Pešek; (iii) Jehlièková, Kusnjer, Galla, Prague Chamber Ch., Máti

This bargain set comprises Supraphon's digital recordings of Suk's orchestral music, recorded in the 1980s. Neumann's performance of the marvellous Asrael Symphony is a very fine one, as is his performance of the inventive tone-poem, The Ripening. A Fairy Tale is full of charm and originality and, although Praga is not in the same league, it is worth a hearing. The Epilogue is a large piece, taking some 40 minutes. Suk spoke of it as the last part of a cycle, beginning with Asrael and 'going through the whole of human life, into reflection on death and the dread of it', before the appearance of earthly love – all this leading up to the 'exhilarating song of liberated mankind'. An inexpensive way to acquire some of this composer's finest music. Good sound.

Asrael Symphony, Op. 27; Praga; Ripening (symphonic poems)

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI 2-CD 2 06873 (2). RLPO, Pešek

Pešek's Liverpool version of the Asrael Symphony has altogether greater sensitivity and imagination than the earlier Supraphon account from Vaclav Neuman, and the sympathy of the Liverpool players is very apparent. This is well worth having in its own right. However, the EMI two-CD set is very competitively priced and also includes very fine performances of Praga and Ripening, as dedicated as one could possibly wish. Very good recorded sound too.

A Fairy-Tale; Praga, Op. 26

🔑  Sup. 10 3389-2. Czech PO, Libor Pešek

It is persuasively played under Pešek. It is coupled with Praga, a patriotic tone-poem reflecting a more public, outgoing figure than Asrael, which was to follow it. Pešek secures an excellent response from the Czech Philharmonic; the recordings, which date from 1981–2, are reverberant but good.

Fantasy in G min. (for violin and orchestra), Op. 24

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 1928-2 011. Suk, Czech PO, Ančerl – DVOŘÁK: Violin Concerto, etc. ***

Suk's playing is refreshing and the orchestral accompaniment under Ančerl is no less impressive. Good remastered 1960s sound.

Fantastic Scherzo, Op. 25

🔑  Chan. 8897. Czech PO, Bělohlávek – MARTINŮ: Symphony 6; JANÁČEK: Sinfonietta ***

This captivating piece brings playing from the Czech Philharmonic under Bělohlávek which is even finer than any of the earlier performances and it cannot be too strongly recommended, particularly in view of the excellence of the couplings.

Fantastique Scherzo; Serenade for Strings

🔑  Sup. SU 3882-2. Prague Philh., Hrusa – DVOŘÁK: American Suite ***

Like the Dvořák American Suite, with which they are coupled, these two works of Josef Suk are given fresh and inspired performances under the brilliant young Czech conductor Jakob Hrusa. Suk was still in his teens when in 1892 he completed his Serenade for Strings, and it remains one of his most delightful works. The Scherzo Fantastique is altogether darker and more distinctive, with an emphasis on the adjective 'fantastic', very inventive in its contrasted sections. The Supraphon recording is full and vivid.

Serenade for Strings in E flat, Op. 6

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61763-2 (2). LCO, Warren-Green – DVOŘÁK: Serenade for Strings; ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro; Serenade; TCHAIKOVSKY: Serenade; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on Greensleeves, etc. ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550419. Capella Istropolitana, Krěchek – DVOŘÁK: String Serenade **(*)

Warren-Green and his LCO give a wonderfully persuasive account of Suk's Serenade, making obvious that its inspiration is every bit as vivid as in the comparable work of Dvořák. The recording, made in All Saints', Petersham, is fresh, full and natural without blurring from the ecclesiastical acoustic.

On Naxos another entirely delightful account of Suk's Serenade. The innocent delicacy of the opening is perfectly caught and the Adagio is played most beautifully and then, with a burst of high spirits (and excellent ensemble), the finale bustles to its conclusion with exhilarating zest. The recording is first class, fresh yet full-textured, naturally balanced and transparent.

A Summer's Tale, Op. 29

🔑  CPO 777 174-2. O of the Comic Opera, Berlin, Petrenko – LIADOV: The Enchanted Lake

Suk's A Summer's Tale is a 50-minute, five-movement symphonic poem which was composed in the immediate wake of Suk's grief-stricken Asrael Symphony. Its inspiration is of a high level and one of its early admirers was Mahler who, shortly before his death, had planned to conduct it. Kirill Petrenko offers a thoroughly idiomatic account and he rounds off the disc with a rapt account of Liadov's Enchanted Lake.

A Summer Tale, Op. 29; A Winter's Tale, Op. 9

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553703. Slovak RSO, Mogrelia

Good, very musical performances, with fine sound to boot. The Slovak Orchestra are not the equal of the Czech Philharmonic but they produce eminently decent results. This is lovely music and the performances are enjoyable and well worth the modest outlay.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Ballade, Op. 30; 4 Pieces, Op. 17 (for violin & piano)

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3772. Suk, Panenka – DVOŘÁK: Romantic Pieces; Violin Sonatina; SMETANA: From the Homeland ***

The Four Pieces are quite well known and very attractive, given the persuasive advocacy of these fine artists; the early Ballade is comparatively unmemorable, if by no means without interest. But this reissue is desirable for the highly idiomatic accounts of the Smetana pieces and the delightful Dvořák Violin Sonatina.

4 Pieces for Violin and Piano, Op. 17

 Sup. SU 3884-2. Šporcl, Jiřikovský – DVOŘÁK: Violin Sonata Op. 57, etc.

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9710. G. Neveu, J. Neveu – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto in D, Op. 77; RAVEL: Tzigane; Encores ()

The Suk Pieces, Opus 17, make an apt coupling for the Dvořák items, written in 1900 before the tragedy of the death of Dvořák's daughter and Suk's wife, which was such a blow to both of them. The second of the four is much the most popular, but all are most attractive, particularly when played as well as here by Pavel Sporcl and Petr Jiřikovský. First-rate sound, recorded in the Rudolfinum in Prague in July 2007.

Ginette Neveu's fiery temperament is shown at its most compelling in these lively genre pieces by Josef Suk with the closing moto perpetuo Burleska scintillating on her nimble bow. Her brother Jean accompanies attentively and the recording sounds most real and present in this first-class Dutton transfer.

Piano Quartet in A min., Op. 1

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61904-2 (2). Domus – MARTINŮ: Piano Quartet 1, etc. DOHNÁNYI: Serenade. DVOŘÁK: Bagatelles. KODÁLY: Intermezzo ***

Suk's early Piano Quartet shows this master below his inspired best, but it is still worth having in so sympathetic a performance as Domus gives us. It is a well-filled set and well worth having in particular for the Martinů pieces which are not generously represented on disc.

Piano Trio; Elegie

🔑  Sup. SU 3810. Smetana Trio – NOVAK: Trio quasi una balata; SMETANA: Piano Trio ***

Unlike the other items on this disc, which are darkly elegiac, Suk's Piano Trio is a miniature work, its three movements lasting less than a quarter of an hour; it stands as a delightful piece, full of light and shade, built on clear, memorable themes, with a wonderfully compact, sonata-form finale. Following that, the Elegie is a far deeper composition, opening with a violin melody which inspires Jana Nováková to playing of an other-worldly delicacy, rapt (like so much of the playing here), building into a passionate central climax.

String Quartets 1 in B flat, Op. 11; 2, Op. 31; Ballade; Barcarolle; Meditation on the Czech Choral, St Wenceslas, Op 35a; Minuet

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * CRD CRD 3472. Suk Qt

The early B flat Quartet is essentially a sunny work, yet its Adagio has a remarkable potency of elegiac feeling, which is very affecting in a performance as ardently responsive as that by the eponymous Suk Quartet on CRD. The Second Quartet is far more concentrated than its predecessor, its thematic material is curiously haunting and in some ways its boldness and forward-looking writing suggest that Janáček's quartets are just around the corner. The performance here is not only deeply moving and seemingly spontaneous, it is wonderfully full of observed detail. Of the other works here the simple Meditation is played very touchingly, while the Barcarolle is a charming piece of juvenilia, a real lollipop, to show the composer's ready melodic facility. CRD have never made a better record than this superb collection. The beauty and internal transparency of string texture is matched by the natural presence of the group itself.

PIANO MUSIC

About Mother, Op. 28; Lullabies, Op. 33; 4 Piano Pieces, Op. 7; Spring, Op. 22a; Summer, Op. 22b; Things Lived and Dreamed, Op. 30

 Chan. 9026/7. Fingerhut

It is striking how the earliest works here have a carefree, sweetly lyrical character, gentler than Dvořák but typically Czech. Then, after the death in 1904 and 1905 of his mentor, Dvořák, and his wife (Dvořák's daughter), even these fragmentary inspirations, like the massive Asrael Symphony, become sharp, sometimes even abrasive. The second disc brings the finest and most ambitious of the suites in which Suk generally collected his genre pieces, Things Lived and Dreamed. Margaret Fingerhut proves a devoted advocate, playing with point and concentration, helped by full-ranging Chandos sound.

About Mother (O matince), Op. 28; Moods (Nálady), Op. 18; 6 Pieces, Op. 7

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553762. Lauriala

The Finnish pianist Risto Lauriala has a strong affinity with this music and gives a sympathetic account of the five pictures, Op. 28, O matince (About Mother), composed for Suk's son in 1907, two years after Otilie's death. The recording is generally well balanced if a little close, so that there is a touch of glare in fortissimo passages.

About Mother, Op. 28; Piano Pieces, Op. 7; Spring, Op. 22a; Summer Impressions, Op. 27b

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1174. Kvapil

A most attractive anthology, beautifully played and well recorded. The disc also comes with three others devoted to Czech piano music, including music by Dvořák, Smetana and Janáček (Regis RRC 4005).

SULLIVAN, Arthur (1842–1900)

Pineapple Poll (ballet; arr. Mackerras)

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca Double 473 653-2 (2). Philh. O, Mackerras – Princess Ida ***

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 93231-2. LPO, Mackerras – VERDI: Lady and the Fool ***

On Decca Mackerras conducts with warmth as well as vivacity, and the elegantly polished playing of the Philharmonia Orchestra gives much pleasure. The record was made in the Kingsway Hall with its glowing ambience, and the CD transfer, though brightly vivid, has a pleasing bloom. Indeed the quality is in the demonstration bracket, with particularly natural string textures.

Mackerras's LPO version of the suite on CfP, made in the London Henry Wood Hall in 1977, is striking for its affection and vivacity. With an apt Verdi coupling, this is excellent value, very well transferred to CD.

Symphony in E (Irish); In memoriam Overture; The Tempest: Suite, Op. 1

🔑  Chan. 9859. BBC PO, Hickox

Richard Hickox makes a strong and persuasive case for these Sullivan pieces, notably the attractive Irish Symphony, which at last receives a first-class recording. The BBC Philharmonic respond with alert and sensitive playing. Sullivan wrote the In memoriam Overture in the space of ten days following the sudden death of his father. The Tempest music, composed when he was only 18, is not otherwise available. The recording is in the best traditions of the house.

The Tempest: Introduction; Prelude to Act 3; Banquet Dance; Overture to Act 4; Dance of Nymphs and Reapers; Prelude to Act 5; Postlude

Ⓝ  Reference Recordings RR115. Kansas City SO, Stern – SIBELIUS: The Tempest: suites ***

Sullivan's Tempest music was his first major orchestral work, dating from 1861, when he was only 19 and still a student at Leipzig. He conducted it at a graduation concert in 1861, and later went on to write scores for The Merchant of Venice, Macbeth and The Merry Wives of Windsor. Mendelssohn is the predominant influence and the music throughout is touched by enchantment. The melodic invention is fresh and the scoring remarkably accomplished; indeed, at its best, it is little short of masterly. Very good playing and recording.

OPERA

DVD Collection: (i) Cox and Box; (ii) The Gondoliers; (iii) HMS Pinafore; (iv) Iolanthe; (v) The Mikado; (vi) Patience; (vii) The Pirates of Penzance; (viii) Princess Ida; (ix) Ruddigore; (x) The Sorcerer; (xi) Trial by Jury; (xii) The Yeomen of the Guard

Ⓜ *() Universal DVD 8228651-11 (10). Amb.Ch., LSO, Faris; with (i) Russell Smythe, Fryatt, Lawlor; (ii) Michell, Shilling, McDonnell, Egerton, Collins; (iii) Marshall, Frankie Howerd, Drower, Della Jones, Bulman, Watt; (iv) Stroud, van Allan, Oliver, Hemsley, Flowers, Mills, Collins; (v) Conrad, Revill, Collins, Stewart, Dean, Flowers; (vi) Hammond Stroud, Fryatt, Dugdale, Jenkins, Collins, Kennedy, Adams; (vii) Mitchell, Oliver, Knight, Kelly, Hudson; (viii) Gorshin, Christie, Dale, Collins, Dickenson, Powell, Jackson; (ix) Treleaven, Howard, Adams, Peters, Hudson; (x) Revill, Kerman, Oliver, Christie, Adams, Willis; (xi) Frankie Howard, Flowers, Ryland Davies, McDonell, Bryson, Donlan; (xii) Gale, Powell, Marks, Hillman, Bainbridge (V/D: Dave Heather)

Producer George Walker made this series of Gilbert and Sullivan recordings for television in the early 1980s and they have now appeared on DVD for the first time. The critical reception was mixed – and remains so – but as a whole the series succeeds more than it fails. Firstly, it has the advantage of being filmed on a studio set which ensures that lighting and sound are of uniformly good quality. Secondly, producer Judith de Paul has provided attractive sets, with little of the gratuitous 'souping up' which often mars modern production. Thirdly, Alexander Faris paces the music well and has the support of the LSO and the Ambrosian Chorus, which ensures a good basis of quality. The casting of the smaller roles is usually more than adequate, but the controversy comes with some of the major casting: whilst Frankie Howerd is always a delight to see, his personality does not sit happily in HMS Pinafore as Sir Joseph Porter, though, if anything, Peter Marshall as Captain Corcoran is worse: an embarrassingly overacted caricature. These two leads diminish the otherwise attractive performance. Frankie Howerd is better in Trial by Jury, but again his personality is not really suited to the piece. On the other hand, the ballet which has been contrived before the opening of this work, set to the Overture di Ballo, is a delight. Joel Grey as Jack Point is an irritant that mars a decent Yeomen of the Guard, prompting one unkind critic to remark that his insensible collapse at the end comes as a relief for all the wrong reasons. The Pirates of Penzance is bright and breezy but the snag is Peter Allen camping it up as the Pirate King (not to mention his grating voice). The celebrity casting is much better in Ruddigore, which has Vincent Price as Sir Despard Murgatroyd who (almost) manages to make one forget his lack of singing ability through sheer personality. In Princess Ida, uniquely in the series, the original G & S conception is tampered with so that you have a play within a play; you may or may not like the idea, but why did they bother? The performance is quite a good one, though Frank Gorshin as King Gama is a big let down, with little flair for the idiom. The most successful performances – mainly the ones with fewer celeb castings – include Patience, The Sorcerer, The Gondoliers and Iolanthe (ideal for a television production to aid the supernatural qualities of the story) which offer generally unalloyed delight. The Mikado, too, is generally good, with television star William Conrad as the Mikado far more integrated into the performance than many of the other stars. Cox and Box (not a Gilbert libretto, by the way) is one of the set's gems, an exhilarating early one-acter from 1867, which brims with sparkling ideas and memorable tunes. The sound and picture quality have been dramatically improved on DVD and each disc comes with full texts. As on the videos – for better or worse – Douglas Fairbanks Jr's introductions are included though can be skipped. For all these annoying faults, there is still plenty to enjoy.

(i) Cox and Box; (ii) Trial by Jury (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Chan. 10321. (i;ii) Evans, Brook, Maxwell; (ii) Gilchrist, RMCM Chamber Ch.; BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Cox and Box, Sullivan's collaboration with F. C. Burnand, is here well-coupled with his first collaboration with W. S. Gilbert. Never on disc before has the sparkle of this preparatory piece been caught so brilliantly, bringing out the fact that this is already vintage Sullivan, superbly orchestrated. The text is fuller too, even though the Gambling Duet has had to be omitted for lack of space. The trio of soloists is first rate, with the resonant Donald Maxwell as the landlord, Bouncer, acting as narrator in the well-tailored spoken links, a crisp and effective alternative to the dialogue. James Gilchrist as Box and Neal Davies as Cox make an excellent duo, and the same three soloists are equally impressive in Trial by Jury, particularly Donald Maxwell who relishes the exhilarating speed set by Hickox for the Judge's Song, setting a brilliant pattern for patter-numbers in G. & S. to follow. Rebecca Evans makes a charming Plaintiff, and in both pieces the vividly atmospheric recording brings out the beauty and point of the writing.

Haddon Hall (complete; without dialogue)

🔑 ✿  Divine Art 21201 (2). Timmons, Griffin, Lawson, Smart, Main, Borthwick, Boyd, Thomson, Edinburgh Prince Consort Ch. & O, Lyle

In 1892 Sullivan needed a new source of income, yet had fallen out with Gilbert. So he decided to collaborate with a different librettist, Sidney Grundy, with a considerable reputation in the field of light opera. The result was Haddon Hall, based on a true story about the elopement of Lady Dorothy Vernon with her Royalist lover, John Manners, from her ancestral home. But Grundy resourcefully predated the action so that he could use period costumes, and bring in a chorus of Puritans who in the last act, in true topsy-turvy fashion, renounce 'being thoroughly miserable' and instead plan to 'merry-make the livelong day'.

At the beginning of Act II Grundy also introduces an unforgettable Scottish character, The McCrankie, from the Isle of Rum, and he appears to an extraordinarily convincing orchestral evocation of bagpipes. My name is McCrankie is followed by his duet with Rupert, There's no one by, a wittily dour exposition of their Puritan creed ('We'd supervise the plants and flowers, prescribe them early-closing hours'). Then follows Hoity-toity, a delightful trio with Dorcas, the heroine's maid (who sings most engagingly in her own solos), to make three of the most delightful numbers in the whole opera.

Sir John Manners's servant, Oswald (the excellent Alan Borthwick), arrives disguised as travelling salesman and introduces himself with the engagingly lively Come simples and gentles, full of musical quotations, and this leads to a heavenly duet with Dorcas, The sun's in the sky. But it is Rupert, the heroine's Roundhead cousin, splendidly sung by Ian Lawson, who is the key humorous figure. He only wants Lady Dorothy's hand as it comes with the Haddon Hall estates, and his very winning I've heard it said is an inimitable patter style we all recognize; he also has a fine number with chorus, When I was but a little lad.

The performance by the semi-professional Prince Consort, from the Edinburgh Festival Fringe, but using a professional orchestra, may have its rough patches, but it is very well cast, with Mary Timmons a pleasing heroine, who blends appealingly with Steven Griffin as her lover, John Manners. He sings very strongly, especially when he dominates the opera's spectacular finale, when everything is happily resolved. Davis Lyle's conducting is full of vigour and the opera comes vividly to life in this excellent recording, well balanced and with a fine, full theatrical ambience.

The Savoy Operas

The Savoy Operas: EMI recordings: (i) The Gondoliers; Cello Concerto (CFP 2 13428-2 (2)). (ii) HMS Pinafore; Trial by Jury (CFP 2 13433-2 (2)). (iii) Iolanthe; (xi) Overture Di Ballo (CFP 2 13439-2 (2)). (iv) The Mikado (CFP 2 13444-(2)). (v) Patience; (xiii) Symphony in E, 'Irish' (CFP 2 13449-2 (2)). (vi) The Pirates of Penzance; (xi) Overtures Cox & Box; Princess Ida; The Sorcerer; (xii) In Memoriam (CFP 2 13454-2 (2)). (vii) Ruddigore; (xii) The Merchant of Venice: suite; The Tempest: suite (CFP 2 13459-2 (2)). (ix) The Yeomen of the Guard (CFP 2 13465-2 (2))

🔑 BB  EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 74468-2 (16). (i) Graham; (i; vi) Milligan; (i; iii; v; ix) Young; (i; iv; ix) G. Evans; (i; ii; iv; vi–ix) Lewis; (i–iv; vi; viii; ix) Cameron; (i–ix) Brannigan, Morison; (i–vi; ix) Thomas; (i–vii; ix) Sinclair; (ii; iii; v–viii) G. Baker; (iii) Cantelo; (iii; vi) Harper; (iii; iv) Wallace; (v) Shaw, Anthony, Harwood, Harper; (vii) Blackburn, Bowden, Rouleau; (ix) Dowling; Glyndebourne Festival Ch., Pro Arte O, Sargent; (x) Lloyd Webber, LSO, Mackerras; (xi) Pro Arte O or BBC SO, Sargent; (xii) CBSO, Dunn; (xiii) RLPO, Groves

The distinguished Sir Malcolm Sargent EMI series of the Savoy Operas are now available separately on Classics for Pleasure, but this generously filled box is at super-budget price and is first-class value for money. The performances are uniformly notable for the quality of the soloists (and, indeed, the excellent chorus). Sargent was a long-experienced advocate and he conducts with consistent authority, if not always with the 'first-night' zest that Isidore Godfey managed consistently to achieve in his D'Oyly Carte recordings.

The Gondoliers is a case in point. Sargent chose a curiously slow tempo for the Cachucha, while the long opening scene is rather relaxed and leisurely. At the entrance of the Duke of Plaza Toro (Sir Geraint Evans, no less) things wake up considerably and Owen Brannigan, whose larger-than-life vocal personality dominates the whole series, is a perfectly cast Don Alhambra. Edna Graham only sang in this one recording, but she is a charmingly small-voiced Casilda, and there is much else to enjoy.

It was to Owen Brannigan's credit that, little as he has to do in HMS Pinafore without the dialogue, he conveys the force of Dick Deadeye's personality so strongly. George Baker is splendid as Sir Joseph and John Cameron, Richard Lewis and (especially) Monica Sinclair as Buttercup make much of their songs. Elsie Morison is rather disappointing: she spoils the end of her lovely song in Act I by singing sharp. The whole of the final scene is musically quite ravishing, and if Sir Malcolm fails to find quite all the wit in the music he is never less than lively.

There is much to praise, too, in Iolanthe. The climax of Act I, the scene in which the Queen of the Fairies lays a curse on members of both Houses of Parliament, shows most excitingly what can be achieved with the 'full operatic treatment'. George Baker is an excellent Lord Chancellor: the famous Nightmare Song is very well and clearly sung; however, for some ears John Cameron's dark timbre may not readily evoke an Arcadian Shepherd. The two Earls and Private Willis are excellent, and all of Act II – except perhaps Iolanthe's recitative and ballad near the end (which is always a bit of a problem) – goes well. The famous Trio with the Lord Chancellor and the two Earls is a joy.

The Sargent set of The Mikado was the first to be recorded, in 1957, but it has been given remarkable vividness and presence by the digital remastering. The grand operatic style for the finales of both acts, the trio about the 'death' of Nanki-Poo, and the glee that follows are characteristic of the stylish singing, even if the humour is less readily caught than in the D'Oyly Carte version. Owen Brannigan makes a fine Mikado, but the star performance is that of Richard Lewis, who sings most engagingly throughout as Nanki-Poo. Elsie Morison is back on form as a charming Yum-Yum, and Monica Sinclair is a generally impressive Katisha, although she could sound more convinced when she sings 'These Arms shall Now Enfold You'. This set is available separately (7 64403-2).

Patience was one of the great successes of the Sargent cycle. It is a pity that there is no dialogue, which is so important to establish the character of Bunthorne, the 'fleshly poet'. But there is more business than usual from this EMI series and a convincing theatrical atmosphere. The chorus is a strong feature throughout, and Elsie Morison's Patience, George Baker's Bunthorne and John Cameron's Grosvenor are all admirably characterized, while the military men are also excellent.

Once again in Pirates, the EMI recording has more atmosphere than usual, and the performance is (for the most part) highly successful, stylish as well as lively, conveying both the fun of the words and the charm of the music. Undoubtedly the star of this piece is George Baker: he is a splendid Major-General, and Owen Brannigan is his inimitable self as the Sergeant of the Police. The performance takes a little time to warm up, and in 'Poor Wandering One', Mabel's opening cadenza, Elsie Morison is angular and overdramatic. However, elsewhere she is much more convincing, especially in the famous duet, 'Leave Me not to Pine Alone'. The choral contributions are pleasingly refined yet have no lack of vigour. 'Hail Poetry' is resplendent, while the choral finale is vigorously done and with a balance which allows the inner parts to emerge effectively.

In most respects Ruddigore crowned the EMI series. Sargent's essentially lyrical approach brings out the associations this lovely score has with Schubert. The performance is beautifully sung. Perhaps George Baker sounds a little old in voice for Robin Oakapple, but he manages his 'character' transformation later in the opera splendidly. Pamela Bowden is a first-class Mad Margaret, and her short Donizettian scene is superbly done. Equally Richard Lewis is an admirably bumptious Richard. Owen Brannigan's delicious Act II duet with Mad Margaret has irresistible gentility. The drama is well managed too; the scene in the picture gallery (given a touch of added resonance by the recording) is effectively sombre. Altogether a superb set, probably unsurpassed on record.

Sargent's Trial by Jury (with George Baker as the Judge) is by general consent the best there is, splendidly spirited and very well sung and recorded; and The Yeomen of the Guard is also very fine. The trios and quartets with which this score abounds are most beautifully performed and skilfully balanced, and the ear is continually beguiled. Owen Brannigan's portrayal of Wilfred again comes up trumps, and Monica Sinclair is a memorable Dame Carruthers. The finales to both acts have striking breadth, and the delightfully sung trio of Elsie, Phoebe and the Dame in the finale of Act II is a charming example of the many felicities of this set. 'Strange Adventure', too, is beautifully done. There is very little feeling of humour, but the music triumphs and, as with the rest of the series, the sound is excellent, with fine presence and definition.

It might have been better had EMI not included the fillers which accompanied the individual issues of the operas. The most interesting and most disappointing is the Cello Concerto, written when Sullivan was 19, after he returned from study in Leipzig. It was given a few performances and then forgotten. In 1964 the one surviving score was destroyed in the fire at Chappell's publishing house; but the work was reconstructed in the late 1980s with the help of the solo cello part. Sadly, the end result hardly justifies such labours. Curiously proportioned, with the first movement too brief for any symphonic pretensions and with themes less than memorable, it is a lightweight divertissement, pleasant but undistinguished. However, Julian Lloyd Webber and Mackerras, very well recorded, do all they can to give the flimsy inspiration some bite.

The Symphony is a far better proposition, pleasingly lyrical, with echoes of Schumann as much as the more predictable Mendelssohn and Schubert. The jaunty Allegretto of the third movement with its 'Irish' tune on the oboe is nothing less than haunting. Groves and the RLPO give an affectionate performance, and the 1986 recording has emerged freshly on CD.

The pair of Shakespeare-inspired Suites are also well worth having. The longer selection from The Tempest dates from 1861, the same year as the Cello Concerto, but shows distinctive flair and orchestral confidence. The shorter Merchant of Venice Suite was composed five years later; almost immediately, the writing begins to anticipate the lively style which was so soon to find a happy marriage with Gilbert's words. The performance here is highly infectious and the sound is first class. Of the overtures, Di ballo is the most useful, well worth having in Sargent's performance, but In Memoriam, a somewhat inflated religious piece, written for the 1866 Norwich Festival, is for Sullivan aficionados only.

The Major Decca Analogue Stereo Sets

Complete Decca D'Oyly Carte Recordings: Cox and Box; The Gondoliers; The Grand Duke; HMS Pinafore; Iolanthe; The Mikado; Patience; The Pirates of Penzance; Princess Ida; Ruddigore; The

Sorcerer; Trial by Jury; Utopia Ltd; The Yeomen of the Guard; The Zoo; plus Overtures: Di Ballo; Macbeth; Marmion; Pineapple Poll (ballet, arr. Mackerras); excerpts: Henry VIII; Victoria and Merrie England

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 473 631-2 (24). Artists & orchestras listed below, cond. Godfrey; Nash; Sargent; Mackerras

(i) Cox and Box (libretto by F. C. Burnand) complete; (ii) Ruddigore (complete; without dialogue)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 656-2 (2). (i) Styler, Riordan, Adams; New SO of L.; (ii) Reed, Round, Sandford, Riley, Adams, Hindmarsh, Knight, Sansom, Allister, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., ROHCG O, Godfrey

The Gondoliers (complete; with dialogue)

Ⓑ  Decca Double (ADD) 473 632-2 (2). Reed, Skitch, Sandford, Round, Styler, Knight, Toye, Sansom, Wright, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., New SO of L., Godfrey

(i; ii) The Grand Duke; (ii) Henry VIII: March & Graceful Dance; (iii) Overture Di Ballo

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 635-2 (2). (i) Reed, Reid, Sandford, Rayner, Ayldon, Ellison, Conroy-Ward, Lilley, Holland, Goss, Metcalfe, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch.; (ii) RPO, Nash; (iii) Philh. O, Mackerras

HMS Pinafore (complete; with dialogue)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 473 638-2. Reed, Skitch, Round, Adams, Hindmarsh, Wright, Knight, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., New SO of L., Godfrey

Iolanthe (complete; with dialogue)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 641-2 (2). Sansom, Reed, Adams, Round, Sandford, Styler, Knight, Newman, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., Grenadier Guards Band, New SO, Godfrey

The Mikado (complete; without dialogue)

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 644-2 (2). Ayldon, Wright, Reed, Sandford, Masterson, Holland, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., RPO, Nash

Patience (complete; with dialogue)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 647-2 (2). Sansom, Adams, Cartier, Potter, Reed, Sandford, Newman, Lloyd-Jones, Toye, Knight, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch. & O, Godfrey

The Pirates of Penzance (complete; with dialogue)

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 650-2. Reed, Adams, Potter, Masterson, Palmer, Brannigan, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., RPO, Godfrey

(i) Princess Ida (complete; without dialogue); (ii) Pineapple Poll (ballet; arr. Mackerras)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 653-2 (2). (i) Sandford, Potter, Palmer, Skitch, Reed, Adams, Raffell, Cook, Harwood, Palmer, Hood, Masterson, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., RPO, Sargent; (ii) Philh. O, Mackerras

(i) The Sorcerer (complete; without dialogue); (ii) The Zoo (libretto by Bolton Rowe)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 659-2 (2). (i) Adams, D. Palmer, Styler, Reed, C. Palmer, Masterson; (ii) Reid, Sandford, Ayldon, Goss, Metcalfe; nar. Shovelton; (i; ii) D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch., RPO; (i) Godfrey; (ii) Nash

(i) Utopia Ltd (complete). Overtures: Macbeth; Marmion; Victoria and Merrie England

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 473 662-2 (2). (i) Sandford, Reed, Ayldon, Ellison, Buchan, Conroy-Ward, Reid, Broad, Rayner, Wright, Porter, Field, Goss, Merri, Holland, Griffiths, D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch.; RPO, Nash

(i) The Yeomen of the Guard (complete; without dialogue); (ii) Trial by Jury

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 665-2. Hood, Reed, Sandford, Adams, Raffell; (i) Harwood, Knight; (ii) Round; D'Oyly Carte Op. Ch.; (i) RPO, Sargent; (ii) ROHCG O, Godfrey

Decca have now additionally provided their twelve major sets in a slip-case; and they have restored the splendid original artwork on each separate reissue, which are offered at a new lower price. The Decca series usually has the advantage (or disadvantage, according to taste) of including the dialogue. The D'Oyly Carte performances are splendid in every way, given recordings which, without sacrificing clarity, convey with perfect balance the stage atmosphere.

The Grand Duke was the 14th and last of the Savoy operas. The present recording, the only complete version, came after a successful concert presentation in 1975, and the recorded performance has both polish and vigour, although the chorus does not display the crispness of articulation of ready familiarity. The recording is characteristically brilliant. The bonuses are well worth having, with Mackerras's account of the Overture Di Ballo showing more delicacy of approach than usual, though certainly not lacking sparkle.

The 1960 Godfrey set of HMS Pinafore is in our view the finest of all the D'Oyly Carte analogue stereo recordings. Donald Adams's assumption of the role of Dick Deadeye on Decca (which does have the dialogue) is little short of inspired, and his larger-than-life characterization underpins the whole piece. The rest of the cast make a splendid team: Jean Hindmarsh is a totally convincing Josephine – she sings with great charm – and John Reed's Sir Joseph Porter is a delight.

In the D'Oyly Carte set of The Gondoliers the solo singing throughout is consistently good, the ensembles have plenty of spirit and the dialogue is for the most part well spoken. As a performance this is on the whole preferable to the Sargent account.

With Iolanthe, the 1960 Decca set was given added panache by the introduction of the Grenadier Guards Band into the March of the Peers. Mary Sansom is quite a convincing Phyllis, and if her singing has not the sense of style that Elsie Morison brought to the part, she is completely at home with the dialogue. Also Alan Styler makes a vivid and charming personal identification with the role of Strephon, an Arcadian shepherd. John Reed is very good as the Lord Chancellor: dryly whimsical, and he provides an individual characterization. Godfrey's conducting is lighter and more infectious than Sargent's in the Act I finale, and there is much to delight the ear in the famous Trio of Act II with the Lord Chancellor and the two Earls.

The 1973 stereo remake of The Mikado by the D'Oyly Carte Company directed by Royston Nash is a complete success in every way and shows the Savoy tradition at its most attractive. It is a pity no dialogue is included, but the choral singing is first rate, and the glees are refreshingly done, polished and refined, yet with plenty of vitality. John Reed is a splendid Ko-Ko, Kenneth Sandford a vintage Pooh-Bah and Valerie Masterson a charming Yum-Yum. John Ayldon as the Mikado provides a laugh of terrifying bravura, and Lyndsie Holland is a formidable and commanding Katisha.

Owen Brannigan was surely born to play the Sergeant of Police in The Pirates of Penzance, and he does so unforgettably. On Decca there is a considerable advantage in the inclusion of the dialogue, and here theatrical spontaneity is well maintained. Donald Adams is a splendid Pirate King. John Reed's portrayal of the Major General is one of his strongest roles, while Valerie Masterson is an excellent Mabel. Godfrey's conducting is as affectionate as ever, and the dialogue undoubtedly adds an extra sense of the theatre.

Patience and Ruddigore were the two greatest successes of the Sargent series. However, the extra card in the D'Oyly Carte hand in Patience is the dialogue, so important in this opera above all, with its spoken poetry; if Mary Sansom does not give the strongest portrayal vocally of the main role, both Bunthorne and Grosvenor are well played, while the military numbers, led by Donald Adams in glorious voice, have an unforgettable vigour and presence.

The D'Oyly Carte Ruddigore comes up surprisingly freshly, in fact better than we had remembered it, though it is a pity the dialogue was omitted. The performance includes The battle's roar is over, which is (for whatever reason) traditionally omitted. There is much to enjoy here (especially Gillian Knight and Donald Adams, whose Ghosts' high noon song is a marvellous highlight). Isidore Godfrey is his inimitable sprightly self and the chorus and orchestra are excellent. A fine traditional D'Oyly Carte set, then, brightly recorded.

Princess Ida is fake feminism with a vengeance. Elizabeth Harwood in the name-part sings splendidly, and John Reed's irritably gruff portrayal of the irascible King Gama is memorable; he certainly is a properly 'disagreeable man'. The rest of the cast is no less strong and, with excellent teamwork from the company as a whole and a splendid recording, spacious and immediate, this has much to offer, even if Sullivan's invention is somewhat variable in quality. The CD transfer is outstanding and the 1965 recording has splendid depth and presence. As a bonus we are offered Mackerras's vivacious and polished 1982 digital recording of his scintillating ballet score, Pineapple Poll.

The Sorcerer is the Gilbert and Sullivan equivalent of L'elisir d'amore, only here a whole English village is affected, with hilarious results. John Reed's portrayal of the sorcerer himself is one of the finest of all his characterizations. The plot drew from Sullivan a great deal of music in his fey, pastoral vein. By 1966, when the set was made, Decca had stretched the recording budget to embrace the RPO, and the orchestral playing is especially fine, as is the singing of the D'Oyly Carte Chorus, at their peak. John Reed gives a truly virtuoso performance of his famous introductory song, while the spell-casting scene is equally compelling. The final sequence in Act II is also memorable. The sound is well up to Decca's usual high standard .

Both recordings of The Yeomen of the Guard, Decca's and EMI's sets, were conducted by Sir Malcolm Sargent. The later Decca account has marginally the finer recording and Sir Malcolm's breadth of approach is immediately apparent in the Overture. Both chorus and orchestra (the RPO) are superbly expansive and there is again consistently fine singing from all the principals (and especially from Elizabeth Harwood as Elsie). This Decca Yeomen is unreservedly a success, with its brilliant and atmospheric recording. In any case, the considerable bonus is the inclusion of Godfrey's immaculately stylish and affectionate Trial by Jury with John Reed as the Judge.

Utopia Ltd was revived for the D'Oyly Carte centenary London season in 1974, which led to this recording. Its complete neglect is unaccountable. Royston Nash shows plenty of skill in the matter of musical characterization, and the solo singing is consistently assured. When Meston Reid as Captain FitzBattleaxe sings 'You see I can't do myself justice' in Oh, Zara, he is far from speaking the truth – this is a performance of considerable bravura. The ensembles are not always as immaculately disciplined as one is used to from the D'Oyly Carte, and Eagle high is disappointingly focused: the intonation here is less than secure. However, the sparkle and spontaneity of the performance as a whole are irresistible.

The Zoo (with a libretto by Bolton Rowe, a pseudonym of B. C. Stevenson) dates from June 1875, only three months after the success of Trial by Jury – which it obviously seeks to imitate, as the music more than once reminds us. Although the libretto lacks the finesse and whimsicality of Gilbert, it is not without humour, and many of the situations presented by the plot (and indeed the actual combinations of words and music) are typical of the later Savoy Operas. As the piece has no spoken dialogue it is provided here with a stylized narration, well enough presented by Geoffrey Shovelton. The performance is first class, splendidly sung, fresh as paint and admirably recorded, and it fits very well alongside The Sorcerer. The CD transfer is more brightly lit than its companion, and the opera has animal noises to set the scene and close the opera.

Telarc Mackerras Series

HMS Pinafore

🔑 ✿ * Telarc CD 80374. Suart, Allen, Evans, Schade, Palmer, Adams, Ch. & O of Welsh Nat. Opera, Mackerras

The Mikado

🔑 ✿ * Telarc CD 80284. Adams, Rolfe Johnson, Suart, McLaughlin, Palmer, van Allan, Folwell, Ch. & O of Welsh Nat. Opera, Mackerras

The Pirates of Penzance

 Telarc CD80353. Mark Ainsley, Evans, Suart, van Allan, Adams, Knight, Ch. & O of Welsh Nat. Opera, Mackerras

(i) The Yeomen of the Guard; (ii) Trial by Jury

 Telarc 80404 (2). (i) Mellor, Archer, Palmer; (i; ii) Suart, Adams, Maxwell; (ii) Evans, Banks, Savidge; Ch. & O of Welsh Nat. Opera, Mackerras

HMS Pinafore; The Mikado; The Pirates of Penzance; Trial by Jury; The Yeomen of the Guard

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Telarc CD 80500 (5). Above five complete recordings; cond. Mackerras

As can be seen, the five Telarc operas also come together in a slip-case, with five CDs offered for the cost of three – in every way a superb bargain.

Sir Charles Mackerras here gives an exuberant reading of the first operetta of the cycle, HMS Pinafore. The lyricism and transparency of Sullivan's inspiration shine out with winning freshness. The casting is not just starry but inspired. Even such a jaunty number as the 'encore' trio, Never mind the why and wherefore, gains in point when so well sung and played as here, with Allen joined by Rebecca Evans as an appealing Josephine and Richard Suart as a dry Sir Joseph Porter. Michael Schade is heady-toned as the hero, Ralph Rackstraw, while among character roles Felicity Palmer is a marvellously fruity Little Buttercup, with Richard van Allan as Bill Bobstay and the veteran, Donald Adams, a lugubrious Dick Deadeye. As with the previous CDs of Mikado and Pirates of Penzance, Telarc squeezes the whole score on to a single CD, vividly recorded.

With the overture again omitted (not Sullivan's work) and one of the stanzas in Ko-Ko's 'little list' song (with words unpalatable today), the whole fizzing Mackerras performance of The Mikado is fitted on to a single, very well-filled disc. The cast has no weak link, and Mackerras is electrically sharp at brisk speeds, sounding totally idiomatic and giving this most popular of the G&S operettas an irresistible freshness at high voltage. The tingling vigour of Sullivan's invention is constantly brought out, with performances from the WNO Chorus and Orchestra at once powerful and refined. With that sharpness of focus Sullivan's parodies of grand opera become more than just witty imitations. So Katisha's aria at the end of Act II, with Felicity Palmer the delectable soloist, has a Verdian depth of feeling. It is good too to hear the veteran Savoyard, Donald Adams, as firm and resonant as he was in his D'Oyly Carte recording made no less than 33 years earlier.

The Pirates of Penzance is characteristic of the rest of this splendid Telarc series. Mackerras's exuberant direction often brings fast tempi (as in How beautifully blue the sky) but the underlying lyricism is as ardently conveyed as ever, especially by John Mark Ainsley, who is a really passionate Frederic. Rebecca Evans makes him a good partner and sings with great charm as Mabel. Needless to say, Richard Suart is a memorable Major General (his patter song is thrown off at great speed) and Donald Adams has not lost his touch. His vintage portrayal of the Pirate King is well matched by Gillian Knight's Ruth in their engaging 'Paradox' duet of Act II. While memories of Owen Brannigan are far from banished, Richard van Allan is a suitably bumptious Sergeant of the Police, and the Welsh Opera Chorus are splendidly fervent in Hail poetry! The recording has fine depth and realism and as a single-disc modern digital version this will be hard to beat.

The Yeomen of the Guard, the fourth Telarc issue of G&S, is very involving as a performance, conveying most exuberantly the sparkle as well as the emotional weight of this most serious of the canon. Alwyn Mellor makes an appealing heroine. Among the others, Felicity Palmer makes a delectably fire-snorting Dame Carruthers, and the veteran, Donald Adams, an incomparable Sergeant Meryll. (His cries of 'Ghastly, ghastly' when cornered by the Dame are wonderful.) Richard Suart as Jack Point characterizes vividly in authentic style, and the only weak link is the Fairfax of Neil Archer, who too often sounds strained. Even so, the final bringing-together of Fairfax and Elsie could not be more touching. The absence of spoken dialogue allows Trial by Jury to be included as a fill-up, with Suart even more aptly cast and Adams again incomparable as the Usher, while the WNO Chorus again sings with ideal clarity. Otherwise it involves different singers, with Rebecca Evans golden-toned as the Plaintiff and Barry Banks firm if light as the Defendant.

Other complete recordings

Cox and Box (original, full-length, 1866 version)

 Divine Arts 2-4104. Berger, Kennedy, Francke, Barclay

This lively and enjoyable performance recreates the original version of Cox and Box, first heard at a private gathering at the librettist Burnand's own house in May 1866, with Sullivan himself improvising the accompaniment at the piano. The orchestration came a year later for the work's prèmiere at the Adelphi Theatre, and the Overture and the duet Stay Bouncer stay were also added subsequently.

The present account (based on a professional production for London Chamber Opera) is spirited and polished, and its considerable length (over an hour) serves to demonstrate the reasons for Sullivan's own shortened version in 1894. It was further truncated in 1921 to produce the concise version which remained in the D'Oyly Carte Company's repertoire until the late 1970s. However, the performance on the present disc is most enjoyable and does not outstay its welcome. Donald Francke is a splendidly rumbustious Bouncer. The charming original compound-time version of the Bacon lullaby is considerably different from the song known in the revised score. Stay Bouncer stay is added in for good measure. Of course, one misses the orchestra, but the piano accompaniment, using a suitable period instrument, is well managed. The words are admirably clear, a consideration which would surely have been just as important to Burnand as to Gilbert. It is good to see that the production is dedicated to the memory of the late Arthur Jacobs, biographer of Sullivan, at whose insistence this recording (sponsored by the Sullivan Society) was issued commercially.

(i) Iolanthe: highlights; (ii) The Mikado (complete; without dialogue)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 9902 (2). (i) Shilling, Harwood, Moyle, Dowling, Begg, Bevan, Greene, Kern; (ii) Holmes, Revill, Wakefield, Studholme, Dowling, Allister, John Heddle Nash; Sadler's Wells Op. Ch. & O, Faris

The Sadler's Wells Iolanthe is stylistically superior to Sargent's earlier EMI recording and is often musically superior to the Decca/D'Oyly Carte versions. Alexander Faris often chooses untraditional tempi. When I went to the bar is very much faster than usual, with less dignity but with a compensating lightness of touch. Eric Shilling is excellent here, as he is also in the Nightmare song, which is really sung, much being made of the ham operatic recitative at the beginning. The lovers, Elizabeth Harwood as Phyllis and Julian Moyle as Strephon, make a charming duo, and the Peers are splendid. Their entry chorus is thrilling and their reaction to the Fairy Queen's curse is delightfully, emphatically horrified, while the whole Act I finale (the finest in any of the operas) goes with infectious stylishness. All the solo singing is of a high standard and Leon Greene sings the Sentry song well. But one has to single out for special praise Patricia Kern's really lovely singing of Iolanthe's aria at the end of the opera. The recording has splendid presence and realism.

The Sadler's Wells Mikado is traditional in the best sense, bringing a humorous sparkle to the proceedings which gives great delight. Clive Revill is a splendid Ko-Ko; John Heddle Nash is an outstanding Pish-Tush, and it is partly because of him that the Chippy chopper trio is so effective. Denis Dowling is a superb Pooh-Bah, and Marion Studholme a charming Yum-Yum. Jean Allister's Katisha is first rate in every way; listen to the venom she puts into the word 'bravado' in the Act I finale. Even the chorus scores a new point by their stylized singing of Mi-ya-sa-ma, which sounds engagingly mock-Japanese. The one disappointment is John Holmes in the name-part. He sings well but conveys little of the mock-satanic quality. But this is a small point in an otherwise magnificent set, which has a vivacious new overture arranged by Charles Mackerras.

Collections

'The Best of Gilbert and Sullivan', highlights from: The Gondoliers; HMS Pinafore; Iolanthe; The Mikado; Patience; The Pirates of Penzance; Ruddigore; Trial by Jury; The Yeomen of the Guard

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 73869-2 (3). Morison, M. Sinclair, Thomas, G. Baker, Lewis, Brannigan, Young, Wallace, Cameron, Evans, Milligan, Glyndebourne Festival Ch., Pro Arte O, Sargent

This three-disc EMI set makes a good supplement for the comparable Double Decca collection (see above). The Sir Malcolm Sargent recordings are generally more grandly operatic in style and at times they are rather less fun. But, as one might expect from the starry cast list, there is some outstandingly fine solo and concerted singing from the principals in the lyrical numbers. Obviously with the film Topsy-Turvy in mind, the major selection is from The Mikado (some 20 items), and Sargent's expansive manner has much in common with Carl Davis's approach (especially in the Finale). With Owen Brannigan as The Mikado, Monica Sinclair as Katisha, Richard Lewis as Nanki-Poo, Elsie Morison as Yum-Yum and Ian Wallace as Pooh Bah, the results will surely please those who enjoyed the movie.

Princess Ida and The Sorcerer are not represented, but the other key operas (apart from the single Learned Judge's number from Trial by Jury) have from between five to eight items each, including the substantial and treasurable finales from Iolanthe and (to conclude the programme) The Yeomen of the Guard. Besides taking the role of the Judge in Trial, George Baker is a stalwart of the series and he delivers the famous patter songs with aplomb.

No less a figure than Sir Geraint Evans takes his place as the Duke of Plaza Toro (Gondoliers) and Jack Point (Yeomen). Owen Brannigan is an unforgettable Sergeant of Police (Pirates) and is hardly less memorable as Private Willis (Iolanthe) and Sir Despard (Ruddigore). The choral contribution is first class, and Sargent conducts freshly throughout, although not always with the sparkle that Godfrey commanded, as is instanced by his curiously measured Cachucha in The Gondoliers. But the selections from Patience and Ruddigore show him and this talented company (Elsie Morison especially) at their very finest.

Two recommendable separate collections from Sargent's recordings are available on Classics for Pleasure (3 52398-2 and 5 86655-2) each with approximately 72 minutes of excerpts.

Highlights from: (i; ii) HMS Pinafore; (iii; iv) The Mikado; (ii; iv; v) The Pirates of Penzance; (ii; vi) Trial by Jury; (vii) The Yeomen of the Guard

 Telarc CD 80431. Suart; with (i) Allen, Palmer; (ii) Evans; (iii) Rolfe Johnson, McLaughlin, Howells, Watson; (iv) van Allan, Folwell; (v) Mark Ainsley, Gossage; (vi) Banks, Garrett, Savidge, Rhys Davies; (vii) Archer, Mellor, Stephen; Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Mackerras

Even with 76 minutes' playing time, this can be no more than a sampler of Mackerras's effervescent G. & S. series for Telarc, dominated by the dry-timbred Richard Suart in the key patrician roles. As can be seen, most of the other soloists change with each opera, but the standard remains extraordinarily high. The choice of excerpts is inevitably arbitrary, with about half a dozen items from each of the two-Act operas and three from Trial by Jury. If you buy this, you will inevitably be tempted to go on to one or other of the complete sets. Nevertheless it is a splendid collection in its own right. Characteristically first-class Telarc sound.

SUPPÉ, Franz von (1819–95)

Overtures: Beautiful Galathea; The Jolly Robbers (Banditenstreich); Light Cavalry; Morning, Noon and Night in Vienna; Pique Dame; Poet and Peasant

Ⓜ ((*)) Archipel mono ARPCD 0373. Hallé O, Barbirolli – CHOPIN: Piano Concerto 1 ()

Sir John's vintage collection has tremendous spirit and the orchestral playing is crisply alert and sparkling, if not always completely refined. The (originally Pye) recordings have been most effectively remastered, which compensates for a certain overall brashness. The recording is somewhat dry, but has a convincing background acoustic. The extraordinary Chopin coupling, with Rubinstein the soloist, is listed as a 'bonus'. What a bonus!

Overtures: Die Frau Meisterin; Die Irrfahrt um's Glück; Light Cavalry; Morning, Noon and Night in Vienna; Pique Dame; Poet and Peasant; Tantalusqualen; Wiener-Jubel (Vienna Jubilee)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * EMI 5 09029 2. ASMF, Marriner

Marriner's collection of Suppé Overtures has been out of the catalogue too long and now goes straight to the top of the list. The sound has opulence, bloom, a wide amplitude, realistic definition and a natural presence. The performances admirably combine exuberance, fine ensemble and style. At Encore price this is a reissue not to be missed on any account.

OPERETTA

Die schöne Galathee

🔑  CPO 999 726. Bogner, Rickenbacher, Heyn, Kupfer, Koblenz State Theatre Ch., Rhenish State Op. O, Eitler

Starting with the famous galumphing overture, Suppé's one-act operetta on a classical theme is a delight. Pygmalion may still fall in love with his statue of Galathea, when she comes to life – a marvellous moment for the bright, clear soprano, Andrea Bogner – but in this comic retelling she is just a provocative coquette, who much prefers the young Ganymed, taken here by another soprano, Juliane Heyn. First heard in Vienna in 1865, this starts like Offenbach in German, but turns into a precursor of Viennese operetta the moment that waltz-time is engaged. Based on a production in Koblenz on the Rhine, this is a sparkling, well-balanced recording, with the comic personas characterfully taken by Hans-Jurg Rickenbacher and Michael Kupfer. It might have been even more fun had a sprinkling of spoken dialogue been included. As it is, the single disc comes with libretto and translation in a cumbersome double-disc jewel-case.

SURINACH, Carlos (1915–97)

Piano Concerto

Ⓑ  Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2971. Larrocha, RPO, Burgos – ALBENIZ: Rapsodia española; MONTSALVATGE: Concerto breve ; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

Carlos Surinach's Piano Concerto, like its Montsalvatge companion on this disc, was written for Alicia de Larrocha, and, as with that work, she plays it with total conviction. If, once again, the writing is short on really memorable themes, it is made enjoyable through its colourful orchestration, plus a fine performance, backed up by first-class Decca (1977) sound. Anyone who enjoys a dash of Spanish colour in their music will enjoy this rare Concerto, and offered with imaginative couplings too.

SUSSMAYR, Franz (1766–1803)

Requiem

(*) Avie AV 0047. Jette, Larmore, Taylor, Owens, St Olaf Ch, St Paul CO, Delfs – MOZART: Requiem **(*)

All credit to the recording producer, Malcolm Bruno, for searching out the long-forgotten Requiem of Franz Sussmayr, written about the time he made his completion of the Mozart Requiem. Though it is no masterpiece it is a fascinating curiosity, a setting in German written for one of the Austrian duchies which by a special papal dispensation were allowed to sing the Requiem in the vernacular. The choral writing is plain and direct in a simple homophonic idiom, influenced by the cadences of Austrian folk music. It is a style well-suited to this paraphrase of the usual Latin text. Andreas Delfs's direction, as in the Mozart with which it is coupled, is on the square side, but with fresh, alert singing by the St Olaf Choir under their director, Anton Armstrong, that matches the music well. Full, open sound.

SVENDSEN, Johann Severin (1840–1911)

Romance in G, Op. 26

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.550329. Kang, Slovak (Bratislava) RSO, Leaper – HALVORSEN: Air Norvégien etc.; SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto; SINDING: Légende ***

Dong-Suk Kang plays Svendsen's once-popular Romance in G without sentimentality but with full-hearted lyricism. The balance places him a little too forward, but the recording is very satisfactory.

Symphonies 1 in D, Op. 4; 2 in B flat, Op. 15

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.553898. Bournemouth SO, Engeset

ⒷⒷ (*) Warner Apex 0927 40621-2. Norwegian R.O, Rasilainen

Symphonies 1 in D, Op. 4; 2 in B flat, Op. 23; Polonaise, Op. 28

 Chan. 9932 Danish Nat. R. SO, Dausgaard

Symphonies 1-2; 2 Swedish Folk-Melodies, Op. 27

🔑 * BIS CD 347. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Svendsen's D major Symphony is a student work of astonishing assurance and freshness, in some ways even more remarkable than the B flat. Neeme Järvi gives first-class performances, sensitive and vital, and the excellent recordings earn them a strong recommendation.

Thomas Dausgaard and the Danish Radio Orchestra also capture the youthful exuberance of the one and the warmth and generosity of spirit of the other. This is captivating music and the Danes, among whom Svendsen spent so much of his life, respond with enthusiasm. Tempi are well judged though the Scherzo of the D major would benefit from being brisker. The Polonaise of 1881 is not the equal of the famous Fest-Polonaise. Recommended alongside though not necessarily in preference to Järvi.

Järvi's recording is also strongly challenged by Bjarte Engeset and the Bournemouth Orchestra. These players are obviously encountering this music with enthusiasm and they are well served by both the acoustic and the engineering.

There is nothing wrong with the Finlandia version from the Norwegian Radio Orchestra under Ari Rasilainen either, though the recording is not as good as BIS for Järvi.

(i) Octet in A, Op. 3; (i) Romance in G for Violin & Strings, Op. 26

🔑  Chan. 9258. ASMF Chamber Ens; (i) with Sillito – NIELSEN: String Quintet in G ***

(i) Octet; String Quartet in A min., Op. 1

🔑  BIS CD753. Kontra Qt; with (i) Bjørnkjaer, Madsen, Rasmussen, Johansen

Svendsen's youthful Octet, Op. 3 is a product of his student years at Leipzig, and was obviously inspired by Mendelssohn. But it has a strong personality of its own and is full of lively and attractive invention. The Scherzo is particularly delightful. The Kontra Quartet and their colleagues give a spirited account of it, coupling it with another student work, the A minor Quartet, Op. 1. A good well-balanced sound.

However, those primarily wanting the Octet should turn to the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields Chamber Ensemble whose leader Kenneth Sillito plays the G major Romance as a fill-up. First-rate performances and recording.

String Quartet in A min., Op. 1; (i) String Quintet in C, Op. 5

🔑  CPO 999 858-2. Oslo String Qt; (i) with Graggerud

Two early works, composed while Svendsen was at the Leipzig Conservatoire. Both show a natural feeling for form and an unfailing sense of proportion. Svendsen thinks in long musical paragraphs, and his ideas have a strong, lyrical momentum as well as astonishing assurance and freshness. Op. 1 and Op. 5 were coupled together many years ago by the Hindar Quartet, but these Oslo players have much greater tonal blend and refinement, as well as unanimity of attack. Two delightful and rewarding scores that have been absurdly neglected, now very persuasively played and well recorded.

SWEELINCK, Jan (1562–1621)

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Allemand (Gratie); Est-ce Mars; Die flichtig Nimphae; Fantasia cromatica; Mein junges Leben hat ein End; Paduana Lachrymae; Pavana Philippi; Toccata a 3 G2; Toccata C2; Toccata Nono Toni; Toccata Primi Toni; Toccata Secundi Toni; Under der Linden grune; Von der Fortuna werd ich getrieben

Ⓝ * Chan. 0758. Woolley

Robert Woolley, using two harpsichords, has produced a glorious CD of some of Sweelinck's most inspired keyboard music. There are all sorts of delights here, from the beautiful variations on Mein junges Leben hat ein End, to the substantial Fantasia cromatica which ends the recital – and what an impressive piece it is too. Sweelinck's music is full of imagination, taking influence from all over Europe and mixing them together to form an original voice. Die flichtig Nimphae is very charming indeed, but there is an unforced elegance about all the music on this CD which is quite captivating. The recital is superbly recorded and Robert Woolley is a masterful exponent of this repertoire.

Echo Fantasia in C; Fantasia cromatica; Fantasia primi toni a 4; Nun komm der Heiden Heiland; Passomezzo moderno a 4 Voc.; Pavana Lachrimae (arr. of Dowland); Pavana Philippi (Variatio); Praeludium (or Fantasia); Toccata in D min.; Variations on 'Allein Gott is der höh sei Her' Variations on 'Est-ce Mars'; Variations on 'Fortune my Foe'; Variations on 'Mein junges Leben hat ein End'

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570894. Glen Wilson (harpsichord)

Glen Wilson is also a splendid player and his less expensive recital is just as enticing as the Chandos collection. Items like the Echo Fantasia, and the Variations on 'Fortune my Foe' and Pavana Philippi are very diverting. But this whole recital, given demonstration recording, is first class.

ORGAN MUSIC

Allein Gott in der Höh sei Ehr; Ballo del granduca; Christe qui lux est et dies; Echo Fantasia (Ionian); Engelsche Foruyn; Erbarme dich mein; Est-ce Mars?; O Herre Gott; Fantasia (a-Phrygian); Fantasia Chromatica; Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ; Ick voer al over Rhijn; Ik heb den Heer lief (Psalm 116); Malle Sijmen; Mein junges Leben hat ein End; More palatino; Nun freut euch, lieben Christen gemein; Onder een linde groen; Ons is gheboren een kindekijn; Onse Vader hemelrijck; Pavana hispanica; Pavana Lachrimae; Pavana Philippi; Poolsche dans; Ricercar (Aeolian); Toccata (Ionian)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67421/2 (2). Herrick (organ of the Norrfjärden Kyrka, Norrfjärden, Piteå, Sweden)

Sweelinck exerted enormous influence during his lifetime. Christopher Herrick has chosen the organ of the Norrfjärden Kyrka, Piteå, on the northeastern coast of Sweden. It is based on a reconstruction of the 1609–84 organ of the Tyskakyrkan in Stockholm, an instrument closely associated with one of Sweelinck's pupils. Herrick is completely attuned to the flavour and style of this repertoire and draws a consistently characterful sound from this lovely instrument and collectors should investigate this fine set of a composer who remains seriously underrated outside the Netherlands. The recording is in the best traditions of the house.

Ballo del granduca; Chorale variations: Erbarm dich mein, O Herr Gott; Mein junges Leben hat ein End'. Echo fantasia in A min.; Malle Sijmen; Onder een linde groen; Poolsche dans; Ricercar; Toccatas: in A min. & C

(BB) * Naxos 8.550904. Christie (C.B. Fisk organ, Houghton Chapel, Wellesley College, USA)

Those wanting a larger, more fully representative collection of Sweelinck's organ music can turn to Naxos, who do not usually let us down with their one-disc surveys. Certainly the Wellesley College organ sounds right, James David Christie is a persuasive exponent, and his pacing is convincing. The two Toccatas are the most commanding pieces here, the C major quite virtuosic. Sweelink's chorale variations repeat the cantus firmus clearly with embellishments of increasing complexity. The secular variations are simpler. Those based on a Dutch song are derived from an English ballad, All in a garden green, and the jolly Malle Sijmen ('Simple Simon') is based on an old English dance-tune, and is piquantly registered. Poolsche dans ('Polish dance') is much more elaborate. It is in the middle section of the Echo Fantasia that the cuckoo-like echoes finally appear and the piece concludes like a toccata. Excellent recording.

Cantiones sacrae (1619)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67103 (Nos. 1–21); CDA 67104 (Nos. 22–37). Trinity College Chapel Ch., Cambridge, Marlow

Sweelinck wrote a great deal of vocal music (though none in his own language), including French chansons and Psalm settings, and Italian madrigals. The 37 Cantiones sacrae, which date from 1691, are in Latin, for five-part choir, and surely represent him at a peak of inspiration. The range of texts is wide, but most pertain to major feasts of the liturgical year. This pair of Hyperion discs (each available separately) offers glorious music, gloriously sung. The simplicity and underlying vitality of the very first piece, Non omnis qui dicit mihi, Domine, captures the listener's ear, and the opening sequence of some half-a-dozen fairly serene settings is then interrupted by three exuberant motets of praise, Ecce nunc benedicte Dominum, Cantate Domino and the exultant Venite exultemus Domino. But the sequence which opens the second disc, beginning with In illo tempore, celebrating the naming of Jesus, is hardly less fine. The resonant acoustic is right for the music, but brings some distinct blurring of the upper focus. Nevertheless this is an outstanding set.

SZYMANOWSKI, Karol
(1882–1937)

(i; ii) Concert Overture, Op. 12; (iii; iv) Harnasie, Op. 55; Symphonies Nos. (i; ii) 2 in B flat, Op. 19; (i; iv–vi) 3 (Song of the Night), Op. 27; (i; v; vii) 4 (Symphonie concertante), Op. 60. (viii) 20 Mazurkas for Solo Piano, Op. 50/1 & 2; Theme & Variations for Solo Piano, Op. 3

🔑 (BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 585539-2 (2). (i) Polish R. Nat. SO; (ii) Kaspszyk; (iii) Bachleda, Kwasny, Polish R. O of Kraków, Wit; (iv) Polish R. Ch. of Kraków; (v) Semkow; (vi) Ochman; (vii) Paleczny; (viii) Blumenthal

This is an excellent and inexpensive way to explore this often marvellous composer. The Second Symphony is not as rewarding as the Third, but it is unusual in form: there are only two movements, the second being a set of variations, culminating in a fugue. The influences of Richard Strauss and Scriabin are clearly audible, if not altogether assimilated. The Third Symphony (Song of the Night), however, is one of the composer's most beautiful scores, with a heady, intoxicated – and intoxicating – atmosphere. These performances date from 1982, and they remain full and atmospheric, even if the quality of the orchestral playing, though good, has been superseded in more recent versions (the vibrato on the brass instruments will not be to all tastes). The gripping account of the ambitious Concert Overture, which sounds for all the world like an undiscovered symphonic poem by Richard Strauss, is highly enjoyable. In the Symphonie concertante, Piotr Paleczny is no mean artist and he has all the finesse and imagination as well as the requisite command of colour that this work calls for; Wit provides him with admirable support, and this 1979 account, as a whole, makes a stronger impression than the more recent Naxos version, similarly priced. Harnasie is also very successful; it reflects Szymanowski's discovery of the folk music of the Tatras. It calls for large forces, including a solo violinist as well as a tenor and full chorus, and poses obvious practical production problems. As always with this composer, there is a sense of rapture, the soaring, ecstatic lines and the intoxicating exoticism that distinguish the mature Szymanowski, and it comes across most tellingly here. The sound is spaciously wide-ranging and full, but it is a bit fierce on top. Blumenthal's accounts of the piano items are reasonably persuasive, though they are sound rather than inspired performances; however, they make a nice bonus.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; Concert Overture, Op. 12

 Chan. 9496. (i) Mordkovitch; BBC PO, Sinaisky

Violin Concertos 1, Op. 35; 2, Op. 61; Nocturne; Tarantella

(BB)  Naxos 8.557981. Kaler, Warsaw PO, Wit

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Romance, Op. 23; 3 Paganini Caprices, Op. 40

Ⓑ * EMI 5 03429-2. Zehetmair; (i) CBSO, Rattle;
(ii) Avenhaus

Thomas Zehetmair's deeply felt versions with Rattle and the CBSO conjure up the Szymanowskian sound-world with real flair, capturing the sensuous luminosity of the central movement; and Rattle unleashes the wildness of the finale with great vigour. The engineers deliver first-rate sound in both works and in the four violin and piano pieces, in which Zehetmair is well supported by the young German pianist, Silke Avenhaus.

Naxos offer an exceptionally clear recording of these four concertante works by Szymanowski, not just the two Violin Concertos but orchestrated versions of the Nocturne and Tarantella. Ilya Kaler, as on other Naxos discs, gives pure, clear readings, with flawless intonation and careful use of vibrato. Having a Polish conductor and orchestra as his accompanists adds to the idiomatic feel of each, with the magical orchestral sounds beautifully conjured up, particularly in No. 1, the more radical of the two works. This matches almost any current version at whatever price.

Lydia Mordkovitch is also admirably suited, full-toned and red-blooded, for these exotic concertos, helped by playing, richly recorded, from the BBC Philharmonic under Vassily Sinaisky. Both works are strongly contrasted with the early and extrovert Concert Overture, an illuminating coupling.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; Symphonies (ii) 3 (Song of the Night); (iii) 4 (Sinfonia concertante). (iv; v) Harnasie; (v; vi); Litany to the Virgin Mary; (v; vii) Love Songs of Hafiz; (v; viii) Songs of a Fairy-tale Princess; (v; vi; ix) Stabat Mater; (v; vi; x) King Roger, Op. 46

Ⓑ  EMI 5 14576-2 (4). CBSO, Rattle; with (i) Zehetmair; (ii) Garrison, Thomas; (iii) Andsnes; (iv) Robinson; (v) CBSO Ch.; (vi) Szmytka; (vii) Karnéus; (viii) Sóbotka; (ix) Quivar; (x) Hampson, Minkiewicz, Youth Ch.

A thoroughly worthwhile anthology from Rattle who, with his CBSO and Chorus is thoroughly at home in the music of Szymanowski, especially the symphonies. Zehetmair proves a highly sensitive soloist in the Violin concertos, and the Sinfonia concertante has greater lucidity of textures than any of its previous rivals and brings magical playing from Andsnes. The vocal soloists are highly idiomatic, Timothy Robinson in Harnasie (a so-called 'ballet-pantomime'), Katarina Karnéus in Love Songs of Hafiz and Iwona Sóbotka in Songs of a Fairy-tale Princess, and Rattle's accompaniments are always alluring.

King Roger, however, stands on the borderline between opera and music drama. The opening in Palermo Cathedral is of awesome opulence and, given such sounds as here, one hardly needs a stage representation. All the singers are first rate, Thomas Hampson has what one can only call magisterial presence and the Roksana is quite ethereal. Only Ryszard Minkiwicz's Shepherd is, perhaps, wanting in tonal bloom. Of course the opening of the third Act is inspired and atmospheric, and Rattle readily demonstrates his special feeling for the composer here. With first-rate recording throughout, this set could make a cornerstone in any collection of Szymanowski's music.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2. Symphonies (ii) 3 (Song of the Night); (iii) 4 (Symphonie concertante); (iv) Demeter; (v) Litany to the Virgin Mary; (vi) Stabat Mater

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI (ADD) 2CD 2 06870-2 (2). Polish R. Nat. SO, with (i) Kulka; cond. Maksymiuk; (ii) Ochman, Krakow R. Ch.; (iii) Paleczyny; both cond. Semkow; (iv) Rappé; (v) Gadulanka; (vi) Hiolski & Ch., cond. Wit

These committed performances are from the 1970s and early 1980s and are atmospheric and sensitive. Kulka's accounts of the two Violin Concertos are highly finished and convey much of the ecstasy, longing and sensuousness of these luminous scores. The pianist in the Symphonie concertante, Piotr Paleczyny, is no mean artist and has all the finesse and imagination as well as the requisite command of colour. The Song of the Night has great refinement and atmosphere, and the other vocal and choral works are similarly idiomatic. The sound generally is naturally recorded and balanced.

(i) Harnasie (ballet pantomime), Op. 55; (ii) Mandragora (pantomime), Op. 43; Etude for Orchestra in B flat min., Op. 3 (orch. Fitelberg)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553686. Polish State PO (Katowice), Stryja; (i) with Grychnik, Polish State PO Ch.; Meus

Harnasie, like the Op. 50 Mazurkas, is the fruit of Szymanowski's encounter with the Polish folk music of the Góral mountains, and its heady exoticism is quite captivating. Stryja's recording is a good one and it is coupled with Mandragora, a harlequinade for chamber forces from 1920 – not Szymanowski at his most fully characteristic but a cultivated and intelligent score.

Symphonies 1 in F min., Op. 15; 2, Op. 19

(BB)  Naxos 8.553683. Polish State PO (Katowice), Stryja

The two-movement First Symphony (1906–7) was first performed in 1909 and was received coolly. Alistair Wightman called it heavily overscored even by the standards of the period. The Second (1911) is heavily indebted to Reger, Scriabin and Strauss and contains original and memorable passages.

Symphony 2 in B flat, Op.19; Concert Overture, Op. 12; (i) Slopiewnie (Wordsong), Op. 46; Songs of the Infatuated Muezzin, Op. 42

 Telarc CD 80567. LPO, Botstein; (i) with Kilanowicz

Neither of the orchestral pieces are quite echt-Szymanowski, the Symphony and Overture being still very much under the influence of Strauss and Reger. All the same, both are heard to best advantage in this finely detailed recording with highly persuasive performances. The two sets of songs are rarities; indeed, Slopiewnie is not otherwise available on disc in its orchestral form and the Songs of the Infatuated Muezzin – composed at the height of the composer's interest in the oriental and the exotic in 1918 (four of which he later scored in 1934) – are not generously represented on disc. Zofia Kilanowicz has just the right blend of purity and seductiveness and the orchestral playing under Leon Botstein is first class.

Symphonies 2; (i) 3 (Song of the Night)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570721. (i) Minkiewicz ;Warsaw Philharmonic Ch. & O, Wit

These are notably warm and idiomatic performances, again showing Antoni Wit as a conductor to reckon with, creating orchestral colour and passion with equal intensity. The excellent clear-voiced tenor soloist, Ryszard Minkiewicz, and the chorus make a passionate impression during 3 and altogether this pair of performances could not be more idiomatic. The recording too is first class.

Symphonies 2; (i) 4 (Sinfonia concertante)

🔑 * Chan. 9478. (i) Shelley; BBC PO, Sinaisky

The Second and Fourth Symphonies are two decades apart. The soft-focus Chandos recording of 2 presents an atmospheric aural picture. Vassily Sinaisky is a highly sympathetic interpreter of the piece, and this BBC version must be a prime recommendation. So, too, is the coupling, the Sinfonia concertante (1932). Howard Shelley produces a quality of sound that is luminous, refined and velvet-toned. The balance between piano and orchestra is particularly well managed, and the lush orchestral textures are more lucid than we have heard them elsewhere.

Symphonies (i) 3 (Song of the Night), Op. 27; (ii) 4, Concert Overture, Op. 12

(BB)  Naxos 8.553684. (i) Ochmann, Polish State Philharmonic Ch.; (ii) Zmudzinski; Polish State PO (Katowice), Stryja

Szymanowski has that fastidious ear for texture and heightened sense of vision that distinguish mystics, and nowhere is atmosphere more potent than in the Third Symphony, the Song of the Night.

Stryja's set of the Song of the Night and the Fourth Symphony offers a well-filled disc. He uses a tenor in the Third Symphony and Tadeusz Zmudzinski is an effective soloist in the Fourth Symphony or Sinfonia concertante for piano and orchestra. The performance of the Straussian and derivative Concert Overture is as persuasive as it can be. The sound in the Third Symphony is good, in the remaining pieces rather less impressive but still acceptable.

CHAMBER MUSIC

3 Mythes, Op. 30; Kurpian Folk Song; King Roger: Roxana's Aria (both arr. Kochanski)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 477 590-3. Danczowska, Zimerman – FRANCK: Violin Sonata ****

Kaja Danczowska brings vision and poetry to the ecstatic, soaring lines of the opening movement of Mythes, The Fountains of Arethusa. Her intonation is impeccable, and she has the measure of these other-worldly, intoxicating scores. There is a sense of rapture here that is totally persuasive, and Krystian Zimerman plays with a virtuosity and imagination that silence criticism. An indispensable reissue.

String Quartets 1, Op. 37; 2, Op. 56

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA67684. Royal Qt (with RÓZYCKI: Quartet in D min., Op. 49)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554315. Goldner Qt – STRAVINSKY: Concertino; 3 Pieces; Double Canon ***

The inspired First Quartet of 1915–16 comes from the period of the First Violin Concerto and the Third Symphony and shares their mystical harmonic sound-world. The Second (1927) comes from the years after the composition of King Roger, and is as fastidiously conceived as its predecessor. Both are masterpieces which should figure alongside Bartók in public esteem, and both are well served by this fine Polish ensemble. They include as a makeweight a quartet by Szymanowski's immediate contemporary but more conservative colleague, Ludomir Rózycki (1884–1953), well worth hearing but not in the same league as its companions.

The Goldner Quartet prove understanding, refined interpreters of both composers, playing with rapt intensity in the hushed slow movements of the Szymanowski works. Excellent sound. We would like to give an unreserved welcome to this disc for the sake of its highly interesting and satisfying repertoire. However the Schoenberg Quartet do not have the immaculate intonation and ensemble needed for this repertoire.

Violin Sonata; Mythes, Op. 30; Nocturne & Tarantella, Op. 28

(*) Chan. 8747. Mordkovitch, Gusk-Grin

Lydia Mordkovitch is ideally attuned to this sensibility and plays both the Sonata and the later works beautifully, and she is sensitively partnered by Marina Gusk-Grin. This can be recommended, though this account of the Mythes does not displace Danczowska and Zimerman.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete piano music

Disc 1: 9 Preludes, Op. 1; Variations in B flat min., Op. 3; 4 Etudes, Op. 4; Sonata 1 in C min., Op. 8 (NI 5405)

Disc 2: Variations on a Polish Theme in B min., Op. 10; Fantasia in C min., Op. 14; Prelude & Fugue in C sharp min., (1909); Sonata 2 in A, Op. 21 (NI 5406)

Disc 3: Métopes (3 Poèmes), op. 29; 15 Etudes, Op. 34; Sonata 3, Op. 36 (NI 5435)

Disc 4: 20 Mazurkas, Op. 50; 2 Mazurkas, op. 62; 4 Polish Pieces (1926); Romantic Waltz (1925) (NI 5436)

 Nim. NI 1750 (4). M. Jones

This complete Nimbus survey invites enthusiasm, particularly as the music is presented in historical sequence. The Nine Preludes of Op. 1, although published in 1906, were composed much earlier and are simple, romantic miniatures, with at times a flavour of Chopin. The two sets of Variations of Op. 3 and Op. 10, although appealingly inventive, are in the received German tradition; but the Four Etudes of Op. 4 and the opening movement of the impressive First Sonata already suggest Scriabin. The Second Sonata (1910/11) is much more complex in both its structure and use of chromaticism. The later pieces, Masques and Métopes, written at about the time of the First Violin Concerto, show Szymanowski responding to French influences and early Stravinsky, and evolving a sophisticated exoticism all his own. The beautiful and always imaginative Etudes (1916) draw on a whole range of styles from Ravel and Debussy, and even Bartók, but they are well assimilated. The Third Sonata (1917) is wholly impressionistic and Martin Jones manages its quixotic changes of mood and atmosphere most compellingly. The Mazurkas, from the 1920s, find Symanowski seeking to create an authentic Polish idiom in contemporary terms. The advantage of listening to this rewarding music in sequence means that one senses the composer gradually forging his own individuality. Martin Jones is a consistently persuasive advocate and he is naturally recorded. A most rewarding set.

Fantasy in F min.; Masques; 2 Mazurkas; 20 Mazurkas; Métopes; Piano Sonatas 1–3; 4 Polish Dances; 9 Preludes, Op. 1; Prelude and Fugue in C sharp min.; Prelude in C sharp min.; Romantic Waltz; 4 Studies; 12 Studies; Variations in B flat min.; Variations on a Polish Theme

 Divine Art 21400 (4). Lee

Sinae Lee is a reliable guide in this interesting repertoire, handling the Chopinesque early period as confidently as the enigmatic late Mazurkas. Perhaps the refinement of such works as the Masques and Métopes eludes her.

4 Etudes, Op. 4; Fantasy, Op. 14; Masques, Op. 34; Métopes, Op. 29

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55081. Lee

Dennis Lee not only encompasses the technical hurdles of Masques and Métopes with dazzling virtuosity but also provides the keenest artistic insights. He conveys the exoticism and hothouse atmosphere of these pieces; moreover he handles the early Chopinesque Etudes and the Fantasy with much the same feeling for characterization and artistry. The Hyperion sound is very good indeed. An excellent bargain.

4 Etudes, Op. 4; Mazurkas, Op. 50/1–4; Métopes, Op. 29; Piano sonata 2 in A, Op. 21

(BB)  Naxos 8.553016-2. Roscoe

Fantasy in C, Op. 14; Masques, Op. 34; Mazurkas, Op. 50/5–12; Variations on a Polish theme, Op. 10

(BB)  Naxos 8.553300. Roscoe

Martin Roscoe proves a perceptive and sensitive interpreter of Szymanowski and the first two discs augur well for this ongoing series. In the four Mazurkas, Op. 50, that open the first CD he shows real feeling and insight. He is equally persuasive in the early Chopinesque Etudes, Op. 4, and the refined impressionism of Métopes. The Second Sonata is a problematic piece, full of virtuosic hurdles, romantic gestures and Regerian ingenuity. The second disc gives us the C major Fantasy, Op. 14, and the Op. 10 Variations, in which the debts to Scriabin and Chopin have yet to be fully discharged. A fine account of the Masques, too. This is playing of quality. As far as recording is concerned, Martin Roscoe is well served.

20 Mazurkas, Op. 50; 2 Mazurkas, Op. 62; 4 Polish Dances; Valse Romantique

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67399. Hamelin

The Szymanowski Mazurkas are late works and are among his best and certainly his most haunting piano pieces. They are without doubt the finest mazurkas after Chopin. Their inward qualities and their sense of mystery elude many pianists, but Marc-André Hamelin gives as perceptive and authoritative an account of these extraordinary pieces as any. In this music Szymanowski was entering new territory, and their significance in his development cannot be underestimated. Hyperion give Hamelin natural and truthfully balanced sound, and no readers interested in this once neglected but now rightly appreciated master should overlook this fine issue.

Piano Sonatas 1 in C min., Op. 8; 2 in A, op. 21; 3, Op. 35; Prelude & Fugue in C sharp min.

🔑  Athene ATHCD 19. Clark

Readers who want to explore just the three Piano Sonatas should consider this excellently played offering. No less than Martin Jones, Raymond Clarke has an intuitive grasp of – and affinity with – Szymanowski's sound-world. He is second to none in terms of sensibility and keyboard command. His version of the First Sonata is particularly convincing. Good recording, though not in the demonstration class.

Piano Sonata 3, Op. 36; Mazurkas, Op. 50/9–12; Op. 62/1–2; Masques, Op. 34; Métopes, Op. 29

Ⓝ  BIS-CD1137. Pöntinen

The Swedish pianist Roland Pöntinen is wholly attuned to the Szymanowskian sensibility. His account of the Mazurkas chosen here is highly sensitive and idiomatic. In Masques we retain a slight preference for Dennis Lee on Hyperion.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Stabat Mater, Op. 53; (ii) Demeter, Op. 37b; (iii) Litany to the Virgin Mary, Op. 59; (iv) Penthesilea, Op. 18; (v) Veni Creator, Op. 57

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570724. Warsaw Ch. & Philh. O, Wit; with (i; iii–v) Hossa; (i–ii) Marciniec; (i) Brek

Naxos have replaced the performers of their previous (identical) collection of Szymanowski's choral music with a new team, and in particular using fine soloists. The Stabat Mater is not only one of Szymanowski's greatest achievements but one of the greatest choral works of the 20th century. This new account has the advantage of highly sensitive conducting and an excellent response from the choir and orchestra.

The Liturgy to the Virgin Mary is another late work of great poignancy, but Demeter has exotic, almost hallucinatory textures. It is all heady and intoxicating stuff, and not to be missed by those with a taste for this wonderful composer. The recording is excellent.

(i) 3 Fragments of the Poems by Jan Kasprowicz; (ii) Love Songs of Hafiz; (iii) Songs of the Fairy-Tale Princess; (iv) Songs of the Infatuated Muezzin; (v) King Roger: Roxana's Song

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553688. (i) Malewicz-Madej; (ii; iv) Ryszard Minkiewicz; (iii) Gadulanka; (v) Zagórzanka; Katowice Polish State PO, Stryja

In the Songs of the Fairy-Tale Princess, one feels that Szymanowski must have known Stravinsky's Le Rossignol. On Naxos, both the Songs of the Infatuated Muezzin and the Love Songs of Hafiz are sung by a tenor (Ryszard Minkiewicz) with impressive insight, but the 1989 recording is resonant and does not flatter him. Jadwiga Gadulanka is hardly less impressive in the extraordinary Songs of the fairy-tale princess and Barbara Zagórzanka sings the famous Chant de Roxane beautifully, and both she and Anna Malewicz-Madej in the Kasprowicz songs are very well balanced.

STAGE WORKS

King Roger, Op. 46 (complete)

 Accord ACD 131-2. Drabowicz, Pasiecznik, Beczala, Tesarowicz, Toczyska, Szymt, 'Alla Polacca' Youth Ch., Ch., Polish Nat. Op. O, Kaspszyk

Jacek Kaspszyk's set is finer than any of the three earlier Polish versions. Indeed, it is possible to prefer it to Sir Simon Rattle's version which is available in 4-CD EMI box – see above. In the title-role Wojtek Drabowicz is every bit as authoritative as Thomas Hampson and arguably is better characterized, and in vocal quality the Roksana of Olga Pasiecznik sounds even purer than Rattle's Elzbieta Szmytka. Her famous aria is quite ravishing. Indeed, the whole performance is strong vocally and the choral singing is magnificent. Kaspszyk paces the work in masterly fashion: the opening in Palermo Cathedral is one of the most glowing and atmospheric in all Szymanowski, and its sense of mysticism is conveyed with authority. The recording, too, has impressive range and definition, and this new Polish set is very powerful and makes a highly competitive alternative.

TAKEMITSU, Toru (1930–96)

A Flock Descends into the Pentagonal Garden; (i) Quatrain; (ii) Ring; Sacrifice; Stanza I; Valeria

🔑 * DG 477 5381. Boston SO, Ozawa; (i) with Tashi; (ii) Nagano with instrumentalists

In Quatrain Takemitsu contrasts his solo concertino of clarinet, violin, cello and piano with the full orchestra in a way that might suggest neoclassicism, except that Takemitsu's music is essentially sensuous and evocative; one might almost count him a Japanese Debussy. The other piece, which is purely orchestral, is overtly impressionistic. Both are superbly played; the outstanding Tashi group is ideally suited to Quatrain. The other pieces, earlier works from the 1960s, feature Yonako Nagano (mezzo) and an instrumental group including piccolo, flute, vibraphone, violin, cello, harp, guitar, lute and piano; and they offer more of Takemitsu's unique kind of seductive oriental impressionism.

Quotations of Dream (Day Signals from Heaven; How slow the wind; Twill by Twilight; Archipelago G; Dream Window; Night Signals from Heaven)

🔑 * DG 453 4952. Crossley, Serkin, L. Sinf., Knussen

Takemitsu suggested that his music endeavoured 'to create a perspective of sound – music that forever strides the border between dream and reality'. The Quotations of Dream is extremely varied in scoring and in the size of the ensemble used, and is held together stylistically by the composer's 'enigmatic, murmuring, ever flowing currents of sound . . . drifting into being at the time of performance'. The five pieces are framed by Day and Night Signals from Heaven, each an antiphonal fanfare for brass, and the following segment, for two pianos and orchestra, which bears the title of the whole work, not only dominates but epitomizes the character of what is to follow. Its evocation of the sea subtly draws on wisps of Debussy's La Mer, and throughout the other sections the listener has the feeling that Takemitsu is haunted by memories of music from the recent past, which are woven into his textures. The other movements are How slow the wind (for chamber orchestra), the gently rocking Twill by Twilight for a larger orchestra, the antiphonal Archipelago G (for 21 wind players, including horn and trumpet), and Dream Window, with its Buddhist ambiguity. The performance (from Oliver Knussen, his two piano soloists, Paul Crossley and Peter Serkin, and members of the London Sinfonietta) is remarkably fine, and the recording, made in two different venues, is richly atmospheric. The Gramophone, giving the disc its Contemporary Award in 1999, suggested that 'this is the best single CD of Takemitsu's music so far issued', and it certainly has not been surpassed since.

Corona (London version for pianos, organ & harpsichord); Far Away; Piano Distance; Undisturbed Rest

Ⓜ (*) Explore EXP 0016. Woodward

Roger Woodward sympathetically draws out a seductive range of colours in Corona with its essentially improvisational feeling. The other music, despite its too easy reliance on texture, is still undeniably attractive, combining a flavour of Scriabin with the avant-garde. Excellent (originally Decca) recording.

TALLIS, Thomas (c. 1505–85)

The Complete Vocal and Instrumental Music of Tallis: Volumes 1–9

🔑 Ⓜ  Signum SIGCD 060 (10). Chapelle du Roi, Alistair Dixon, with Soloists, Instrumentalists and Charivari Agréable

Alistair Dixon and his Chapelle du Roi (plus other contributors) have now completed their distinguished integral coverage of the music of the great Elizabethan composer, Thomas Tallis. The complete series is currently available in a mid-priced box with full documentation, but the discs are all available separately and are praised individually below.

* SIGCD 001. Vol. 1: The Early Works
* SIGCD 002. Vol. 2: Music at the Reformation
* SIGCD 003. Vol. 3: Music for Queen Mary
* SIGCD 010. Vol. 4: Music for the Divine Office – I
* SIGCD 016. Vol. 5: Music for the Divine Office – II
* SIGCD 022. Vol. 6: Music for a Reformed Church
* SIGCD 029. Vol. 7: Music for Queen Elizabeth
 SIGCD 036. Vol. 8: Lamentations & English Motets
 SIGCD 042 (with bonus CD). Vol. 9: Instrumental Music & Songs

Just looking at the titles of the individual volumes underlines the dramatic period of English history through which Tallis lived and composed, successfully moving from a Latin liturgy to English settings, then back again. Finally, during the reign of Elizabeth I in the best spirit of English compromise, he created new from the old in setting English words to music originally written to serve Latin texts. Even the famous Spem in Alium was heard anew as Sing and glorify, although generations later it reverted to its original Latin format.

The first disc augurs extremely well for the project. The programme is framed by three Marian votive antiphons, the first two comparatively immature and rather similar. Salve intemerata, however, is masterly in its concisely integrated part-writing (with some soaring treble solos, beautifully sung here). The Mass sharing its name uses much of the same material: the Gloria and Sanctus are particularly fine. The Alleluia and Euge celi porta are less ambitious, but still serenely beautiful, four-part plainchant settings used as part of the Ladymass.

Most, possibly all, of the music in Volume 2 dates from the 1540s and reflects the remarkable diversity of musical response that came directly from the profound change in reformed religious procedures that developed in England within a single decade. Much liturgical music was still sung in Latin, notably the splendid Magnificat and the deeply felt Sancte Deus, but already there are settings in English, including three fine early anthems, an extended English Benedictus and a remarkable five-part Te Deum, all very different from the music on Volume 1 of this series. The surprisingly homophonic setting of the Latin Mass is forward-looking, too, and very telling.

Volume 3 returns to the Latin rite and all the works here date from the reign of Mary Tudor (1553–8). The collection opens with the Psalm setting Beati immaculati, and includes also the glorious, large-scale votive antiphon Gaude gloriosa, magnificently sung. The key work, however, is the seven-part Mass Puer natus est nobis, which is incomplete. Here the Gloria, Sanctus and Agnus Dei are performed with the plainchant Propers for the third Mass of Christmas. As usual the singing is splendid, but there is a good deal of monodic chant here, beautifully phrased certainly, but which will reduce the appeal of this volume for some collectors.

Volume 4 in this ever-rewarding series is the first to concentrate on music for the cycle of eight services, Matins, Lauds, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers and Compline, sung daily in Latin Christendom. The riches of the polyphony here are unending. Dum transisset sabbatum and the six-part Videte miraculum are particularly fine, while the seven-part Loquebantur variis linguis with its recurring Alleluias spins an even more complex contrapuntal web. Even the simplest of the settings here, Quod chorus vatum, is moving by its comparative austerity.

Volume 5 of Alistair Dixon's invaluable survey continues the music that Tallis wrote for the Divine Office begun in Volume 4. But the special interest of this CD is the inclusion of the organ music, simply written and based on plainchant melismas. Tallis generally used the organ as a substitute for voices, interchanging instrumental with sung text. In this aurally appealing alternation, the organist played the odd-numbered verses, usually providing – as in Veni redemptor genitum – a piquant introduction to contrast with the sonorous vocal entry. The organ used for the recordings, in the private chapel at Knole, is the oldest playable organ in England, so its choice seems admirable, and Andrew Benson-Wilson's contribution to the success of this CD is considerable, since all the organ music is most appealing.

Volume 6 is devoted to music which he composed for use in the reformed services promulgated by The Booke of the Common Prayer, which came into effect in 1549, here presented in the normal liturgical sequence. Much of the music is simple and homophonic, but it has an unadorned beauty of its own. The anthems are richer in the interplay of parts but are still brief, and the collection ends with the nine even briefer psalm-tune harmonizations which Tallis contributed to Archbishop Matthew Parker's Psalter, published in about 1567.

Elizabeth was the fourth monarch to sit on the throne in Tallis's lifetime, and Tallis was by then in his sixties. Both composer and monarch appear to have been determined that the new Elizabethan Latin motets should seek new expressive approaches, while drawing on the best of the past. Their success is confirmed by the fact that cathedral musicians fitted English words to much of Tallis's music. Absterge Domine therefore also becomes Discomfort them O Lord. The two Psalm settings included, Domine, quis habitat (Psalm 15) and the shorter but no less impressive Laudate Dominum (Psalm 117), are both memorable. The most celebrated of these motets is of course Spem in Alium, with its incredibly dense part-writing still able to astonish the ear. It is sung gloriously here, its ebb and flow and rich climaxes splendidly controlled.

Tallis's two richly expressive settings of the Lamentations of Jeremiah are given in Volume 8 in serene and dedicated performances, followed by what are known as contrafacta, English versions by the post-Reformation English Church of Latin motets rewritten by Tallis. The music itself, usually in five parts, seems to adapt very well to its linguistic transformation; the first piece here, Wipe away my sins (Absterge Domine), described as 'A Prayer', is particularly beautiful. With all our hearts and mouths and the lovely Arise, O Lord both derive from Tallis's first setting of Salvator mundi, while I call and cry to Thee (O sacrum convivium), very popular in its day, was to lay the basis for Tallis's English anthems.

The fascination of the final volume in Signum's comprehensive survey is the virtually unknown instrumental music, consisting of a small collection of works for viols and some fine pieces for keyboard, which we hear variously on virginals, harpsichord or organ. In his excellent notes, John Milsom suggests that while Tallis's official duties involved him only as a church musician, he may have written some of this music for the Tudor Court, and the keyboard pieces could conceivably have been written for Queen Elizabeth I, who was a celebrated amateur performer. Certainly they are attractive enough.

The consort manuscripts give no indication of the instrumentation, but viols (as used here) seem a likely choice, and Tallis's pair of In nomines are the first known examples of this form (settings using the Gloria tibi Trinitas as a basis). As far as is known, Tallis did not write for the lute, so the impressively complex work based on the plainsong 'Felix namque' is almost certainly an arrangement by an unknown lutenist. This is heard alongside the less virtuosic keyboard version written two years earlier. Mr Tallis's Lesson (which we hear both on harpsichord and on organ) is a very agreeable pedagogic piece based on a decorated canon, and was no doubt intended as a study for the composer's choirboy pupils.

As for the songs, they make a wonderful closing section. The very touching When shall my sorrowful sighing might well have been composed by Dowland, and Ye sacred music, a tribute to Byrd, is fully worthy. They are sung most sympathetically by Stephen Taylor (counter-tenor), and the instrumental pieces from Charivari Agréable, Laurence Cummings (virginals and harpsichord) and Andrew Benson-Wilson (organ) are expertly played, while Lynda Sayce gives a virtuoso account of the arrangement of Felix namque.

The bonus disc includes a complete setting of the Litany, omitted from Volume 6, two brief organ Versets, and a further performance of the earlier, less complex version of Felix Namque. As with the other organ pieces, Benson-Wilson uses the organ at the private chapel in Knole in Kent (owned during Tallis's lifetime by both Archbishop Cranmer and Henry VIII). All in all, Volume 9 makes a fitting conclusion to a splendid project, admirably realized, and as before full texts and translations are included.

'Portrait': Anthems; Antiphons; Cantiones Sacrae; Lamentations of Jeremiah; Motets; Psalm Settings; Responsories

(BB)  Regis Portrait PCL 2101 (2). Chapelle du Roi, Dixon

This well-chosen selection from the Chapelle du Roi survey opens with the characteristic early setting of Ave dei patris filia and explores the full range of Tallis's music, including, on the second disc, the Lamentations of Jeremiah and of course the famous 40-part motet, Spem in alium. Altogether a splendid and inexpensive sampler.

Anthems; Lamentations of Jeremiah I & II; Motets including Spem in alium (on GDGIM 006, 007 and 025)

🔑 Ⓜ * Gimell 2-CD CDGIM 203 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips

This collection from the eponymous Tallis Scholars directed by Peter Phillips now includes, on a pair of CDs, the music from three earlier issues (each still available separately). The performances are outstanding, wonderfully secure and very beautiful, recorded in an ideal acoustic. This mid-priced set has as its highlight a quite glorious account of the famous 40-part motet Spem in alium; so this would be an admirable basis for any collection, small or large.

Lamentations I & II; Audivi vocem de caelo

Ⓜ  CRD 3499 Clerks of New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom – BYRD: Lamentations; Mass for 4 Voices ***

The performance by the Clerks of New College, Oxford, Choir (16 strong) directed by Edward Higginbottom is no less serenely beautiful and deeply felt. It is appropriately coupled with Byrd's only surviving setting of the Lamentations and an equally rewarding account of the Tallis responsory Audivi vocem de caelo with its interchange of polyphony and plainchant, which makes an admirable postlude. The recording is first class, with a richly appealing ambience.

9 Psalm Tunes for Archbishop Parker's Psalter

🔑 ✿ * HM HMU 807463. Stile antico – BYRD: Cantiones sacrae; Mass propers ***

The opening of this disc immediately brings an aural double-take, for Tallis's Third Tune, Why fum'th in fight, does not mirror its text, but is the wonderfully serene melody Vaughan Williams chose for his inspired Variations. All of these Tunes (written for a metrical psalter in 1576) are as brief as they are memorable, and they are interwoven here by more complex polyphonic settings by Byrd, making a stimulating contrast. Style antico is a baker's dozen of mixed men's and women's voices, superbly blended, who sing with absolute precision, sensitive use of light and shade, and impeccable tuning. They also bring to the music just the right degree of expressive warmth for this repertoire and they are beautifully recorded.

Absterge Domine; Candidi facti sunt; Nazareri; Derelinquat impius; Dum transisset sabbatum; Gaude gloriosa Dei Mater; Magnificat & Nunc dimittis; Salvator mundi

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3429. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom

The performances by the Choir of New College, Oxford – recorded in the splendid acoustic of the College Chapel – are very well prepared, with good internal balance, excellent intonation, ensemble and phrasing. The Gaude gloriosa is one of Tallis's most powerful and eloquent works.

Audivici vocem de caelo; Candidi facti sunt Nazarei eius a 5; Dum transisset sabbatus; Gaude gloriosa,

Dei Mater; Hodie nobis celorum rex; Homo quidam fecit cenam magnam; Honor, virtus et potestas; In jejunio et fletu; In pace in idipsum; Lamentations of Jeremiah I & II; Loquebantur variis linguis; Miserere nostri; O nata lux de lumine; O sacrum convivium; Salvator mundi I & II; Spem in alium; Suscipe quaeso Domine; Te lucis ante terminum (Procul recedante somnia) I; Videte miraculum

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 62230-2 (2). Taverner Consort, Parrott

The Taverner style is brighter and more abrasive than we are used to in this often ethereal music but, apart from the scholarly justification, the polyphonic cohesion of the writing comes over the more tellingly. Our listing is in alphabetical order, but the programme – as presented here – was planned as two separate collections, the first disc containing Tallis's most elaborate and most celebrated choral piece, the 40-part motet Spem in alium, as well as nine other magnificent responsories, some of them – like Videte miraculum and Dum transisset sabbatus – almost as extended in argument. The second of the two discs has two magnificent Lamentations of Jeremiah as well as an even more expansive motet, which Tallis wrote early in his career, Gaude, gloriosa, Dei Mater, and a number of the shorter Cantiones sacrae. This reissue is warmly recommendable and very well recorded.

Audivi vocem de Caelo; Honor virtus et postestas; O sacrum convivium; Salvator mundi; Sancte Deus

Ⓜ  CRD 3372, Ch. of New College, Oxford, Higginbottom – TAVERNER: Western Wynde etc ***

This collection of votive antiphons, motets and responds makes up an attractive group, and the Choir of New College, Oxford, produces a clean and well-blended sound. Given the attractions of the coupling this disc has a strong appeal.

Magnificat (4 vv); Mass Puer natus est nobis. Motets: Audivi vocem; Ave Dei patris filia

🔑 * Gimell CDGIM 034-2. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

The performance by the Tallis Scholars of the reconstructed Tallis Christmas Mass has an appealing directness and simplicity and is well up to the standard of its competitors. The four-part Magnificat is an early work, but is again very impressively sung here, and the programme is completed with two votive antiphons. Ave Dei patris filia is particularly appealing. It has a striking, soaring opening from the trebles emphasizing the word 'Ave', which illuminates the music throughout its seven stanzas. Excellent recording, but there would have been room for more music here.

Mass for 4 Voices; Motets: Audivi vocem; In manus tuas Domine; Loquebantur variis linguis; O sacrum convivium; Salvator mundi; Sancte Deus; Te lucis ante terminum; Videte miraculum

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550576. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

The Oxford Camerata with their beautifully blended timbre have their own way with Tallis. Lines are firm, the singing has serenity but also a firm pulse. In the Mass (and particularly in the Sanctus) the expressive strength is quite strongly communicated, while the Benedictus moves on spontaneously at the close. The motets respond particularly well to Jeremy Summerly's degree of intensity. The opening Loquebantur variis linguis has much passionate feeling, and this (together with the Audivi vocem and, especially, the lovely Sancte Deus) shows this choir of a dozen singers at their most eloquent. The recording, made in the Chapel of Wellington College, is very fine indeed. Excellent value.

Spem in alium (40 Part Motet); Salve intemerata (Mass & Motet); I call and cry to thee, O Lord; Discomfort them O Lord; With all our heart

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557770. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

Spem in alium is justly famous. In order to replicate the circular effect intended by the composer, the producer here, Andrew Walton, and engineer, Mike Clements, recorded the four choirs positioned in the form of four sides of a huge St Chad Cross. The result (especially at the climax of Spem in alium) is overwhelming. But the extended motet, Salve intemerata, and its associated Mass are superb too, while the three English motets which complete the programme are by no means an anticlimax. The performances here are beyond praise, as is the skill of the Naxos recording team, while the acoustic of All Hallows, Gospel Oak, London, was ideally chosen for this remarkable enterprise.

TANEYEV, Sergei (1856–1915)

(i) Piano Concerto in E flat; (ii) Allegro in E flat; Andantino semplice; (iii) The Composer's Birthday. 4 Improvisations (with Arensky, Glazunov & Rachmaninov); Lullaby; Repose; March in D min.; Prelude in F

(*) Toccata Classics TOCC 0402. (i) Banowetz, Russian Philh. O of Moscow, Thomas Sanderling; (ii) Wodnicki; (iii) Ashkenazy (narr.)

Taneyev began his only Piano Concerto when he was 19, the year after he had given the Moscow première of Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto. Not even the encouragement of Tchaikovsky could induce him to complete it. Although the latter's influence is obvious, Taneyev is already his own man – particularly in the short second movement (orchestrated by Shebalin), and the writing is cultured and dignified. The seven piano pieces, mostly from the 1870s, are rewarding and already exhibit the fastidious craftsmanship you find in his mature compositions. Most of these pieces are new to the catalogue, including the light-hearted birthday tribute to Tchaikovsky in which Ashkenazy appears as narrator. The performances are of quality. In the concerto, the recording could perhaps be fresher and the orchestral texture better ventilated; and the piano in the solo pieces could also benefit with more air.

Suite de Concert, Op. 28

Ⓝ  Chan. 10491. Mordkovitch, RSNO, Järvi. (with RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Fantasy on Russian Themes, Op. 33 ***)

Ⓜ  EMI mono 3 61570-2. D. Oistrakh, Philh. O, Malko – KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto in D min. ()

Taneyev's Suite de Concert is now well served on CD, with Oistrakh's classic account available alongside this excellent new version on Chandos with Lydia Mordkovitch, which is no less enjoyable. Lydia above all goes in for bringing out an incredible range of colours from her instrument, and if her intonation isn't always immaculate, her sheer intensity carries the day. The Tarantella finale is excitingly done. One attracting feature of this release is the colourfully tuneful work by Rimsky-Korsakov, where the composer's gift of conjuring up a magical atmosphere is superbly realized by the soloist. Järvi conducts both works with his usual expertise and the Chandos recording is warm and richly detailed.

Taneyev's five-movement Suite has much charm when played as beautifully and warmly as it is here by David Oistrakh. Needless to say Oistrakh's lovely performance invites all the superlatives, and Malko accompanies most persuasively. The 1956 Abbey Road recording is excellsent, far smoother and more pleasing than the Khachaturian coupling.

Symphonies 1 in E min; 3 in D min.

🔑 * Chan. 10390.Russian State SO, Polyansky

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.570336. Novosibirsk Ac. SO, Thomas Sanderling

The First Symphony is a student work from 1873 when he was 16, and it was never performed or published in Taneyev's lifetime. Immature though it is at times, the symphony still shows real originality: the Andantino is captivating. The Third is both masterly and compelling. David Brown once wrote that Taneyev 'commanded a compositional skill unsurpassed by any composer of his period', and this shows. His melodic ideas may not be in the same league as those of Glazunov or Arensky, but his arguments are always cogent and regularly erupt in lyrical passages that smack of the tunesmith in him. Polyansky's direction of the Russian State Symphony Orchestra results in vivid and colourful performances, establishing Taneyev as a figure subtly different from his close contemporaries, quite individual. Full, brilliant sound. Recommended with enthusiasm.

Thomas Sanderling and the Novosibirsk Orchestra are broader and more leisurely than Polyansky on Chandos and the playing is a good deal less finished. All the same, there is a genuine seriousness of purpose here which serves these admirable symphonies well. Polyansky remains a first choice.

Symphonies 2 in B flat; 4 in C min., Op. 12

 Chan. 9998. Russian State SO, Polyansky

Symphony 4 in C min., Op. 12; Overture The Oresteia, Op. 6

 Chan. 8953. Philh. O, Järvi

The Fourth is a long piece of over 40 minutes. The outer movements were scored, but the central Andante was left in short score, and the work was put into performable shape by Vladimir Blok. But the Fourth has a particularly inventive and delightful Scherzo, which shows his keenness of wit. The Russian performances are very good, though Järvi's CD of the Fourth with the Philharmonia Orchestra is not displaced. He gets very good playing from the Philharmonia and similarly first-class recording.

(i) Piano Quartet in E, Op. 20; Piano Trio, Op. 22

Ⓜ  Dutton CDSA 6882. Barbican Piano Trio; (i) with J. Boyd

The Barbican Trio is a fine ensemble and excellently recorded. Theirs is a well-shaped account of the Op. 22 Trio. Their excellent pianist is highly musical. Their coupling is the slightly earlier but equally rewarding E major Piano Quartet. Taneyev's music is full of subtleties and surprises and gives much delight.

Piano Quintet in G min., Op. 30

 Ara. Z 6539. Lowenthal, Rosenthal, Kamei, Thompson, Kates

Not only is the Piano Quintet well structured and its motivic organization subtle, but its melodic ideas are strong and individual. It is arguably the greatest Russian chamber work between Tchaikovsky and Shostakovich. The recording is not in the demonstration bracket, but it is very good, and the playing, particularly of the pianist Jerome Lowenthal, is excellent. Strongly recommended but no coupling.

Piano Quintet, Op. 10; Piano Trio. Op.22

🔑 * DG 477 5419. Pletnev, Repin, Gringolts, Imai, Harrell

The present DG disc (82 minutes) rather upstages the opposition. The Piano Quintet is a particularly strong and enjoyable work. Pletnev and his colleagues make it sound like a true masterpiece, and they are nearly as convincing in the Trio. Excellent recording, too.

String Quartets 1 in B flat Min., Op. 4; 2 in C, Op. 5

 OCD 697. Krasni Qt

The First Quartet, written in 1890, is a distinctly individual piece in five movements, alternating slow and fast tempi. The beautiful Largo is searching, with an almost improvisatory feel, the Scherzo dances along spiritedly, and a delicately nostalgic Intermezzo intervenes before the light-hearted Giocoso finale, which has a charming secondary theme. The Second Quartet (1895) has a pervading folksy quality and is certainly Slavic in feeling, especially the melody that forms the centrepiece of the Scherzo. The Adagio espressivo is very intense, but also restless; the finale (vigorosamente) resolves matters cheerfully, and halfway through introduces a double fugue, gathering together the work's principal ideas. These performances are first class, and the recording is truthful (even if perhaps a little close). Recommended.

String Trios in E flat, Op. 31; in B min.; in D

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67573. Leopold String Trio

If you enjoy the Tchaikovsky Quartets, you'll almost certainly enjoy these Trios, although there is no movement quite as memorable as the Tchaikovsky Andante cantabile. The Op. 31 Trio, which opens the disc, is the finest, with consistently memorable invention. Taneyev, like Mendelssohn, is particularly good at scherzos and both scherzi, in Op. 31 and the D major work, are prime examples. The (reconstructed) two-movement B minor Trio opens rather lugubriously, but its second movement Theme and variations is quixotically inventive, yet is far from frivolous, with fine, expressive writing to balance the characteristic scherzando writing. The D major Trio was written three decades before the others: it has a friendly opening movement and a very touching Adagio. The Leopold String Trio are right inside all this music, play and balance inpeccably, and they are very realistically recorded.

Cantata 2, Op. 36 (At the Reading of a Psalm)

🔑 * PentaTone SACD PTC 5186 038. Semenina, Tarassova, Gubsky, Baturkin, St Petersburg State Ac. Ch., Glinka Choral College Boys' Ch., Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

In March 2005 Pletnev and the Russian National Orchestra broke a lance for Taneyev by bringing two of his big choral works and the Fourth Symphony to London's Barbican Hall – and to packed houses! This account of At the Reading of a Psalm is every bit as dedicated and committed as their London concert, and the choral singing is wonderfully full-blooded and rich in tone. This music speaks with a completely individual voice.

John of Damascus

 DG 471 029-2. Mescheriakov, Larin, Chernov, Moscow State Ch. O, RNO, Mikhail Pletnev – RACHMANINOV: The Bells. ✿ ***

Taneyev's John of Damascus is his Op. 1 and a noble piece, whose long neglect on the gramophone is at last remedied. An earlier version from Valéry Polyansky on Chandos made a strong impression but was encumbered with a perfectly adequate but unwanted performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony. In any event this is vastly superior in every way.

TANSMAN, Alexandre (1897–1986)

Symphonies 2 & 3; Quatre Mouvements pour orchestre

(N)  Chan. 5065. Melbourne SO, Caetani

Tansman was born into a wealthy Jewish family in Łódź but settled in Paris when he was twenty where he became a protégé of Ravel. Koussevitzky premièred his Second Symphony in 1927 and the Third (Symphonie concertante for piano quartet and orchestra) was composed in 1931 when he was working with Gershwin on the orchestration of An American in Paris. It is inventive and entertaining music with a strong appeal. The Quatre Mouvements come from the mid-1960s and have a distinctive texture with the occasional hint of Szymanowski and some of Stravinsky's rhythmic fertility. They are well served by the Melbourne Orchestra and the recording team. Strongly recommended.

Symphonies 7 (Lyrique); 8 (Musique pour orchestre); 9

🔑  Chan. SACD CHSA 5054. Melbourne SO, Caetani

Tansman has been neglected by the gramophone, though the Triptych (see below) was recorded in the early days of LP, and his guitar music was given by such luminaries of that instrument as Segovia and John Williams. The Seventh Symphony has a Bartókian slow introduction, but the atmosphere is tinged with touches of Stravinsky and Milhaud. The Eighth, completed on his return to France in 1948, and its successor of ten years later are both rewarding scores, neo-classical in style but strongly atmospheric in feeling. This will be new repertoire for all but specialist collectors and should be a welcome discovery. In Oleg Caetani and the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra the symphonies have persuasive advocacy and the expansive Chandos SACD recording is admirable.

Musique for Clarinet Quintet; Musique à six for Clarinet Quintet & Piano; 3 Pièces for Clarinet, Harp & String Quartet; Triptyque for String Quartet

(BB)  Naxos 8.570235. Fessard, Reyes, Pierre, Quatuor Elysée

With Jean-Marc Fessard the central performer in this collection, playing on bass clarinet as well as the regular instrument, this gives an attractive survey of Tansman's music, most of it written when he was in wartime exile in the United States. There is an obvious influence from Stravinsky, both in these works and in the much earlier Triptyque for String Quartet of 1930. First-rate sound.

TARTINI, Giuseppe (1692–1770)

(i; ii) Cello Concerto in A; (iii; ii) Violin Concertos in D min., D.45; (iv; ii) in E min., D.56; in G, D. 82; (iii; v) Violin sonatas (for violin & continuo): in A; in G min.; in F, Op. 1/1, 10 & 12; in C, Op. 2/2; in G min. (Devil's Trill)

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 61693-2 (2). (i) Zannerini; (ii) Sol. Ven.; (iii) Toso; (iv) Amoyal; (v) Farina

Here is a collection to make the listener understand why Tartini was so admired in his day. Spanning both halves of the 18th century as he did, he possesses the lyrical purity of Corelli and Vivaldi with a forward-looking sensibility that is highly expressive. Indeed, his invention is almost romantic at times and there are moments of vision which leave no doubt that he is underrated. The orchestral playing is committed, and the fresh, warm analogue recording from the 1970s is pleasingly transferred. Tartini's Sonatas take their virtuosity for granted; even the Devil's Trill does not flaunt its bravura until the finale with its extended trills – considered impossibly difficult in his day. These works call for playing of the greatest technical finesse and musicianship. Amoyal plays them superbly; he makes no attempt to adapt his style to period-instrument practice. Instead his performances have a sweetness of tone and expressive eloquence to commend them, and though he is forwardly placed, the (unimportant) harpsichord continuo just comes through to give support. The violin is beautifully recorded. A most desirable pair of CDs.

Cello Concerto in D

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49839-2. Rostropovich, St Paul CO, Wolff – C. P. E. BACH; VIVALDI: Concertos ***

Another commanding performance by Rostropovich of the Tartini Concerto, originally written for viola da gamba and transcribed for cello in the late 1920s by Rudolf Hindemith and revised here by Hugh Wolff. It is a mellifluous and beautiful work, played with great eloquence not only by the distinguished soloist, but also the fine St Paul orchestra. Excellent recorded sound.

Violin Concertos, Op. 1/1, 4–5 & 12; in C

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67345. Wallfisch, Raglan Bar. Players, Kraemer

Tartini's Op. 1 was published in Amsterdam in 1728, but only included Nos. 1, 4 & 5 of the present set. No matter what their provenance, they are all most engaging works in three movements, although the first includes an additional and modestly paced Fugue à la brève. The performances here are splendid. Elizabeth Wallfisch may be playing a period instrument, but her timbre is smooth and polished, with no edginess, and the Adagio or Cantabile slow movements could not be sweeter. She is splendidly athletic in allegros as are her alert accompanying group and they are very well balanced in recording. This disc can be specially ordered on Hyperion's Archive Service.

Violin Concertos in C, D.2; F, D.67; A, D.96; A min. (A Lunardo Venier), D.115; B min., D.125

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564 60152-2. Toso, Sol. Ven., Scimone

Tartini is a much underrated composer, as the many beautiful slow movements of these concertos will readily show. Pierre Toso is consistently stylish and pleasing: the Adagio of the A major is most gracious, and the Largo/Andante finale (which has the inscription 'Flow bitter tears until my anguish is consumed') is movingly played. No less touching is the Larghetto of the B minor Concerto, which brings another inscription, 'Lascia ch'io dica addio', while the Andante cantabile of the F major is a charming siciliano with the indication 'Misterio anima mea'. Scimone and I Solisti Veneti accompany sympathetically and, while the balance tends to favour the solo violin a little, it otherwise produces excellent results.

Violin Concertos: in C, D.7; in D, D.28, D.31, D.33, & D.34; in F, D.65, D.68; in G, D.78; in A, D.102, D.103, & D.107 (Dynamic CDS 548/1-2)

Violin Concertos: D.19, D.20, D.22, D.83, D.94, D.95, D.96 & D.117 (Dynamic CDS 399/1-2.)

Violin Concertos: D.26, D.39, D.50, D.84, D.99, D.101, & D.105

Ⓝ  Dynamic CDS 485/1-2. Carlo Lazari, or Federico Guglielmo, L'Arte dell' Arco, Guglielmo

This is a part of an ongoing series aiming to include all Tartini's authentic violin concertos. According to the editor, Nicola Reniero, much restoration had to be done, as passages were missing or mutilated, and the added sections were especially written in observance of the composer's formal, structural and harmonic straits. Cadenzas were added by the soloists, special care was given to ornamentation, and such procedures appear to have been successful. The performances are very well played, straightforward in the best sense, and appealingly spontaneous; they are on original instruments and the solo timbre is not edgy but silvery. The baroque orchestra provides crisp, supportive textures which are full of life and well judged expressive feeling. This is a considerable undertaking but a worthwhile one. Each issue covers a pair of CDs. We have only heard the fully listed selection on CDS 548/1-2, and the recordings are well balanced and of good quality.

(i) Violin Concertos: in C, D.12; in D min., D.45; in E, D.51; in B flat, D.117; (ii) Sonata in G min. (Devil's Trill), g.5

 Regis RRC 1283. (i) Nikolitch, O d'Auvergne, Van Beek; (ii) Krylov, Lithuanian CO, Sondeckis

The performances by Gordan Nikolitch and the Orchestre d'Auvergne are played on modern instruments; they yet have an athletic quality that evokes period performance. Nikolitch is a most sensitive and virile soloist and the named slow movements of the C major (Felice età dell'oro) and E major (Tortorella bacie) are played very beautifully indeed. The recording is first class, bracing to suit the sparkle of the performances. What makes the disc unique is the inclusion of an orchestral transcription (rather plain, but effective enough) of the Devil's Trill Sonata by H. Kauder. This is played by Sergei Krylov with suitably abrasive but not startling trills.

Violin Concertos: in D, D.28; in E, D.50; in G, D.80; in G, D.96; in B min., D.125

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570222. Daskalakis, Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

The five Violin Concertos here have a fresh simplicity, which the excellent soloist Ariadne Daskalakis and the Cologne Chamber Orchestra directed spiritedly by Helmut Müller-Brühl capture to perfection, as they do the expressive appeal of the slow movements, notably that of the G major, D.80, and the D major, D.28; but the B minor is graceful too, and its Larghetto is given a title, Lascia ch'io dica addio ('Let me say goodbye'). The recording is first class and, for those who like modern-instrument performances, as do we, the disc is worth seeking out.

Violin Sonatas, Op. 1/ 2, 8, 10, 12 & 13; in A (sopra lo stile che suona il Prette dalla Chitarra Portoghese), A.4; in B flat, Bb.1 & Op. 5/6, Bb.12; in D, D.19; in G min. (Devil's Trill), g.5

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22061 (2). Locatelli Trio

Elizabeth Wallfisch is a suitably athletic soloist, and she plays slow movements expressively and unsentimentally. She is on her mettle in the Devil's Trill, but (unlike Manze) does not seek to emphasize its Devilish spectacle. But she makes the most of the Sonata in A ('in the style of the priest who plays the Portuguese guitar'). This combines lyricism with plenty of opportunities for bravura, plus a characterful folk influence, with harmonic clashes and a bold percussive element to simulate the strumming of the guitar. The recording places the violin well forward; Paul Nicholson's harpsichord is rather backward, but the Trio integrates well.

(Unaccompanied) Violin Sonatas: in A min., B:a3; in G min.; (Sonata de Diavolo), B:g5; L'arte del arco, B:f11; 14 Variations on the Gavotte from Corelli's Op. 5/10; Pastorale for violin in scordatura, B:a16

🔑 ✿ * HM HMU 907213. Manze

Andrew Manze plays those genuinely fiendish trills in the finale of the Devil's Trill Sonata quite hair-raisingly. Manze calls the opening Largo an 'infernal siciliana' (yet presents it with great poise and refined espressivo), and the central movement (hardly less remarkable) becomes a 'demonic moto perpetuo'. Yet Corelli's gavotte is played with engaging delicacy, the bravura left for the variations. The A minor Sonata also includes a set of variations, which again offers an amazing range of musical and technical opportunities, as does the colourful hurdy-gurdy finale of the Pastorale which ends so hauntingly. Manze's playing is totally compelling and confirms that the music is 'complete' without a continuo. The recording is very real and immediate.

TAVENER, John (born 1944)

Beyond the Veil (A Portrait of John Tavener) (DVD version)

 Warner DVD 3984 23931. Rozario, Westminster Abbey Ch., Camerata at the Megaron Athens (V/D: Bryan Izzard)

This DVD gives a graphic portrait of John Tavener as presented by Melvyn Bragg on ITV's South Bank Show. Illustrations include the Song for Athene, which made such an impact at the funeral of Princess Diana, and excerpts from The Protecting Veil, The Akathist of Thanksgiving (one of Tavener's finest works) and the Bless Duet from the opera, Mary of Egypt.

(i) Eternal Memory for Cello and Strings; (ii) The Hidden Treasure (for String Quartet); Svyati (O Holy One); for Cello & Chorus; (iv) Akhmatova Songs for Soprano & Cello; Chant for Solo Cello

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA 82876 64278-2. Isserlis, with (i) Moscow Virtuosi, Spivakov; (ii) Philips, Feeney, Phillips; (iii) Kiev Chamber Ch., Gobdych; (iv) Rosario

All this music is constructed simply (simplistically, some might say) and is based for the most part on a straightforward rising and falling scalic sequence, in the case of Svyati and Eternal Memory linked thematically. Their atmosphere is magnetic. The Hidden Treasure for string quartet still has a dominating cello role and might be described as a religious pilgrimage, closing with a mystical transformation. In the Akhmatova Songs the rising and falling sequence is floridly ornamented, and the singer is required to soar up ecstatically to the top of her range, which Patricia Rosario manages confidently. Svyati returns to a simple but radiant dialogue, alternating cello soliloquy with a mystical choral response. Steven Isserlis gives the feeling of quiet improvisation (especially in his solo Chant); the singing and playing throughout capture the music's atmosphere superbly. The beautiful recording has a natural presence.

(i) The Protecting Veil; (ii) The Last Sleep of the Virgin (a Veneration for Strings & Handbells)

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80487. (i) Springuel; (ii) Willems; I Flamminghi, Werthen

(i) The Protecting Veil; (ii;iii) The Last Sleep of the Virgin; (iv;v) Angels; Annunciation; The Lament of the Mother of God; (iv;vi) Hymns of Paradise; God is with us (iii; iv;vi) Thunder entered her

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 2 37691-2. (i) Isserlis, LSO, Rozhdestvensky; (ii) Chilingirian Qt; (iii) Simcock (handbells); (iv) Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill; (v) Kingelborg; (vi) Kendall

(i) The Protecting Veil; Thrinos

🔑 Ⓑ * Virgin 5 03430-2. Isserlis; (i) LSO, Rozhdestvensky – BRITTEN: Cello Suite 3 ***

(i) The Protecting Veil; (ii) Wake up ... and die

 Sony SK 62821. Ma; with (i) Baltimore SO; (ii) cellos of Baltimore SO; Zinman

(i) The Protecting Veil; (ii) In alium (for soprano, tape and orchestra)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554388. (i) Kliegel; (ii) Hulse; Ulster O, Yuasa

In the inspired performance of Steven Isserlis, dedicatedly accompanied by Rozhdestvensky and the LSO, The Protecting Veil has an instant magnetism, at once gentle and compelling. The 'protecting veil' of the title refers to the Orthodox Church's celebration of a 10th century vision, when in Constantinople the Virgin Mary appeared and cast her protecting veil over the Christians who were being attacked by the Saracen armies. Much is owed to the performance, with Isserlis a commanding soloist. He is just as compelling in the other two works on the disc, not just the Britten but also the simple lyrical lament, Thrinos, which Tavener wrote especially for him. Excellent recording.

Using a warm, wide vibrato, Maria Kliegel gives a dedicated performance. With Yuasa drawing superb playing from the Ulster Orchestra, this is an unusually spacious reading that sustains its length well. What makes it specially attractive is the coupling, In Alium, a piece for soprano, tape and orchestra which is at once devotional and sensuous. The layering of textures, with dramatic contasts, is vividly caught in the excellent Naxos recording. Warmly recommended.

Yo-Yo Ma, rather more withdrawn, is equally concentrated, daringly adopting an even slower tempo in the central section, Lament of the Mother of God. He is helped by the sympathetic accompaniment of David Zinman and the Baltimore Orchestra, with recording a degree more transparent than the original RCA. The fill-up is a new work, similarly visionary, commissioned from Tavener by Sony, in which, using a palindromic motif, the spacious cello solo is enhanced by cellos from the orchestra.

This EMI double joins Steven Isserlis's outstanding account of The Protecting Veil to a choral collection. David Hill conducts the Winchester Cathedral Choir with David Dunnett at the organ, all very atmospherically recorded. Though some of the longer and more meditative pieces rather outstay their welcome, each one presents a sharply definitive vision, culminating in a magnificent Christmas proclamation, God is with us. 'Quiet and intensely fragile' is Tavener's guide to performances of the bonus item here, The Last sleep of the Virgin.

The cello soloist in the Telarc version is relatively reticent emerging out of the orchestra, but the playing is beautiful in its gentle way. The Last Sleep of the Virgin, written originally for string quartet in memory of Dame Margot Fonteyn, makes an apt coupling in the conductor's enriched version for string orchestra.

(i) String Quartets: The Hidden Treasure; (ii) The Last Sleep of the Virgin; (iii) Angels; Annunciation; God is with us; Hymns of Paradise; Lament of the Mother of God; Thunder entered her

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Virgin 2-CD 693233-2(2). (i) Chillingirian Qt (ii) with Ian Simcock (handbells) (ii) Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill; David Dunnett (organ) (with PÄRT: Summa; Fratres ***)

The Last Sleep of the Virgin is a work which might be described as an ethereal suggestion, using the simplest means (string quartet and tolling bell) to convey both the reality and the implications of the death and burial of 'the Mother of God'. The Hidden Treasure in its seeking for Paradise offers more violent contrasts, (a brief cello cadenza-soliloquy a key factor) with cries of anguish interrupting the flow of the spiritual journey. Tavener's world is all his own and the artists have to create the music's logic with a hypnotic concentration which is certainly achieved here, using a suitable resonance of acoustic. The mystical close of The Hidden Treasure brings a shimmering pianissimo-diminuendo of remarkable intensity. 'Thunder entered her' is the sobriquet given to the choral collection on the second disc, named after the longest and most striking piece of the six recorded here. With distant choirs set against the main body, and weighty organ accompaniment, this relates closely to the akathist, though Tavener resorts too readily to formula-like scale ostinati and oriental augmented intervals. The Pärt couplings are also both atmospheric works with a liturgical basis, using sparse basic material, which try to convey a sense of eternity. The performances here are obviously felt, but it must be admitted that, as music, they are less potent than the Tavener pieces.

Piano Music: In Memory of Two Cats; Mandoodles; Palin; Pratirupa; Ypakë; Zodiacs

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570442. Ralph van Raat

Those familiar with Tavener's most famous, large-scale orchestral and choral music will be a bit surprised by the composer's harder-edge style of his piano music. Not that it is difficult music: much of it is really quite beautiful, with very appealing harmonies and unexpected rhythms. The longest work here, Pratirupa (meaning 'Reflections') is half an hour long, with the composer using various musical themes treated in a manner not dissimilar to that of Messiaen, and it holds remarkably well together, no doubt a tribute to the pianist, Ralph van Raat. Of course, the music is all tied up with the composer's spirituality and there is much that is reflective and haunting, but there is humour too, such as when the composer quotes some Chopin in Mandoodles. All in all, a varied collection of pieces which adds an interesting dimension to this very popular composer. Excellent sound too.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Akhmatova Songs; Many Years; The World (all for soprano and string quartet); Diódia (String Quartet 3)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67217. (i) Rozario; Vanbrugh Qt

Tavener's six Akhmatova Songs here are rearranged even more tellingly, using a string quartet but still relying a great deal on a solo cello. Patricia Rozario is now completely at home in the soaring melisma and surpasses her earlier performance for RCA, with her account of the exotic melody of The Muse, sounding like a celestial Russian folksong. However, it is the hauntingly passionate closing evocation of Death which gains most from the new instrumentation. The World depends much on sustained high notes for the voice over a gentle pedal and 'should be performed at maximum intensity throughout', which it certainly is here.

But the most ambitious work here is the Third String Quartet, Diódia, which in a series of very similar episodes considers 'the posthumous states of being of the soul'. The performance has great concentration, achieving a remarkable closing pianissimo over a beating drum (perhaps a fading heartbeat). The recording is of Hyperion's best quality.

(i) Angels; (ii) Collegium regale: Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis; (i; iii) God is with us (A Christmas Proclamation); (iv) Funeral Ikos; 2 Hymns to the Mother of God; The Lamb; (i) Lament of the Mother of God; (i) Song for Athene; (v) The Protecting Veil (excerpt; 1st section only).

Ⓑ  CfP 585 9152. (i) Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill; (ii) King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cleobury; (iii) with Kendall, Dunnet (organ); (iv) Vasari Singers, Backhouse; (v) Isserlis, LSO, Rozhdestvensky

Like the companion Classics for Pleasure introduction to the music of Arvo Pärt, this compilation draws on a number of similar sources, all of high quality, both musically and as recordings. The items from the Vasari Singers include Tavener's justly famous and haunting carol The Lamb. Jeremy Backhouse enhances his performance with an effective ritardando at the end of each verse, while he links the melancholy simplicity of the Funeral Ikos naturally to the ethereality of the Two Hymns to the Mother of God. The items from the Winchester Choir conducted by David Hill (with David Dunnet at the organ in God is with us) are all atmospherically recorded: each one presents a sharply distinctive vision, culminating in the magnificent Christmas proclamation, God is with us. The choir then closes the programme with the beautiful and intense Song for Athene, heard at the funeral of Princess Diana.

'Choral Ikons': Annunciation; As One who has Slept; The Hymn of the Unwaning Light; A Hymn to the Mother of God; The Lamb; The Lord's Prayer; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis; A Parting Gift for Tom Farrow; Song for Athene; The Tyger (DVD version)

🔑 * BBC Opus Arte DVD OS 0854 D. The Choir, Whitbourn

Using virtual-reality techniques, the 14 singers, recorded in a Dutch television studio in Hilversum, are placed against the background of Hagia Sophia in Istanbul (what was in medieval times the church of St Sophia). With heavy reverberation added, some of the items suggest a far bigger choir, as in the longest item, The Hymn of the Unwaning Light, marred slightly by the wobbly contributions of the baritone soloist. The dedication behind all the pieces is very clear, each of them introduced visually by an ikon or an ikon-like illustration. A fine DVD première for Tavener's music. As supplementary items the disc offers a long and illuminating interview with the composer, who provides a spoken commentary on each piece (not the most convenient method of providing programme notes), and a Dutch expert talking about the sources of ikon painting.

Annunciation; 2 Hymns to the Mother of God; (i) Innocence; The Lamb; (ii) Little Requiem for Father Malachy Lynch; Song for Athene; The Tyger

 Sony SK 66613. Westminster Abbey Ch., Neary; with (i) Rozario, Titus, A. Nixon, M. Neary, Baker; (ii) ECO

With Martin Neary drawing incandescent singing from the Westminster Abbey Choir, this CD offers a sequence of Tavener's best-known short works – such as the Blake settings, The Lamb and The Tyger, and the Hymns to the Mother of God – as well as longer pieces in which he movingly exploits spatial effects. Innocence encapsulates in its 25-minute ritual what many of his more expansive pieces have told us, with multi-layered elements atmospherically contrasted, near and far, starting with apocalyptic organ-sounds and ending with a surging climax. The Sony recording vividly captures the Abbey acoustic, with extreme dynamics used impressively to convey space and distance.

As one who has slept; Birthday Sleep; The Bridal Chamber; Butterfly Dreams; Exhortation and Kohima; Schuon Hymnen; Schûnya; The Second Coming

 Hyp. CDA 67475. Polyphony, Layton

Stephen Layton's superb professional choir, Polyphony, does wonders in bringing variety to a sequence of Sir John Tavener's recent works for small chorus which might easily have seemed too persistently slow and meditative. Most impressive of the longer works is Schuon Hymnen, setting German words by the Sufi sheikh Frithjof Schuon, with verses and refrains bringing sharp contrasts between powerful unisons and distant choral comment, punctuated by mantra-like phrases for solo tenor. Birthday Sleep, setting a Vernon Watkins poem, brings attractively scrunching harmonies, and the eight tiny movements of Butterfly Dreams include one which delightfully captures the fluttering of a butterfly.

As one who has slept; Funeral Ikos; God is with us (Christmas Proclamation); 2 Hymns to the Mother of God; The Lamb; The Lord's Prayer; Love bade me welcome; Magnificat & Nunc dimittis; Song for Athene; (i) Svyati (O Holy One); The Tyger

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555256. Choir of St John's College, Cambridge, Robinson; (i) with Hugh

The Christmas Proclamation, God is with us was inspired, like so many of Tavener's works, by Greek Orthodox liturgy, rising in thrilling crescendo and punctuated at the end by fortissimo organ chords. The Song for Athene is here presented as an anthem rather than a processional. The longest work, Svyati, with its cello solo magnetically played by Tim Hugh, echoes the example of Tavener's visionary cello work The Protecting Veil, while the shorter pieces include most of the favourite Tavener items. Superb singing throughout and vividly atmospheric sound.

(i) Eternity's Sunrise; (ii) Funeral Canticle; Petra; A Ritual Dream; (i; iv) Sappho: Lyrical Fragments; (i; v) Song of the Angel

 HM HMU 907231. (i) Rozario; (ii) Mosely, AAM Ch.; (iv) Gooding; (v) Manze; with AAM, Goodwin

Eternity's Sunrise is an elegiac setting of words by Blake in Tavener's rapt and intense style, with the soprano, Patricia Rozario, both pure and sensuous in singing the soaring cantilena. The final work on the disc, Funeral Canticle for baritone and chorus, is related in being written in memory of the composer's father; 'calm and mesmeric' as Paul Goodwin says in his note. Of the rest, Sappho represents Tavener at an earlier period, grittier in expression, while Petra and the Song of the Angel bring ethereal violin solos from Andrew Manze set against the voices. Radiantly atmospheric sound to match.

Ex Maria Virgine (A Christmas Sequence for Choir and Orchestra)

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.572168 Clare College Ch., Cambridge, Timothy Brown; McVinnie or Jacobs (organ)

This is an ideal CD for those collectors who are unfamiliar with Tavener's music, for it covers the full range of his diverse choral writing, and indeed his imaginative organ effects. The title work, Ex Maria Virgine, was dedicated to Prince Charles and Camilla on their marriage. It has ten sections, displaying much choral variety, throbbing to

'Nowell! Out of your sleep', producing a chorale lullaby for 'Sweet was the song', vigorously extolling the 'King of the Angels' in Ave Rex Angelorum, then 'Ding-donging merrily on high', before gently 'Rocking' Mary's babe to sleep. Unto us is born a son is both peaceful and fiercely triumphant, while Verbum caro plangently rises to a glorious close. The other motets here picture the Nativity, move radiantly through O Thou gentle light, closing with a portrayal of the Angels, set among delicate organ filigree. Throughout, the singing of Clare College Choir under Timothy Brown rises richly (and falls meditatively) for every occasion, and the two organists, James McVinnie and Simon Thomas Jacobs make the very most of their many opportunities. Much of this music shows the composer at his most inspired, and the recording, produced by John Rutter in Norwich Cathedral is outstandingly fine.

Fall and Resurrection

 Chan. 9800. Rozario, Chance, Hill, Richardson, Peacock, BBC Singers, St Paul's Cathedral Ch., City of L. Sinf., Hickox

In Fall and Resurrection Tavener's ambitious aim is to 'encompass in brief glimpses the events which have taken place since the beginning of time and before time'. So, after the slow emergence of the prelude out of silence, darkness and the representation of Chaos (with massive banks of timpani), the voice of Adam is heard against a chill flute solo, a simple dedicated vision. The first of the three parts is then devoted to the fall of Adam and Eve, with the Serpent illustrated by a whining saxophone. The second section, representing prediction, leads from the fall to a quotation from Psalm 121, I lift my eyes to the hills, movingly sung by the countertenor, Michael Chance. The final part, The Incarnation of the Logos, in telegraphic brevity encompasses the birth of Jesus, the Crucifixion and finally the Resurrection in a Cosmic dance, when 'all is transfigured' underpinned by a heartfelt performance here under Richard Hickox with a superb team of choirs and soloists.

Lament for Jerusalem

(BB)  Naxos 8.557826. Gryffydd Jones, Crawford, Ch. & O of L., Summerly

Lament for Jerusalem consists of seven cycles, each beginning with a quotation from Psalm 137, 'By the Waters of Babylon', and each following a similar layout, with an instrumental texture, solos for counter-tenor and soprano, and a final choral lament. Summerly draws incandescent singing from his choir of just over 30 singers, sounding far bigger than that thanks to the warmly atmospheric recording, made in the church of All Hallows, Gospel Oak. Outstanding solo singing too from Angharad Gryffydd Jones and Peter Crawford.

The Repentant Thief; To a Child Dancing in the Wind; Lamentation; A Mini-Song-Cycle for Gina; Melina

 RCA 8869 7217612. Rozario, A. Marriner, LSO, Tilson Thomas

The Repentant Thief, written in 1990, was inspired by the image of the thief crucified with Christ, and it features the clarinet, beautifully played by Andrew Marriner, as the focus of the work – just as the cello is in The Protecting Veil. There are snatches of oriental-style music between the more meditative passages, with raucous woodwind and percussion, both in The Repentant Thief and in To a Child Dancing, which sets nine poems of W. B. Yeats. It is sweetly sung by Patricia Rozario, with the final number unaccompanied, fading away at the end. The Mini-Song-Cycle of 1984 sets more Yeats poems, with the composer accompanying Rozario at the piano. Lamentation of 1977 is for soprano and handbells, while Melina is a simple elegy for Melina Mercouri which Tavener wrote on hearing of her death. First-rate performances and well-balanced sound.

(i) Requiem for Father Malachy; (ii) Cantiones espanolas

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 311. Nash Ens., the Composer with (i) King's Singers; (ii) Bowman, Kevin Smith

The Requiem, written in memory of a priest who deeply influenced the composer, evoked a mood of dedication rare in new music by a composer as young as Tavener when it was written (in 1973). If in his earlier works there was sometimes a suspicion that the brilliant and memorable effects were actually more important than the argument, here the balance has clearly been righted. It is a work in which every sequence has one thinking afresh about the words of the liturgy, and this superb performance conveys total concentration. The fill-up could not be more welcome or attractive, a colourful and lightweight group of works based on early Spanish music, fizzing encore pieces. The 1976 (originally RCA) sound has transferred beautifully and vividly to CD.

Requiem, Eternal Memory; Mahashakti

Ⓝ  EMI 50999-2 35134-2. Palmer, Knight, Thomas, Kennedy, RLPO & Ch, Petrenko

John Tavener's second setting of the Requiem, commissioned to celebrate Liverpool as the European City of Culture in 2008, is the more moving when the composer had been told he was under sentence of death through persistent ill-health. He explains his theme, quoting the idea, 'Our glory lies where we cease to exist', thinking to write about the afterlife. The result is a characteristic example of Tavener's 'spiritual minimalism' with evocative choruses and repeated mantras for the soprano in ostinato above the choir. Various movements echo those in the traditional Requiem, the Kyrie following the opening movement Primordial White Light and Kali's Dance which is the equivalent to the traditional Dies Irae in its bite. The closing movement, Ananda, rounds the work off in a moving crescendo of choral sound, finally fading to nothing.

Mahashakti is for solo violin, tam-tam and strings, also highly evocative in its celebration of celestial feminine energy, and Eternal Memory is a deep meditation on the memory of death, including a brisk passage for solo strings. Excellent sound, though the chorus could be a little closer. Performances otherwise are first-rate from soloists, chorus and orchestra under the inspired direction of Vasily Petrenko.

We Shall See Him as He Is

 Chan. 9128. Rozario, Ainsley, Murgatroyd, Britten Singers, Chester Festival Ch., Hickox

We Shall See Him as He Is is a sequence of what Tavener describes as musical ikons, setting brief, poetic texts based on the Epistle of St John, each inspired by a salient event in the life of Christ. Each ikon is punctuated by a choral refrain, setting the words of the work's title in Greek. Though at first the inspiration may seem painfully thin, the simple ritual becomes magnetic, with its structured, highly atmospheric use of large-scale choral forces progressing towards rapt contemplation of the Resurrection, the ultimate ikon. The recording was made live at a dedicated Prom performance. The tenor, John Mark Ainsley, in the central solo role of St John, sings with deep feeling, while Patricia Rozario makes her brief, wide-ranging solo a soaring climax.

The Veil of the Temple

 RCA 82876 661154-2 (2). Rozario, Temple Church Ch., Holst Singers, Layton

Tavener describes The Veil of the Temple as an all-night vigil, which it literally is, when in its full form it lasts eight hours, a choral sequence in eight cycles. It represents a journey from darkness to light, from death to rebirth, ending on the eighth cycle, which represents a new week and a new creation. He has taken his inspiration not just from Greek Orthodox rituals (a regular source for him) but from Russian church music too, and more particularly from eastern sources, Sufi, Hindu, Tibetan and Sanskrit, a meeting of East and West. Yet with dedicated performances from all the forces, this disc, recorded live at two performances in the summer of 2003, makes for magnetic results over the span of two and a half hours, increasingly involving massive percussion sounds with gongs of different kinds and weighty choral interventions, is most compelling. The ending brings obsessive cries of 'Shantih', Peace, from the basses as the choir moves off. Spectacular recording, vividly capturing the atmosphere of the Temple Church.

TAVERNER, John (c. 1495–1545)

Missa Corona spinea. Motets: Gaude plurium; In pace

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55051. The Sixteen, Christophers

Missa Corona spinea. Motet: O Wilhelme, pastor bone

(*) ASV CDGAU 115. Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Grier

As with the Missa Mater Christi sanctissima (see below), we are offered a choice of performance style for the inspired Missa Corona spinea, perhaps the most thrilling of all the Taverner Mass settings. In the Christ Church performance Francis Grier has transposed the music up, and his choir, although always eloquent, have to try very hard to cope with the highest tessitura.

The Sixteen, using professional singers (and secure female trebles), have no such problems and they sing gloriously throughout. Taverner's inspiration is consistent and his flowing melismas are radiantly realized, with fine support from the lower voices; indeed, the balance and blend are nigh perfect. The two motets are no less beautifully sung, and the recording, made in St Jude's Church, Hampstead, is outstanding both in clarity and in its perfectly judged ambience. A superb disc and an astonishing bargain.

Missa Gloria tibi Trinitas; Audivi vocem (responsory); anon.: Gloria tibi Trinitas

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55052. The Sixteen, Christophers

Missa Gloria tibi Trinitas; Dum transisset sabbatum; Kyrie a 4 (Leroy); Western Wynde Mass (with song: Western Wynde)

🔑 * Gimell CDGIM 004. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

This six-voice setting of the Gloria tibi Trinitas Mass is richly varied in its invention (not least in rhythm) and expressive in a deeply personal way very rare for its period. Harry Christophers and The Sixteen underline the beauty with an exceptionally pure and clear account, superbly recorded and made the more brilliant by having the pitch a minor third higher than modern concert pitch.

Peter Phillips and the Tallis Scholars give an intensely involving performance of this glorious example of Tudor music. The recording may not be as clear as on the rival Hyperion version, but Phillips rejects all idea of reserve or cautiousness of expression; the result reflects the emotional basis of the inspiration the more compellingly. The motet Dum transisset sabbatum is then presented more reflectively, another rich inspiration. To make this reissue even more attractive, Gimell have now added first-class accounts of the famous Western Wynde Mass and the song on which it is based. This mass is also available differently coupled with music by Tye and others – see below.

(i) Missa Mater Christi sanctissima; Hodie nobis coelorum rex; Magnificat a 4: Nesciene mater; Mater Christi sanctissima; (ii) In nomine a 4; Quemadmodum a 6

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55053. (i) The Sixteen, Christophers; (ii) Fretwork

Continuing their outstanding Taverner survey, The Sixteen here offer the Missa Mater Christi sanctissima plus the votive anthem on which it is based. Christophers presents the Mass as it stands, and the music itself is all sung a tone up, which certainly makes it sound brighter. His pacing is rather restrained, and that adds a touch of breadth. The Helios disc includes extra music, including the Christmas responsory Hodie nobis, a fine four-part Magnificat and, a surprise, two rather grave pieces for viols from Fretwork to frame the Mass itself. The recording is outstandingly fine, spacious yet clear.

Mass, O Michael; Dum transisset sabbatum; Kyrie a 4 (Leroy)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55054. The Sixteen, Christophers

The Missa O Michael is an ambitious six-part Mass lasting nearly 40 minutes which derives its name from the respond, Archangeli Michaelis interventione, which prefaces the performance. The chant on which the Mass is built appears no fewer than seven times during its course. The so-called Leroy Kyrie (the name thought to be a reference to le roi Henry) fittingly precedes it: the Missa O Michael has no Kyrie. The Easter motet, Dum transisset sabbatum, completes an impressive disc.

Missa Sancti Wilhelmi; Dum transisset Sabbatum; Ex eius tumba; O Wilhelme, pastor bone

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55055. The Sixteen, Christophers

The Missa Sancti Wilhelmi (known as 'Small Devotion' in two sources and possibly a corruption of S. Will devotio) is prefaced by the antiphon, O Wilhelme, pastor bone, written in a largely syllabic, note-against-note texture, and the second of his two five-part settings of the Easter respond, Dum transisset Sabbatum, and washed down, as it were, by the Matins responds for the Feast of St Nicholas, Ex eius tumba, believed to be the only 16th-century setting of this text. The singing of The Sixteen under Harry Christophers is expressive and ethereal, and the recording impressively truthful. Recommended with confidence.

Mass: The Western Wynde; Mater Christi

Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3372, Ch. of New College, Oxford, Higginbottom – TALLIS: Audivi vocem de Caelo etc. ***

Mass: The Western Wynde; Alleluia, Veni, electa mea; O splendor gloria; Te Deum

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55056. The Sixteen, Christophers

Western Wynde Mass is also beautifully sung and recorded by Harry Christophers' Sixteen in what must be regarded as an ideally paced and proportioned performance. But what makes this inexpensive Helios reissue doubly attractive is the collection of other works included. O splendor gloria carries the exulted mood inherent in its title (referring to Christ and the Trinity) and the Alleluia is equally jubilant. Most remarkable and individual of all is the masterly five-part Te Deum, a profoundly poignant setting, harmonically and polyphonically, even richer than the Mass, and using those momentary shafts of dissonance that can make music of this period sound so forward-looking. The recording is superb and this CD is obviously the place to start for those wanting to explore this excellent Helios series.

This CRD version of Taverner's Mass was the first to appear after the King's College, Cambridge, recording of 1961. Since then there have been others, but it was a worthy successor and the acoustic of New College, Oxford, is, if anything, superior to King's, producing greater clarity and definition. Higginbottom's choir sings with great feeling but with restraint and splendid control, both of line and ensemble.

TCHAIKOVSKY, Peter
(1840–93)

Andante cantabile for Strings (arr. Serebrier); Capriccio italien; 1812 Overture; Elégie for Strings in G; Fatum, Op. 77; Marche slave

* BIS CD 1283. Bamberg SO, Serebrier

In this, the third of José Serebrier's Tchaikovsky discs for BIS, the popular coupling of Capriccio italien, the 1812 Overture and Marche slave brings a fresh, distinctive approach that underlines the purely musical qualities of works that are easily vulgarized. In the 1812 and Marche slave, it is a revelation to find the conductor's refining process bringing out beauties in the instrumentation that are normally plastered over. Although the cannon and bell effects at the end of 1812 are not identified as coming from anywhere but the orchestra, the excellent BIS recording gives them plenty of punch. Marche slave also gains clarity, even in the heaviest passages, with a swaggering spring given to the march rhythms.

The popular Andante cantabile is a degree more refined than before, as is the surprisingly neglected Elégie, a lovely late work written in a single day. Fatum, dates from 1868, soon after Tchaikovsky left the St Petersburg Conservatory, and it has a spontaneity and thrust that point forward to Tchaikovsky's later fate-obsessed works, making it a welcome addition to a well-contrasted collection.

(i) Andante cantabile; (i;ii) Violin Concerto; Symphonies: (i) 4 (iii) 5

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 073 4511 (i) NYPO; (ii) Belkin; (iii) Boston SO; Bernstein

This superb collection not only shows Bernstein at his most inspired, communicating his own great pleasure in the music, but also – in the manner of Stokowski – his ability so implant his own charismatic personality on any orchestra. Here there is virtually no difference between the electrifying results in Boston and New York. For instance, although the interpretations of the two symphonies are different, the Fourth relatively straightforward, the Fifth with Bernstein responding literally to Tchaikovky's marking, 'con alcuna licenza', the rich sweep of string tone is common to each venue. But especially so in the Boston Fifth, where the second subject of the first movement, and the glorious climax of the Andante cantabile are both almost overwhelming.

Each work too, has an electrifying coda, the kind that sends the audience and orchestra home thrilled and satisfied in equal measure, feeling again what wonderful symphonies these are, even if Tchaikovsky himself had nagging doubts about the uninhibited splendour of the closing peroration of the Fifth. Koussevitzky in Boston had felt his mission with Tchaikovsky was 'to open the gate of heaven and let the people experience ecstasy', and Bernstein followed his mentor's 'theme song'.

Boris Belkin joins the orchestra for a moving and beautifully played account of the Violin Concerto, where the laurels are shared equally by orchestra and soloist. But the lovely Andante cantabile is kept back for the final encore, ravishingly played and confirming that its composer was one of the greatest melodists of all time. All this is captured marvellously by Humphrey Burton's video direction, for Bernstein is always a joy to watch, and the result is one of the key recordings in the whole Tchaikovsky discography.

Andante cantabile, Op. 11; Nocturne, Op. 19/4; Pezzo capriccioso, Op. 62 (1887 version); 2 Songs: Legend; Was I not a little blade of grass; Variations on a Rococo Theme, Op. 33 (1876 version)

🔑  Chan. 8347. Wallfisch, ECO, Simon

Andante cantabile; Nocturne (both arr. for cello & orchestra); Pezzo capriccioso; Variations on a Rococo Theme (original versions)

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61490-2(2). Isserlis, COE, Gardiner – BLOCH: Schelomo; ELGAR: Cello Concerto; KABALEVSKY: Cello Concerto 2; RICHARD STRAUSS: Don Quixote ***

The delightful Chandos record gathers together all of Tchaikovsky's music for cello and orchestra, including his arrangements of such items as the famous Andante cantabile and two songs. The major item is the original version of the Rococo Variations with an extra variation and the earlier variations put in a more effective order, as Tchaikovsky wanted. Geoffrey Simon draws lively and sympathetic playing from the ECO, with Wallfisch a vital if not quite flawless soloist. Excellent recording, with the CD providing fine presence and an excellent perspective.

On this bargain Virgin Double, not only are all the performances of high quality, but Isserlis also offers Tchaikovsky's original versions of both the Pezzo capriccioso and the Rococo Variations. The solo playing has at times a slight reserve, but also an elegant delicacy, most noticeable in the Andante cantabile. Throughout, Gardiner provides gracefully lightweight accompaniments and the Virgin recording is faithfully balanced, fresh in texture and warm in ambience.

Capriccio italien, Op. 45

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 09026 63302-2. RCA Victor SO, Kondrashin – KABALEVSKY: The Comedians Suite; KHACHATURIAN: Masquerade Suite; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol ***

Kondrashin's 1958 recording of Tchaikovsky's Capriccio italien has never been surpassed. The arresting opening still surprises by its impact, the brass fanfares – first trumpets, then horns, then the full tutti – sonically riveting. The music is alive in every bar and a model of careful preparation, with the composer's dynamic markings meticulously terraced. Kondrashin's pacing throughout is absolutely right and the closing section is highly exhilarating. This is a stereo demonstration disc if ever there was one. And the couplings are pretty good too.

Capriccio italien; (i) 1812; Festival Coronation March; Marche slave; Eugene Onegin: Polonaise; Waltz; Mazeppa: Cossack Dance

(*) Telarc CD 80541. Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel; (i) with Kiev Symphony Ch., Cincinnati Children's Ch., Cannon & Cleveland carillon

The Telarc CD is aimed straight at audiophiles. But the snag is that the real cannon, spectacularly reproduced, the carillon and choruses singing the folktunes in 1812 very freshly cannot turn a good performance into a thrilling one, and here the adrenalin does not run as free as it should. Marche slave, however, is much more successful.

Capriccio italien, Op. 45; 1812 Overture, Op. 49; Fate, Op. 77; Festival Overture on the Danish National Anthem, Op. 15; Francesca da Rimini, Op. 32; Hamlet, Op. 67a; Manfred Symphony, Op. 58; Marche slave, Op. 31; Overture in F, Op. 67; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture); The Tempest, Op 18; The Voyevoda, Op. 87

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * DG Trio 477 053-2 (3). Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Pletnev has a quite special feeling for Tchaikovsky's music, gauging its highly charged emotional content and dramatic flair to perfection, and never losing sight of the disciplined mind which oversaw the musical design. There is no shortage of great performances of Romeo and Juliet and Francesca da Rimini, and Pletnev's account with his Russian National Orchestra certainly ranks among them. But the special value of this set is that it offers rarities like The Voyevoda and the F major Overture in performances which are unlikely to be bettered for a very long time. When it first appeared, we placed his Manfred among the finest in the catalogue, and that judgement still holds. An essential purchase, particularly at so competitive a price.

Capriccio italien; 1812 Overture; Francesca da Rimini; Marche slave

 Capriccio Surround Sound SACD 71 042. ASMF, Marriner

Marriner's performances are very fine, perhaps lacking the very last drop of adrenalin at the climaxes of Capriccio and Francesca, but still involvingly enjoyable for the polish and commitment of the orchestral response. The back speakers add just enough ambience to give a concert-hall illusion; the orchestra is naturally balanced and the effect vividly dramatic, while the cannon in 1812 are really spectacular, without dwarfing the orchestra.

Capriccio italien; 1812 Overture; Marche slave; Romeo and Juliet (fantasy overture)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550500. RPO, Leaper

Adrian Leaper proves a natural Tchaikovskian: whether in the colourful extravagance of the composer's memento of his Italian holiday, the romantic ardour and passionate conflict of Romeo and Juliet, the sombre expansiveness of Marche slave with its surge of adrenalin at the close, or in the extrovert celebration of 1812, he draws playing from the RPO that is spontaneously committed and exciting. The brilliantly spectacular recording, with plenty of weight for the brass, was made in Watford Town Hall, with realistic cannon and an impressively resonant imported carillon to add to the exciting climax of 1812.

Capriccio italien; 1812 Overture; Mazeppa: Cossack Dance

(*) Telarc SACD 60646. Cincinnati SO, Kunzel – GERSHWIN: American in Paris; Rhapsody in Blue **(*)

The original compact disc of the Telarc performances gave due warning that the cannon in 1812 might damage speakers and windows if the disc was played at too high a level! So if you need a recording of cannon plus 1812, and your speakers can accommodate the dynamic range and amplitude, both impressively wide on SACD, this issue is for you. In the Capriccio Italien there are no cannon, so the engineers substitute the bass drum, which is very prominent. The orchestral contribution throughout is lively but not memorable, and the playing simply does not generate enough adenalin to compensate for the lack of projection of the orchestral tone. At the end of 1812, Tchaikovsky's carefully contrived climax, with its full-blooded scalic descent, lacks weight. The most enjoyable item is the sparkling Cossack Dance, a favourite item in the days of 78s.

Capriccio italien, Op. 45; 1812 Overture, Op. 49; Marche slave; Romeo and Juliet: Fantasy Overture; The Snow Maiden: Dance of the Tumblers

(BB) * Naxos 8.555923. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Kuchar

Theodore Kuchar and the excellent Ukraine Orchestra follow up their highly recommendable Mussorgsky disc with an almost equally impressive Tchaikovsky collection. Once again the recording is spectacular, with striking depth and resonance. The orchestra is set slightly back, so you need to set the volume a little higher than usual. While there are other more distinctive versions of some of these pieces, this collection is very enjoyable overall and excellent value.

(i) Capriccio italien; (ii) Francesca da Ramini; (i) Nutcracker Suite; (ii) Serenade for Strings; (i) Eugene Onegin: Polonaise and Waltz

(*) Australian Ph. Eloquence 442 8335 (2). Stokowski; with (i) LPO; (ii) LSO

It is good to have these Stokowski recordings, dating from 1973 and 1974, restored to circulation. Capriccio italien brings genuine panache, and the infectiously vigorous Eugene Onegin dances have characteristic flair. But in the Nutcracker Suite (which he played so beautifully for Disney in Fantasia), the March is rather hard-driven and the middle section sounds a bit gabbled. Then, after introducing the Sugar Plum Fairy with a string tremolando, his phrasing is so mannered (with repeated tenutos on the falling clarinet phrase) that few will find this comfortable to live with, even if, later, the Waltz of the Flowers is exhilarating. The 1974 account of Francesca da Rimini, although not as well controlled as his classic earlier version with the New York Stadium Orchestra, is very exciting indeed; there is no doubt about the temperament of the reading and Stokowski generates tremendous emotional thrust at the climax. The String Serenade is characteristically bold and romantic, with sumptuous tone from the LSO strings – a real 'Stokowski sound' – and after the characteristically luscious Waltz, the Elégie is ardent and the finale full of energy. One can forgive the idiosyncrasies for much else that is uniquely Stokowskian.

Concert Fantasy, Op. 56; Piano Concertos 1–3

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 85540-2 (2). Donohoe, Bournemouth SO, Barshai

Peter Donohoe's account of the B flat minor Concerto, although thoroughly sympathetic and spaciously conceived, lacks the thrust and indeed the electricity of the finest versions. The Third Concerto is altogether more successful, dramatic and lyrically persuasive, and held together well by Barshai. The Concert Fantasia is even more in need of interpretative cohesion. But what makes this inexpensive Gemini Double distinctive is the inclusion of Donohoe's much praised account of the Second Concerto. This superb recording of the full original score in every way justifies the work's length and the unusual format of the slow movement. Its extended solos for violin and cello are played with beguiling warmth by Nigel Kennedy and Steven Isserlis. The first movement goes with splendid impetus, and the performance of the finale is a delight from beginning to end. Donohoe plays with infectious bravura, and he is well supported by sparkling playing from the Bournemouth orchestra under Barshai.

Concert Fantasy in G, Op. 56; Piano Concertos 1–3; Andante & Finale, Op. 70 (orch. Taneyev)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557257 (1 & 3; Andante & Finale); 8.557824 (2; Concert Fantasy) (available separately). Scherbakov, Russian PO, Yablonsky

Konstantin Scherbakov gives us all Tchaikovsky's concertante music for piano, including the Andante and Finale, Op. 79 (drawing on music for a discarded symphony) which Taneyev revised and scored after the composer's death. The performances are full of impulsive virtuosity, but the famous B flat minor, while not a barnstorming account, is satisfying for its overall balance, as well as for an exciting finale. The Third Concerto comes off very well indeed; the Second Concerto is played uncut and the slow movement and the brilliant finale are very successful. The highlight of the set is a superb, bravura account of the Concert Fantasy, lyrical and sparkling by turns. The recording is spacious, the piano boldly placed in front of the orchestra. The two discs are available separately.

(i; ii) Piano concertos 1–3; Concert Fantasy, Op. 56; (iii) Symphony 6 (Pathétique); Marche slave; (i) The Seasons; 6 Pieces, Op. 21; Sleeping Beauty (excerpts; arr. Pletnev).

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 5 62358-2 (4). (i) Pletnev (piano); (ii) Philh. O, Fedoseyev; (iii) Russian Nat. O, cond. Pletnev

Mikhail Pletnev's masterful account of the First Concerto has all the qualities we associate with his remarkable pianism. This high-voltage account, together with that of the Concert Fantasy, is among the very finest of modern recordings in the catalogue. The Second Concerto brings comparably commanding playing from Pletnev, but it also brings a small but unnecessary cut in the slow movement. It would be difficult to improve on the Third Concerto, which is characterized strongly and interestingly. The recording is very good, but not in the demonstration bracket.

The way in which Pletnev launches us into the development of the first movement of the Pathétique in his earlier Virgin recording still takes one aback, even when one knows what to expect. His hand-picked orchestra is as virtuosic as Pletnev himself can be on the keyboard, with a challengingly fast tempo for the Scherzo. There is a stirring account of Marche slave too, and a very fine recording, perfectly balanced, although the effect is a little recessed.

In Tchaikovsky's 12 Seasons Pletnev shows exceptional feeling for Tchaikovsky. He grips one from first note to last, not only in The Seasons but also in the charming and touching Six morceaux, Op. 21. Fresh and natural recorded sound.

Piano Concerto 1 in B flat min., Op. 23 (DVD versions)

 Sony DVD SVD 45986. Kissin, BPO, Karajan (with PROKOFIEV: Classical Symphony **(*))

Both works on the Sony DVD were recorded at a New Year's Eve concert at the end of 1988, and the concerto was issued on DG 427 485-2 as well as on video. Kissin was 16 at the time of this performance, though he looks even younger, and the whole occasion must have been rather an awesome experience for him. His playing has great elegance and tremendous poise – his pianissimo tone is quite ravishing – but he tends not to let himself go, and there is just a slight feeling that he is playing safe, particularly in the finale. The performance as a whole, for all its finesse, lacks abandon. The strings in the DVD of Prokofiev's Classical Symphony have the characteristic Berlin sheen, and the slow movement has great tonal sweetness. The Scherzo is a bit heavy-handed, but it is offset by an altogether captivating finale, perfectly judged in pace and character. The camera work is unobtrusive, and although the piano is rather forward, the balance is well judged, though the overall sound is a shade dry.

Piano Concerto 1 in B flat min., Op. 23

🔑 * Häns. CD 98.932. Ohlsson, ASMF, Marriner – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 2 ***

🔑 * Ph. 446 673-2. Argerich, Bav. RSO, Kondrashin – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 3 ****

🔑  BIS SACD-1588. Sudbin, São Paolo SO, Neschling – MEDTNER: Piano Concerto 1 ***

(BB)  EMI 5 73765-2 (3). Rudy, St Petersburg PO, Jansons – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concertos 1–3; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini ***

 Warner 2564 63074-2. Berezovsky, Ural PO, Liss – KHACHATURIAN: Piano Concerto ***

(*) DG SACD 474 637-2; CD 474 291-2. Lang Lang, Chicago SO, Barenboim – MENDELSSOHN: Piano Concerto 1 ***

🔑 ✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110671. Horowitz, NBC O, Toscanini – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 2. ()

Ⓜ () DG (ADD) 447 420-2. Richter, VSO, Karajan – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 2 ***

(i) Piano Concerto 1; (ii) Nutcracker Suite, Op. 71a (arr. Economou, for 2 pianos)

🔑  DG (ADD/DDD) 449 816-2. Argerich, (i) BPO, Abbado; (ii) with Economou

It is good to have a really splendid, modern coupling of these two most popular romantic Concertos from Ohlsson and Marriner that can measure up to the finest versions from the past, presented in naturally balanced, modern, digital recording of the very highest quality. The Tchaikovsky opens with a commanding melodic sweep, and the first-movement Allegro is as full of poetic detail as it is exciting, leading on to the cadenza in the most spontaneous way. The Andante semplice is charmingly light-hearted and, after the scintillating centrepiece, is very tender at its reprise. The dancing finale brings all the bravura you could ask for, with weight and power as well as excitement.

Argerich's 1994 live performance with the Berlin Philharmonic under Abbado is undoubtedly the finest of her three recordings. It has prodigious virtuosity, while in the first movement, after a richly commanding opening, conductor and pianist find a perfect balance between dynamism and magically gentle poetry. Even though Argerich's impetuosity is famous, on first hearing the listener will surely be astonished by her two tempestuous octave entries, where she carries all before her. And the cadenza, like the barnstorming closing pages of the finale, brings a thrilling, all-out bravura of the kind one normally only associates with Horowitz. Yet the Andante semplice has wonderful delicacy with the central Prestissimo glittering like a shower of meteorites. Economou's arrangement of the Nutcracker Suite for two pianos works well enough. The digital recording is good but rather dry. This CD, fine as it is, should have been reissued at mid-price.

Argerich's Philips issue comes from a live performance given in October 1980, full of animal excitement, with astonishingly fast speeds in the outer movements. The impetuous virtuosity is breathtaking, even if passage-work is not always cleanly articulated. The CD version clarifies and intensifies the already vivid sound, which is fuller than her DG version of nine years earlier (see below), and the new coupling with her even more sensational account of Rachmaninov's Third Concerto from earlier makes this a very desirable issue.

Yevgeny Sudbin's account of the B flat minor Concerto serves as a reminder that this familiar warhorse is always able to take one by surprise and make one wonder anew at its abundance of ideas and its originality. A rewarding issue, and of particular value in offering Medtner's First Concerto. Let us hope that BIS will follow this with the remaining two.

As always, Rudy exhibits much artistry and taste in this eloquent St Petersburg account, partnered by Mariss Jansons. His playing is not short on virtuosity and command, but never at the expense of poetic feeling; the warmly idiomatic orchestral playing under Jansons has great character and personality. Altogether it makes a refreshing alternative version, here offered in a bargain package with equally illuminating accounts of the Rachmaninov Concertos. Excellent sound, full and vivid.

Berezovsky's recording of the B flat minor Concerto is the very opposite of routine and is full of imaginative touches, seeking, rather like Ashkenazy's Decca version, to move away from a barnstorming approach and bring out the concerto's lyrical core. The opening is properly flamboyant and the Allegro con spirito sets off with fine impetus. But when the second-subject group arrives, both pianist and conductor combine to produce the utmost delicacy. The recording has a very wide dynamic range, and the result is that their joint image recedes and all but loses its tangibility. However, as the movement progresses, the performance gathers impetus and power, and the cadenza is most poetically done. The pizzicato opening of the slow movement brings another pianissimo from the orchestra which is only just audible; but the movement brings more refined delicacy from Berezvosky and a dazzling scherzando centrepiece. The finale then sets off in sparkling fashion, and Liss gives the secondary lyrical tune a lighter dancing rhythmic profile than usual. This remains at the climactic reprise, giving the end of the work an added freshness, without losing the pianistic bravura. In spite of the idiosyncrasies, this remains a real three-star performance, well worth hearing.

Lang Lang's performance tempos tend to be broader than usual, only occasionally sounding self-conscious, for in general he is masterly in his control of rubato. The opening instantly establishes this as a big-scale performance, strongly rhythmic and sharply accented, though – with the piano balanced close – the big melody on the first violins sounds surprisingly weak, hidden behind the pianist's monumental chords: the reason for our reservation, when this is one of the composer's most eloquent themes. The outer sections of the slow movement, like the lyrical passages of the first movement, are daringly broad, with Barenboim helping to sustain tension, while in the finale Lang Lang, again encouraged by Barenboim, himself a keyboard virtuoso, varies the tempo boldly, while sustaining a purposeful thrust. The Mendelssohn makes an unusual but attractive coupling.

Horowitz's famous wartime Carnegie Hall recording of the B flat minor Concerto has since remained the yardstick by which all subsequent versions have been judged. Somehow the alchemy of the occasion was unique and the result is unforgettable. In spite of the Carnegie Hall ambience, the recording is confined and lacking bass, but the Naxos transfer engineer, Mark Obert-Thorn, has achieved impressive results from a single post-war set of 78s in mint condition. Such is the magnetism of the playing, however, that the ear forgets the sonic limitations within moments. Toscanini's accompaniment is remarkable not only for matching the adrenalin of his soloist (particularly in the visceral thrill of the finale's climax), but for the tenderness he finds for the lyrical passages of the first movement and the Andantino, which is truly semplice, even when accompanying the coruscating pianistic fireworks of the central section. The finale carries all before it, with Horowitz's riveting octaves leading to a tremendously exciting statement of the big tune before storming off furiously to the coda.

The element of struggle for which this work is famous is all too clear in the Richter/Karajan performance; not surprisingly, these two musical giants do not always agree: each chooses a different tempo for the second subject of the finale and maintains it, despite the other. In both the dramatic opening and the closing pages of the work the approach is mannered and self-conscious, not easy to enjoy. The recording is full-blooded, with a firm piano image.

(i) Piano Concerto 1; (ii) Violin Concerto in D, Op. 35

🔑 * Pentatone SACD/CD PTC 5186 022. (i) Lugansky; (ii) Tetzlaff; Russian Nat. O, Nagano

Nicolai Lugansky was a pupil of Tatiana Nikolaeva, and his is a far from barnstorming performance of the B flat minor Concerto. The famous opening is broad and weighty, and the vividly Russian first subject of the Allegro is given a bold, rhythmic character, yet it is not pressed too hard. In both the exposition and recapitulation the beauty of the lyrical secondary material is relished. The Andantino, introduced exquisitely by the flute, is played by Lugansky with comparable delicacy, followed by a scintillating central scherzando section. The finale then bursts forth with irrepressible impetus, and the coda would certainly bring the house down at a concert. In his warmly romantic but never sentimental account of the Violin Concerto, Tetzlaff's beguiling introduction of the two main themes is invested with a natural lyrical feeling. Not surprisingly, the orchestral colouring of the slow movement is very Russian, and this ripely nostalgic palette carries through to the contrasting woodwind interludes in the exuberant finale. Tetzlaff's bravura playing, almost unbelievably polished and secure, is thrilling in its sparkling virtuosity, the closing bars dazzling in their exuberance.

Piano Concerto 1 in B flat min.; Theme and Variations, Op. 19/6

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 5 86881-2. Gavrilov – BALAKIREV: Islamey; PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 1, etc. ****

Gavrilov is stunning in the finale of the Concerto; however, the final statement of the big tune is broadened very positively so that one is not entirely convinced. Similarly in the first movement, contrasts of dynamic and tempo are extreme, and the element of self-consciousness is apparent. The Andante is full of tenderness and the prestissimo middle section goes like quicksilver, displaying the vein of spontaneous imagination that we recognize in Gavrilov's other records. The recording is full and sumptuous. In the Variations, Op. 19, Tchaikovsky's invention has great felicity. Gavrilov's playing is stylishly sympathetic here, and the Balakirev and Prokofiev couplings are dazzling.

(i) Piano Concerto 1 in B flat min., Op. 23. Symphony 4 in F min., Op. 36

 Sony 82876777182. Bav. RSO, Jansons; (i) with Bronfman

Jansons, famous for his Tchaikovsky Symphony cycle on Chandos, delivers predictably superb results on this new live Sony recording from 2005. In the Concerto, Bronfman is dazzlingly brilliant but not in a merely showy way: the excitement here is generated from within the music-making. Jansons provides much animation with the orchestra, and the interplay between orchestra and soloist is one of the joys of the performance. The finale is superbly exciting. Perhaps the strings could have been placed more forward, but in general the sound is excellent. The opening 'fate' theme of the Fourth Symphony immediately makes this out as a performance of intensity, and if it cannot match the Chandos sound in terms of open expansiveness, it is certainly vivid enough.

Piano Concerto 2 in G, Op. 44; Concert Fantasy, Op. 56

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550820. Glemser, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

This Naxos coupling can be strongly recommended on all counts, quite irrespective of cost. Bernd Glemser and the Polish National Radio Symphony Orchestra give an outstanding account of Tchaikovsky's underrated G major Concerto, flamboyant and poetic by turns. The unnamed orchestral principal cellist introduces the Andante gently and tenderly and his two string colleagues join him with equal sensitivity. The finale has plenty of sparkle and gusto and the whole account is very enjoyable indeed.

The Concert Fantasy too, is treated as a large-scale work. Both pianist and orchestra play it with total conviction, and much virtuosity (the cadenza very impressive). The Contrasts of the second movement are most tellingly made, with the lyrical minor key cantabile touching, and the Russian dance element as vigorous as one could wish. Excellent, well-balanced, full-bodied recording.

Piano Concertos 2 in G, Op. 44; 3 in E flat, Op. 75

 Ara. Z 6583. Lowenthal, LSO, Comissiona

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61913-2. Leonskaya, NYPO, Masur

In an attractive coupling of two unjustly neglected works, the energy and flair of Lowenthal and Comissiona combine to give highly spontaneous performances, well balanced and recorded. With very good sound, this is well worth investigating, as the account of the Third Concerto is comparably spontaneous.

Leonskaya is a splendid Tchaikovskian and she finds a sympathetic partner in Kurt Masur. Their account of the elusive Second Piano Concerto is very fine, weighty, expansive and compelling. The red-blooded orchestral tuttis are matched by Leonskaya's bold, forwardly balanced pianism, and if in the (uncut) slow movement she misses some of its delicacy, she is ardently lyrical. The finale is forceful in its exuberance, powerful and exciting, and the rich Leipzig recording matches the style of the performance. The Third Concerto follows on with equal success, and offers brilliant playing with plenty of zest and ardour from soloist and orchestra alike. Outstanding value.

Piano Concerto 3

(*) Chan. 9130. Tozer, LPO, Järvi – Symphony 7 *

It was a good idea to record the Third Piano Concerto alongside the Seventh Symphony, on whose first movement it is based (see below). Geoffrey Tozer is an excellent soloist and, as in his Medtner performances for Chandos, plays with sympathy as well as powerful bravura. The playing of the London Philharmonic is not so consistent, with violin tone as recorded often thin, not opulent enough for big Tchaikovsky melodies.

Violin Concerto, Op. 35; Souvenir d'un lien cher (Méditation; Scherzo; Mélodie), Op. 42 (orch. Glazunov); Swan Lake, Act 2: Pas d'action; Act 3: Danse russe

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * Sony 88697214232. Baiba Skride, CBSO, Nelsons

Tchaikovsky composed his Violin Concerto in just eleven days during a short, but badly needed holiday in the Swiss village of Clarens – where Stravinsky was later to compose The Rite of Spring and Pulcinella. In a letter to his patroness, Nadezda von Meck, Tchaikovsky wrote at the time of this sudden outburst of creative activity 'composing doesn't seem like like work at all, its pure pleaure!'. This relaxed feeling of joy permeates Baiba Skride's wonderful performance, from the gently inviting introduction, created by Andris Nelsons and the CBSO, onwards to the very last bar.

Born in Riga, Baiba Skride was prizewinner at the Brussels Queen Elisabeth International Music Competition, especially for her interpretation of the Tchaikovsky Concerto, and no wonder! She has a most remarkable natural affinity for the work, choosing a very relaxed tempo for the opening movement, and so making a splendid contrast when the polacca rhythm arrives. Her warmly tender playing, which extends to the slow movement, is gently ravishing, and her performance of the cadenza has a uniquely spontaneous lyricism, making it an integral and magical part of the work's structure; then the finale bursts into a wonderful display of fireworks, with the jaunty folksy subsidiary theme sounding intrinsically Russian in its colouring. For coupling Baiba Skride has made the perfect choice of all three parts of the Souvenir d'un lieu cher plus two substantial concertante excerpts from Swan Lake, which are played with comparable beauty and sparkle. With recording in the demonstration bracket this now is an easy first choice among the many modern recordings of this repertoire.

Violin Concerto in D; Souvenir d'un lieu cher, Op. 42 (orch. Glazunov)

* BIS SACD 1432. Gluzman, Bergen PO, Litton – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto ****

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 35

* Ph. 473 343-2. Repin, Kirov O., Gergiev – MIASKOVSKY: Violin Concerto. **** ✿

Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 0927 46743-2. Vengerov, BPO, Abbado – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto **(*)

 Erato 4509 98537-2. Repin, LSO, Krivine – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓜ * Decca 475 7734. Chung, LSO, Previn – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ****

Ⓑ  Decca 475 6703. Bell, Cleveland O, Dohnányi – BRAHMS; SCHUMANN; WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concertos ***

 DG SACD 474 874-2; CD 474 515-2. Mutter, VPO, Previn – KORNGOLD: Violin Concerto ***

 Sony SK 68338. Midori, BPO, Abbado – SHOSTAKOVICH: Violin Concerto 1 ***

(M)  EMI 5 03433-2. Chang, LSO, C. Davis – BRAHMS: Hungarian Dances ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550153. Nishizaki, Slovak PO, Jean – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

(B)  DG Double (ADD) 453 142-2 (2). Milstein, VPO, Abbado – BEETHOVEN: Concerto  ; BRAHMS: Concerto (*) ; MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

(M)  DG (ADD) 477 5914. Milstein, VPO, Abbado (with 'Encores' (with Georges Pludermacher, piano): GEMINIANI: Sonata in A; SCHUBERT: Rondo brilliant in B min.; MILSTEIN: Paganiniana; LISZT: Consolation 3 in D flat; STRAVINSKY: Chanson russe; KODÁLY: Il pleut dans la ville; MUSSORGSKY: Hopak)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110938. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto; WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concerto 2 in D min. ()

 Sup. SU 3709-2. Sporcl, Czech PO, Bělohlávek – DVOŘÁK: Violin Concerto in D. **(*)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110977. Milstein, Chicago SO, Stock – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1; MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto. ()

(M) (*) EMI (ADD) 5 62591-2. Perlman, Phd. O, Ormandy – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto. ***

(M) (*) Ph. 464 741-2. Mullova, Boston SO, Ozawa – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ***

(*) Globe GLO 5174. Lubotsky, Estonian Nat. SO, Volmer – ARENSKY: Violin Concerto; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Concert Fantasy **(*)

Violin Concerto; Meditation; Swan Lake, Op. 20: Danse russe

 Sony SH 94829. Bell, BPO, Tilson Thomas

Violin Concerto; Sérénade mélancolique; (i) Souvenirs d'un lieu cher; Valse-Scherzo

* Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 095. Fischer, Russian Nat. O, Kreizberg; (i) Kreizberg (piano)

Violin Concerto; Sérénade mélancoliqe; Souvenir d'un lieu cher; Valse-Scherzo

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557690. Kaler, Russian PO, Yablonsky

Violin Concerto in D; Sérénade mélancolique; String Serenade: Waltz

(M) (*) RCA (ADD) 09026 61743-2. Heifetz, Chicago SO, Reiner – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

(i) Violin Concerto in D; (ii) Méditation, Op. 42/1; (iii) Sérénade mélancolique, Op. 26

() Testament mono/stereo SBT 1224. Kogan; (i; ii) Paris Conservatoire O; (i) Vandernoot; (ii) Silvestri; (iii) Philh. O, Kondrashin – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2 ***

Violin Concerto; Souvenir d'un lieu cher (arr. for violin & strings, Lascae)

(N) (*) Decca 478 0651 Jansen, Mahler CO, Harding

Of the many memorable recordings of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto but few are finer than Vadim Gluzman's wonderfully warm and lyrical account, and certainly none has such quite such a totally realistic recording, perfectly balanced. Listening in surround sound (with the back speakers just adding ambience) gives one the feeling of actually sitting in the Bergen Grieg Concert Hall with its spacious acoustic. Gluzman's reading has a comparatively relaxed yet totally spontaneous opening movement, and the Andante is wholly seductive in its songful melodic flow; then in the finale Gluzman is off with the wind, playing with dazzling virtuosity, yet relaxing again in the Russian woodwind interludes. Throughout the performance the Bergen Orchestra is far more than an accompaniment, and Litton's final tutti brings the work to a thrilling close, as at a live concert. The engaging three-section Souvenir d'un lieu cher is no less beautifully played and the coupling with Glazunov is ideal, for again Gluzman's warmly relaxed approach, with its flashes of bravura, is captivating.

Vadim Repin's newest account of the Tchaikovsky Concerto with the Kirov Orchestra under Gergiev has effortless virtuosity and a compelling dramatic fire and nobility of feeling. His account would stand high in the lists even if it were uncoupled but it has the additional attraction of a masterly account of Miaskovsky's glorious 1939 Violin Concerto, which is not to be missed.

Vengerov gives an inspired performance, with magic inspiration breathing new life into well-known music. For all his power and his youthfully eager love of brilliance, Vengerov is never reluctant to play really softly. The central Canzonetta is full of Russian temperament, and the finale is sparklingly light, with articulation breathtakingly clean to match the transparency of the orchestral textures. What a pity the original coupling was not retained for this reissue, for the Sibelius Concerto is much less successful.

In his first recording with the LSO under Krivine, Repin's withdrawn tone in moments of meditation and his fondness for the gentlest pianissimos are as remarkable as his purity and sharpness of focus in bravura. He brings many moments of magic, such as the gentle lead-in to the second subject and the whispered statement of the main theme in the central Canzonetta, enhanced by the natural balance of the soloist in a refined and well-detailed Erato recording, making this a highly recommendable alternative.

Kyung-Wha Chung's earlier recording of the Violin Concerto with Previn conducting now returns to the catalogue as one of Decca's Originals; it has remained one of the strongest recommendations for a much-recorded work ever since it was made, right at the beginning of her career. With Previn a most sympathetic and responsive accompanist, this has warmth, spontaneity and discipline, every detail is beautifully shaped and turned without a trace of sentimentality. The recording is well balanced and detail is clean.

Joshua Bell plays with an expressive warmth which is on Decca kept within a relatively steady pulse. The symphonic strength of the work is brought out without any loss of excitement rather than the opposite. Bell may not have quite the fantasy of a version like Chung's, but it is an outstanding account, nevertheless, very recommendable if the very generous couplings are suitable (all outstanding). In the finale of the Tchaikovsky, Bell does not open out the tiny cuts in the passage-work that until recently have been traditional. Brilliant recording, with the soloist well balanced.

Recorded in the Berlin Philharmonie in January 2005, Joshua Bell's Sony version is freer, more volatile and even more affectionate than his studio account of 1988 for Decca, yet he never indulges in excessive mannerism, giving an impression of improvisation more clearly than before. In the central Canzonetta Bell is this time even more tender and more individual in his phrasing, despite a more closely balanced sound, and, as before, he achieves a genuine pianissimo without using a mute. In the finale he opens up the brief traditional cuts that he allowed in his 1988 performance, an obvious advantage, and he adopts a marginally faster speed with more exciting results, particularly at the end, where the Berlin audience understandably responds with great enthusiasm. The coupling this time is not generous but is still valuable.

By happy coincidence, these two versions of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto by Julia Fischer and Kaler appeared simultaneously, each with the same coupling. The only difference is that where the Naxos version offers the three pieces of Souvenir d'un lieu cher in Glazunov's orchestration, the Pentatone has it with the original piano accompaniment, played by the conductor, Jakov Kreizberg. Interpretatively, the two versions offer a very distinct choice. Kaler's approach is fresh, clean and direct, by no means unfeeling, with flawless intonation and fine shading of dynamic. He is not helped by his rather close balance in an otherwise excellent recording.

Fischer is characterful in every phrase she plays, with sparkle and a sense of fantasy in virtuoso passages and with an inner intensity when playing the intimate lyrical sections, and she is greatly helped by the conducting of Kreizberg with the Russian National Orchestra, which is both taut and sympathetic, with an ideal balance of soloist, allowing the widest range of dynamic, and the SACD sound is impressively spacious and realistic.

When it comes to the fill-ups, it is specially relevant to have the Méditation, first of the pieces of Souvenir d'un lieu cher: this was the composer's first idea of a slow movement for the Concerto, later replaced by the Canzonetta. Here Kaler plays all three pieces with a folk-like freshness, where Fischer again goes deeper, as she does also in the Sérénade mélancolique in a similar contrast.

Mutter, accompanied by Previn in a live recording, gives a notably free, spontaneous-sounding performance. Some may find the results too extreme, but the natural warmth of the playing, enhanced by a phenomenal range of tone-colours (something which Mutter claims has developed over the years), makes the result magnetic. Like the majority of players, she observes the brief statutory cuts in the semiquaver passage-work of the finale.

In her live recording, Midori, with the solo instrument naturally balanced, gives a reading that makes its impact as much in hushed poetry as in virtuoso display, with rhythms and phrasing freely expressive. Though the central Canzonetta is taken dangerously slowly, the rapt intensity is most compelling. As in the Shostakovich, Abbado and the Berlin Philharmonic give warm and powerful support, very well recorded. Midori adopts the tiny traditional cuts in the finale.

Sarah Chang plays with exceptionally pure tone, avoiding heavy coloration, and her individual artistry does not demand the wayward pulling-about often found in this work. In that she is enormously helped by the fresh, bright and dramatic accompaniment provided by the LSO under Sir Colin Davis, always a sensitive and helpful concerto conductor, and here encouraging generally steady speeds. The snag is the ungenerous coupling, but Chang's performances of the four Brahms Hungarian Dances are delectable.

Kogan's account of the Tchaikovsky Concerto was made in Paris in 1956, three years before his better known (and generally speaking better) version with Constantin Silvestri conducting the same orchestra. However, any performance by this aristocrat of violinists is worth having and his effortless virtuosity and purity of tone is heard to excellent effect in this well-balanced mono recording. The Sérénade mélancolique and the Méditation, both recorded in 1959, are in stereo and among the finest performances of the pieces on disc.

There can be no real reservations about the sound of the present remastering of Heifetz's 1957 stereo recording, both full and brilliant. Heifetz is closely balanced, but the magic of his playing can be fully enjoyed. There is some gorgeous lyrical phrasing, and the slow movement marries deep feeling and tenderness in an ideal performance. The finale is dazzling but is never driven too hard. Reiner always accompanies understandingly, producing fierily positive tuttis. The Mendelssohn coupling is equally desirable, and the Sérénade mélancolique makes a splendid bonus.

Takako Nishizaki gives a warm and colourful reading, tender but purposeful and full of temperament. As in the Mendelssohn with which this is coupled, the central slow movement is on the measured side but flows sweetly, while the finale has all the necessary bravura, even at a speed that avoids breathlessness. Nishizaki opens out the little cuts which had become traditional. With excellent playing and recording, this makes a first-rate recommendation in the super-bargain bracket.

Milstein's fine (1973) version with Abbado now comes as part of a DG Double with three other Concertos. He plays beautifully, Abbado secures playing of genuine sensitivity and scale from the VPO, and the recording is first class. A 1984 collection of encores makes an unusual and attractive alternative coupling, with plenty of contrasting and thoroughly entertaining pieces: the Liszt is very effective when played so seductively and, if the Geminiani is not successful stylistically, Milstein comes into his own in his own arrangement of Paganini's most famous Caprice and the vivacious Hopak of Mussorgsky. Excellent 1975 sound.

Heifetz's first (mono) recording of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, made in 1937, has tremendous virtuosity and warmth. The sound is opaque by modern standards but the ear quickly adjusts, and the performance is special even by Heifetz's own standards. The Naxos transfer, too, is very good and, coming as it does with a classic account of the Glazunov and a fascinating Sibelius, this is a fine bargain.

The young Czech virtuoso Pavel Sporcl brings not only dashing virtuosity but tonal variety and tender expressiveness to the Tchaikovsky, with speed changes always sounding natural and spontaneous. The central Canzonetta has a hushed poignancy, with the recording beautifully capturing the subtlety of Sporcl's pianissimo playing. In the finale his clarity of articulation is a delight, with the coda irresistibly exciting.

Milstein first recorded the Tchaikovsky in Chicago in March 1940 with Frederick Stock, an underrated maestro. It is a more classical reading than his later versions, though the finale is a remarkably dashing tour de force on the part of soloist and orchestra. The recording is also very fine, for at this time American Columbia had begun to record on to 33⅓ rpm lacquer master discs. The recordings sound as well as 1950s early tape masters. This comes with two superb performances of the Bruch and Mendelssohn Concertos.

The expressive warmth of Perlman's 1978 recording goes with a very bold orchestral texture from Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra. The focus of sound is not quite as clean as this work ideally needs, but Perlman's panache always carries the day.

Janine Jansen and Daniel Harding choose a spacious tempo for the first movement, but the solo playing is less charismatic, less moving than the finest versions, and when Harding goes into polonaise rhythm he doesn't achieve the same lift that illuminates (for instance) the CBSO under Andris Nelsons on our primary recommendation. There is still much to admire here, but the coupling is ungenerous, and this can hardly be among the top recommendations, even though the Decca recording is excellent.

Viktoria Mullova's performance is immaculate and finely controlled – as is the coupling – but she does not always succeed in achieving the combination of warmth and nobility that this score above all requires. However, her playing has an effortless virtuosity. Ozawa and the Boston Orchestra give excellent support and the recording is exemplary.

Mark Lubotsky's performance with Arvo Volmer and the fine Estonian National Orchestra is wonderfully musical and natural. Not perhaps as high-powered or flamboyant as many rivals, but everything unfolds naturally and effortlessly. It comes with enterprising couplings, including the endearing Arensky Concerto.

(i) 1812 Overture; Capriccio italien

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Mercury Philips (ADD) 475 8508. (i) Bronze French cannon, bells of Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Carillon, Riverside Church, New York City; Minneapolis SO, Dorati (with separate descriptive commentary by Deems Taylor) – BEETHOVEN: Wellington's Victory *** ✿

Just as in our listing of this famous Mercury record we have placed 1812 first, so in the credits the cannon and the glorious sounds of the Laura Spelman Carillon take precedence, for in the riveting climax of Tchaikovsky's most famous work the effects completely upstage the orchestra. On this remastered CD the balance is managed spectacularly, with the 'shots' perfectly timed, while the Minneapolis Orchestra clearly enjoy themselves both in 1812 and in the brilliant account of Capriccio italien. Deems Taylor provides an avuncular commentary on the technical background to the original recording.

(i) 1812 Overture; Francesca da Rimini; Marche slave; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture); (ii) Eugene Onegin: Tatiana's Letter Scene

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP 575 5672. (i) RLPO; (ii) LPO; Edwards; (ii) with Hannan

An outstanding reissue, which shows Sian Edwards as an instinctive Tchaikovskian. In Romeo and Juliet the love-theme is ushered in very naturally and blossoms with the fullest ardour, while the combination of the feud music with the Friar Lawrence theme reaches a very dramatic climax. Marche slave, resplendently high-spirited and exhilarating, makes a splendid foil. The emotional ebb and flow of Francesca da Rimini is persuasively managed, and this performance is the highlight of the disc. The inclusion of Tatiana's Letter Scene was a capital idea. This is freshly and dramatically sung in a convincingly girlish impersonation by the Australian Eileen Hannan. 1812, which closes the concert, is also very enjoyable indeed.

1812 Overture; Francesca da Rimini; Romeo and Juliet; Eugene Onegin: Polonaise & Waltz

🔑 * EMI 3 70065-2. Santa Cecilia Ch. & O, Pappano

What is very striking with Pappano is how refreshing 1812 is when played with such incisiveness and care for detail, with textures clearly defined. It starts with the chorus singing the opening hymn, expanding thrillingly. A women's chorus then comes in very effectively, twice over, for one of the folk-themes; and at the end the full chorus sings the 'Tsar's Hymn' amid the usual percussion and bells, though Pappano avoids extraneous effects. It is equally refreshing to have the Waltz from Eugene Onegin in the full vocal version from the opera, again wonderfully pointed, as is the Polonaise which follows. There have been many Tchaikovsky collections like this, but with well-balanced sound, outstandingly rich and ripe in the brass section, this is among the finest.

Fatum (Symphonic Poem). Dances and Overtures from Operas: Cherevichki ('The Slippers'): Cossack Dance; Russian Dance. The Enchantress: Introduction; Dance of the Histrions. The Maid of Orleans: Entr'acte between Acts I & II; Dance of the Bohemians; Dance of the Polichinelles and Histrions. Mazeppa: Gopak. The Oprichnick: Dances, Act IV; The Queen of Spades: Overture. The Voyevoda: Overture

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554845. Ukraine Nat. SO, Kuchar

A fascinating disc containing much unknown Tchaikovsky, opening with the histrionic Overture to The Queen of Spades, followed by the even more melodramatic early symphonic poem, Fatum, of 1868. What redeems both works is the undeniably Tchaikovskian lyrical inspiration, and the characteristic scoring. The same comments might apply to the Voyevoda Overture, written in the same year as Fatum and belonging to the one opera the composer destroyed. The other operas had greater or lesser success. The Maid of Orleans has now been recorded, and we know it contains some fine music. The excerpts here are attractive, as is the Cossack Dance from Cherevichki which, like the similar dance from Mazeppa, is the one familiar item. Performances are first class, full of Russian vitality, and the recording most vivid. An unmissable bargain for keen Tchaikovskians.

Festival Overture on the Danish National Anthem, Op. 15; (i) Hamlet: Overture & Incidental Music, Op. 67a

Ⓜ  Chan. X10108. (i) Kelly, Hammond-Stroud; LSO, Simon

Tchaikovsky himself thought his Danish Festival Overture superior to the 1812, and though one cannot agree with his judgement it is well worth hearing. The Hamlet Incidental Music, however, shows the composer's inspiration at its most memorable. The Overture is a shortened version of the Hamlet Fantasy Overture, but much of the rest of the incidental music is virtually unknown, and the engaging Funeral March and the two poignant string elegies show the composer at his finest. Ophelia's Mad Scene is partly sung and partly spoken, and Janis Kelly's performance is most sympathetic, while Derek Hammond-Stroud is suitably robust in the Gravedigger's Song. A translation of the vocal music is provided. It is sung in French (as in the original production of Hamlet, performed in St Petersburg). The digital recording has spectacular resonance and depth to balance its brilliance, and there are excellent notes by Noel Goodwin.

Francesca da Rimini

((*)) BBC Legends mono BBCL 4163-2. Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – BERLIOZ: Symphonie fantastique ((*))

It was in 1960 that the Leningrad Philharmonic first visited Britain, giving spectacular concerts, conducted by Gennadi Rozhdestvensky, then still in his twenties. Here, in an Edinburgh Festival performance at the Usher Hall, we can hear inspired playing of comparable fire and refinement in Tchaikovsky's Francesca da Rimini. This is a weighty and impulsive reading which holds this episodic piece tautly together, and the 1960 mono recording is surprisingly warm and full, if not ideally detailed.

Hamlet (Fantasy Overture); Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture); The Tempest, Op. 18

🔑 * BIS CD 1073. Bamberg SO, Serebrier

It is typical of Serebrier's performance that he makes The Tempest sound so fresh and original. Hamlet, dating from much later, is treated to a similarly fresh and dramatic reading, with Serebrier bringing out the yearningly Russian flavour of the lovely oboe theme representing Ophelia. He may not quite match the thrusting power of his mentor, Stokowski, but he is not far short.

In Romeo and Juliet the central development section, built on the conflict music, is rightly restrained, mainly mezzo forte but down to pp for the violins in places. Yet the playing of the Bamberg Orchestra, incisive as in the earlier BIS disc, both wonderfully drilled and warmly committed, with outstanding solos from wind and brass, ensures that there is no lack of power. It is good to welcome so refreshing a Tchaikovsky compilation.

Manfred Symphony, Op. 58

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 8535. Oslo PO, Jansons

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1048. Philh. O, Kletzki – BORODIN: Symphony 2. ()

(i) Manfred Symphony, Op. 58; (ii) Elégie in G for Strings

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 476 7415. (i) Philh. O; (ii) RPO; Ashkenazy

Manfred Symphony; The Tempest, Op. 18

🔑  DG 439 891-2. Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Manfred Symphony; The Voyevoda

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570568 RLPO, Petrenko

Except in a relatively relaxed view of the vivace second movement, Jansons favours speeds flowing faster than usual, bringing out the drama but subtly varying the tensions; his warmly expressive phrasing never sounds self-conscious when it is regularly given the freshness of folksong. The performance culminates in a thrilling account of the finale, leading up to the entry of the organ, gloriously resonant and supported by luxuriant string sound. The Chandos recording is among the finest in the Oslo series.

Vasily Petrenko, the brilliant young Russian conductor, is a new star in the firmament. Anyone who has been to his Liverpool Philharmonic concerts will have already discovered how he is transforming a very fine orchestra into a great one. His manner is simple, but he creates electrifying tension, and achieves striking refinement of detail, while the orchestra clearly likes and responds to his inspirational style. No better example than this memorable performance of Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony, an uneven work but one with magnificent moments, not least the riveting coda of the first movement. The slow movement is beautiful, but can produce longeurs, yet not here, when it is played so tenderly. Tchaikovsky was always good at scherzos and in this work uses one to create a sparkling waterfall, with a luscious central string melody to represent the Alpine Fairy, which Petrenko obviously relishes. The fury of the spectacular finale has its weaknesses, but they are forgotten here, and the work's close could not be better handled. The Voyevoda is not a masterpiece – Tchaikovsky tried to destroy his score; but it was reconstituted from the orchestral parts which he forgot about! Good to hear it (and its colourful orchestration), but it is Manfred that makes this bargain disc indispensable.

Under Ashkenazy, the atmosphere and power of the opening movement are fully realized, and the Scherzo has the most refined lyrical impulse, with wonderfully fresh string-playing and sparkling articulation in the outer sections. The Andante is even finer; indeed, in Ashkenazy's hands it is revealed as one of Tchaikovsky's most successful symphonic slow movements, full of lyrical fervour when the playing shows such strength of feeling, yet it is completely without exaggeration. The reading culminates in a stunning account of the finale, and the work's closing pages are given a satisfying feeling of apotheosis. The 1978 recording is immensely full-blooded and brilliant, yet natural in perspective.

Pletnev identifies with the ongoing sweep of the work, yet he can relax glowingly in the pastoral evocation of the slow movement. In The Tempest Pletnev again carries the piece through on a wave of passionate romantic feeling. The recording is first class and this is one of his finest Tchaikovsky records.

Though Kletzki makes cuts and one or two amendments of orchestration, this is another reading which, far more than usual, carries you warmly and thrustfully through music that can seem unduly episodic. As to the mid-1950s recording and transfer, the brass and wind have thrilling immediacy, and the dynamic range is astonishing for the time.

Marche slave

Ⓜ (*) Cala (ADD) CACD 0536. LSO, Stokowski – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade. ()

This Cala version of Stokowski's Phase Four account of Rimsky-Korsakov's Sheherazade comes with this thrilling live performance of Tchaikovsky's Marche slave, given as an encore at his 90th birthday concert in 1972 in London, with a spoken introduction by himself. It even outshines his studio recording in high-voltage electricity.

Méditation, Op. 42/1

🔑 ✿ * RCA 74321 87454-2. Znaider, Bav. RSO, Jansons – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2. ****✿

This piece comes from the Souvenir d'un lieu cher for violin and piano which Tchaikovsky composed while staying on the estate of his patroness, Madame von Meck. It had originally been planned as the slow movement of the Violin Concerto, and it fell to Glazunov to put it into orchestral form. It is beautifully played and comes here as a fill-up to Nikolaj Znaider's outstanding set of the Glazunov and Prokofiev Concertos.

(i) The Nutcracker, Op. 71; (ii) The Sleeping Beauty, Op. 66; (iii) Swan Lake, Op. 20 (ballets complete.)

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 460 411-2 (6). Nat. PO, Bonynge

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 73624-2 (6). LSO, Previn

Bonynge's Tchaikovsky performances are all recommendable. Swan Lake receives a red-blooded performance in which the forward impulse of the music-making is immediately striking. The 1975 recording is vivid and bright, though a little dry, producing a leonine string-tone sound rather than a feeling of sumptuousness. If the full romantic essence of this masterly score is not totally conveyed (partly as a result of the recording), the commitment of the orchestral playing is never in doubt. The Sleeping Beauty was recorded a year later with similarly vivid sound. Bonynge secures brilliant and often elegant playing from the National Philharmonic, and his rhythmic pointing is always characterful. He is especially good at the close of Act II when, after the magical Panorama, the Princess is awakened – there is a frisson of tension here and the atmosphere is most evocative. Bonynge's Nutcracker is finely done too, with plenty of colour in the characteristic dances. The recording from 1974 is rich and brilliant. All are packed in one of Decca's space-saving 'Collector Boxes', and this set is undoubtedly a bargain.

Previn's 1972 Nutcracker is superbly played by the LSO – it is a wonderfully warm account which gets more involving as it goes along. If The Sleeping Beauty is not as vital as it could be (though never slack), it makes up for it with the superb playing of the orchestra: the Panorama is beautifully done. The recording (1974) could sparkle a little more though. Swan Lake (1976) is given a similarly warm performance, though the overall effect is at times just that bit too 'cosy' for such dramatic writing. The music never drags though, and the excellence of the orchestral playing does much to enhance one's pleasure. The choice between these two bargain boxes is a matter of personal taste: Bonynge offers the more vivid performances (thanks also to the sound), while Previn has more opulence. Both are equally enjoyable and well packaged.

The Nutcracker, Op. 71 (ballet; complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Warner NIVC Arts DVD 0630 19394-2. Collier, Dowell, Coleman, Rose, Niblett, Royal Ballet, ROHCG O, Rozhdestvensky (Producer: Peter Wright; V/D: John Vernon, in association with Peter Wright; Choreography: Lev Ivanov and Peter Wright)

🔑 ✿ * BBC Opus Arts DVD OA 0827 D. Yoshida, Cope, Dowell, Cojocara, Putrov, Royal Ballet, ROHCG, Svetlanov (Producer: Peter Wright; V/D: Ross MacGibbon; Choreography: Lev Ivanov & Peter Wright)

 Ph. DVD 070 173-2 (Choreography by Petipa, adapted Vasily Vainonen). Larissa Lezhnina, Victor Baranov, Piotr Russanov, Kirov Ballet at Mariinsky Theatre, St Petersburg, Kirov O, Victor Fedotov (Dir Oleg Vinogradov)

Here, side by side, we have two separate DVDs of Sir Peter Wright's outstanding production of Tchaikovsky's magical Christmas ballet. They are both wonderfully realized, and it is impossible to choose between them. In the first, from 1985, Lesley Collier, who has already enchanted us in La fille mal gardée, is ideally cast as the Sugar Plum Fairy. Her Prince is elegantly characterized and finely danced by Anthony Dowell, and her romantic partner in the earlier ballet, Michael Coleman, now takes a more dramatic and slightly sinister role as Herr Drosselmeyer.

In the later (1996) BBC Opus Arte version, Anthony Dowell takes over as the strangely benign Drosselmeyer (whose nephew has been transformed into a grotesque Nutcracker Doll). In Peter Wright's production Drosselmeyer is always at the background of the narrative to remind us that his aim is to break the spell (through Clara – a non-dancing role) and have his nephew return to human form. Jonathan Cope, who was the Mouse King in the earlier production, is now an elegant Prince. His new partner, Miyako Yoshida, is an enchanting Sugar Plum Fairy, and the Nutcracker is Ivan Putrov.

If anything, the transformation scene when the Christmas Tree grows to a huge height is even more spectacularly managed in the later set, and we have a very soft spot for the moment when Clara deftly comes to the Nutcracker's rescue by hitting the Mouse King over the head with her shoe. But in the earlier version the Christmas party scene is especially endearing in its detail. In both the sequence where Clara and the transformed Nutracker journey together in a sleigh, through the Pine Forest and among the waltzing Snowflakes, to the Land of Snow – against a musical background of two of Tchaikovsky's finest melodic inspirations – and on to the Kingdom of Sweets is delightfully managed. Peter Wright's production is gloriously traditional, brilliantly choreographed, lavishly spectacular, while Julia Oman's costumes (especially for the battling Mice) are no less imaginative. The camera is always in the right place and Tchaikovsky's miraculouly inspired score, of which one never tires, is marvellously played by the Covent Garden Orchestra, whether conducted by Rozhdestvensky or by Svetlanov.

The Kirov Nutcracker is a delight, following the story simply, with wonderful sets and superb dancing. We see the guests for the party arriving through the snow (a huge number of them, but then it's a big stage) and meet Drosselmeyer (the excellent Piotr Russanov) at the very beginning, while the Mice make their appearance earlier than usual and frighten Clara (Masha in the Russian production) before the very well-staged battle. The production is traditional and no attempt is made to explain the background to the story, as in Peter Wright's Royal Ballet production. But that is unimportant when the dancing is of the highest quality, both from the principals and from the corps de ballet. The Waltz of the Snowflakes is a highlight, and the Russians know how to produce plenty of snow. In the final divertissement the costumes are unadventurous, but the Mirlitons, Chinese Dancers and Sugar Plum Fairy are enchanting; and the grand Pas de deux is really spectacular. The Kirov orchestra plays marvellously and the recording is first class. Altogether a wonderful entertainment.

The Nutcracker, Op. 71 (ballet; complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Ph. 462 114-2. Kirov O & Ch., Gergiev

🔑 * Telarc CD 80137 (2). L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Mackerras

The Nutcracker (ballet: complete); Suites Nos. 3 in G; 4 in G (Mozartiana)

Ⓝ ✿ * Australian Decca Eloquence ADD 480 0557 (2). SRO, Ansermet

The Nutcracker (ballet; complete); 1812 Overture; Marche slave

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD/DDD) 3 93233-2. LSO, Previn – PROKOFIEV: Cinderella (excerpts) ***

Ansermet's 1958 Nutcracker is simply one of the best performances of this score ever committed to disc. This was undoubtedly one of the finest things Ansermet did for Decca and the recording still sounds remarkably rich and vivid, with a freshness and sparkle to match the composer's approach. Ansermet's feeling for orchestral colour and detail tells throughout, and the short dances of Act 2 have much piquancy of characterization. Indeed, the whole performance feels as magical as the story itself and all lovers of this score should acquire this release. The two very appealing Suites which fill up this disc are not quite in this league of inspiration but they are affectionately played and well worth having, but the ✿ is for The Nutcracker.

Gergiev's complete CD recording is on a single disc (over 80 minutes) and it is magnificently played and recorded. Tchaikovsky's inspired score emerges pristine and fresh as one of his most perfect masterpieces. The great Adagio for the two principal dancers has a passionate Russian ardour; the lively characteristic dances are simply bursting with Slavonic fervour. If there is a certain want of magic and charm, Gergiev everywhere displays a keen ear for Tchaikovsky's vivid orchestral detail. There are no pauses between numbers in the Divertissement, and this may well be dictated by the single-disc format. But it also increases the feeling that the score overall is a composite whole, and this is emphasized by the sense of apotheosis in the finale. Unless you are looking for a more relaxed, spacious approach, this can be highly recommended.

Mackerras's Telarc set was recorded in Watford Town Hall, which adds glamour to the violins and a glowing warmth in the middle and lower range. When the magic spell begins, the spectacularly wide dynamic range and the extra amplitude make for a physical frisson in the climaxes, while the glorious climbing melody, as Clara and the Prince travel through the pine forest, sounds richly expansive. Before that, the battle has some real cannon-shots interpolated but is done good-humouredly, for this is a toy battle. The great Pas de deux brings the most sumptuous climax, with superb sonority from the brass. The Telarc presentation is ideal, with a detailed synopsis.

A remarkably attractive and generous bargain double. Previn's complete Nutcracker, recorded at Kingsway Hall in 1972, is affectionately and sumptuously played; the famous dances of Act II have much sophistication of detail, and the set can be recommended most warmly. Previn then takes a clear-headed, totally unsentimental view of the other three works and as a result the music emerges stronger in design (even 1812) and no less exciting than usual, although here the Abbey Road sound is drier, concentrating on fidelity and balance.

Nutcracker Suite

Ⓑ  CfP 3 82229-2. Philh. O, Malko – PROKOFIEV: Symphonies 1 & 7, etc. ***

(*) Telarc SACD 60650. Cleveland O, Maazel – BERLIOZ: Symphonie fantastique **

In 1955 Malko's Nutcracker Suite was one of EMI's very first (Kingsway Hall) stereo recordings. In the present transfer it sounds as if it was done yesterday and, with the Philharmonia on peak form, the playing is a joy. Malko's tempi are relaxed, but none the worse for that.

Nutcracker Suite; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80068. Cleveland O, Maazel

With vivid orchestral playing and bright, crisply focused recording within a natural ambience, Maazel's Nutcracker Suite is enjoyably colourful. His manner is affectionate (especially in the warmly lilting Waltz of the Flowers) and the only idiosyncrasy is the sudden accelerando at the close of the Russian Dance. Romeo and Juliet is given a spaciously romantic performance, reaching a climax of considerable passion. However, the almost overwhelming impact of the percussion in the undoubtedly exciting feud music is obviously designed for those who like to say 'Listen to that bass drum!'

Nutcracker; Sleeping Beauty; Swan Lake (ballets; excerpts)

(*) Avie AV 2139. RLPO, Petrenko

The Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra plays very well indeed under its new conductor, Vasily Petrenko, as is immediately obvious from the beautifully played oboe solo at the opening of the Swan Lake selection, which comes first. There is much finesse and elegance elsewhere: the delicate trumpet in the Danse napolitaine is another instance, as is the Blue bird pas de quatre from the Sleeping Beauty selection. But why no Panorama, and why is the Arab Dance missing from the otherwise delightful Nutcraker Suite? No complaints about the recording, only the measure – just 58 minutes!

Nutcracker Suite; Sleeping Beauty: Suite; Swan Lake: Suite

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 726-2. BPO, Rostropovich

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 379-2. VPO, Karajan

Rostropovich's triptych of Tchaikovsky ballet suites is very special. His account of the Nutcracker Suite is enchanting: the Sugar Plum Fairy is introduced with ethereal gentleness, the Russian Dance has marvellous zest and the Waltz of the Flowers combines warmth and elegance with an exhilarating vigour. The Sleeping Beauty and Swan Lake selections are hardly less distinguished, and in the former the Panorama is gloriously played. The CD remastering now approaches demonstration standard, combining bloom with enhanced detail. Sixty-nine minutes of sheer joy and at mid-price.

As reissued in Decca's Legend series, the Karajan recording is very impressive indeed; tuttis are well focused by the digital transfer, and the glowing ambience of the Sofiensaal flatters the strings and adds to the woodwind colourings, particularly in the Nutcracker Suite, which is less bland here than in Karajan's later re-recording with the BPO. Overall this disc offers very fine playing from the VPO and, although the atmosphere is generally relaxed (especially in Sleeping Beauty), there is a persuasive warmth.

Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

🔑 Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57047. RPO, Gatti – PROKOFIEV: Romeo and Juliet (ballet; excerpts) ***

(*) Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 019. Netherlands PO, Kreizberg – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 (From the New World) **(*)

Daniele Gatti's performances could not be more highly charged romantically, and with a vividly passionate (if not always immaculate) response from the RPO, the climaxes are thrilling, with the horns and trumpets ringing out superbly at the climax of the duel sequence. The recording too is splendidly full and sumptuous, and the rare coupling with Prokofiev could not be more apt. This is one of Classic fM's finest issues so far.

A strong, incisive performance of Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet from Kreizberg to match the Dvořák Symphony, very well played and brilliantly recorded.

The Seasons, Op. 37b; Chanson triste; Mazurka, Chant sans paroles; Danse russe, Op. 40/2, 4, 6 & 10; Rêverie interrompte (arr. for violin & orchestra by Breiner)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553510. Nishizaki, Queensland SO, Breiner

If Tchaikovsky's 12 Seasons are to be arranged for violin, Takako Nishizaki is surely their ideal exponent, for she plays with delicacy and charm. If the fully scored items (the February 'Carnival' and the brassy picture of the September 'Hunt') are rather inflated by the resonant acoustic, these arrangements overall can be counted a modest success, alongside those of the piano pieces from Op. 40 (the Danse russe will be recognized from Swan Lake), while the closing Rêverie has a proper salon daintiness.

Sérénade mélancólique (for violin and orchestra), Op. 26

 EMI 5 62607-2. Menuhin, RPO, Boult – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto in D; Romance 1 in G ***

Recorded in 1959 as a filler for a version of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto never completed, Menuhin's account of the Sérénade mélancolique, previously unpublished, conveys a gravity beyond its modest span. It is a welcome coupling for the superb Beethoven performances.

Serenade for Strings in C, Op. 48

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61763-2 (2). LCO, Warren-Green – DVOŘÁK: Serenade for Strings in E, Op. 22; ELGAR: Introduction & allegro; Serenade; SUK: Serenade; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on Greensleeves, etc ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 262-2. ASMF, Marriner – GRIEG: Holberg Suite  ; (with DVOŘÁK: Serenade **(*))

Serenade for Strings; Souvenir de Florence. Op. 70

(BB)  Naxos 8.550404. VCO, Entremont

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 4 82103-2. City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox (with FAURÉ: Pavane) – BIZET: Symphony in C; IBERT: Divertissement; RAVEL: Tombeau de Couperin **(*)

Not surprisingly, Christopher Warren-Green's reading of Tchaikovsky's Serenade with the excellent London Chamber Orchestra is full of individuality. The first movement's secondary idea has an appealing feathery lightness, and when the striding opening theme reappears at the end of the movement it brings a spontaneous-sounding burst of expressive intensity characteristic of this group. The Waltz lilts gently, with the tenutos nicely managed, the Elégie has delicacy as well as fervour, and the finale develops plenty of energy. Very well recorded, it is a performance to give pleasure for its freshness and natural impetus, and the couplings are amazingly generous and equally stimulating.

Marriner's classic 1968 version holds its place among the best. Although Tchaikovsky asked for as big a body of strings as possible in his delectable Serenade, there is much to be said, in these days of increased string resonance and clever microphone placing, for having a more modest band like the Academy of St Martin's-in-the-Field. However, one does notice the lack of sheer tonal weight that a larger group would afford. Marriner's performance compensates with expressive phrasing (most striking in the slow movement), imaginative and fresh playing from the Academy, and the finest pointing and precision of ensemble. The original coupling of the Souvenir de Florence now lives on a Double Decca CD with the String Quartets (452 614-2), but the couplings here are excellent. A fine transfer in this Legends reissue.

Philip Entremont's performances of Tchaikovsky's two major string works communicate above all a feeling of passionate thrust and energy. After the ardour of the Elégie, the finale steals in persuasively, with dance-rhythms bracing and strong. The Souvenir de Florence has comparable momentum and eagerness. The VCO are committed, persuasive advocates to make one wonder why the Souvenir does not have a more central place in the string repertoire.

Hickox's well-played performances are both vivacious and nicely detailed, with Tchaikovsky's contrasts of mood in the Souvenir well observed. The recording is full and resonant, with the upper range perhaps lacking the last touch of refinement. But overall this is a worthwhile bargain package.

The Sleeping Beauty, Op. 66 (ballet; complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 101 113 (Choreography: Marius Petipa; staged Yuri Grigorovich). Nina Semizorova, Aleksei Fadeyechev, Nina Speranskaya, Yuri Vetrov, Maria Bilova, Bolshoi Ballet & Theatre O, Aleksander Kopilov (V/D: Shuji Fujii)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 312 (Choreography: Petipa, revised Konstantin Sergeyev). Lezhnina, Ruzimatov, Makhalina, Guliayev (Carabosse), Kirov Ballet Co. & O, Fedotov (V/D: Bernard Picard)

Of the three great Tchaikovsky ballets, in the view of the composer's biographer, David Brown, the greatest score of all is the Sleeping Beauty, if only for its sheer fecundity – well over two hours of continuous melodic inspiration – and incredibly imaginative scoring. Tchaikovsky, too, thought it was among his best works. 'The subject is so poetic and so well suited to music,' he wrote, and he was very disappointed when, at its first performance, it received a lukewarm reception. But, of course, it has survived, although even today one of the problems of production is that Petipa's highly demanding choreography needs not just two or four but a whole group of leading dancers, with both Princess Aurora and the Lilac Fairy major female roles.

The story, histrionic as it is, occupies very little of the scenario – one of the weaknesses of the original 'libretto'. All three Acts have Divertissements, and both the outer Acts include variations for the key fairy attendants and solos for the Lilac Fairy. But in the extended third Act not only are there characteristic dances by Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, and by Puss-in-Boots and the White Cat (exquisitely danced here), but a big, demanding number for the Blue Bird, while the Prince and Princess (separately, and together) have a whole series of bravura dances, all to marvellous music.

The 1989 Bolshoi production offered here is as lavish as one could wish, and historically traditional in the sense that Yuri Grigorovich has rescued a very high proportion of Petipa's original choreography and scenario so that, as nearly as possible, we are seeing what Tchaikovsky envisaged, produced with a large cast in terms of the huge stage of the Bolshoi Theatre.

As for the dancing, not surpisingly it is quite fabulous, with the key characters matched in their virtuosity by the many ensemble dances for the corps de ballet, but with Nina Semizorova outstanding in the role of Princess Aurora, matched by the incredibly virile (and good-looking) Prince, Aleksei Fadeyechev. Nina Speranskaya is a delectably graceful Lilac Fairy, given another of Tchaikovsky's most memorable tunes whenever she appears. Even so, Yuri Vetrov as the grotesquely malignant Carabosse nearly steals the show in his two main appearances.

With traditional sets, one cannot think that we will see Tchaikovsky's and Petipa's masterpiece more effectively staged or better danced, and the cameras follow the dancers in close-up or long shot very perceptively. The lavish period costumes are based on the illustrations which accompanied the original story, reflecting the court of the Sun King, where Charles Perrault's fairytale was first heard.

The Arthaus DVD performance was recorded and filmed in June 1989 during the Kirov's guest appearance in Canada at the Place des Arts in Montreal. The dancing is pretty virtuosic and both the character dances and the main roles are flawless: the performance lingers in the memory long afterwards. The production, too, conveys an appropriate sense of magic, and the visual direction is well handled. The orchestral playing under Viktor Fedotov is first class (save for an unappealing clarinet quality) but the recording is inconsistent in balance, with a very prominent piano at one point. Things settle down, however, and the bulk of the last act is in good perspective. This does not detract from the overall satisfaction and sheer delight these dancers give.

The Sleeping Beauty, Op. 66 (ballet; complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4091-2 (2). BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky

🔑 * DG 457 634-2 (2). Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0560 (2). OSR, Ansermet

(BB)  Naxos 8.550490/2. Slovak State PO (Košice), Mogrelia

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85788-2 (2). LSO, Previn

Rozhdestvensky's recording, made in 1979, was part of the BBC Symphony Orchestra's 50th anniversary celebrations and is fully worthy of the occasion. The great Russian conductor (using the original Russian score which is absolutely complete) shows just how to hold Tchaikovsky's ballet together as a symphonic entity by creating a consistent narrative pulse. In Tchaikovsky's inspired series of characteristic dances the conductor's light rhythmic touch and delicacy of feeling draw a wonderfully refined yet vividly coloured response from the BBC players. The ballet ends majestically, and the BBC recording has plenty of amplitude, warm strings, glowing woodwind and a natural concert-hall balance.

Pletnev's is a performance of individuality and high quality. It is a strongly narrative and dramatic account that has tenderness and much the same virtuosity that Pletnev exhibits at the keyboard. It is now offered at mid-price for the first time.

Ansermet's 1959 Sleeping Beauty recording has been remastered with great success. The stereo conveys the attractive concert hall ambience splendidly, and the climaxes remain spectacular. The strings have clean outline and there is no lack of body. If the solo wind-playing sometimes lacks the last ounce of polish, the overall effect is alive and colourful. Indeed, the opening is highly dramatic, and a high tension is maintained throughout this performance, with Ansermet's rhythmic grip unfailingly impressive. The conductor is at his very best in the characteristic dances which show the composer at his most felicitous, especially in the later part of the score, and here the sparkle of the Decca recording tells again and again. A very welcome return to the catalogue.

Andrew Mogrelia conducts Tchaikovsky's score with a fine combination of warmth, grace and vitality. Moreover, the Slovak State Philharmonic prove to be an excellent orchestra for this repertoire, with good wind-players and equally impressive string principals for the important violin and cello solos. The Naxos digital recording is full and brilliant without being overlit, and the acoustics of the House of Arts in Košice bring a spacious ambience, with vivid orchestral colours. First class value.

With warm, polished orchestral playing and recording to match (though it expands at climaxes), Previn conveys his affection throughout; but too often – in the famous Waltz, for instance – there could be more sparkle. On the other hand, the Panorama shows Previn and the LSO at their very best, the tune floating over its rocking bass in the most magical way. There is also much delightful wind-playing but, with Previn's tempi sometimes indulgently relaxed, it has been impossible to get the complete recording on a pair of CDs and the penultimate number (29) in Act III (included in the original three-disc LP issue) has been cut.

Ballet Suites, selections from: (i) Sleeping Beauty (3 pieces orch. Stravinsky) (ii) Swan Lake

Ⓝ (*) Hanssler CD.93234. SWR. SO, (i) Wakasugi; (ii) Ahronovich – STRAVINSKY: Chant du Rossignol ***

This mixed disc is issued to celebrate the Ballet Russe, founded by Diaghilev in 1909. Swan Lake comes in a suite of 8 movements, mainly the lesser-known ones, except for the Waltz. The three pieces from Sleeping Beauty are in an arrangement commissioned from Stravinsky, who echoes the example of Tchaikovsky but with even greater reliance on woodwind solos.

Sleeping Beauty: Aurora's Wedding (suite selected and edited by Diaghilev)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Cala CACD 0529 (ADD) Nat. PO, Stokowski (with 'Encores', all arr. Stokowski: DEBUSSY: Clair de lune; Soirée dans Grenade; ALBENIZ: Ibéria: Fête-Dieu à Seville; NOVÁČEK: Perpetuum mobile; SHOSTAKOVICH: Prelude in E flat min; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Flight of the Bumble-bee; TCHAIKOVSKY: Humoresque in G, Op. 10/2; CHOPIN: Mazurka in B flat min.; Prélude in D min. Op.28/24 ***)

Diaghilev staged the first performance of Tchaikovsky's Sleeping Beauty outside Russia in a London season in 1921. The result was a financial disaster. The following year the great impresario devised a one-act version centring on the Act III Divertissement, framed by the Introduction and final Apothéose. Stokowski was attracted to the score and recorded it twice. His stereo version, made when he was 94, dates from 1976, yet, as with so many of the recordings he made during his 'Indian summer', the electricity crackles throughout, and his charisma is felt in every bar. The Sony recording is vividly brilliant, lacking sumptuousness in the violins, but otherwise very good.

It was an inspired idea of Edward Johnson of the Stokowski Society to link Aurora with his even more charismatic collection of encores, recorded three months later. Here the sound is even better, approaching demonstration quality.

Souvenir de Florence, Op. 70 (string orchestra version)

🔑 * Channel Classics SACD: CCS SA 21504. Amsterdam Sinf., Thompson – VERDI: String Quartet ***

🔑 * Chan. 9708. Norwegian CO, Brown – RICHARD STRAUSS: Metamorphosen ***

The Amsterdam Sinfonietta, formerly called the Nieuw Sinfonietta Amsterdam, here offers outstanding performances of two works originally written for solo strings which, played like this by a string orchestra, are if anything even more impressive, and the unanimity of the playing, the immaculate precision of ensemble, is phenomenal, yet it is never a cold precision. The resonance of the playing is exceptional too, involving a strikingly wide dynamic range and a meticulous observance of markings. The opulent recording helps, with a helpful ambience allowing ample detail, with the opportunity of 'surround sound' if you have the additional speakers.

Iona Brown and the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra give us a splendid account of the full orchestral version of Tchaikovsky's invigorating and captivating Souvenir de Florence, bouncingly rhythmic in the opening movement, and buoyantly exuberant in the swinging secondary theme of the finale. There is both warmth and subtlety in the inner movements; and it is given one of Chandos's most brilliant and full-bodied recordings. The result is irresistible.

Souvenir d'un lieu cher, Op. 42; Valse scherzo in C, Op. 34 (orch. Glazunov)

Ⓜ  DG 457 064-2. Shaham, Russian Nat. O, Pletnev – GLAZUNOV; KABALEVSKY: Concertos ***

Eloquent and dazzling playing of these two Tchaikovsky pieces by Gil Shaham are an additional inducement to get this fine coupling of the Glazunov and Kabalevsky Concertos.

Suites 1 in D min., Op. 43; 2 in C; 3 in G, Op. 55; 4 in G, (Mozartiana), Op. 56

 Chan. 9676 (2). Detroit SO, Järvi

(BB)  Naxos 8.550644 (Nos. 1–2); (*) 8.550728 (Nos. 3–4). Nat. SO of Ireland, Sanderling

Järvi generally adopts somewhat brisk tempi, especially in 1, but the Detroit orchestral response in both the two earliest suites is consistently winning. The performance of the Fourth Suite also has an agreeable warmth, aptly Tchaikovskian even more than it is elegantly Mozartian. In 3, the most ambitious of the set, Järvi continues to draw warmly expressive playing from his Detroit musicians even if his treatment here is a little heavy-handed (as it is just occasionally in 2). The performance is well characterized – not least in the colourfully diverse variations that make up the last and longest movement and that are given an ebullient finale – but lacks something in charm. In this the acoustic of the Detroit hall is not as helpful as it might be to high fortissimo violins.

On Naxos, Stefan Sanderling (son of Kurt) gives nicely turned performances of the first two suites, neatly characterized and with much charm and colour. The Third and Fourth Suites are slightly less successful. Sanderling shows much delicacy of feeling, both in the opening Gigue of Mozartiana and in the Elégie, the first movement of the Third Suite. In Mozartiana Sanderling is very romantic. The masterly Theme and Variations which end the Third Suite are splendidly done until the finale, which refuses to take off: Sanderling is that bit too grandiose and measured.

Suite 3 in G, Op. 55

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 061. Russian Nat. O, Jurowski – STRAVINSKY: Le Baiser de la fée (divertimento) ****

The Third Suite with its extended set of variations for finale can seem rather square under some conductors, but Jurowski, maybe influenced by his conducting of opera and ballet, brings out the surging lyricism of all four movements. So the opening Elégie is warmly moulded without ever sounding fussy, with phrasing that seems totally idiomatic. The rhythmic lightness of the second-movement Waltz leads to a dazzling account of the third-movement Scherzo, taken at a genuine Presto, yet with no feeling of breathlessness, while the Variations have rarely seemed so attractive in their breadth of ideas, leading to a thrilling build-up and conclusion. Exceptionally vivid sound, recorded by Pentatone's Dutch engineers in Moscow, spectacular in surround sound.

Suites: (i) 3 in G, Op. 55; (ii) 4 (Mozartiana) in G, Op. 61

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2723. (i) VPO, Maazel; (ii) SRO, Ansermet

The first thing one notices about Maazel's 1977 recording of the underrated Third Suite with its superb closing set of variations is the ravishing playing of the VPO, with the strings sounding gloriously rich and glowing in the Decca sound, and with Maazel relaxed and unforced. The performance is not as strongly characterized as some, but it is far from bland, especially the woodwind detail, having a pleasing individuality of colour. All the things one expects from a classic Ansermet performance are here in the Fourth (Mozartiana) Suite: vivid sound (with a lovely, warm ambience), felicity of detail, especially in the pointing of the strings, but less than ideally polished orchestral playing for a work drawing on Mozart. However, it remains enjoyable for its distinct character and spontaneity.

Swan Lake (complete recording of original Mariinsky performing edition; CD version)

(*) Decca 475 7669 (2). Mariinsky Theatre O, Gergiev

Swan Lake (highlights from the above)

 Decca 475 9080

Here is the original Mariinsky performing edition of the score, which the composer never heard and which he did not plan himself. It is marvellously played under Gergiev and given a gorgeously sumptuous Decca recording. But the total timing of the two discs is just 107 minutes, so collectors will surely find the very enjoyable highlights disc (76 minutes) a better investment.

Swan Lake, Op. 20 (ballet; complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ❀ *DVD 073 4044. Fonteyn, Nureyev, V. State Op. Ballet, VSO, Lanchbery (Chorography; Rudolf Nureyev, Dir: Truck Branss)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OA0966D. Fernandez, Letestu, Martinez, Paquette, Paris Opéra Ballet, Paris Opéra O, Vello Pähn (Choreography: Rudolf Nureyev)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0865 D. (Choreography: Peter Wright, after Petipa and Ivanov) Nordquist, Nordström, Kaila, Rambe, Ohman, Swedish Ballet School, Royal Swedish Op. O, Quéval (V/D: Kirsty Garland)

There is little one needs to say about the 1966 Swan Lake except that it is one of the great ballet films of all time and looks marvellous on DVD. Moreover, the sound is excellent, as is the photography, with the camera angles well judged so that there are frequent close-ups of the most famous ballet dance partnership of our time. Nureyev's choreography (based on Ivanov/Petipa), like the production, décor and costumes, is satisfyingly traditional, which means it is what Tchaikovsky and Petipa envisaged, without spurious additions. The story is told simply and dramatically and, apart from the unforgettable and moving dancing of the two principals, the whole company give outstanding support in the many colourful individual dances. Highlights include the touching scene in Act II when Prince Siegfried, crossbow at the ready, is disconcerted to meet and fall in love with Odette, and the following Danses des cygnes (with some lovely, tender playing from the solo violin of the orchestra's principal violin). After the delightful Divertissement, Siegfried's great pas de deux of Act III, with Odile, is breathtaking, and the ballet's tragic end when, after parting from Odette, Siegfried sinks between the swirling waters of Rotbart's lake is most imaginatively achieved. John Lanchbery conducts the excellent Vienna Symphony Orchestra with great flair, and altogether this is unbeatable.

This Parisian Swan Lake offers the reworked choreography which Nureyev devised for his 1984 production of the ballet and which has remained a favoured revival ever since. In this production the roles of the Prince's tutor, Wolfgang, and Rothbart are taken – brilliantly – by Karl Paquette, and Wolfgang becomes an equivocal and manipulative character and the double of the ballet's evil genius, the magician Rothbart. The performance is compelling, indeed riveting, though we didn't find Agnès Letestu as warm as the sleeve-note proclaims; on the contrary, she is distinctly cool, unsmiling and wanting in charm. José Fernandez is lyrical and a musical artist, but the corps de ballet is stunning in its unanimity and character – the equal of any in the world. Readers used to traditional views of the ballet should see this gripping newcomer.

The Royal Swedish Ballet's Swan Lake, recorded on 24 May 2002, is elegant and sumptuous, inventively choreographed and beautifully staged by Sir Peter Wright and Galina Samsova, with particularly splendid sets and costumes. Peter Wright stages it as a Gothic tragedy concentrating on the role of the Prince and honouring the 1895 Petipa/Ivanov original. In Nathalie Nordquist and Anders Nordström it has a fine and expressive partnership, and the cast as a whole has no weaknesses. Indeed, one of the strengths of the performance is the excellence of the teamwork of the company. (It is tastefully and imaginatively lit, too, by Martin Säfström.) It is very well danced, though the Odette/Odile is not perhaps as strongly characterized as Steffi Scherzer in the Berlin performance under Daniel Barenboim, available on Arthaus.

Swan Lake, Op. 20 (ballet; complete; CD versions)

🔑  Decca 436 212-2 (2). Montreal SO, Dutoit

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 93243-2. LSO, Previn

Ⓜ  Naxos 8.555873/4. Russian State SO, Yablonsky

Ⓑ (*) DG Double 453 055-2 (2). Boston SO, Ozawa

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 85541-2 (2). Phd. O, Sawallisch

Dutoit offers the original score virtually complete. The Montreal Orchestra play it beautifully, rising to the plot's histrionic moments while not lacking the final apotheosis. Dutoit's reading, while not lacking drama, emphasizes the warmth and grace of the music and its infinite variety.

Previn's mid-1970s set, like his recordings of the other Tchaikovsky ballets, offers extremely polished orchestral playing, with beautiful wind solos. Ida Haendel's solo contributions are first class, and there is much refined detail and no lack of drama when the music calls for it. Previn is at his finest in the Act II Divertissement with its variety of national dances, where the orchestral soloists all excel themselves. The remastered recording also sounds very fresh, with little loss of ambient warmth.

A very Russian performance of Swan Lake on Naxos, superbly recorded. The playing is idiomatic, polished and exciting, with the unnamed solo violinist making an excellent contribution; but the whole orchestra are on their toes. This is not a relaxed performance but one in which there is plenty of charm and character, and free-running adrenalin too. A real bargain.

Ozawa's version omits the Act III Pas de deux but otherwise plays the complete original score. His performance is alive and vigorous (as at the opening Allegro giusto), but it has not quite the verve of Lanchbery's EMI version; Ozawa's approach is more serious, less flexible. Yet with polished, sympathetic playing from the Boston Orchestra there are many impressive and enjoyable things here, with wind (and violin) solos always giving pleasure. The end result is a little faceless, in spite of a spectacular, wide-ranging analogue recording, as vivid as it is powerful.

Sawallisch directs Tchaikovsky's greatest ballet score with pleasing freshness, and the Philadelphia Orchestra play superbly. But, as so often in the past, they are let down by the choice of venue for the recording, in this instance the Memorial Hall, Fairmount Park, whose apparently intractible acoustics have led to close microphone placing, creating an unnatural effect. There is no lack of atmosphere, but very soon it becomes apparent that fortissimos are unrefined, with fierce cymbals, grainy violins, even an element of harshness. Yet there is much to enjoy, while the thrilling final climax (with gorgeously full horn-tone at the restatement of the famous idée fixe) makes an overwhelming apotheosis, even if the shrillness added to the violins, who play with enormous fervour, is not a plus factor.

Swan Lake (ballet: abridged); (i) Rococo Variations. Symphony 6 (Pathétique)

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0563 (2). SRO, Ansermet with (i) Gendron

Ansermet is best in the characteristic dances in Act 3 in his vividly recorded fairly complete Swan Lake, dating from 1958. The Entrée des invites (Fanfares) are strikingly bright and crisp, and the Danse espagnole and Danse napolitaine are delightfully pointed. However, there is plenty of drama and feeling of theatre throughout this performance. Gendron plays the charming Variations with a sense of elegance and a fine, firm tone. Ansermet accompanies affectionately, and the mono sound is excellent, even if the orchestra is inclined to a touch of shrillness. As for the Pathétique, the first Penguin review said, 'Ansermet is Ansermet', and whilst the original reviewer felt he had little sympathy with this work, the present writer feels Ansermet fans will get much pleasure from his clear-headed interpretation. The introduction has a cool beauty to it, and the famous third movement is excitingly lively and energetic, if not immaculate in ensemble. But it is Ansermet's avoidance of excess which makes his performance so satisfying, and the 1956 recording amazes in its brilliance.

Swan Lake, Op. 20 (highlights)

✿ * Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 9032: Concg. O, Fistoulari

Ⓜ ((*)) Cala mono CACD0543. NBC SO, Stokowski – STRAUSS: Waltzes: An der schönen blauen Donau; Geschichten aus den Wiener Wald; BEETHOVEN: Ruins of Athens: Turkish March; MOZART: Turkish March (arr. Stokowski from Piano Sonata 11: Alla Turca)

Fistoulari was a great conductor of ballet music, and we have long admired this 1960 selection of highlights from Swan Lake, which at the time of its first issue was revelatory. It is a real collectors' item and this is its CD debut. It is essentially a relaxed reading, but the Concertgebouw Orchestra plays superbly and there is a wonderful sense of the theatre combined with spontaneous music-making. For its date, the recording is outstanding too. At only a little over 46 minutes' playing time, this is very much quality over quantity.

Stokowski's 1954/5 set of highlights from Swan Lake (more than an hour of music) was a recording première; hitherto only the suite had been readily available (although some extended excerpts of little-known passages from the score had been issued on four Columbia 78s in the 1940s). Most of the music here comes from Acts II and III, but the sequence is Stokowski's own, and includes one of the composer's piano pieces from Op. 72, orchestrated by Drigo and used in performances at that time.

The response of the NBC Orchestra has both panache and excitement, with fine woodwind playing. An enjoyable selection, then, and not at all predictable. The transfer to CD is remarkably good and this is well worth having, if not one of the maestro's very finest records from this era.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–6

Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 429 675-2 (4). BPO, Karajan

(*) DG 449 967-2 (5). Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Symphonies 1–6; Capriccio italien; Manfred Symphony

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Chan. 10392 (6). Oslo PO, Jansons

Jansons's Tchaikovsky series, which includes Manfred, is self-recommending. The full romantic power of the music is consistently conveyed and, above all, the music-making is urgently spontaneous throughout, with the Oslo Philharmonic Orchestra always committed and fresh, helped by the richly atmospheric Chandos sound. A supreme bargain.

Having recorded the last three Tchaikovsky symphonies three times over in little more than ten years, Karajan finally turned to the early symphonies; and there, in 1975/6, displaying the same superlative refined qualities, produced performances equally illuminating. It is typical that, though the opening Allegro tranquillo of the first movement of 1 is taken fast, there is no feeling of breathlessness, as there often is: it is a genuine tranquillo, though the rhythmic bite of the syncopated passages, so important in these early symphonies, could hardly be sharper. The high polish may give a hint of the ballroom to some of the dance movements, with the folk element underplayed, but no finer set of symphonies has been recorded since: it is commandingly consistent and vivid in sound, although (in the last three symphonies especially), it is not always richly resonant in the lower range.

Pletnev's readings have all the innate aristocratic feeling Tchaikovsky could ask for, but at no time does Pletnev wear his heart on his sleeve. Some may feel that the emphasis in the First Symphony is too much on the rêveries of the title, and Tchaikovsky's rhetoric might be handled more convincingly; but, for the most part, Pletnev's approach throughout the cycle is the reverse of overblown. Indeed, the highly charged, high-voltage sound which we associate with Mravinsky surfaces in the Pathétique, but otherwise he sets greater store by classicism, carefully balanced proportions and a masterly sense of line. DG have accorded the cycle very fine and well-detailed sound.

Symphonies 1–6; (i) Piano Concerto 1; (ii) Violin Concerto; Capriccio italien; Eugene Onegin: Polonaise & Waltz; Marche slave; The Nutcracker Suite; 1812 Overture; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture); Sleeping Beauty: Suite; String Serenade; Swan Lake: Suite; (iii) Variations on a Rococo Theme

Ⓑ (*) DG (ADD) 463 774-2 (8). (i) Richter, VSO; (ii) Ferras; (iii) Rostropovich; BPO; all cond. Karajan

These Berlin performances of the Symphonies are fine in every way; perhaps a bit of over-refinement creeps in from time to time, but by any standards they are a magnificent achievement, especially the symphonies. The Violin Concerto is superbly shaped by Karajan, though some will find Ferras's tone lacking charm – his close vibrato in lyrical passages tends to emphasize schmaltz on the G string. Richter and Karajan are, to say the least, controversial in the Piano Concerto. In the first movement, both artists play havoc with any sense of forward tempo (though there are occasional bursts of real excitement). Clearly two major artists at work, but the result is none too convincing. The Rococo Variations with Rostropovich is a breath of fresh air after all that – lovely glowing accounts – and the orchestral music is generally fine, but not outstanding, and a hint of glossiness creeps in from time to time (though the Sleeping Beauty and Swan Lake suites are quite superb). The sound throughout the set is of a generally high standard.

Symphonies 1–6; Manfred Symphony; Capriccio italien; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture); Serenade for Strings; The Tempest; Eugene Onegin: Polonaise

(BB)  Virgin 5 61893-2 (6). Bournemouth SO, Litton

Andrew Litton's set of the Tchaikovsky Symphonies, including Manfred, is in many ways his finest achievement on record, and this super-super-bargain Virgin box is very desirable indeed. The cycle gets off to a splendid start with the first two Symphonies, which are very successful. With warm and full recording, less distanced than many on this label, these urgently spontaneous performances rival any in the catalogue.

Again in the outer movements of 3 Litton challenges his players to the limit, setting fast speeds, but the clean, purposeful manner is very satisfying, even if some other versions spring rhythms more infectiously. Litton's finesse comes out impressively in the Andante elegiaco, where he chooses a flowing tempo needing no modification for the broad melody that follows, which is then nobly moulded. 4 is essentially spacious, both in choice of tempi and the rather backward balance of the orchestra. Ideally one needs a brighter focus in this symphony, yet Litton, with crisp ensemble, builds the structure of the first movement steadily and unerringly.

The first movement of the Fifth is surprisingly slow and steady, and here the reading lacks the high voltage of Litton's finest Tchaikovsky performances. But the slow movement brings a beautiful horn solo, and the Waltz is delightfully fresh and delicate. The finale is again on the broad side, warm rather than ominous, with very clean articulation in the playing. The Pathétique caps the cycle impressively: an outstanding performance, full of temperament, not just fiery but tender too, arguably the finest of the whole cycle. The Bournemouth playing has never been more clearly articulated.

Manfred is both individual and satisfying and throughout Litton controls the tension to bring out the narrative sequence and heighten the dramatic cohesion. The sound is clean cut and well balanced, with the organ entry at the end of the finale among the most dramatic on record.

The encores are substantial and add much to the attractions of the set. In the Capriccio italien both playing and recording display the dramatic contrasts of texture and dynamic to the full, while the Eugene Onegin Polonaise brings an even more infectiously rhythmic lift. On the other hand the String Serenade is warmly romantic, with the Waltz elegant and the Elégie expressively intense, and the finale bursts with energy. The Tempest is given an outstanding performance, while Romeo and Juliet is similarly fine. All in all, this is an astonishing bargain.

Symphonies 1-6; Manfred; Francesca da Rimini; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 19443-2 (5). LPO, Rostropovich

Rostropovich recorded his Tchaikovsky cycle concurrently with live performances at the Royal Festival Hall, and though at certain points (as in some of the fugato development sections) the ensemble could be a shade crisper, the performances have not only passion and electricity but great charm and refinement too. The first three symphonies are superbly done in every way – Rostropovich manages to choose his tempi most persuasively, and his rhythmic pointing is consistently delectable – outshining here almost any opposition outside the complete sets. Symphonies Nos. 4 to 6 are all characterised by relatively slow but well-pointed accounts of the first movements, and only in No. 5 is there a suspicion of the argument dragging. Otherwise these are sensitive, deeply felt readings which should be easy to live with. Manfred too is most persuasively done, with a scherzo of Berliozian refinement, though the recording in that work is not quite so rich and atmospheric as in the rest of the cycle. However the pianissimo string tone is particularly beautiful.

The readings of Francesca da Rimini and Romeo and Juliet are intensely individual and full of poetic feeling, yet they are underpinned by the drama of the narrative. The ebb and flow of tension have the spontaneity of live performances and the listener is carried along by the expressive vitality of the orchestral playing. Rostropovich achieves an epic rather than a romantic approach to Romeo and Juliet, and Francesca has a similar sense of scale and high drama, with a breathtaking finale, yet touching delicacy in the work's central section with radiant sounds from the LPO woodwind. The recording is resonant and spacious, with great body and impact, altogether thrilling.

Symphonies 1–3; Capriccio italien; Marche slave

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 459 518-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

Having recorded the last three Tchaikovsky symphonies three times in little more than a decade, Karajan then, at the end of the 1970s, turned to the early Symphonies and brought to them the same superlative qualities. With his great orchestra finely honed in ensemble the playing throughout proved marvellous and the performances equally illuminating. It is typical that even though the opening tranquillo of 1 is taken fast there is no feeling of breathlessness, it is genuinely tranquillo, although the rhythmic bite of the syncopated passages, so important in these early symphonies, could hardly be sharper. In the Little Russian Symphony the tempo for the Andante is very nicely judged and the outer movements have plenty of drama and fire. In 3 Karajan even finds an affinity with Brahms in the second movement (which Tchaikovsky would not have acknowledged), yet the climax of the Andante is full of Tchaikovskian fervour and in the less tractable finale the articulation of the Polacca (which gave the symphony its sobriquet 'Polish') is both vigorous and joyful. The recording is bold, full-bodied, brilliant and clear.

Symphony 1 (Winter Daydreams); Francesca da Rimini; (i) Variations on a Rococo Theme for Cello & Orchestra (DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 102 121. Moscow RSO, Fedoseyev; (i) with Meneses

Fedoseyev has the full measure of the Winter Daydreams Symphony, catching the lyrical delicacy of the first movement, while the lovely Adagio blossoms in its touchingly nostalgic yet rich espressivo. The finale is very exciting without being over-driven. The account of Francesca da Rimini which follows is superb, easily matching Stokowski's famous early version both in colour and in passionate intensity, after creating a delightful portrait of Francesca herself. Then the whirlwinds of the inferno are taken to a tempestuous climax and Fedoseyev's accelerando in the coda has one on the edge of one's seat. As a closing highlight, Antonio Meneses joins the orchestra for an equally outstanding account of the delightful Rococo Variations, alternating sparkling bravura with touching warmth. The recording is first class, and this is among the finest of all Tchaikovsky DVDs. The camerawork cannot be faulted.

Symphony 1 in G min. (Winter Daydreams) (CD version)

🔑 * Chan. 8402. Oslo PO, Jansons

Symphony 1; Hamlet (Fantasy Overture)

(BB)  Naxos 8.550517. Polish Nat. RSO, Leaper

Refreshingly direct in style, Mariss Jansons with his brilliant orchestra gives an electrically compelling performance of this earliest of the Symphonies. Structurally strong, the result tingles with excitement, most of all in the finale, faster than usual, with the challenge of the complex fugato passages taken superbly. The recording is highly successful.

Adrian Leaper also conducts a taut and sympathetic reading of Winter Daydreams, with excellent playing from the Polish Orchestra enhanced by vivid recording, fresh and clear, with plenty of body and with refined pianissimo playing from the strings in the slow movement. This is among the finest Tchaikovsky recordings on the Naxos list, with all four movements sharply characterized. The overture too comes in a tautly dramatic reading. An outstanding bargain.

Symphonies 1, 5 & 6 (Pathétique); Romeo and Juliet Fantasy Overture; The Tempest

(N) (B) (*) Virgin 6 93238-2 (2). Bournemouth SO, Litton

Litton's performances are drawn from his complete cycle listed above. The three chosen symphonies are all impressively played, with the exception of the outer movements of the Fifth which lack something in forward thrust. But the Pathétique is very successful in every respect and so are the brilliant accounts of Romeo and Juliet and The Tempest. Excellent recording too.

Symphony 2 in C min. (Little Russian), Op. 17 (original (1872) score); Festive Overture on the Danish National Anthem, Op. 15; Serenade for Nikolai Rubinstein's Saint's Day; Mazeppa: Battle of Poltava; Cossack Dance

 Chan. 9190. LSO, Simon

This was the first recording of Tchaikovsky's original score of the Little Russian Symphony and probably the first performance outside Russia. In 1879 Tchaikovsky retrieved the score and rewrote the first movement. He left the Andante virtually unaltered, touched up the scoring of the Scherzo, made minor excisions and added repeats, and made a huge cut of 150 bars (some two minutes of music) in the finale. He then destroyed the original. (The present performance has been possible because of the surviving orchestral parts.) Though this first attempt cannot match the reworked first movement, and the finale – delightful though it is – needs no extra bars, it is fascinating to hear the composer's first thoughts, and this is an indispensable recording for all Tchaikovskians. Geoffrey Simon secures a committed response from the LSO, and the recording is striking in its inner orchestral detail and freshness. The music from Mazeppa, the Danish Festival Overture and the tribute to Rubinstein make engaging bonuses.

Symphony 2; Capriccio italien, Op. 45

 Chan. 8460. Oslo PO, Jansons

Jansons prefers a fastish speed for the Andantino second movement, but what above all distinguishes this version is the joyful exuberance both of the bouncy Scherzo – fresh and folk-like in the Trio – and of the finale, and the final coda brings a surge of excitement, making most others seem stiff. The coupling is a fizzing performance of the Capriccio italien. With some edge on violin tone, this is not the finest of the Chandos Oslo recordings, but it is still fresh and atmospheric.

Symphony 2 (Little Russian); Serenade for Strings

(BB)  Regis RRC 1266. USSR State SO, Svetlanov

Svetlanov's 1967 account of the Little Russian Symphony is very strong in character and the whole reading is consistent. The immediate yet full-bodied recording suits the very positive style; Svetlanov takes the Andantino quite slowly, and this brings out the charm of the orchestration, but his approach to the finale again generates great energy, although perhaps less in the way of geniality. Yet detail is well revealed, the impetus is irresistible, and at the close, although the rhetoric is kept firmly under control, there is a most satisfying culmination. The String Serenade is equally distinguished. Following Tchaikovsky's wishes, Svetlanov uses a large body of strings which brings richly expressive eloquence to the Elegia slow movement, yet the bouncing secondary theme of the first movement is delightfully pointed. The Waltz is graceful and its lightness and delicacy bring a scherzando element, while the finale, opening nostalgically, then bustles with vigour. The upper range of the strings does show the age of the recording (1970), but they have plenty of body, and this is still a very recommendable coupling.

Symphonies 2 (Little Russian); 6 (Pathétique); Francesca da Rimini; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86531-2 (2). Philh. O, Giulini

Giulini's very distinguished recordings were made between 1956 and 1962 when the Philharmonia was at its peak and the conductor on top form. The Little Russian Symphony was the first version to appear on CD, and it still ranks among the finest. The performance is full of vitality, with brisk tempi throughout, except for the engagingly wistful little march of the Andantino, which makes a perfect foil. The Pathétique is comparatively spacious, and equally memorable. There is a degree of restraint in the way Giulini interprets the big melodies of the first and last movements, which are given an almost Elgarian nobility. Yet passionate intensity is conveyed by the purity and concentration of the playing, which equally builds up electric tension and excitement without hysteria. The performances of Francesca da Rimini and Romeo and Juliet are in a similar mould, full of impetus, colour and passion; in Romeo, Giulini brings out the dignity of the opening and closing pages, and the first appearance of the great love theme is superbly managed. The Kingsway Hall recordings are spectacular, but there is a degree of harshness and fierceness in tuttis, to show the age of the Little Russian Symphony (1956). The Pathétique sounds magnificent, as does Romeo and Juliet, and this set is a superb reminder of Giulini and the Philharmonia at their greatest.

Symphony 3 in D (Polish), Op. 29

🔑 * Chan. 8463. Oslo PO, Jansons

Tchaikovsky's Third is given a clear, refreshingly direct reading by Jansons, but it is the irresistible sweep of urgency with which he builds the development section of the first movement that sets his performance apart, with the basic tempo varied less than usual. The second movement is beautifully relaxed, the Andante elegiaco heartwarmingly expressive, tender and refined, and the Scherzo has a Mendelssohnian elfin quality; but it is the swaggering reading of the finale that sets the seal on the whole performance. Though the recording does not convey a genuinely hushed pianissimo for the strings, it brings full, rich and brilliant sound.

Symphonies 4 & 5

Ⓝ ❁ Sony DVD 888579849. VPO, Karajan

The Fourth and Fifth were recorded in 1984 at the Grosser Musikvereinssaal with the Vienna Philharmonic at the time when Karajan's relationship with the Berlin Philharmonic was under some strain. The Fourth is one of the most commanding and compelling accounts of this great work we have heard and rivets the attention throughout. Karajan's famous 1950s account of the Fourth with the Philharmonia Orchestra bore witness to his special relationship with this music and this makes an equally strong impression. Excellent video presentation enhances its impact.

Symphonies 4–6 (Pathétique) (DVD versions)

 DG DVD 073 4384. BPO, Karajan

As Richard Osborne reminds us, the Tchaikovsky symphonies were among the first that the young Herbert von Karajan took into his repertoire, the Fifth as early as 1929, when he was 20 and he recorded the Sixth only six months after Furtwängler had made his HMV set with the same orchestra, just before the war. Karajan was a masterly Tchaikovsky interpreter (his post-war Fourth with the Philharmonia was tremendous and created renewed enthusiasm for the work). These 1973 performances, recorded in the Philharmonie, are both eloquent and gripping. Strongly recommended for the performances and the imaginative use of the camera.

Symphonies 4–6 (Pathétique) (CD versions)

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 088-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 844-2 (2). Philh. O, Ashkenazy

🔑 * EMI 3 53258-2 (2). St Cecilia O, Pappano

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 81798-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

Karajan's 1977 analogue version of 4 (the most atmospherically recorded of the three) is more compelling than his previous recordings and also is preferable to the newer, digital, Vienna version. Similarly the 1976 reading of the Fifth stands out from his other recordings. The Berlin Philharmonic string-playing is peerless. Karajan had a special affinity with Tchaikovsky's Pathétique Symphony, and of his five stereo versions this one from 1977 is the finest. The digital remastering of the analogue recordings is first rate.

Ashkenazy's set makes a fine alternative bargain on Double Decca. Apart from the emotional power and strong Russian feeling of the readings, the special quality that Ashkenazy conveys is spontaneity. The freshness of his approach, his natural feeling for lyricism on the one hand and drama on the other is consistently compelling. The late-1970s Kingsway Hall recording quality is full and atmospheric.

It says much for Pappano's warmly dramatic approach to Tchaikovsky that these are performances which consistently have one wanting to hear more. The brilliant quality of the digital sound with clean separation adds to the impact of each performance, with the timpani exceptionally clear, and with the outstanding wind soloists of the St Cecilia Orchestra adding distinction to each work. So the rising figure of the second subject given to the clarinet in the Fourth has a cheeky persuasiveness, and the great horn solo in the slow movement of the Fifth is not just refined in its delicacy but intensely meditative. As in his conducting of Puccini, Pappano is consistently persuasive in his use of rubato, notably in the great melodies of the Pathétique, and his control of the all-important climaxes is unerring. These are performances that have one marvelling afresh at the composer's mastery as a symphonist, a quality not always appreciated.

The EMI Gemini set is a pretty good bargain. Karajan's 1971 EMI performances of these three Symphonies are a satisfying achievement, with fine orchestral playing and recording, made in the Berlin Jesus-Christus-Kirche, with plenty of body, even if the sound does produce a degree of edgy fierceness at moments of extreme pressure. Karajan's readings are in many ways similar to his earlier ones for DG, but both 5 and 6 have moments when the music-making is less completely spontaneous than in the DG versions. Nevertheless this is a fine set which will give considerable satisfaction, for Karajan was a great Tchaikovsky conductor and these performances are full of adrenalin and still rank high in the list of recommendations.

(i) Symphony 4; (ii) Francesca da Rimini (DVD versions)

🔑  EMI DVD DVB 5 996899. (i) Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky (colour); (ii) Leningrad PO, Mravinsky (black and white) – see under Documentaries: 'Yevgeny

Mravinsky – Soviet Conductor, Russian Aristocrat'. A documentary by Dennis Marks

These memorable performances are a bonus for a splendid documentary about Mravinsky.

Symphony 4 in F min., Op. 36

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4143-2. Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 1. ()

A particularly valuable reminder of the days when orchestras from the then Soviet Union were heard relatively rarely in the West. This high-voltage account of the Fourth Symphony was recorded at one of three Promenade Concerts this great orchestra gave in the 1971 season, and it has the compelling quality and excitement that live music-making generates. The BBC recording does justice to the rich sonority this great orchestra produced at that period.

Symphony 4 in F min., Op. 36

🔑 * Decca SACD 475 6196. VPO, Gergiev

🔑 * Chan. 8361. Oslo PO, Jansons

Symphony 4; Capriccio italien

 HM HMU 90 7393 RPO, Gatti

Symphony 4; Francesca da Rimini

🔑 * BIS CD 1273. Bamberg SO, Serebrier

Symphony 4 in F min.; Nutcracker Suite; Eugene Onegin: Waltz

Ⓑ ((*)) EMI mono/stereo 3 80016-2. RPO, Beecham

Gergiev's account of 4 was recorded live in the orchestra's home, the Musikverein in Vienna, and the performance captures many of the vital qualities that made his earlier reading of 5 so magnetic. The opening fanfare motif calls us compellingly to attention; but then, after the slow introduction, the start of the main Moderato con anima with its lilting compound time is surprisingly relaxed, yet very convincing. Typically for Gergiev, the tension mounts magnetically, when the balletic waltz-rhythms develop into the movement's big climaxes. The Vienna Philharmonic playing is wonderfully taut in the pizzicato Scherzo, with the 'drunken peasant' passage wittily pointed, while the finale culminates in a subtle accelerando in the closing bars of the coda, with thrilling results. There is no applause at the end, suggesting, as is usual in 'live recordings' in the Musikverein, that a modest amount of patching was conceded.

Jansons conducts a dazzling performance, unusually fresh and natural in its expressiveness, yet with countless subtleties of expression, as in the balletic account of the second-subject group of the first movement. The Andantino flows lightly and persuasively, the Scherzo is very fast and lightly sprung, while the finale reinforces the impact of the whole performance: fast and exciting, but with no synthetic whipping-up of tempo. That is so until the very end of the coda, which finds Jansons pressing ahead just fractionally as he would in a concert, a thrilling conclusion made the more so by the wide-ranging, brilliant and realistic recording.

On the Swedish BIS label the Fourth Symphony is superbly played and recorded. Consistently textures are clarified, helped by the thoughtful, finely judged reading of José Serebrier. The Bamberg Orchestra boasts an exceptional line-up of refined wind soloists, phrasing subtly. Not that in this concern for detail there is any lack of excitement, for the incisive attack and Serebrier's preference for steady speeds brings a structural strength too rarely achieved in Tchaikovsky. Francesca da Rimini, inspired by Dante, makes an apt coupling, a work written in very much the same period as the Symphony.

Gatti's interpretation, as in his memorable version of the Fifth Symphony, often favours tempi which press the music on more swiftly than usual. Yet Gatti's momentum is compulsive and he finds his contrast in the rocking string melody, played so beautifully by the RPO strings. The nostalgic second movement is also beautifully played, yet the melancholy oboe melody is again taken a little faster than usual. But here the vigorous middle section makes a spontaneous contrast, and the decorated reprise shows the RPO woodwind at their most sensitive. After the balalaika pizzicato Scherzo, the finale bursts in on the listener and, with the dramatic re-entry of the fatal fanfare, Gatti carries forward to a spectacular coda. His performance of the Capriccio italien is vigorously enjoyable, if not as distinctive as the Symphony. The Walthamstow recording is full-blooded and realistic, but could perhaps be more expansive.

After a dramatic opening, Beecham lets the tension of the first-movement Allegretto build up from within the music itself. The result is a steady increase of excitement; the overall structure of the movement is perfectly judged and the climax at the centre of the development is tremendous, while the recapitulation moves to the coda with a feeling of great strength and emotional power. The 1958 Kingsway Hall recording is good, clear and sonorous. Yet it is mono and is bright and a little light in the bass, and in the finale the lower brass do not tell as they do at a live concert. However, the Nutcracker Suite (also mono) sounds splendidly fresh and the sound is warmer; the Eugene Onegin Waltz, played with élan, is in stereo and makes a delectable encore.

Symphony 5 in E min., Op. 64

🔑 * Warner DVD + CD 2564 62190-5. West-Eastern Divan Orchestra, Barenboim – SIBELIUS: Valse triste; VERDI: La Forza del destino Overture ()

The West-Eastern Divan Orchestra – the name taken from Goethe – was the amazing inspiration of Daniel Barenboim and his Palestinian philosopher-friend, the late Edward Said. The idea was to bring together in direct collaboration young Arab musicians and young Israelis, for them to make music together, sharing at every level, so that each would more readily come to understand the other.

The result, inspired above all by Barenboim's dynamic leadership, has been an unqualified success musically. Their performance of the Tchaikovsky, recorded live in Geneva in 2004, is electrifying from beginning to end, remarkable not just for the weight of the string-tone but for its refinement in pianissimos. The finale is thrilling, and though on the CD applause has been eliminated, the DVD version brings out on video what an ecstatic reception the Geneva audience gave, ending with a prolonged standing ovation after the encore, Verdi's Forza del destino Overture, dazzlingly done. The DVD omits the other encore, Sibelius's Valse triste, but includes the symphony and overture complete, as well as the 75-minute conversation between Barenboim and Said, recorded in Weimar in 1999, and a documentary, 'Lessons in Harmony', vividly illustrating the orchestra's preparations in sessions in Seville and the way the young musicians work together. An inspiring issue.

Symphony 5 in E min., Op. 64

🔑 ✿ * Decca. 475 6718. VPO, Gergiev

 Chan. 8351. Oslo PO, Jansons

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60035-2. Leningrad PO, Mravinsky

Symphony 5; Capriccio italien

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony (ADD) 82876 78744-2. Cleveland O, Szell

Symphony 5; Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

🔑 * HM HMU 907381. RPO, Gatti

(i) Symphony 5; (ii) Variations on a Rococo Theme for Cello & Orchestra

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP 586 1682. LPO; (i) Edwards; (ii) Del Mar

Ⓜ (*) Sony SMK 89795. (i) Chicago SO, Abbado; (ii) Ma, Pittsburgh SO, Maazel

Symphony 5; Francesca da Rimini

Ⓝ  DG 477 8022. Simón Bolivar Youth Orchestra of Venezuela, Dudamel

Valery Gergiev's account of the Fifth Symphony is really quite special. It is a performance of real stature, totally electrifying. No wonder the audience went wild at the end. It certainly belongs among the best Fifths on record. Some collectors will find full price a bit steep for 46 minutes, no matter how marvellous the performance and excellent the recording; but if you can put economy to one side, you will be rewarded with out-of-the-ordinary music-making.

If anything, Szell's 1959 performance of the Fifth Symphony is even finer than his Fourth for Decca (currently withdrawn, alas). Its sense of romantic urgency is finely judged, with a splendid surge and momentum in the outer movements. The recording has a resonant bass and treble but has been smoothed in the latest remastering so that an exciting effect can be achieved. The Capriccio italien too is played with great flair, and again it is one of the finest accounts in the catalogue.

The still much-underrated Sian Edwards is a natural Tchaikovskian, and on CfP she conducts an electrifying and warm-hearted reading of Tchaikovsky's Fifth. With refined playing from the LPO and brilliant recording, it matches any version in the catalogue. Her control of rubato is exceptionally persuasive, notably so in moulding the different sections of the first movement, while the great horn solo of the slow movement is played with exquisite delicacy by Richard Bissell. The Waltz third movement is tenderly done, as though for a ballet, while the finale brings a very fast and exciting allegro, challenging the orchestra to brilliant, incisive playing. By the side of Edwards's natural vitality, Norman Del Mar's warmly agreeable account of the String Serenade seems just a little bland, although it is well played and the 1978 recording is warm and pleasing.

Daniele Gatti often chooses tempi that are brisker than usual and that are closer to the composer's own metronome markings. The result in the first movement, with crisp rhythmic pointing, is an invigorating forward thrust from beginning to end, with the primary second subject theme on the violins romantic in its rubato, rather than impassioned, as with Gergiev. The elegiac melancholy of the slow movement, with its evocative horn solo most sensitively played by Martin Owen, brings climaxes which are spaciously affecting but not as passionately overwhelming as with Gergiev, the forceful interruptions of the motto theme less histrionic, and the movement brings a gently touching close. The Waltz is elegant and graceful, with neatly decorative violins, a contrasting interlude before the excitingly strong, direct finale. Here the brass is crisp and urgent, especially in the repeated reprise of the Fate theme, which is very sharply focused. Once again Gatti takes the movement forward in a single sweep, with free-running adrenalin, pausing only briefly to reflect Tchaikovsky's moment of self-doubt before pressing onwards to the triumphant coda with its blazing trumpets. Gatti offers in addition a superb account of Romeo and Juliet. The Abbey Road recording throughout both symphony and overture is excellent, full-bodied, with vivid, weightily sonorous bass.

In the first movement, Jansons's refusal to linger never sounds anything but warmly idiomatic, lacking only a little in charm. The slow movement again brings a steady tempo, with climaxes built strongly and patiently but with enormous power, the final culmination topping everything. In the finale, taken very fast, Jansons tightens the screw of the excitement without ever making it a scramble, following Tchaikovsky's notated slowings rather than allowing extra rallentandos. The sound is excellent, specific and well focused within a warmly reverberant acoustic, with digital recording on CD reinforcing any lightness of bass.

Abbado's Chicago Fifth is admirably fresh and superbly played. All Tchaikovsky's markings are scrupulously yet imaginatively observed and the reading is full of contrast. Other versions of the slow movement have more extrovert passion, but Abbado shows that the climaxes can be involving without being histrionic. After an elegant Waltz, with the orchestra in sparkling form, the finale has fine energy and momentum. If it does not have quite the gripping excitement of Jansons or Gergiev, the moment of the composer's self-doubt, before the Poco più animato, is the more effectively characterized. The recording is made in a convincingly resonant acoustic. As an encore Yo-Yo Ma's Rococo Variations are characteristically refined, and although his playing is at times just a little mannered (and one longs for the full-timbred Rostropovich approach), Ma always engages the listener's sympathy by his delicacy and grace. Maazel's less than inspired accompaniment does, however, diminish the appeal of the performance, which is again very well recorded.

Mravinsky's account of the Fifth Symphony on Elatus comes from a concert performance on 19 March 1983. It is his last recording of the symphony that survives and is perhaps less 'possessed' than his famous DG accounts issued in 1956 and 1961 or the subsequent deleted performances from 1965 and 1973 on Olympia and RCA/BMG. Yet it is hardly less compelling and if anything more human.

Dudamel's performance of the Fifth Symphony is a disappointment. It has little of the fizzing energy of his live performances. Indeed, the first movement has places where all tension is lost. The slow movement is beautiful and refined, but lacks the intensity which gives the horn's entry the frisson it ideally should have and even the finale lacks the excitement one expects from this source. Francesca da Rimini possess more of the conductor's characteristic energy and one admires the attention to detail, but here, as in the Symphony, the DG (live) recording is very average.

Symphony 6 in B min. (Pathétique), Op. 74 (DVD version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 302. Bav. RSO, Solti (V/D: Klaus Lindemann) – SHOSTAKOVICH: Symphony 9 ***

Solti's Pathétique, even with the extra involvement of visual communication, is not the overwhelming experience one might have expected. We watch him shape the opening movement and the arrival of the great second subject, which is played with real tenderness; and again we watch as he directs the Scherzo/march crisply and builds the big climax at the end, which is inevitably exciting but not overwhelming. Then the finale, although it is played very beautifully, is curiously low-key, and we are left without the lift that comes with a powerful communication of Tchaikovsky's deeply felt but resigned despair. The recording is excellent, and so is the camerawork. But there are many CD performances that are more moving than this.

Symphony 6 in B min. (Pathétique), Op. 74 (CD versions)

🔑 * Chan. 8446. Oslo PO, Jansons

🔑 * Decca SACD 475 6197. VPO, Gergiev

✿ Ⓑ () Naxos mono 8.110865. BPO, Furtwängler – WAGNER: Tristan: Prelude & Liebestod ()

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 3828-2. Czech PO, Talich – WAGNER: Tristan: Prelude & Liebestod – Prague RSO ()

() Biddulph mono WHL 046. Phd. O, Ormandy – MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition (orch Cailliet) ()

Ⓜ *() RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61397-2. Boston SO, Monteux

Symphony 6 (Pathétique); Capriccio italien; Eugene Onegin: Waltz & Polonaise

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 47657. Phd. O, Ormandy

Symphony 6 (Pathétique) in B min., Op. 74; Francesca da Rimini, Op. 32

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus (ADD) 0927 46733-2. Leningrad PO, Mravinsky

(i) Symphony 6 (Pathétique); (ii) Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 471 742-2. Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 62320-2. (i) St Petersburg PO; (ii) RPO; Temirkanov

Symphony 6, 'Pathetique'. Serenade for Strings

 HM HMU90 7394 RPO, Gatti

Symphony 6 (Pathétique); The Storm: Overture

(BB)  Regis RRC 1214. LSO, Rozhdestvensky

(i) Symphony 6 (Pathétique); (ii) (Piano) Dumka, Op. 59

Ⓝ *() Ondine ODE 1131-5. (i) Phd. O, Eschenbach; (ii) Eschenbach (piano)

Pletnev's account of the Pathétique with the Russian National Orchestra comes from the complete cycle he recorded in November 1995, four years after the Virgin recording he made shortly after the orchestra's formation. This is no less impressive and its level of dramatic intensity and emotional concentration are even higher. The Allegro is a shade steadier perhaps but the March is every bit as breathtaking. The dark colourings of the finale and the soulful lyricism of the strings resonate in the memory. The Romeo and Juliet is both exciting and moving, and the DG recording is even more detailed, present and realistic than the Virgin version.

Valery Gergiev's Pathétique has a similar intensity and dramatic power to his Fifth. Some may find it hard-driven at times, but there is great excitement and firmness of grip. Gergiev is by no means as subtle – certainly in matters of dynamic nuance – as Pletnev. The recording on CD has impressive depth and resonance and in surround sound it is tremendously exciting, especially the climax of the headlong Scherzo. On SACD this is certainly the finest recording the Symphony has ever received, and the sense of ambience, of sitting in the hall, is uncanny. The performance, especially in the impulsively passionate finale, will not appeal to everyone, but it is I.M.'s first choice.

Mariss Jansons and the Oslo Philharmonic crown their magnetically compelling Tchaikovsky series with a superbly concentrated account of the last and greatest of the Symphonies. It is characteristic of Jansons that the great second-subject melody is at once warm and passionate yet totally unsentimental, with rubato barely noticeable. The very fast speed for the third-movement March stretches the players to the very limit, but the exhilaration is infectious, leading to the simple dedication of the slow finale, unexaggerated but deeply felt. Fine, warm recording as in the rest of the series.

Furtwängler's Berlin Philharmonic Pathétique was quite simply the finest recorded account of the whole 78 era. The reading showed him at his most inspirational, his control of tension in the first movement unerringly spontaneous, with its burst of excitement in the development section and its sombre close. Never before or since have the changing tempi of the Scherzo/March been more successfully graduated, with a superb final march reprise, which (as Mark Obert-Thorn's superb transfer demonstrates) was captured on the long 78-r.p.m. side without noticeable falling off in quality. The close of a finale without a hint of hysteria is both noble and grave. The Berlin Philharmonic play marvellously throughout, and the recording (for which no apologies whatsoever need be made) sounds exactly as we remember the original 78s. The Tristan excerpts are, understandably, equally marvellously played, and again the transfer loses nothing of the original sound.

Talich's legendary 1953 Pathétique was undoubtedly also a great performance. Its combination of spaciousness and concentration hold the listener consistently in its spell, and the first movement builds to a riveting climax. The Allegro con grazia is unusually rich in lyrical feeling and the Scherzo is unrushed, a true Scherzo, Talich tellingly holding back the apotheosis of the March until its final thrilling return. The finale is then powerfully moving, ending in a pianissimo of desolation. The recording has been cleaned up, although it is now a shade over-bright. The Wagner items are comparably richly spacious and gripping.

With Daniele Gatti, if the opening Adagio of the Pathétique seems rather staid, slow and very steady, a total transformation comes with the shattering fortissimo that opens the development section. From then on, through all four movements the performance is magnetic, with Gatti consistently conveying the white heat of Tchaikovsky's inspiration. The Harmonia Mundi recording, made at the Colosseum, Watford, offers the widest dynamic range and brings out the clarity of texture and of articulation that Gatti draws from his players. Gatti and the RPO also hold a trump card in their exceptionally generous coupling, a warmly persuasive reading of the Serenade for Strings which builds on the ripe resonance of the RPO string section, again with clear textures and articulation and a wide dynamic range.

This electrifying performance of the Pathétique Symphony on Biddulph, one of the fastest ever on disc, was Ormandy's first Philadelphia recording, begun in December of 1936 and completed the following month. So in the first movement Ormandy is more volatile than in his later recordings, tending to press on faster after setting a tempo. The result is very powerful and exciting, not at all sentimental. First-rate transfer.

Like Mravinsky's companion account of Symphony 5 on Warner's Elatus label, the Russian conductor's approach to this repertoire has mellowed a little since his blazing DG recordings from the early 1960s, though this live 1982 account of the Pathétique is only marginally less emotionally tense and generates plenty of excitement. The audience is reasonably well behaved (although the coughs at the beginning of the second movement are a bit irritating), and the sound is generally very good, if a bit raucous in the climaxes. With the characteristic Leningrad brass, Francesca da Rimini (coming from the same concert as the Pathétique) sounds particularly Russian, and has white-hot emotional intensity. Considering its provenance, the sound is good, and one can put aside the imperfections of a live occasion listening to this immensely vivid and exciting music-making.

Ormandy's fine 1960 performance on Sony is a reading of impressive breadth, dignity and power, with no suggestion of routine in a single bar. The orchestra makes much of the first-movement climax and plays with considerable passion and impressive body of tone in both outer movements; yet there is an element of restraint in the finale which prevents any feeling of hysteria. In short, this is most satisfying, a performance to live with; the CD transfer, while brightly lit, avoids glare in the upper range. Ormandy's panache and gusto give the Capriccio italien plenty of life without driving too hard, and the dances are rhythmically infectious.

Rozhdestvensky's 1987 performance with the LSO, originally on Pickwick, now perceptively reissued by Regis, is generously coupled with a fine version of the comparatively little-known symphonic poem The Storm. His passionate reading of the Symphony fails to match the finest in precision of ensemble – the slow finale is warm rather than tense or tragic – but the sense of spontaneity is most compelling, and the digital recording is impressive still.

If the sound of Monteux's performance is not 'state of the art', it is still amazing for 1955; and it is well balanced, full in texture, with a decent amount of warmth for the strings. The performance, while not lacking in excitement, is essentially no-nonsense in approach, while in the 5/4 movement there is some lack of graciousness (especially with the increase in pace of the close). The brass come through vividly, and if their distinctive, rather French-sounding vibrato will not to be all tastes, the playing still has character. The Scherzo is crisply pointed; the finale is heart-felt and passionate.

Eschenbach's Pathétique, finely played and recorded as it is, is very far from a general recommendation. The reading is filtered through the conductor's more restrained sensibility, rather than closely reflecting the composer's own deeply moving darkness of feeling. The climax of the first movement, after a restrained second subject, certainly does not send shivers down the spine by its plangent intensity; instead it reflects the overall mood of the performance which is essentially elegiac. This is felt in the 5/4 movement too, and after an attractively spirited molto vivace (which is truly a scherzo) the symphony closes, not in abject despair, but in resigned melancholy. Even the following Dumka, which Eschenbach plays sensitively on the piano, misses the high spirits one might expect.

Variations on a Rococo Theme for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 33

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 56126-2. Chang, LSO, Rostropovich – BRUCH: Kol Nidrei; FAURÉ: Elégie; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 413-2. Rostropovich, BPO, Karajan – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto *** ✿

() Testament mono SBT 1310. Gendron, SRO, Ansermet – SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto etc. ()

Ⓜ (*) Mercury SACD 475 6608. Starker, LSO, Dorati – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto; BRUCH: Kol Nidrei **(*)

Ⓑ (*) Virgin 3 63287-2. Mørk, Oslo PO, Jansons – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto **(*)

The phenomenally gifted 13-year-old Korean-born cellist Han-Na Chang has the most ravishing tone and a wonderfully musical sense of line. Rostropovich as conductor sets the scene with an affectionate elegance, and then Chang introduces Tchaikovsky's theme with disarming simplicity. Andante grazioso, introduced very gently, is quite ethereal and the finale has the expected dash, and the crispest articulation. The LSO are inspired by Chang to give a wonderfully sensitive accompaniment, and the recording is in the demonstration class.

Like Chang, Rostropovich uses the published score rather than the original version which more accurately reflects the composer's intentions. But this account, with Karajan's glowing support, is so superbly structured in its control of emotional light and shade that one is readily convinced that this is the work Tchaikovsky conceived. The recording (made in the Jesus-Christus Kirche) is beautifully balanced and is surely one of the most perfect examples of DG's analogue techniques.

Although Maurice Gendron was rather overshadowed in the 1950s and 1960s by Fournier and Tortelier, he was no less eloquent an artist, who brought an aristocratic finesse and tonal richness to everything he did. The virtuosity is effortless and his phrasing seamless; Gendron's artistry gives unalloyed pleasure. As always with this label, the transfer does justice to the 1953 Decca recording.

Starker's relaxed, elegant performance may lack romantic urgency, but with Dorati accompanying sympathetically it has a relaxed, ruminative quality which is endearing. It never sounded more warmly persuasive than in this new SACD remastering, which has quite transformed the recording, making it warmer and fuller, more flattering to the cello timbre.

A fine performance from Truls Mørk, with plenty of energy and finesse, and the Andante of Variation 11 played with an appealingly Slavonic, plaintive feeling. Very good recording too, but in sheer elegance and panache this is no match for Rostropovich.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Piano Trio in A min., Op. 50

🔑  BIS CD 1302. Kempf Trio – RACHMANINOV: Trio élégiaque 1 ***

Ⓝ  Canary Classics CC05. Bronfman, Shaham, Mørk

Ⓝ  MDG 942 1512-6. Vienna Piano Trio – SMETANA: Piano Trio ***

 Ara. Z 6661. Golub–Kaplan–Carr Trio – SMETANA: Piano Trio ***

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 48728-2. Amoyal, Lodeon, Rogé

Ⓝ (*) Sup. SU 3949-2. Smetana Piano Trio – DVOŘÁK: Piano Trio 2 **(*)

(BB) (*) Regis Alto ALC 1005. Tirimo, Sayevich, Veis – SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Trio 2 **(*)

Freddy Kempf leads with great conviction, yet can pull back whenever necessary; moreover he provides some dazzlingly light-fingered playing during the kaleidoscopic variations of the second movement, which are presented with sparkling panache. The recording is very well balanced, although under moments of passionate stress in the Tchaikovsky trio it catches a touch of wiriness in the upper register of the violin. But the effect overall is convincingly realistic.

During 1908 three different new versions of Tchaikovsky's masterly Piano Trio arrived within two months. The Canary Classics recording is, dominated by the challenging playing of Yerim Bronfman and the performance is in every way first class and the delightful Variations are given kaleidoscopic variety. Gil Shaham and Truls Mørk are fully in the picture. Yet the drawback to that disc was the absence of any coupling. The alternative version from the Vienna Piano Trio measures up extremely well against its competitor; moreover it is (like all chamber recordings from this source) extremely well balanced. The pianist, Stefan Mendl is able to lead the group, yet create a convincing partnership throughout the almost concertante-style first movement. The engaging second movement Variations open gently but move spontaneously through Tchaikovsky's constantly varied invention, often with touching lyrical feeling.

The Golub/Kaplan/Carr account of the Smetana G minor Piano Trio is well matched in the Tchaikovsky. The balance places the listener rather too close to the players, but the sound is perfectly pleasing and the performance refreshingly unaffected. Nothing is overdriven, mechanized or attention-seeking.

The Apex team give an eloquent performance which finds Pierre Amoyal in impressive form. The same must be said of Pascal Rogé whose account of the piano part is brilliant and sensitive. Frédéric Lodeon completes a fine team and though the recording is a bit close, artistically these dedicated French players give much satisfaction. A good bargain.

The Smetana performance of the Tchaikovsky Trio is also a fine one, rather more intimately balanced than its competitors and with its pianist, although well placed in the integrated overall sound picture, less dominant. The Variations are given a strong forward pulse and plenty of character; certainly this Supraphon disc is very enjoyable throughout, but not a first choice for the Tchaikovsky.

An excellent account from Tirimo and his colleagues, recorded in Prague in 2005. The playing is full of life, with the Theme and Variations strongly characterized. The recording is a bit too close, but vivid and truthful. Coupled with an excellent version of the Second Shostakovich Trio, this inexpensive disc is excellent value.

(i) Souvenir de Florence, Op. 70 (string sextet)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66648. Raphael Ens. – ARENSKY: String Quartet in A min. ***

🔑 * Chan. 9878. ASMF Chamber Ens. – GLAZUNOV: String Quintet ***

 Mer. CDE 84211. Arienski Ens. – ARENSKY: String Quartet 2 ; BORODIN: Sextet movements **

A first-rate performance from the Raphael Ensemble. They play with total unanimity of ensemble and richness of tone. Their coupling, the Arensky Quartet with Two Cellos, is magnificently played. The recording may be a snag for some collectors – it is all a bit too forward and we are very much in the front row – but there is no reason to withhold a third star given its artistry and authority.

From the ASMF Chamber Ensemble, a very sympathetic and well-recorded account which deserves a warm recommendation. Its coupling, which brings a Glazunov rarity, strengthens its claims.

A very good rather than a distinguished performance of Tchaikovsky's eloquent Souvenir de Florence on Meridian, very decently recorded. The strength of the issue lies in the interest of its coupling, an Arensky rarity, the A minor Quartet, from which the well-known Variations on a Theme of Tchaikovsky derive, and two Mendelssohnian movements from the Borodin Sextet.

String Quartet in B flat; String Quartets 1–3; (i) Souvenir de Florence

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 2564 61774-2 (2). Borodin Qt; (i) with Yurov, Milman

String Quartets 1–3; (i) Souvenir de Florence

 Telarc CD 80685 (2). Ying Qt; (i) with Dunham & Katz

String Quartet Movement in B flat; String Quartets 1–3; 4 Early Pieces; (i) Souvenir de Florence

🔑  CRD CRD 3501 (1 & 2; Movement); CRD 3502 (3; Early Pieces; Souvenir). Endellion Qt; (i) with T. Boulton & R. Cohen

String Quartets 1 in D, Op. 11; 2 in F, Op. 22; 3 in E flat, Op. 30; Adagio molto for String Quartet & Harp; 5 Early Pieces for String Quartet; Souvenir de Florence: Adagio cantabile e con moto

(BB) (*) Regis (ADD) RRC 2071 (2). Shostakovich Qt

String Quartets 1–3; (i) Souvenir de Florence, Op.70

Ⓑ (*) Nim. NI 5711/2. Schubert Qt

The Elatus set, made in 1993 in the Berlin Teldec studios, is digital and the sound is a shade dry. It includes the early B flat Movement and is a superb, unassailable recommendation for a complete set.

The Endellion Quartet are completely at home in Tchaikovsky's special chamber-music idiom, and they give very persuasive and understanding performances of all this music. They are less vibrant, more intimate, than the Borodin or Brodsky Quartets, but their mellower approach brings its own rewards; their playing certainly does not lack vitality or spontaneity. But what makes this set especially desirable is the closing bonus of the four brief but characterful Early Pieces, and especially the gentle final Andante molto, which remains in the memory after the second disc has faded into silence. Excellent recording: close, but full-bodied and real. The two CDs are available separately.

A fine new set of performances by the excellent Ying Quartet, who play with conviction and fine ensemble. Overall, these performances, if not quite as idiomatic as their Russian competitors, are consistently enjoyable, and the Telarc sound is very full and realistic.

The Nimbus set from the early 1990s has been issued as a two-for-the-price-of-one Double. The Franz Schubert Quartet are thoroughly sympathetic and produce smooth, beautifully balanced sound and good ensemble. Indeed, this is one of the best chamber-music recordings Nimbus have given us. All the same, the performances yield to the Borodin versions on Elatus made at about the same time.

These performances by the Shostakovich Quartet, which derive from Moscow Radio broadcasts in the 1970s, if not in the league of the Borodin or Brodsky Quartet, are value for money. The recordings sound a shade strident at the upper end of the spectrum, though this is easily tamed. Indeed, in the Third Quartet this is barely noticeable; the sound has warmth and presence. The Adagio for String Quartet and Harp is one of the few Tchaikovsky rarities that are not of real interest; but the early pieces, dating from the composer's student years at the St Petersburg Conservatory, are – though they are not masterpieces.

String Quartet 1 in D, Op. 11

🔑 ✿  Challenge Classics CC 72106. Brodsky Qt – BRITTEN: String Quartet 1; Divertimenti *** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ  Cal. 6202. Talich Qt – BORODIN: Quartet 2 **(*)

() Testament mono SBT 1061. Hollywood Qt – GLAZUNOV: 5 Novelettes; BORODIN: String Quartet 2 in D ()

The Brodsky Quartet seem to find an affinity between the gently lyrical opening theme of Tchaikovsky's D major Quartet and the luminous magic at the beginning of the coupled Britten work in the same key; in both there is an elliptical reprise, but although Britten ends his movement hauntingly, Tchaikovsky characteristically provides a dashing coda. The Brodskys are completely at home in both works, and after a superb account of Tchaikovsky's opening movement, passionate yet full of dynamic contrast and delicately observed detail, they provide a ravishingly tender Andante cantabile. The performance has all the spontaneity of live music-making and the Brodskys are given a superb presence by the recording, made at The Maltings.

A glorious account of Tchaikovsky's best-loved quartet from the Talich group. They play the opening movement with an unassertive, lyrical feeling that is quite disarming, while the famous Andante cantabile has never sounded more beautiful on record, shaped with a combination of delicacy of feeling and warmth that is wholly persuasive. The Scherzo has plenty of verve, and the finale winningly balances the music's joyful vigour and its underlying hint of melancholy with a typical lightness of touch. The 1987 digital recording is beautifully balanced. Highly recommended.

The Hollywood Quartet's LP first appeared in 1953 and their fervent account has a persuasive eloquence that still puts one under its spell. The sound has been improved, and the addition of the Glazunov, which is new to the catalogue, enhances its value. The disc runs to one second short of 80 minutes, and the sleeve warns that some older CD players may have difficulty in tracking it.

String Quartet 1 in D; 2 in F, Op. 22

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.550847. New Haydn Qt

Very well-played accounts of both Quartets from the New Haydn Quartet, which, taken on their own merits, have much to recommend them – warmth, intelligence and some finesse. In the slow movement of the D major the group has real eloquence, and in the finale it scores by observing the exposition repeat. However, it is not in the same league as the Brodsky (see above), which remains a strong first choice.

String Quartets 2 in F, Op. 22; 3 in E flat min., Op. 30.

🔑 * Brodsky Records BRD 3500. Brodsky Qt

The Brodsky Quartet have already given us a superb account of Tchaikovsky's First Quartet – see above. Now they have followed up on their own label with an equally memorable coupling of the two remaining works. They fully understand and respond to the passionate ebb and flow of this music, and these are wonderfully ardent and compelling performances. Indeed, the first movement of the E flat Quartet has an enormous surge of lyrical impetus, and the Andante funèbre has comparable depth of intensity. The recording has great immediacy, which suits the performances.

PIANO DUET

Nutcracker; Sleeping Beauty; Swan Lake: Suites (arr. for 4 hands)

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.570418. Aurora Duo

Considering how much it depends on orchestral colour, it is a astonishing how well Tchaikovsky's ballet music comes off in piano-duet form, if the players are sympathetic and stylish. And the members of the Aurora Duo (Julia Severus and Alina Luschtschizkaja) most certainly are both. In the Sleeping Beauty the cat duet is deliciously pictorialized and the gorgeous Panorama is beautifully poised over its gently rocking bass. The baby swans dance very daintily, and in the Nutcracker the duo's crisp articulation in the Miniature Overture, Marche and Chinese Dance is perfectly precise, while the Sugar Plum Fairy enters to a timbre very like a celeste. Very good, clear recording too. Most enjoyable.

PIANO MUSIC

Album for the Young, Op. 39

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.550885. Biret – DEBUSSY: Children's Corner Suite; SCHUMANN: Kinderszenen ***

Album for the Young, Op. 39: (i) original piano version; (ii) trans. for string quartet by Dubinsky

 Chan. 8365. (i) Edlina; (ii) augmented Borodin Trio

These 24 pieces are all miniatures, but they have great charm; their invention is often memorable, with quotations from Russian folksongs and one French, plus a brief reminder of Swan Lake. Here they are presented twice, in their original piano versions, sympathetically played by Luba Edlina, and in effective string quartet transcriptions arranged by her husband, Rostislav Dubinsky. The Borodin group play them with both affection and finesse. The CD has plenty of presence.

Idil Biret's has the full measure of Tchaikovsky's two dozen vignettes and plays them all with affection and charm. They range from miniature portraits of Maman, Dolly, a Lark and even a witch (Baba-Yaga) to a Toy Soldier's March and an Organ-grinder's Song, as well as folksy pieces from Italy, France and Germany and Russia's own Kamarinskaya. The recording cannot be faulted.

Capriccioso in B flat, Op. 19/5; Chanson triste, Op. 40/2; L'Espiègle, Op. 72/12; Humoresque in G, Op. 10/2; Méditation, Op. 72/5; Menuetto-scherzoso, Op. 51/3; Nocturne in F, Op. 10/1; Rêverie du soir, Op. 19/1; Romances: in F min., Op. 5; in F, Op. 51/5; The Seasons: May (White Nights), June (Barcarolle), November (Troika), January (By the fireplace); Un poco di Chopin, Op. 72/15; Valse de salon, Op. 51/2; Waltz in A flat, Op. 40/8; Waltz-scherzo in A min., Op. 7

🔑 Ⓑ * Regis (ADD) RRC 1093. Richter

It is good to hear Richter (recorded in 1983 by Ariola-Eurodisc) given first-class, modern sound and on top technical form, showing that he had lost none of his flair. These miniatures are invested with enormous character in playing of consistent poetry; there is never a whiff of the salon. They are all captivating, and the bolder Menuetto-scherzoso also shows Tchaikovsky at his most attractively inventive. With its very truthful sound-picture, this is a first recommendation for anyone wanting a single CD of Tchaikovsky's piano music.

The Seasons, Op. 37b; 6 Pieces, Op. 21; Sleeping Beauty (excerpts; arr. Pletnev)

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 4 82055-2 (2). Pletnev – MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition *** ❀

The Seasons; Aveu passioné; Berceuse, Op. 72/2; Méditation, Op. 72/5; Polka peu dansante, Op. 51/2; Tendres reproches, Op. 72/3

 Decca 466 562-2. Ashkenazy

The Seasons; Piano Sonata in C sharp min., Op.80

Ⓝ Ⓑ . Naxos 8.570787. Ilya Rachkovsky

Tchaikovsky's 12 Seasons (they would have been better called 'Months') were written to a regular deadline for publication in a St Petersburg music magazine, Nuvellist. Like the Opus 72 Pieces, above, and the touching Morceaux, Op. 21, Pletnev reveals depths that are hidden to most interpreters and he grips one from first note to last. Then, in the present transcription, he gives us about 30 minutes of The Sleeping Beauty in a dazzling performance. In sheer clarity of articulation and virtuosity this is pretty remarkable – also in poetry and depth of feeling. An altogether outstanding reissue, very well recorded, and in every way a tour de force.

Vladimir Ashkenazy gives a poised and finely prepared account of The Seasons which is very well recorded. At the same time it does not match Pletnev in terms of poetic insight or tenderness. The charming numbers from the Eighteen Pieces, Op. 72, are beautifully done too.

The performances by Ilya Rachkovsky are sensitive and well recorded. If they are not quite on the exulted level of Ashkenazy and Pletnev, they are thoroughly musical, and spontaneous in feeling. The Sonata was a student work and is rather Schumanesque. But Tchaikovsky thought well of the Scherzo and used it again later in his Winter Daydreams Symphony.

VOCAL MUSIC

4 Duets: Dawn; Evening; In the Garden by the River; Tears

🔑 Ⓑ  BBC (ADD) BBCB 8001-2. Harper, Baker, Britten – BRAHMS: Liebeslieder Waltzes, Op. 52; ROSSINI: Soirées musicales ***

Heather Harper and Janet Baker, recorded at the Aldeburgh Festival in 1971, make a dream duet partnership in these tenderly sentimental duets, sung in English. Britten's inspired accompaniment adds poetry to Tchaikovsky's distinctive piano writing. No texts are given, but James Bowman writes movingly of such 'family music-making' at Aldeburgh.

Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, Op. 41

(BB) (*) Naxos Dig 8.553854.2. Ovdiy, Mezhulin, Kiev Chamber Ch., Hobdych

Liturgy of St John Chrysostom; Anthem: An angel crying; 9 Sacred Pieces (for unaccompanied chorus)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66948. Corydon Singers, Best

The a cappella Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, which dates from 1878, was not commissioned but written simply to reflect Tchaikovsky's devotion to the Russian Orthodox Church. Best and the Corydon Singers in their refined, dedicated performances bring out the freshness and energy in this inspired music, with basses cleanly focused down to subterranean depths, echoing authentic Russian examples. The disc also contains the sequence of 9 Sacred Choruses which Tchaikovsky wrote five or six years after the Liturgy, even simpler in style, but showing his ready melodic gift, and a separate piece, a dramatic Easter Day anthem, An angel crying, which is a miniature masterpiece. Warm, clear sound.

In contrast with the rival version of this masterpiece of Russian Orthodox music, which offer substantial couplings, the Naxos issue presents a liturgical performance complete with the priests' solos, almost 70 minutes long. Not all collectors will want such a format for repeated listening, but for those who prefer such an authentic course, this Naxos disc can be warmly recommended, strongly and idiomatically performed with fine solos, and atmospherically recorded in a church in Kiev.

The Snow Maiden, Op. 12 (complete incidental music)

🔑 * Chan. 9324. Mishura-Lekhman, Girshko, Michigan University Ch. Soc., Detroit SO, Järvi

Ⓜ  Chant du Monde RUS 788090. Erasova, Arkipov, Vassiliev, Sveshnikov Russian State Ch., Bolshoi Theatre O, Chistiakov

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553856. Okolysheva, Mishenkin, Moscow Capella, Moscow SO, Golovschin

Ostrovsky's play The Snow Maiden, based on a Russian folktale, prompted Tchaikovsky to compose incidental music, a cherishable rarity. Much of it is vintage material, very delightful, bringing reminders of Eugene Onegin in the peasant choruses and some of the folk-based songs, and of the later Tchaikovskian world of The Nutcracker in some of the dances. He himself thought so well of the music that he wanted to develop it into an opera, but was frustrated when Rimsky-Korsakov wrote one first. The consistent freshness and charm of invention comes out in Järvi's reading of the 19 numbers, lasting just under 80 minutes. It makes a delightful, undemanding cantata, very well played and sung, and is a clear first choice.

Chistiakov's fine 1994 performance, now reissued on Chant du Monde's mid-priced Russian label, is in every way recommendable at mid-price. The three excellent soloists are characterfully Slavonic, rather too forwardly balanced but well caught by the recording, and the fine singing of the chorus is given both sonority and plenty of bite. The orchestral playing is highly persuasive in a pleasingly atmospheric acoustic.

Tchaikovsky's engaging score also inspires Golovschin and his Moscow forces to a warmly idiomatic performance on Naxos, richly and colourfully recorded, if without quite the same degree of vividness. This may not match the Chant du Monde version in vitality, which at generally faster speeds sparkles more and offers crisper ensemble, but it is similarly persuasive. The conductor's affection is obvious. There are only two soloists to share the vocal music, but they are convincingly Slavonic and they are balanced slightly less forwardly. This Naxos disc is well worth its more modest cost.

Songs

Songs: Amid the noise of the ball; Behind the window; The canary; Cradle song; The cuckoo; Does the day reign?; Do not believe; The fearful minute; If only I had known; It was in the early spring; Last night; Lullaby in a storm; The nightingale; None but the lonely heart; Not a word, O my friend; Serenade; Spring; To forget so soon; Was I not a little blade of grass?; Why?; Why did I dream of you?

🔑  Hyp. Helios CDH 55331. Rodgers, Vignoles

The warmly distinctive timbre of Joan Rodgers's lovely soprano has been heard mainly in opera but she is equally compelling in this glowing disc of songs. Her fluency with Russian texts as well as the golden colourings of her voice make this wide-ranging collection a delight from first to last. Though the voice is not quite at its richest in the most celebrated song of all, None but the lonely heart, the singer's subtle varying of mood and tone completely refutes the idea that Tchaikovsky as a song-composer was limited. One of the finest discs issued to mark the Tchaikovsky centenary in 1993.

OPERA

Eugene Onegin (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Warner DVD 0630-14014-2. Prokina, Drabowicz, Thompson, Winter, Minton, Filatova, Olsen, LPO, A. Davis (Dir: Graham Vick; V/D: Humphrey Burton)

🔑  Decca DVD 071 124-9. Kubiak, Weikl, Burrows, Reynolds, Ghiaurov, Hamari, Hartle, Sénéchal, van Allan, Mason, John Alldis Ch., ROHCG O, Solti (V/Dir: Petr Weigl)

 Decca DVD 074 3248 (2). Fleming, Hvorostovsky, Zaremba, Vargas, Volkova, Shevchenko, Met. Op. Ch., Ballet & O, Gergiev (V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ (*) DG DVD 073 4434. Samuil, Mattei, Kaiser, Gubenova, Furlanello, Konzertvereinigung V. State Opera Ch., VPO, Barenboim (Stage Director: Andrea Breth; V/D Brian Large)

We are well served on both DVD and CD in this opera, but this recording of Graham Vick's acclaimed Glyndebourne production from 1994 is a welcome addition. Not only is the production convincing but the cast is, too. But it is Elena Prokina's magnificent portrayal of Tatiana that makes this so desirable. The video direction is admirably discreet, with no intrusive camerawork and with the eye being directed where one feels it ought to be. Among the Onegins now before the public, this ranks high.

In the DVD of Solti's the brilliant Czech director Petr Weigl has in his 1988 film illustrated the familiar Decca audio recording, conducted by Solti, with the most evocative visual realization of the narrative. Actors mime to the words in settings as nearly as possible those of the original Pushkin story, whether in the Russian countryside or in St Petersburg. The result is all the more moving, when the agonizing of the young Tatiana or of the disillusioned Onegin is presented by actors who so accurately look the part, as do all the authentically costumed cast. The contrast between the country ball of Act II with the grand ball of Act III set in a St Petersburg palace is brought out in a way that could never be achieved on stage, and the chill of the duel scene is all the more involving when the scene is of genuine snow in a genuine forest. Musically, the oddity is that the Prelude and first scene (the Tatiana–Olga duet) are presented in audio recording only, for Weigl starts his film most atmospherically with the peasants' chorus which opens the second scene of Act I, with the reapers observed from afar wending their way in the mist down a winding country path.

But because the action is filmed in various locations, including the open air, with actors miming the singers, the Kingsway Hall acoustic in which Decca recorded the original in the mid-1970s does not quite match up with what we see, and though the direction and the sets are always imaginative, the free-ranging camera does not (and cannot) match the evidence of the ear, so that the acoustic disparity is obvious.

The cast are handsome and mime for the most part successfully. But some collectors, like R.L., may be unable to sustain the suspension of disbelief, and will find the result here ultimately unconvincing. R.L. feels that here is a case where the collector is better served by the original CD set, which sounds splendid.

But both E.G. and I.M. find the DVD totally compelling and convincing, even though there are cuts in the music, and are only too delighted that the recording was made in such an attractive acoustic ambience, with the disparity soon forgotten. With the surtitles so easy to follow, the viewer/listener can be totally caught up in the action and at the same time enjoy not only the glorious singing, but also the inspired orchestral detail of Solti's accompaniment through which Tchaikovsky is conveying the emotions of the characters as one watches them. The sound itself is superb. So while R.L. has his doubts, for E.G. and I.M. this set is a triumph.

Musically, the Decca Metropolitan Opera Eugene Onegin is superb, with the two key roles, Tatiana (Renée Fleming) and Onegin (Dmitri Hvorostovsky), singing and acting magnetically, and Valery Gergiev (who is curious to watch, with his fluttering hand movements) phrasing Tchaikovsky's wonderful score with the warmest and most touching, lyrical and dramatic support for the singers. The famous letter scene is unforgettable and the dialogue/duet at the opening of Act I, between Madame Larina (Svetlana Volkova) and the old nurse, Filipyevna (Larisa Shevchenko), is very touching – about contented habit replacing happiness in old age. Ramón Vargas is an engagingly Schubertian Lensky, yet he sings ardently, and Olga (Elena Zaremba) makes a convincing partner, although her voice is not caught flatteringly by the microphones. But Fleming's certainly is, glorious throughout, and Hvorostovsky matches her, a convincingly strong and dignified characterization. Sergei Aleksashkin's Prince Gremin is excellent too, and he has one of the opera's other great hits.

The problem lies in the production. A large, bare stage is used, covered with leaves in Act I. It is too big and dwarfs the characters, and the total lack of background colour quite spoils the great waltz scene, although the bareness suits the duel sequence. Then, unbelievably, Onegin's seconds help him change clothes for the final Act during the Polonaise, which is not danced, and the scene at Gremin's palace immediately follows, even though it is supposed to be some years later. Presentation apart, this is a magnificent performance, but – except in the first Act – better heard than seen. The bonuses include a rehearsal sequence and 'Backstage at the Met.' with Beverly Sills.

It is a pity that so many modern stage directors are not willing to mount an opera following the composer's intentions. This new 2007 Salzburg Festival production offers consistently splendid singing, especially Anna Samuil's delightful Tatiana, Peter Mattei's ardent Onegin and Ferrucio Furlanetto's resonant Prince Gremin. But alas the production is moved forward to Russia of the 1980s and the costumes are modern. In spite of that, the Lensky/Onegin duel is fought with eighteenth-century pistols! And the famous Polonaise is not used as a dance. What would Tchaikovsky have thought of that? However such is the quality of the music and indeed Barenboim's direction, that after a while, reason is suspended, and one simply gets caught up in this extraordinary masterpiece, and forgets one's quibbles about the directorial eccentricities.

Eugene Onegin (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 417 413-2 (2). Kubiak, Weikl, Burrows, Reynolds, Ghiaurov, Hamari, Sénéchal, Alldis Ch., ROHCG O, Solti

(*) DG 423 959-2 (2). Freni, Allen, von Otter, Shicoff, Burchuladze, Sénéchal, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State O, Levine

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110216/17 (2). Nortsov, Kruglikova, Antonova, Kozlovsky, Mikhailov, Bolshoi Ch. & O, Melik-Pashaev, Orlov

Solti, characteristically crisp in attack, has plainly warmed to the score of Tchaikovsky's colourful opera, allowing his singers full rein in rallentando and rubato to a degree one might not have expected of him. The Tatiana of Teresa Kubiak is most moving – rather mature-sounding for the ingénue of Act I, but with her golden, vibrant voice rising most impressively to the final confrontation of Act III. The Onegin of Bernd Weikl may have too little variety of tone, but again this is firm singing that yet has authentic Slavonic tinges. The rest of the cast is excellent, with Stuart Burrows as Lensky giving one of his finest performances on record yet. Here, for the first time, the full range of expression in this most atmospheric of operas is superbly caught, with the Decca CDs vividly capturing every subtlety – including the wonderful off-stage effects.

The DG CD version brings a magnificent Onegin in Thomas Allen, the most satisfying account of the title-role yet recorded. It is matched by the Tatiana of Mirella Freni, even at a late stage in her career readily conveying girlish freshness in her voice. The other parts are also strongly taken. The tautened-nerves quality in the character of Lensky comes out vividly in the portrayal by Neil Shicoff, and Anne Sofie von Otter with her firm, clear mezzo believably makes Olga a younger sister, not too mature a character. Paata Burchuladze is a satisfyingly resonant Gremin and Michel Sénéchal, as on the Solti set, is an incomparable Monsieur Triquet. What welds all these fine components into a rich and exciting whole is the conducting of James Levine. The Leipzig Radio Choir sings superbly as well. The snag is that the DG recording is dry and studio-bound, with sound close and congested enough to undermine the bloom on both voices and instruments. In every way the more spacious acoustic in the Solti set is preferable.

Recorded in Moscow in 1937 on 40 short-playing 78 r.p.m. discs, this historic version of Eugene Onegin on Naxos was the first complete recording of the opera ever made, and it is remarkable not just for the idiomatic warmth of the conducting – with Alexander Orlov replacing Alexander Melik-Pashaev for some passages – but for the fine singing of the principals, with not a Slavonic wobbler among them. Panteleimon Nortsov in the title role sings with a firmness and clarity that is most moving, his tone rather darker than usual in this role. Elena Kruglikova is equally moving as Tatiana, even though the voice, generally warm and clear, acquires an edginess when under pressure at the top. Elizaveta Antonova sings with rich, velvet tone as Olga, and though Ivan Kozlovsky as Lensky has the nasal twang that is typical of many Russian tenors, his firmly focused expressiveness is equally compelling. The transfers of Ward Marston are astonishingly fine, firm and full bodied.

The Maid of Orleans (complete; DVD version)

(*) Warner DVD 4509-94191-2. Rautio, Kulko, Gavrilova, Krutikov, Redkin, Nikolsky, Bolshoi Theatre Ch. & O, Lazarev (Dir: Boris Pokrovsky; V/D: Brian Large)

Tchaikovsky embarked on his own adaptation of Zhukovsky's translation of Schiller's Jungfrau von Orleans immediately after Eugene Onegin, with the intention of composing a score that would succeed on the Paris stage. Hence the crowd effects, coronation scene, and so on. Not only Meyerbeer but Gounod, whose scores he had been studying, were his models. The exception is Joan herself, where Tchaikovsky carried over identification with his heroine from Onegin. It is her music, and that of her beloved but ill-fated Lionel, that gives us the best music. And it is these roles that are the most memorable in this Bolshoi performance, recorded in 1993 without an audience present. This set is worth having for the sake of Nina Rautio's superb Joan – beautifully rounded in tone and finely shaped phrasing, and with excellent acting. The staging is somewhat stiff and traditional, and the orchestral response decent rather than distinguished. All the same, although this is not top-drawer Tchaikovsky it is well worth seeing, and there is after all Joan's narrative in Act II and other set pieces that are worthy of the master.

Mazeppa (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 074 1949. Putilin, Loskutova, Alexashkin, Dyadkova, Lutsiuk, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

This performance was recorded live from performances at the Maryinsky Theatre, St Petersburg. The production is in the best spirit of the Maryinsky, sumptuous to look at and full of period atmosphere. No dustbins in the Gorbals, no T-shirts or pairs of holed jeans in sight but a faithful attempt to match what the composer might have expected to see on stage. Putilin scores in terms of range and is the more credible a tyrant. Irina Loskutova's Maria is less memorable in terms of tonal lustre or beauty of line, but she is more dramatically convincing. No complaints about the remainder of the cast and the wonderful, full-throated singing of the chorus and the magnificence of the Kirov Orchestra under Gergiev. This is a very distinguished production and a hugely enjoyable evening.

The Queen of Spades (Pique Dame) (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 070 434-9. Grigorian, Gulegina, Leiferkus, Gergalov, Filatova, Borodina, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev (Producer: Temirkanov; V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 272-2. Marusin, Gustafson, Leiferkus, Khartinov, Palmer, Todorovich, Glyndebourne Fest. Ch., LPO, A. Davis (Producer: Vick; V/D: Peter Maniura)

Pushkin's dark story of a gambler's growing obsession with discovering the secret that will bring him riches is taut and concentrated. It unfolds with a gripping psychological intensity, all the more powerful for its understatement. Though modest, Tchaikovsky's libretto differs in many respects from Pushkin's story.

Dating from 1992, the Philips DVD, with the conductor, Valery Gergiev, looking very young, is a live recording of the Kirov Company's grandly traditional production. It is handsome to look at and very well staged, a joy to watch as well as listen to. Yuri Temirkanov (Gergiev's predecessor at the Kirov) produces and does not lose sight of the rococo component in this wonderful opera. Yet it is a straightforward and clean-cut presentation, deftly using massive choruses to match the opulent costumes and scenery, and nearly all the cast is first-rate. Incidentally, this cast differs from the CDs, with Irina Arkhipova's Countess being replaced by Ludmila Filatova and Nikolai Putilin giving way to Leiferkus as Tomsky, who appeared in the Ozawa set on RCA and also in the Glyndebourne production reviewed below.

Gegam Grigorian's Herman makes an unromantic figure, a predator rather than an ardent lover. He is a little stiff to start with and rarely sings below forte, but he improves as the opera unfolds and his performance acquires intensity, the characterization deepens, and he sings powerfully and cleanly. Maria Gulegina is superb as the heroine, Lisa, impressively dramatic and vocally powerful. The others are first-rate with the sad exception of Ludmila Filatova as the Countess, with a voice that is too thin and tremulous even to be acceptable in that aged role. This shortcoming is serious in her big scenes, which should be the climax of the whole drama, though she is certainly affecting, and makes up for it in vocal characterization.

Leiferkus is the soul of elegance, both vocally and as an actor. Nor should Olga Borodina's outstanding Pauline go unmentioned. Above all the hero is Gergiev himself who paces this marvellous score with depth and passion, and Brian Large's visual direction is superb. The eyes are directed to where the action and sound naturally dictate. The video recording was made after the CD and without the audience.

After the Gergiev–Temirkanov DVD, Graham Vick's Glyndebourne production is a distinctly lesser pleasure, albeit a pleasure nonetheless. The smaller stage (this was recorded in 1992 before the renovation) naturally imposes constraints, and the set, a slanted black box whose walls are daubed with paint, is a self-imposed limitation. Yuri Masurin's Herman is if anything more impressive than Grigorian's; he is the part from beginning to end. Nancy Gustafson is an expressive Lisa, who conveys her bewilderment and anguish with much artistry and the cast in general is first-rate. Felicity Palmer's Countess is particularly fine. Andrew Davis holds all the threads together magnificently and gets an impressive response from his singers and the LPO. Gergiev perhaps gets the greater sweep and depth of tone and has of course the most sumptuous and authentic staging.

The Queen of Spades (Pique Dame) (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Ph. 438 141-2 (3). Grigorian, Putilin, Chernov, Solodovnikov, Arkhipova, Gulegina, Borodina, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 679-2 (3). Gougaloff, Vishnevskaya, Resnik, Schwarz, Weikl, Petkov, Popp, Tchaikovsky Ch. & O Nat. de France, Rostropovich

In the CD set Gergiev and his talented team from the Kirov Opera in St Petersburg have also produced a winner. The very opening, refined and purposeful, sets the pattern, with Gergiev controlling this episodic work with fine concern for atmosphere and dramatic impact, unafraid of extreme speeds and telling pauses. Though the engineers fail to give a supernatural aura to the voice of the Countess when she returns as a ghost, the recorded sound is consistently warm and clear. It is good to have the veteran Irina Arkhipova singing powerfully and bitingly in that key role, while the other international star, Olga Borodina, is unforgettable as Pauline, singing gloriously with keen temperament. Otherwise Gergiev's chosen team offers characterful Slavonic voices that are yet well focused and unstrained, specially important with the tenor hero, Herman, here dashingly sung by Gegam Grigorian. As the heroine, Lisa, Maria Gulegina sings with warm tone and well-controlled vibrato, slightly edgy under pressure.

This DG version is among the finest of the opera sets conducted by Mstislav Rostropovich and now emerges at mid-price in DG's series of vintage 'Originals'. With a strong cast which – with a stiffening of non-Russian stars – avoids the penalties of Slavonic wobblers, it is even a contender for first choice against Gergiev's Philips version with the Kirov Opera. In the mid-1970s Galina Vishnevskaya was still at her peak, here proving a strong and vibrant Lisa, not young-sounding but with plenty of temperament. The firm velvet tones of Hanna Schwarz's mezzo as her sister, Pauline, provide a fine contrast. Schwarz is also well-matched in the duet which is the high point of the Act II Intermezzo, with Lucia Popp as a starry soprano partner, a charming pastiche sequence. Peter Gougaloff is a characterful Herman, the key figure in this story based on Pushkin. His very Russian tenor lacks beauty, but it is firm and full toned, with words expressively brought out. As the Countess Regina Resnik gives an aptly over-the-top performance, biting and incisive, not only in her death scene but in the Countess's ghostly reappearance, atmospherically presented using an echo chamber. The rest of the large cast assembled in Paris includes such leading singers in incidental roles as Bernd Weikl and Dimiter Petkov.

Iolanta (complete)

🔑 * Ph. 442 796-2 (2). Gorchakova, Alexashkin, Hvorostovsky, Grigorian, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

Gergiev and his outstanding Kirov team give a warm, idiomatic reading of Tchaikovsky's charming fairy-tale opera of the blind princess. Bringing out the atmospheric beauty of the score, it completely outshines the deleted Rostropovich version on Erato. Galina Gorchakova gives the most moving portrait of the heroine, tender and vulnerable, with words delicately touched in. As Vaudémont, the knight who falls in love with her, Gegam Grigorian sings with rather tight, very Russian tenor-tone, not always pleasing but with a fine feeling for the idiom and a natural ease in high tessitura. Dmitri Hvorostovsky sings nobly and heroically as Robert, his more vigorous friend and rival, while Sergei Alexashkin sings with dark, grainy – again very Russian – tone as King René, Iolanta's father. Above all, the exchanges between characters consistently convey the feeling of stage-experience. The recording, not ideally clear but well balanced, was made in the theatre but under studio conditions.

OPERA BALLET MUSIC

Opera Ballet music from: Cherevichki; Eugene Onegin; The Maid of Orléans; Oprichnik; The Sorceress

 Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 442 8933. ROHCG O, C. Davis

This is a supremely engaging collection of (in the main) rare Tchaikovsky dances, drawn from his operas, revealing no new masterpieces but again showing the composer's vigorous melodic resourcefulness and his brilliant use of orchestral palette. The opening items from Eugene Onegin tend to overshadow what follows in their tuneful inspiration, especially when they are played with such brio and commitment; but there are no disappointments in the rest of the programme. The lively, characterful playing from the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, Orchestra, directed by Sir Colin Davis, is matched by lavishly sumptuous analogue sound.

TCHEREPNIN, Alexander
(1899–1977)

Piano Concertos 2, Op. 26; 4 (Fantaisie), Op. 78; Magna mater, Op. 41; Symphonic Prayer, Op. 93

 BIS CD 1247. Ogawa, Singapore SO, Lan Shui

The Piano Concerto 2 is 'European' in style, while the Fourth Concerto, written shortly before he emigrated to the USA, is full of Chinese influence. Neither Concerto is new to the catalogue but the present versions supersede their predecessors. Eminently serviceable recording.

Piano Concertos 2, Op. 26; 4 (Fantaisie), Op. 78; 6, Op. 99

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 9110. McLachlan, Chetham's SO, Clayton

A most attractive disc, with brilliant playing from Murray McLachlan in all three works, while the young orchestra is highly responsive. The Fourth Concerto is exotically programmatic (a bit like a Chinese opera). In McLachlan's hands the piano writing glitters and the Eastern influence is in no doubt, while the orchestral woodwind playing ensures that the finale is charmingly pentatonic. The Sixth Concerto was written many years later, in 1965, and is more Prokofievian, with the opening movement bringing a long, unstoppable toccata before the lyrical material enters. The Andantino is simpler but still exotic, and soon leads to more brilliant playing from the soloist; while the finale, opening with the bass drum, brings greater weight, with a curious main theme, and later powerfully quoting the Russian folksong Do not flood, my quiet Don. The Chetham's Orchestra plays throughout with remarkably spontaneous brilliance, the players obviously enjoying themselves. Excellent recording, too.

(i) Piano Concerto 5, Op. 96; Symphonies 1 in E, Op. 42; 2 in E flat, Op. 77

 BIS CD 1017. Singapore SO, Shui; (i) with Ogawa

(i) Piano Concerto 6, Op. 99; Symphonies 3 in F sharp, Op. 83; 4 in E , Op. 91

 BIS CD 1018. Singapore SO, Shui; (i) with Ogawa

The First Symphony of 1927 caused a stir, not so much on account of its radical musical language as the fact that its Scherzo was written for percussion only. It is inventive and stimulating and full of personality. The Second Symphony did not follow until the end of the 1939–45 war, and two successors followed in the 1950s: the Third in 1952, and the Fourth, commissioned by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in 1958–9.

It is with the Fourth that the newcomer to Tcherepnin's music should start. Its invention is wonderfully alert and fresh, and the control of pace masterly. It is neoclassical in feeling with a great sense of wit and style. The two Piano Concertos are from the 1960s and are elegantly played by Noriko Ogawa. The Singapore Orchestra has greatly improved since its early Marco Polo records under Choo Hoey, and the Chinese conductor Lan Shui gets generally good results from them.

Symphony 4; Romantic Overture, Op. 67; Russian Dances, Op. 50; Suite for Orchestra, Op. 87

🔑 (*) Marco 8.223380. Czech-Slovak State PO (Košice), Yip

The Fourth Symphony is among Tcherepnin's finest works. The Suite, Op. 67, is less individual and in places recalls the Stravinsky of Petrushka and Le Chant du rossignol. Like the much earlier Russian Dances, it is uneven in quality but far from unattractive. The Romantic Overture was composed in wartime Paris. Generally good performances, decently recorded too under the young Chinese conductor Wing-Sie Yip, who draws a lively response from her players.

TCHEREPNIN, Nikolai
(1873–1945)

Narcisse et Echo, Op. 40

🔑  Chan. 9670. Hague Chamber Ch., & Residentie O, Rozhdestvensky

This endearing and atmospheric choral ballet Narcisse et Echo for much of the time sounds more French than Russian, with fascinating anticipations of Daphnis, not least in obbligato choral passages. Other sections mirror what the young Stravinsky was writing, but toned down. There also is a lot of Rimsky-Korsakov in it, and if you respond to that Russian master as well as Scriabin and Ravel, you will like this. It is somewhat static and in the last part of the ballet Narcissus is simply absorbed in gazing at his own reflection. However, though it is emphatically not great music, there is much that enchants. Rozhdestvensky is the ideal advocate, helped by ripe Chandos sound.

Le Pavillon d'Armide (ballet; complete)

(*) Marco 8.223779. Moscow SO, Shek

Le Pavillon d'Armide was the ballet with which Diaghilev opened his first Ballets russes season introducing Nijinsky. Its invention is fluent, owing much to Tcherepnin's teacher Rimsky-Korsakov and to Glazunov and Tchaikovsky. It runs to well over an hour and the inspiration is uneven. At its best, though, it has real charm, and the scoring is always full of colour. It is very well recorded.

TELEMANN, Georg (1681–1767)

Concertos: for 2 Chalumeaux in D min.; for Flute in D; for 3 Oboes, 3 Violins in B flat; for Recorder & Flute in E min.; for Trumpet in D; for Trumpet & Violin in D

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 419 633-2. Soloists, Col. Mus. Ant., Goebel

As Reinhard Goebel points out, Telemann 'displayed immense audacity in the imaginative and ingenious mixing of the colours from the palette of the baroque orchestra', and these are heard to excellent effect here. Those who know the vital B flat Concerto for three oboes and violins from earlier versions, will find the Allegro very fast indeed and the slow movement quite thought-provoking. The chalumeau is the precursor of the clarinet, and the concerto for two chalumeaux recorded here is full of unexpected delights. Marvellously alive and accomplished playing, even if one occasionally tires of the bulges and nudges on the first beats of bars.

Concerto for 2 Chalumeaux in D min.; Sonata for 2 Chalumeaux in F; in G; Viola Concerto in G; Overture des Nations anciennes et modernes in G; Völker Overture (Suite in B flat)

 Chan. 0593. Lawson, Harris, Standage, Coll. Mus. 90

Colin Lawson and Michael Harris with their 'liquid' timbres find a delicate charm in the two works for chalumeax and the Sonata has a rather touching Grave, which is played very serenely. Standage himself takes the solo part with distinction and pleasingly full timbre in the famous Viola Concerto, and his characterization of the Ancient and Modern Overture is alert and strong, finding dignity in Les Allemands and not overdoing the closing parody lament for Les Vieilles Femmes. He is equally positive in the so-called 'Folk' Overture, played vibrantly: its last five movements each draw on a different culture – Turkish, Russian and so on – but with their rhythms given a Western overlay.

Concertos: for 2 Corni da caccia in F, TWV 52:F3; for Violin & 3 Corni di caccia in D, TWV 54:D2. Overtures for 2 Corni di caccia in D. TWV 55:D17; for 2 Corni di caccia & 2 Oboes in F, TWV 55:F3

🔑 * MDG 605 1045-2. Deutsch Natural Horn Soloists, New Düsseldorf Hofmusik

The Deutsch Natural Horn Soloists are a superb group. They play here expertly using hand horns without valves and demonstrating the most thrilling bravura, whether in partnership with oboes, where the interplay of the Réjouissance in the F major Overture (or Suite) is a real hit number, or in the Concerto in F, which reminds one a little of Handel's Water Music. In the Concerto scored for three horns, the solo violin in the Grave slow movement gives expressive contrast before sharing the exuberant finale. With excellent recording, this is outstanding in every way, but not to be played all in one go!

Concertos, Overtures: (i) 5 Concertos for 2 Flutes, with Lute, Bassoon & Strings (10 284); (ii) Chamber Concerto for Alto Recorder in G min., TWV 43:G3; (iii) Double Concerto in E min. for Recorder & Flute; (iv) Concerto for 3 Trumpets & 2 Oboes in D; (ii) Sonata in A for Recorder, 2 Scordato Violins & Continuo, TWV 43:A7; (v) Tafelmusik II: Trio in E min. for Recorder, Oboe & Continuo (49 431); (vi) Overtures (Suites): in C, TWV 55:C3 (Hamburg Ebb and Flow) & C6; Overture in E min., TWV 55:C5 (10 625); Overtures: in D (connected with a Tragicomical Suite); in F (Alster Echo), TVW 55:F11; in D, TWV 55:D15 (49 428); (vii) Overtures (Suites): in D, TWV D18; TWV 55:D6 & D7; in F (49 429)

Ⓑ  Cap. 49 426 (5). (i) Dresden Bar. Soloists, Haupt; (ii) Huntgeburth, Berlin Bar. Company; (iii) Höller, Hünteler, Capella Colonsiensis, G. Fischer; (iv) Friedrich & soloists, Budapest Strings; (v) Passin, Gütz, Leipzig Bach Coll.; (vi) Capella Colonsiensis, Linde; (vii) Deutsch Bach Soloists, Winschermann

If you want a representative collection of Telemann at his best, this Capriccio box (with the five CDs in a slip case) is hard to better. The Concertos for a pair of flutes are continually inventive and the two compilations of miscellaneous concertos and chamber music offer plenty of variety, not only in the music but also the performances, although all are authentic in the best possible way. The Suites (Overtures) are all among the composer's best, including the two most famous, both pictorial or progammatic, the Alster Echo and the Hamburg Water Music. The performances and recordings are excellent, as is the documentation. As far as we know, the discs are not currently available separately.

Flute Concerto in B min.; Double Concertos: in A min. for 2 Recorders; in E min. for Recorder & Flute; in C min., for Violin & Oboe; in D for 2 Oboes d'amore; Chamber Concerto in B flat for Oboe, Violin, 2 Flutes, 2 Violins & Continuo

Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 05472 77367-2. Camerata Köln

A very attractive collection of mostly Double Concertos, of which the E minor Concerto for Recorder and Flute is perhaps the most winning as it has a Largo slow movement which recalls Handel's Where'er you walk and a bustling finale using a drone bass. The closing Chamber Concerto for six soloists is also very diverting, but the whole programme offers playing and recording of high quality. However, the documentation is inadequate, with no TWV identification.

Flute Concertos: in B min.; C; D (2); E; E min.

 VAI Audio VAIA 1166. Stallman, Phd. Concerto Soloists CO

Every one of these fine Concertos, galant and Italianate by turns, shows the composer's invention at its most fertile and imaginative. All but one is in four movements. The E minor, which is in five, is perhaps finest of all. Robert Stallman is a stylish and elegant player and he is given crisply sympathetic modern instrument accompaniments from the Philadelphia Chamber Orchestra. Excellent recording too.

Flute Concertos in D, TWV:51:D2; in G, TWV:51:G2. Concerto for 2 Flutes, Violone in A min., TWV:53:a; Concerto for Flute, Oboe d'amore & Viola d'amore in E, TWV:53:E; Tafelmusik: Concerto for Flute & Violin in A, TWV:53:A2

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 03435-2. Pahud, Berlin Bar. Soloists, Kussmaul

An enchanting disc. Everything Emmanuel Pahud plays seems to turn to gold, and he has admirable support from his solo colleagues (including Albrecht Meyer, oboe d'amore and Wolfram Christ, viola d'amore). Throughout Allegros are wonderfully nimble and light-hearted. The Berlin Baroque Soloists directed by Rainer Kussmaul accompany with wonderful finesse and warmth and the recording is in the demonstration bracket.

(i) Flute Concerto in G, TWV 51:G1; (ii) Double Horn Concerto in D, TWV 52:D1; (i) Oboe Concerto in F, TWV 51:F1; (ii) Triple Concerto for 2 Oboes & Bassoon, TWV 53:D1; (ii) Recorder Concerto in C, TWV 51:C1

Ⓝ * CPO 777 267-2. Soloists, (i) Camerata Köln; (ii) La Stagione Frankfurt, Schneider

The Camerata Köln (of five players) and La Stagione Frankfurt, a full baroque orchestra (of 16), alternate in this particularly inventive collection of wind concertos of which the Recorder Concerto and Flute Concerto are the most ambitious, each with four movements. The former has an extended closing Minuet which requires much virtuosity, the latter is pastoral in feeling with a musette introduced in the finale. But the concertos featuring horns and oboes are also very pleasing, and altogether this is a most entertaining and varied collection, very well played indeed.

Horn Concerto in D

 Ara. Z 6750. Rose, St Luke's Chamber Ens. – FORSTER; HAYDN; L. MOZART: Horn Concertos ***

Telemann's D major Horn Concerto (designated for the corno di caccia or hunting horn) is one of his best, and indeed one of the most attractive of all concertos for the instrument, other than those of Mozart. Stewart Rose's broad, open tone suits this robust music admirably and he plays with confident finesse; the crisply stylish accompaniment provides an excellent backcloth and the recording is excellent.

Concertos: in D for 2 Horns, TWV 52:D2; in E for Flute, TWV 51:E1; in D min. for Oboe, TWV 51:d1; in E min. for Recorder & Flute, TWV 52:e1; (i) Concerto da camera in G min. for Recorder & 2 Violins, TWV 43:g3

CPO 777 032-2. Camerata Köln; or (i) La Stagione Frankfurt, Schneider

Another clutch of inventive concertos, expertly and vivaciously played by members of the small-scale Camerata Köln. Indeed the robust hand horns project almost into the room as they duet spiritedly. The Double Concerto for transverse flute and recorder is also highly effective, the two instruments sometimes piping together in harmony, at others in imitation. The Oboe concerto is agreeable plaintive while the larger-scale Concerto da camera, as its name suggests is played by the much bigger Frankfurt Stagione. Both ensembles use period instruments very pleasingly.

Triple Horn Concerto in D; Alster (Overture) Suite; La Bouffonne Suite; Grillen-Symphonie

🔑 * Chan. 0547. Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

The Triple Horn Concerto opens the programme with the hand-horns rasping boisterously. Then comes La Bouffonne Suite, with its elegant Loure and the extremely fetching Rigaudon, while the work ends with a touchingly delicate Pastourelle, beautifully played here. The Grillen-Symphonie ('cricket symphony') brings a piquant dialogue between upper wind and double-basses in the first movement, while the second has unexpected accents and lives up to its name Tändelnd ('flirtatious'). The horns (four of them) re-enter ambitiously at the colourful Overture of the Alster Suite, add to the fun in the Echo movement and help to simulate the Hamburg glockenspiel that follows. The entry of the Alster Shepherds brings a piquant drone effect, but best of all is the wailing Concerto of Frogs and Crows, with drooping bleats from the oboe and then the principal horn. Standage and his group make the very most of Telemann's remarkable orchestral palette and play with great vitality as well as finesse.

Oboe Concertos: in C min.; D min.; E min.; F min.

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50905-2 (2). de Vries (baroque oboe), Amsterdam Alma Musica, Van Dael – BACH; VIVALDI: Oboe Concertos ***

These four Oboe Concertos of Telemann are beautifully played by Han de Vries on a piquant baroque oboe; if their sprightly invention does not quite match that of Bach, the C minor Concerto is a piece of more than usual depth of imagination, and the wistful central Largo of the E minor work is quite memorable. Excellent recording, but with the oboe dominating the sound-picture.

Oboe Concerto in D min., TWV 51:d2; Violin Concerto in E, TWV51:E3; Double Violin Concerto in A, TWV 52:A2; Overture in C, TWV 55:c4; Sinfonia melodica for 2 Oboes & Strings; Sonata (Concerto ripieno) for Strings, TW 43:Es1

 DG 477 5923. Berlin Barock Soloists, Kussmaul

Here is splendid example of a well-planned Telemann programme, played by a modern-instrument ensemble, yet whose conductor, Rainer Kussmaul, understands and accepts period-instrument style. The brief Overture here is a reconstruction and sets the concert off to a lively start, and all the Concertos are attractive in their various ways. The most interesting work is the Sinfonia melodica, which turns out to be a French Suite with a brilliant Vivace in place of the usual Overture, followed by a plaintive Sarabande and other dances, including a Chaconnette, and ending with a delightful, bouncing Gigue en Canarie. A most enjoyable disc, very well recorded.

Oboe Concertos: in C min. (2); D (Concerto grazioso); D min.; E; E flat; F; F min.; Oboe d'amore Concertos: E; E min.; G; (i) Triple Concerto for Oboe d'amore, Flute & Viola d'amore

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 2057 (2). Francis, L. Harpsichord Ens.; (i) with Mayer, Watson

Sarah Francis's survey of Telemann's Oboe and Oboe d'amore Concertos brings modern-instrument performances which are a model of style. The G major Oboe d'amore Concerto on the first disc is most gracious (with colouring dark-timbred like a cor anglais in the soave first movement). The Concerto grazioso, too, is aptly named. The C minor Oboe Concerto begins with a Grave, then the main Allegro brings a witty dialogue between soloist and violins, with the theme tossed backwards and forwards like a shuttlecock. But it is the works for oboe d'amore that are again so striking. The performances are full of joy and sparkle as well as expressive. They are beautifully recorded and make a very good case for playing this repertoire on modern instruments. Now reissued as a budget Double on Regis they are even more highly recommended.

(i) Oboe Concertos: in D min.; E min.; F min.; (ii) Sonatas: E min. (from Esercizi musici); in G (from Sonata metodiche, Op. 13/6); G min. (from Tafelmusik, Part III)

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61878-2 (2). de Vries; (i) Amsterdam Alma Musica, Van Asperen; (ii) Van Asperen, Möller – ALBINONI: Concerti a cinque, Op. 9. ***

Hans de Vries is a fine player and he produces an attractively full timbre on his baroque oboe. All three Concertos are characteristically inventive, with alert and stylish accompaniments, but the three Sonatas are a delight, the work from the Tafelmusik particularly diverse. The slight snag is the very forward balance of the solo instrument, which reduces the overall range of dynamic, but apart from that the sound is vivid, and the harpsichord image in the Sonatas is pleasing. This comes as part of an inexpensive Double, but the present CD only plays for just over 40 minutes and one wonders what has happened to the fourth Concerto in C minor which was on the original CD.

Double Concertos: for 2 Oboes d'amore in A; for Recorder & Flute in E min.; Violin Concerto in B flat; Overtures (Suites): in F sharp min.; D

 Chan. 0661 Holtslag, Brown, Robson, Eastaway, Coll. Mus 90, Standage

The title of this Chandos disc, 'Ouverture comique', refers to the last of the five Telemann works included in this delightful programme. It is a weirdly surreal musical portrait – 18th-century style – of a hypochondriac afflicted with gout. Over seven movements he, in turn, finds remedies in dancing – cue for inserted dance-fragments – in a coach-ride, and even a visit to a brothel. Telemann wrote this sparkling piece in his eighties with his imagination still working overtime. The other works, more conventional but just as inventive, include another overture/suite and three refreshing Concertos, all beautifully done.

Concerto in B flat for 3 Oboes & 3 Violins; Concerto in E for Flute, Oboe d'amore & Viola d'amore. Tafelmusik, Part I: Concerto in A for Flute, Violin & Cello; Part II: Concerto in F for 3 Violins

 Chan. 0580. Soloists, Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

The triple Concertos here are among the composer's most colourful works and the period wind-instruments here are piquant in their mixed colours, the strings lithe, yet not abrasive. The opening of the E major Concerto (which comes last in the programme) tickles the ear engagingly with its opening Andante, and the third movement Siciliano is equally diverting. The lively opening movement of the Tafelmusik Triple Violin Concerto momentarily recalls Handel's Queen of Sheba, and it has a particularly eloquent Largo. First-class playing and recording throughout.

Concertos in B flat for 3 Oboes, 3 Violins & Continuo, TWV 44:43; F for Recorder, Bassoon & Strings; for 4 Violins in G, TWV 40:201. Overture in F for 2 Horns & Strings, TWV 44:7

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 60523-2. Soloists, VCM, Harnoncourt

This 1966 collection remains one of the best Telemann discs in the catalogue with first class soloists, including Franz Brüggen (recorder), all with strong personalities. Excellent recording too.

Recorder Concerto in C, TWV 51:C1; Suite for Recorder in A min., TWV 55:a2; C (Hamburger Ebb und Flut), TWV 55:C3

 HM HMC 901917. Maurice Steger, Akademie für Alte Musik, Berlin

This recording offers a triptych of three of Telemann's finest works, the well-known Suite for Recorder and Strings in A minor, played with virtuosity and élan by Maurice Steger (sample the Réjouissance for an astonishing example of his bravura) plus the Concerto in C, which has a similarly dazzling finale, and the celebrated Hamburg Water Music, in which all the movements are associated with mythology, except for the finale, which is a Jolly Sailors' Dance. A first-class collection, splendidly recorded.

Recorder Concertos: in C & E major; Double Concerto for Recorder & Flute; Suite in A min. for Recorder & Strings

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554018. Rothert, Umbach, Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

It is a pity that Naxos do not provide TWV identification as do EMI and DG Archiv, but the Suite in A minor is an irresistible masterpiece if ever there was one, and is easily identified. It is played here as winningly and stylishly as anywhere else on disc. The two named soloists share the Double Concerto (which has a delightful Largo that starts off like Handel's 'Where'er you walk'), but it is not clear who plays elsewhere. However it is of no moment; all the solo playing here is expert and personable, and there is some delicious virtuoso piping in the second movement of the E major Concerto. Indeed all four works show Telemann on top form, Helmut Müller-Brühl's accompaniments are polished and equally stylish, and the recording is first class.

(i) Recorder Concertos: in C; in F; (ii) Suite in A min. for Recorder & Strings; (i) Sinfonia in F

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55091. (i) Holtslag, Parley of Instruments; (ii) cond. Goodman

The three solo Concertos here are a delight. Peter Holtslag's piping treble recorder is truthfully balanced, in proper scale with the authentic accompaniments, which are neat, polished, sympathetic and animated. The Sinfonia is curiously scored, for recorder, oboe, solo bass viol, strings, cornett, three trombones and an organ, with doubling of wind and string parts. Even with Roy Goodman balancing everything expertly the effect is slightly bizarre. About the great Suite in A minor there are some reservations: it is played with much nimble bravura and sympathy on the part of the soloist, but the orchestral texture sounds rather thin. However, at budget price this remains an attractive proposition.

(i–iii) Double Concerto in E min. for Recorder & Transverse Flute; (iv) Viola Concerto in G; (i; v) Suite in A min. for Flute & Strings; (iii) Overture des nations anciens et modernes in G

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 40843-2. (i) Brüggen; (ii) Vester; (iii) Amsterdam CO, Rieu; (iv) Doctor, Concerto Amsterdam, Brüggen; (v) Southwest German CO, Tilegant

All these works show Telemann as an original and often inspired craftsman. His use of contrasting timbres in the Double Concerto has considerable charm; the Overture des nations anciens et modernes is slighter but is consistently and agreeably inventive, and the Suite in A minor, one of his best-known works, is worthy of Handel or Bach. Frans Brüggen and Franz Vester are expert soloists and Brüggen shows himself equally impressive on the conductor's podium accompanying Paul Doctor, the rich-timbred soloist in the engaging Viola Concerto. The 1960s sound, splendidly remastered, is still superb, with excellent body and presence, and this Apex reissue is a fine bargain.

(i) Viola Concerto in G; (ii) Suite in A min. for Recorder & Strings; Tafelmusik, Part 2: (iii) Triple Violin Concerto in F; Part 3: (iv) Double Horn Concerto in E flat

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.550156. (i) Kyselak; (ii) Stivín; (iii) Hoelblingova, Hoelbling, Jablokov; (iv) Z. & B. Tylšar; Capella Istropolitana, Edlinger

It is difficult to conceive of a better Telemann programme for anyone encountering this versatile composer for the first time and coming fresh to this repertoire, having bought the inexpensive Naxos CD on impulse. Ladislav Kyselak is a fine violist and is thoroughly at home in Telemann's splendid four-movement Concerto; Jiři Stivín is an equally personable recorder soloist in the masterly Suite in A minor; his decoration is a special joy. The Triple Violin Concerto with its memorable Vivace finale and the Double Horn Concerto also show the finesse which these musicians readily display. Richard Edlinger provides polished and alert accompaniments throughout. The digital sound is first class.

Violin Concertos: in A; A min.; B min.; B flat; C; G; G min., TWV 51: a4; a2; h2; B1; C3; g1; G7

 CPO 777 089-2. Wallfisch, Orfeo Bar. O

Violin Concertos: in C; D; E; E min.; F & G, TWV51: C2; D9 & D10; E2; E3; F2; G8

🔑  CPO 999 900-2. Wallfisch, Orfeo Bar. O.

These Concertos require a fair degree of virtuosity and, if less individually original than those of Vivaldi, their invention is consistently stimulating. The opening Affetuoso of the C major work here, with the oboe prominent in the orchestra, is particularly appealing, its melody almost Handelian. The other four-movement Concertos here are similarly inviting, the D major opening Con contento and the E major again marked Affetuoso. The three-movement concertos are more conventional, but Telemann's ideas never desert him. Elizabeth Wallfisch is a complete master of this repertoire, playing with plenty of authentic dash and an agreeable expressive lyricism, and at the same time directing vivacious accompaniments from her excellent Baroque Orchestra. The balance is just as it should be.

(i) Violin Concerto in A (Les Rainettes); Overtures (Suites) in B flat (Les Nations); in D TWV 55; in G (La Bizarre)

 HM HMC 901744. (i) Seiler; Berlin Akademie for Alte Musik

The bluff good humour of Telemann and his fondness for a musical joke are splendidly illustrated in this delightful disc of three of his Overture/Suites and a Violin Concerto equally spirited with its joky imitation of frogs ('rainettes' in French), which the note suggests might be a take-off of Vivaldi. The B flat Overture with its sequence of brief movements celebrating different nations is well enough known, but the jolliest work of all here is the one nicknamed La Bizarre, with its deliberate rule-breaking in the fugue of the opening movement. The players of the Berlin Academy of Early Music bring out the fun all the more effectively with the brilliance, precision and energy of their playing, vividly recorded.

(i) Violin Concertos: in D; in E; in G; in G; in B flat; (ii) 12 Fantasias for solo violin

 Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 442 8291 (2). (i) Brown, ASMF; (ii) Grumiaux

Iona Brown's violin tone is pure and sweet, and these warmly vital readings of Telemann's Violin Concertos are most enjoyable. The Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields offer their characteristic style and polish and the digital recording is first rate. The 12 Fantasias for solo violin were written a decade after Bach's Partitas and they are less ambitious and demanding. Yet there is much that is rewarding here, particularly given such artistry as Grumiaux's; Telemann's invention is fresh, though none of these short suites can claim depth.

Darmstadt Overtures (Suites): for 3 Oboes, Bassoon, & Strings: in C, TWV 55/C6; in D, TWV 55/D15; in G min., TWV 55/G4

(BB)  Naxos 8.554244. Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

The modern-instrument performances on Naxos are delightfully vivacious and elegant. This is a first-class chamber orchestra and Müller-Brühl's light rhythmic touch keeps the dance movements sparkling. The recording is excellent. A most entertaining collection.

Don Quixote (Suite burlesque in G); Concerto in D for 2 Violins & Bassoon; Overtures in B min.; G

 Chan. 0700. Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

Don Quixote (Suite burlesque); Overtures (Suites) in F (Alster); in B flat (La Bourse)

🔑 * Analekta Fleur de Lys FL2 3138. Tafelmusik, Lamon

The Don Quixote Burlesque is scored for strings without wind, but Telemann is as resourceful as ever and the portrayal of Sancho Panza is as striking as the gallop of Sancho's donkey. The lively Windmills sequence contrasts with the Don's gentle sighs for Dulcinée. Not surprisingly the performance of the Alster Suite by the superb Tafelmusik under Jean Lamon upstages all the competition, with superbly exuberant horn-playing and especially imaginative echo effects. With outstanding recording, this is one of the most winning of all Telemann orchestral discs.

The descriptive Don Quixote burlesque is well covered in the catalogue, but this account from Collegium Musicum 90 is among the best; and the other two Suites, if not especially individual, are very well played too. The engaging little Concerto in D with its string–bassoon solo interplay is also played and recorded most elegantly.

Die Kleine Kammermusik, Orchestral Suites 1–6

 CPO 999 994-2. La Stagione, Frankfurt, Schneider

Telemann had great success with the 6 Partitas which made up the second part of his Kleine Kammermusik which he published in 1716. So he decided to compose an orchestral version of the whole series, scored for two oboes, strings and continuo, although he omitted the woodwind in 2 and 3 of the set. During the reworking he added a newly composed French overture, lasting about six minutes, which altered the scale of the Suites altogether. They are most agreeable and entertaining works and, as played here by the excellent period-instrument Frankfurt chamber orchestra, make enjoyably elegant listening.

Overtures (Suites) in F (Alster); in F (La Chasse); in G min. (La Musette); in D (for the Jubilee of the Hamburg Admiralty); in D (Ouverture jointe d'une suite tragi-comique)

🔑 * HM HMC 901654. Berlin Akademie für Alte Musik

The opening Overture in D, written for the Hamburg Admiralty's centenary celebration, is remarkably like Handel's Fireworks Music and makes a festive start to this very attractive Harmonia Mundi period-instrument collection. We have had the Alster Suite before, with all its pictorial effects. In the Musette Suite Telemann reuses a drone effect for his fifth movement (hence the sobriquet), but this is otherwise a collection of lively dance vignettes from various national sources, of which the most attractive are the Italian Napolitaine and Harliquinade. La Chasse is scored for wind instruments alone. There is engaging writing for oboes, and they echo the horns in the Sarabande. The Minuet closing movement, Le Plaisir, pictures the hunting party gathered for drinks when the chase is over. The atmosphere of the witty Tragi-comique Suite depicts human aches and pains, from the gout-stricken Loure to a hypochondriac, cured by being forced to dance in swiftly changing style and time-signature, while the brass dauntlessly depict the only general remedy available (apart from a suggested alternative visit to a brothel): 'souffrance héroïque'. Excellent, lively playing and vivid recording.

Overtures (Suites): La Changeante; Les Nations anciens et modernes; in D

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553791. N. CO, Ward

These are agreeably mellow performances on modern instruments, which come into their own in the warmly Handelian lyrical melodies, like the Avec douceur from La Changeante and the Plainte from the D major Suite for Strings and Horns (which is the highlight of the disc), and in neatly making the contrasts between the Ancient and Modern pairs of movements, the first slow, the second more animated.

Tafelmusik (Productions 1–3; complete)

🔑 * DG 427 619-2 (4). Col. Mus. Ant., Goebel

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553724/5 & 8.553731. O of the Golden Age

The playing of the Cologne Musiqua Antiqua is distinguished by dazzling virtuosity and unanimity of ensemble and musical thinking. They also have the advantage of very vivid and fresh recording quality; the balance is close and present without being too forward and there is a pleasing acoustic ambience.

The Orchestra of the Golden Age plays with a good sense of style, plenty of life and a convincing linear manner in expressive music. They represent one of Naxos's first excursions into period-instrument music-making and are very well recorded. While Reinhard Goebel's version has something special to offer in this music, this Naxos set is excellent value and will give considerable satisfaction.

Tafelmusik (excerpts): Production 2: Suite in D (for trumpet, oboe & strings); Production 3: Suite in B flat (for 2 oboes & strings)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55278. King's Consort, King

A happy juxtaposition of two contrasted Suites, the first pairing a trumpet and oboe very successfully in juxtaposition, the second using a pair of oboes with equal felicity. The D major is the more ambitious work, the B flat with its Bergerie, Postillons, Bandidage and Furioso conclusion is more lightweight. But both show the composer in good form and both are persuasively played and recorded here on a disc which offers not far off 70 minutes of diverting music for a modest cost.

Water Music (Hamburger Ebb' und Fluth)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66967. King's Cons., King – HANDEL: Water Music ***

Telemann's Water Music is rightly one of his most popular works, and it is good to have a thoroughly recommendable period-instrument performance available and aptly coupled with Handel. The King's Consort performance is most enjoyable. There is exhilarating playing from the oboes in the Overture and the following Sarabande (with recorders) is seductive, as is the later Minuet (Der angeneheme Zephir). In short, this is excellent in every way and coupled with the Water Music of Handel.

CHAMBER MUSIC

6 Concertos & 6 Suites (1734) for Flute, Violin, Viola da gamba, or Cello & Harpsichord (Lute or Organ)

 CPO 999 690-2 (3). Camerata Köln

This remarkable set of four-movement Concertos and seven- or eight-movement Suites, published by Telemann in Hamburg in 1734, was resourcefully written so that in each case the four parts could be played by a varying combination of instruments, which is what happens here, with sometimes only three instruments in use, sometimes four. This adds variety and freshness to music which constantly shows the composer's astonishing musical fertility. Throughout, the ear is always entertained, when the period-instrument playing is so expert, with the musicians clearly enjoying themselves. As an example, the Airs that conclude Suite 1 are all ear-tickling, and, throughout, the more expansive concerto slow movements always have memorable expressive content. The recording is excellent.

Chamber Concertos: for 2 Violins & Viola in D, TWV 43:D4; in G min. for Recorder & 2 Violins, TWV 42:g3; Overture in F for 2 violas & continuo, TWV 55:F2; Sonatinas: for recorder in A min., TWV 41:a4; for Bassoon in C min., TWV 41:c2; Sonata corellisante in B min., TWV 42:h3

🔑 * MDG 309 1314-2. Musica Alta Ripa

Once again, in this mixed bag of Concertos, Sonatinas (and even an Overture to give added variety of timbre), one is amazed at the fecundity of Telemann's invention, so well displayed here. Splendidly played and recorded, this programme balances an engaging combination of sprightly rhythms (as in the works for recorder and bassoon) with expressive string writing (as in the more extended, six-movement works: the Overture in F and the Sonata, which pays homage to Corelli). Performances and recording are first class and, such is the diversity of the music, the disc can be played through as a satisfying concert.

Fantasias for Solo Treble Recorder: in C; D min.; G min.; A min.; B flat, TWV 40/2, 4, 9, 11 & 12. Sonatas for Treble Recorder & Continuo: Esercizi musici. Sonatas in C, TWV 41:C5; D min., TWV 41:d4; Der getreue Music-Meister: Canonic Sonata in B flat, TWV 41:B3; Sonatas in C, TWV 41:C2; F, TWV 41:F2; F min., TWV 41:f1

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60368-2. Brüggen, Bylsma, Leonhardt

The 12 solo Fantasias were actually written for transverse flute, but Frans Brüggen plays them very effectively on the treble recorder, transposing them up a minor third in order to do so. The Sonatas for Treble Recorder and Continuo are all most winning and well chosen to show the composer at his most inventive, and are played with breathtaking virtuosity and a marvellous sense of style. The sound is excellent.

12 Fantasias for Unaccompanied Violin

(M)  Maya MCD 9302. Homburger

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570563. Augustin Hadelich

Telemann's 12 Fantasias for solo violin are a decade later than Bach's Partitas and Sonatas, and they are less ambitious and less demanding. Each is in either three or four movements, usually opening with a Largo or Grave, alternating with Allegros. With striking invention, they make very enjoyable listening, especially when played with such life and style. Maya Homburger uses a baroque violin. This is cheerful music and it would be difficult to imagine these works being played more freshly or with a more sensitive espressivo.

They are also played here with plenty of flair by the excellent Augustin Hadelich using a modern instrument. Violinists should find them worth exploring, with a view to getting the music for their own use; others can enjoy their ready facility, for they do not outlast their welcome.

Kleine Cammermusic (6 Partitas for Violin, Flute or Oboe Continuo)

Ⓜ  CPO 999 497-2. Camerata Köln

The six Partitas of the Kleine Cammermusik, published in 1716, were written – as was the composer's policy – to be playable by three alternative solo instruments with harpsichord. Each consists of an opening slow introduction, followed by a group of six Arias (or airs), varying in style and tempo. As ever, Telemann never seems to run out of attractive ideas and here the works are allotted in turn to oboe (1 and 3, both delightful, the latter with a lovely opening Adagio), flute (2, which opens dolce with a charming Siciliana, and is worthy of comparison with Bach), viola da gamba (4 and very well chosen), violin (5) and recorder (6, with organ continuo, and another of the most attractive). The performances here could hardly be bettered and they are beautifully balanced and recorded. The variety of instrumentation makes this one of the most enticing of all the Telemann chamber music CDs.

Overtures (Suites) for 2 Oboes, 2 Horns, Bassoon and Double Bass in F: (La Joie); in F (La Fortune); in F (La Chasse), TWV55:F5; F8; F9; in F, TWV55: F15 & F18

 MDG 301 1109-2. Consortium Classicum

Telemann wrote many works for wind ensemble but only ten Overtures/Suites have survived, five of which are offered here. They are all essentially in the same pattern of five or six movements although the dances vary between them. One would have expected the work nicknamed La Chasse to have the most spectacular horn parts, but in the event La Fortune and La Joie are the most impressive in this respect and the two works without nicknames are just as inventive as those with a sobriquet, with TWV 55:F18 the most attractive of all. The playing here is expert and full of life, but with similar sonorities throughout and all the works in the key of F, this is a CD to dip into rather than play right through. Excellent recording.

Paris Flute Quartets 1–6 (1730) (for flute, violine, viola da gamba & continuo)

🔑 Ⓑ * HM HMA 901787. Freiburg Bar. Cons.

The splendid Freiburg Baroque Consort (including the exceedingly nimble flautist Karl Kaiser), drawn from the excellent orchestra of that name, give first-class period-instrument performances of these delightful works, and the recording is excellent. An outstanding disc in every way.

6 Nouveaux Paris Flute Quartets (1738)

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61812-2 (2). Trio Sonnerie

In 1730 Telemann published in Hamburg a set of six Quartets for violin, flauto traverso, viola da gamba and bass continuo, and these were sufficiently popular to be pirated by the French publishing house Le Clerk, and reprinted in 1736 – without the composer's permission. Telemann learned by this experience: during a long and fruitful visit to Paris in 1737–8, by virtue of a Privilège du Roi, he was able himself to publish a new and even finer set, which he called Nouveaux quatuors.

The performances on Virgin are of a high calibre and are representative of modern practice, using original instruments and bringing lighter textures and greater delicacy of style. Thus, they have a different kind of charm. Tempi with this group are almost always brisker, with both losses and gains. The Trio Sonnerie are led by the expert Monica Huggett, and their timbre is clean and transparent. Certainly, the results on Virgin Veritas are refreshing, while the sound is truthful and again very well balanced.

Paris Quartets (Quadri) (1730) in D, TWV4: D1; in A, TWV 43: A1. Nouveaux Quatuors (1738) in A min., TWV 43: A2; in E min., TWV 43: E1

Ⓝ * CPO 777 375-2. Holloway, Brunmayr, Duftschmid; Becker, Mortensen

As can be seen this is a somewhat arbitrary selection, with two of the works coming from the first set of Paris Quartets and two from the second. But they are all particularly attractive works and with a distinguished ensemble they are expertly played, with Linde Brunmayr's dominent transverse flute particularly rich-timbred for a period instrument, while the overall balance is very beguiling. Excellent documentation too. A fine disc.

Paris Quartets (1730): 2, Concerto secondo in D; 3, Sonata prima in A; 4, Sonata seconda in G min.; 5, Première suite in E min. Fantasias: 5 in A for (solo) Violin; 7 in D for (solo) Flute; 8 in G min. for Harpsichord

🔑  Channel Classics CCS 13598. Florilegium

Instead of providing a set, Florilegium have chosen four of the earlier Quartets and set them in the context of a concert, interspersed with solo Fantasias. They play with affectionate warmth, readily bringing out shades of melancholy in slow movements, to contrast with the busy allegros, played with real virtuosity, with the tone of Ashley Solomon's period flute particularly enticing. But the timbre and clean articulation of the two string players, Rachel Podger (violin) and Daniel Yeadon (viola da gamba), are hardly less appealing, and the overall blend of tone in a warm but intimate acoustic could not be more attractive. These players convey a deep expressive feeling.

6 Flute Quartets or Trios (Hamburg, 1733); Der Getreue Musikmeister: Cello Sonata (for cello and continuo) in D

(*) Lyrichord LEMS 8028. Mélomanie

Telemann himself published his Six quatuors ou trios, ensuring their success by making them available for performance on various alternative combinations of flutes, violins, bassoon and cello, with a flexible continuo. This is their first complete recording. The collection divides into two groups. The first three works are three- or four-movement Sonatas in an elegant conversational style; the last three each open with a slow movement followed by three unpredictable 'Divertimenti', showing the composer imaginatively trying out different dance forms. The four-movement Cello sonata offered as bonus also shows the composer at his best. It is very well played, as are the Quartets (favouring two period flutes – not always absolutely immaculate in tuning – cello and harpsichord).

Quartets (Concertos) for Flute, Bassoon, Viola da gamba & Continuo: in B min., TWV 43:b3; in C, TWV 43:C2; Quartet in G for Flute, 2 Violas da gamba, TWV 43:G12; Trio Sonatas: in F for Violin, Viola da gamba & Continuo, TWV 42:F10; in G min., for Flute, Viola da gamba & Continuo, TWV42:G7 (from Darmstadt manuscripts)

 Astrée Auvidis E 8632. Limoges Bar. Ens., Coin

All these manuscripts come from the Darmstadt Library, and the two most attractive Quartets (which include a bassoon) bear the additional title Concerto. All five works here are in the four-movement Italian sonata di chiesa form (slow-fast-slow-fast), although the Trio Sonata in G minor has additionally a characteristic opening Siciliana. Although the Allegros are lively enough, the pervading mood is often attractively dolorous, and the intimacy of the excellent performances enhances that impression. Very good recording.

Quadros (Quartets): in A min. for Recorder, Oboe, Violin & Continuo, TWV 43:a3; in G, for Recorder, Oboe, Violin & Continuo, TWV 43:g6; in G min. for Oboe, Violin, Viola da gamba & Continuo, TWV43:g92; in G min. for Recorder, Violin, Viola da gamba & Continuo, TWV43:g94. Esercizi musici: Trio Sonatas: in C min. for Recorder, Oboe & Continuo, TWV 42:c2; in F for Recorder, Viola da gamba & Continuo, TWV 42:f3. Trio Sonata in D min. for Recorder, Violin & Continuo, TWV 42:d10

🔑 * Globe GLO 5154. Ens. Senario

These Quadros (or Quartets) are among Telemann's very finest chamber music, every bit as inventive and diverting as the more famous Paris quartets. Telemann writes parts of equal interest for all three of his solo instruments, and provides slow movements of considerable expressive intensity, framed by winningly virtuosic Allegros. Perhaps finest of all is the G major Quartet, with its solemn central Grave, but the G minor Quartet (TWV 43:g94), which opens the programme, is hardly less seductive. Telemann subtitles the A minor work 'Concerto', and indeed there is plenty of opportunity for virtuoso display here, and its four movements also include a pair of touching Adagios. The Trio Sonatas, slighter in texture, are also very enjoyable when presented so freshly. Indeed, the performances here could hardly be bettered. The brilliant recorder playing of Saskia Coolen is well matched by the oboist, Peter Frankenberg, and the group overall integrates splendidly. The balance and recording could hardly be improved on.

Quadros (Flute or Recorder Quartets) in B flat, for 2 Violins, Viola & Continuo, G 43:B2; in A min. for Recorder, Oboe, Violin & Continuo, TWV 43:a3; in D min. for Flute, Violin, Cello & Continuo, TWV 43:d3; in G min., for Recorder, Violin, Viola & Continuo, TWV 43:g4; in G, for Recorder, Oboe, Violin & Continuo, TWV 43:G6; in G, for Flute, 2 Violins & Continuo, TWV 43:G10; for Flute, Violin, Cello & Continuo, TWV 43:G11; for Flute, 2 Violins & Continuo, TWV 43:G12

 DG 477 5379. Mus. Ant. Köln, Goebel

The playing here is expert and full of life, and the balance and recording are very realistic, so this is a very recommendable disc.

Recorder Sonatas: Esercizi musici: in C, TWV 41:C5; D min., TWV 41:D2. Der Getreue Musikmeister: in A/B flat TWV41:B3 (Canonic Sonata), TWV 41:A3; in C, TWV 41:C2; in F, TWV 41:F2; in F min., TWV 41:F1; Neue Sonatinen; in A min., TWV 41:A4; in C min., TWV 41:C2. Sonatina in F min., TWV41:D4

 Cap. 67 070. Michael & Annette Schneider, Beuse, Imamura, Bauer

Both Capriccio and Globe offer what are described as Telemann's 'complete sonatas for recorder and continuo', two of which derive from the Esercizi musici and four from Der Getreue Musikmeister. Like the comparable Naxos collection of recorder concertos, there is the danger here of unvarying sameness of timbre. Both sets of performances are stylish and the recorder playing is nimble and highly musical. But on the whole we are inclined to give our vote to the Capriccio set, which features a bassoon in the excerpts from Der Getreue Musikmeister and employs a continuo using a lute and clavierorganum.

Sonatas for 2 Recorders 1–6; Duetto in B flat

 BIS CD 334. Pehrsson, Laurin

Canon Sonatas 1–6; Duettos 1–6

 BIS CD 335. Pehrsson, Laurin

All the Duet Sonatas are in four movements, the second being a fugue; the Canon Sonatas are for two flutes, violins or bass viols. Needless to say, listening to two recorders for longer than one piece at a time imposes a strain on one's powers of endurance, no matter how expert the playing – and expert it certainly is. The BIS versions can be recommended. However, although it is good to have the two treble recorders blending so well together, a clearer degree of separation would have helped in the imitative writing.

Sonata Metodiche 1–6 (1728); 7–12 (1732)

 Accent ACC 94104/5D (2). B. and W. Kuijken, Kohnen

Telemann's Methodical Sonatas were written in two sets of six, the first designated 'for violin or flute', the second 'for flute or violin', which is a curious alternation of emphases, the more so as the second set sometimes uses keys that are less comfortable for the baroque flute. Not that this is apparent in these expert performances, lively and expressive by turns, and there is plenty of variety in the music itself. One of the purposes of these Sonatas was to instruct amateurs in the art of ornamentation, so Telemann wrote out ornaments in the French style for each first movement, while mixing French and Italian styles in the writing itself. A worthwhile addition to the catalogue, very well recorded.

6 Trios (1718): 1 (Oboe & Violin); 2 (Recorder & Violin); 3 (Flute & Violin); 4 (2 Violins); 5 (Violin & Viola da gamba); 6 (2 Violins), TWV:42:B1, a1, G1, D1, g1, & F1

 CPO 999 957-2 Camerata Köln

Trio Sonatas 1–6, TWV43:G3, c1, A2, d2, e1, D4; Trio Sonata in B flat for Violin, Bassoon & Continuo, TWV42:B5; Bassoon Quartet in E min., TWV43:E3.

 CPO 999 934-2. Parnassi Musici, with Azzolini

The two CPO collections above are linked, for the composition of the 6 Trios of 1718 served Telemann as a prototype for establishing the format of the Trio Sonatas which followed in the 1720s. Each work has a different instrumental combination, and Telemann resourcefully finds suitable ideas to match his lead instrument. All but two of the six are in the four-movement sonata da chiesa format, which brings an opportunity for extra variety. The three-movement Trio for the violin, cello and continuo brings a particularly stimulating dialogue between the two string soloists in the opening movement, to anticipate the regular use of this combination by many composers. Performances are excellent.

Having experimented with various instrumentations, Telemann settled on the combination of two violins (or two flutes as a possible alternative) and wrote Trio Sonatas essentially derived from Corelli's Italian style (and advertised as such on publication). These Sonatas show Telemann at his finest. Allegros are full of bouncing vitality and the slow movements are often delicately charming. The performances are outstandingly fine, full of life and with a graceful elegance, and they are ideally recorded in a friendly but not too resonant acoustic. The only irritating feature of this latter disc is the absence of dividing bands for the individual movements (as indicated in the documentation).

6 Trio Sonatas in the Italian Style (Sonates en Trios dans le Goût Italien) TWV 42: g3; c1; a2; d2; e1; d4; Trio Sonata in G, TWV 42: g12

 Lyrichord LEMS 8035. Moore, Myford, Fournier, Palumbo

Telemann had altogether greater success with his Trio Sonatas in the Italian Style than he did with his Corelli imitations. They are pleasingly lightweight, sunny works, played here with the second part authentically given to the violin rather than a flute. The C minor and A major works are particularly attractive, but the standard of invention is high, and particularly striking in the minor-key works. They are most felicitously played by this very musical period-instrument group, who know all about elegance, and very well balanced. Tom Moore's baroque flute has a most agreeably watery timbre that is wholly authentic.

Trio Sonatas for Recorder or Oboe, Violin & Continuo: TWV 42:d10; Esercizi Musici: Trio Sonatas A min.; in B flat; E flat; G min. Der Music-Meister: Sonata in D

🔑 * Naïve Ambroisie AM 112. Amarillis

This is easily the most attractive of these collections of Telemann's Trio Sonatas. Amarillis is a first-rate ensemble, led by Héloïse Galliard (who alternates between baroque recorder and oboe) with David Plantier (violin), Emmanuel Jacques (cello) and Violaine Cochard (harpsichord), both of whom make attractive solo contributions, and Laura Pustilnik (archlute). The alternation of recorder and flute is most felicitous, and every one of the works here shows the composer at his most fluent, and the music is captivatingly full of attractive invention. The playing too is full of life and spontaneity, and the recording splendidly balanced. A disc not to be missed.

Music for Oboe & Continuo: (i) 'Dresden' Sonata for Oboe & Bassoon, TWV 41:g10. Esercizi musici: Sonatas in B flat, TWV 41:B6; E min., TWV 41:e6. Trio Sonata in E flat. Der getreue Musikmeister: Sonata in A min., TWV 41:a3. Tafelmusik: Sonata in G min. for Oboe & Bassoon, TWV 41:g6

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 1240. Francis, Dodd, Powell, Jordan; (i) with Beach

Originally issued by Somm, this admirable collection in which Sarah Francis is the star performer draws on both the Esercizi musici and Der getreue Musikmeister, and includes an extra Sonata, found in a Dresden manuscript. The performances are first class in every way and the recording is very well balanced and this is even more recommendable on the Regis budget label.

Esercizi musici: Solo 2: Flute Sonata in D; Solo 4: Recorder Sonata in D min; Solo 5: Chalumeau Sonata in B flat; Solo 8: Flute Sonata in G. Der getreue Music-Meister: Bassoon Sonata in F min; Tafelmusik, Part III: Oboe Sonata in G min. Harpsichord Fantasias: in E min. & F, Set 1/4–5; Harpsichord Overture in G min.

🔑  Mer. CDE 84347. Badinage

This is an ideal way of assembling a concert of Telemann's chamber and instrumental music, not centring on a single instrument, but making a hand-picked selection of music (much of it from the Solos in the Esercizi musici) featuring a wide range of instrumental colour, from the dolorous bassoon and the piquantly watery timbre of the primitive chalumeaux to the brighter recorder and flute. All the soloists here are expert, and the fine harpsichordist provides interludes, lively and dolce at three strategic points in the programme. The recording is excellent.

3 Trietti metodici & 3 Scherzi

Ⓝ  CPO 777 301-2. Parnassi Musici

Telemann had written trio sonatas in the 1720s and in 1731 returned to the format by publishing a cycle of Il Trietti metodici e Scherzi a 2 Flauti traversier overo 2 Violini con Fondamento. The instrumentation of either flutes or violins as the melody instruments was to offer buyers a choice to fit their personal needs. However on the music itself the violins are named first. They are obviously linked to the Methodical Sonatas (see above) but with the Trietti ('Little Methodic Trios') Telemann also provided his clients with instruction on the art of ornamentation, in particular embellishment in the slow movements. All but two of the works are in three movements but one Trietto and one Scherzo are each extended to four, also using a quartet of four musicians featuring flute, violin, bassoon and continuo. These miniature works are both diverse and engaging. The first Scherzo is in an exotic syncopated Moravian hurdy-gurdy style, the first Trio opens with a fugue and ends with a busy bourée. The second Trio has an influence from Corelli, the third, uniquely in a minor key, has a Siciliano as its centrepiece and a virtuoso finale. All these works are persuasively presented and well recorded to show yet another side of this remarkably innovative composer.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Organ music: 6 Chorale Preludes; Fantasia in D; Pasacaille in B min.; Sonata in D for 2 Manuals & Pedal; Concerto in G min. (trans. Bach as BWV 985); Concerto per la chiesa on G (trans. J. G. Walther)

(*) MDG 320 0078-2. Baumgratz (Bach organ, Bremer Dom)

This collection opens commandingly with the Concerto in G minor, attributed to Telemann, and transcribed by Bach. But it is such a magnificent tripartite piece that one is tempted to believe that there is more Bach in it than Telemann. The Passacaglia that follows, with its decoration increasingly florid, moves to a fair climax, and the four Chorale Preludes that come next (each in two sections) are agreeably managed, Komm heiliger Geist easily the most telling, especially the jaunty second part. However, the pair of chorales based on Nun freut euch lieben Christen g'mein, brief as they may be, show Telemann nearer to Bach in his manipulation of variations around a clear cantus firmus.

Wolfgang Baumgratz makes the most of all this music by registering brightly and imaginatively, and he is very well recorded. But this collection serves to confirm that Telemann's talent lay not with the organ, but with the baroque orchestra and in the world of chamber music.

VOCAL MUSIC

Ach Herr! Lehr uns Bedenken wohl, TWV 1:24; Der am Olberg zagende Jesus, TWV1: 364; Ich will den Kreuzweg gerne gehen, TWV1: 884; Jesus liegt in letzten Zügen TWV1: 983; Was gibst du denn o meine Seele, TWV11510 (Passion Cantatas)

Ⓝ  CPO 777 299-2. Klaus Mertens, Accademia, Daniel, Shalev Ad-El

From his early years Telemann was attracted to the drama of opera, but he also professed to a great love for church music 'above all else', so the two needs came together in his many religious cantatas, where he interweaves dramatic recitative with arias and often uses a chorale to introduce or conclude work, sometimes both, as in the Trinity cantata Ach Herr! Lehr uns Bedenken wohl ('Ah Lord teach us to consider well that someday we shall die'). It seems possible that two other things contributed to his many works in this form, firstly that he was a more than competent baritone singer and secondly that he was able to write the cantata texts himself, and perhaps also perform them himself. It has been suggested that two of the works in the present collection are linked, namely Jesus liegt in letzten Zügen ('Jesus lies breathing his last') and Der am Olberg zagende Jesus ('Jesus on the Mount of Olives'). Whether that is so, they are both movingly expressive. Klaus Mertens proves a fine sympathetic soloist in all these cantatas and he receives excellent support from the Accademia Daniel playing on period instruments

Ach, Herr, straf mich nicht in deinem Zorn; Ach wie nichtig, ach wie flüchtig; Du aber, Daniel, gehe hin; Sei getreu bis in den Tod. (In Festo Penticost): Schaffe in mir, Gott, ein reines Herz (Trauer-Actus Cantatas)

 HM HMC 901768. Koslowsky, Popien, Jochens, Mammel, Shreckenberger, Cantus Cölln, Junghänel

These Cantatas date from Telemann's earliest composing years (1697–1708), and although they are simple in style, they already show his remarkable skill and melodic talent. The Adagio close of the Funeral cantata, Du aber, Daniel, gehe hin, is introduced by flute and oboe, Schlaft wohl, ihr seligen Gebeine is wonderfully serene while in Sei gettreu bis in den Tod, the lovely alto aria Dich lieb ich allein is in no way immature. It is followed by a light-hearted soprano aria and another expressive aria for tenor. In the five-movement Pentecost Cantata a tenor aria and a touching soprano/alto duet are framed and interwoven by three simple choruses. The performances here are dedicated and the soloists are excellent, and this well-recorded and enterprising collection throws new light on a truly remarkable composer.

Die Auferstehung (The Resurrection): Easter Oratorio; Cantata: De Danske, Norske og Tydske Undersaaters Glaede (The Joy of the Danish, Norwegian and German Citizens)

 CPO 999 634-2. Mields, Schwarz, Post, Mertens, Decker, Magdeburg Chamber Ch., Michaelstein Telemann CO, Rémy

Telemann's Easter Oratorio of 1761 has an appealing simplicity. It opens without preamble with a solo lament from the soprano, and only then does the chorus enter, joyfully asserting 'The Lord Has Risen'. The bass then tells of the angel arriving 'fast as a flash of lightning' (illustrated by a brilliant violin obbligato) and the narrative continues with the alto and chorus dramatically describing the despair of Hell, while the reappearance of the risen Christ is depicted in a lovely soprano aria (beautifully sung here by Dorothee Mields). The Resurrection is then further celebrated in fine expressive arias from tenor and bass, before the joyful closing chorus with trumpets.

The reconstructed Cantata celebrating the birthday of the Danish King Frederick V, written four years earlier, was a curious choice of coupling, but it is a happy work. Both performances here are first class, with a sensitive team of soloists and excellent support from the fine chorus and orchestra. The recording is very well balanced, spacious and natural.

Das befreit Israel (oratorio; complete); Der May (Eine musicalische Idylle); Overture in F min. for 2 Recorders, 2 Oboes, Bassoon & Strings, TWV 55:f1

🔑  CPO 999 673-2. Schmithüsen, Schubert, Crook, Mertens, Abele, Rheinisch Kantorei, Kleine Konzert, Max

Handel's Israel in Egypt was possibly the source of inspiration for Telemann's much briefer (27 minutes) and less complex, but cheerfully melodic and appealing oratorio, which was premièred in 1759. It is very well sung here and makes a fine contrast with the pastoral idyll Der May, in which the scoring for flutes, horns and bassoons is used very effectively to colour the text. It forms a charming series of arias and duets gently extolling the joys of spring. Phillis (the soprano Ingrid Schmithüsen) and Daphnis (the bass Klaus Mertens), who has already made a strong impression in the oratorio, both sing very pleasingly. In between the vocal works comes a fine performance of one of Telemann's most inventive Suites (Overtures). A most engaging disc, very well recorded.

Betrachtung der 9 Stunde an dem Todstage Jesu (Passion Oratorio); Cantatas: Ein Mensch is in seinem Leben wie Gras, TWV 4:18; Herr, ich habe lieb die Stätte deines Hauses, TWV 2:2

 CPO 999 500-2. Zádori, Jochens, Wessel, Cordier, Wimmer, Schreckenberger, Van der Kamp, Rheinisch Kantorei, Kleine Konzert, Max

Telemann's Passion Cantata, Reflection of the Ninth Hour on the Day of Jesus's Death (with a text by Joachim Zimmerman) is an unusual conception, in that the figure who is involved in these personal reflections is not a biblical character but a poetic creation, who provides a reflective meditation on the events surrounding the Crucifixion. Telemann added three chorales to create a binding structure and the vocal observations are not centred on a single soloist but four, with tenor, alto and two basses together providing the introduction. If the musical result is less imaginative than the conception, the work is still well worth hearing, as are the pair of contrasted Cantatas with which it is coupled, which show Telemann's invention at its freshest. All three pieces are very well sung and accompanied, and the recording is well up to the high standard of this excellent CPO series.

Cantatas for the first Sunday of Advent: Saget den verzagten Herzen, TWV 1:1233; Saget der Tochter Zion, TWV 1: 1235. Cantatas for the first day of Christmas: Auf Zion! Und lass in geheiligten Hallen, TWV 1: 109; Kündlich gross ist das Gottselige Geheimnis, TWV 1: 1020

🔑 * CPO 999 515-2. Mields, Schwarz, Jochens, Schmidt, Magdeburg Chamber Ch., Michaelstein Telemann CO, Rémy

This is marginally the finest of Ludger Rémy's series of Telemann's festive Cantatas so far. The opening of Saget den verzagten Herzen brings a splendid interchange between soloists and chorus, and the following alto aria (marked Affettuoso), So komm den auch, is touchingly eloquent, while the bass and tenor soloists both have lively arias to follow. The bravura bass aria, Zerstreuet euch, which opens Saget der Tochter Zion, has even more brilliant trumpet parts, and the opening bass aria of Auf Zion, decorated with flutes, is equally memorable. The Christmas story is then told in a series of brief recitatives and choruses, much more atmospheric and dramatic than the so-called 'Christmas Oratorio' (see below). The second of the two Christmas Day Cantatas, Kündlich gross ist das Gottselige Geheimnis, is even more dramatic and has a remarkable soprano aria punctuated by trumpets and drums. The alto air Göttlich Kind is a Handelian alto and trumpet duet, and the trumpets stay for the bass aria. Rémy directs with flair, and with strikingly good male soloists, fine choral singing and first-rate playing from his period-instrument accompanying group, this is well worth seeking out. The documentation (as throughout the series) is impeccable, including full translations.

Christmas Oratorio: Die Hirten on der Krippe zu Bethlehem, TWV 1:797; Christmas Cantatas: Siehe, ich verkündige Euc (1761), TWV 1:1334; Der Herr hat offenbaret (1762): TWV 1: 262

(*) CPO 999 419-2. Backes, George, Post, Mertens, Michaelstein Chamber Ch. & Telemann CO, Rémy

The so-called 'Christmas Oratorio' opens with the chorale we know as In dulci jubilo, fully scored with trumpets, to the words O Jesu parvule – and is simply structured and comparatively unambitious, with the chorus interleaving the arias with chorales. Flutes and trumpets are used to decorate the pastoral scenes. There is a fine bass aria welcoming the shepherds. But the Cantatas are much more ambitious. The 1761 work opens arrestingly with a brilliant soprano aria when the angel sings those famous words 'Behold I bring you glad tidings' with trumpets blazing, and she is answered dramatically by the choral heavenly host, who return to praise God after fine contributions from both the tenor and bass. The 1762 Cantata opens and closes with a chorus, and the following arias for soprano and bass (again using trumpets and flutes) are both rather fine. Fortunately, the soloists here are again excellent and if the conductor of the small period-instrument ensemble is at times rhythmically a bit emphatic in the oratorio, he keeps the music alive and flowing. The recording is excellent.

Cornett cantatas: Cantata for the 2nd Sunday after Epiphany: Sehet an die Exempel der Alten, TWV 1: 1259; Cantata for Exaudi Sunday: Ich halte aber dafür, TWV 1: 840; Cantata for Rogation Sunday: Erhöre mich, wenn ich rufe, TWV 1: 459

 CPO 999 542-2. Spägele, Vass, Jochens, Mertens, Leipzig Bläser Collegium, Michaelstein Telemann CO, Rémy

The rich textures Telemann creates are very much his own, not like Gabrieli, rather nearer to Schütz. In consequence, he does not demand a chorus, and the chorales are sung by the soloists, never more effectively than at the end of the Epiphany Cantata, following a fine soprano aria. Telemann uses his colourful ripieno imaginatively throughout, especially so in the Rogation Cantata, which is shared by tenor and bass. Wilfried Jochens and Klaus Mertens are in splendid form and make the most of all their opportunities, especially their fine penultimate duet, richly embroidered by the brass and wind, Herr, auf dein Wort verlass ich mich, which is again followed by the closing chorale. The Cantata for Exaudi Sunday opens with a spectacular polyphonic interplay, shared by singers and orchestra, and after an alto recitative the cornetti decorate the bass aria, while oboes are used later for the alto solo, and the work closes with a serene Martin Luther hymn. If the invention in these works is less dramatic than in the Advent and Christmas Cantatas, many of the individual numbers are lyrically very persuasive, especially when they are so well sung and so musically accompanied by this strikingly well-balanced period-instrument ensemble under the excellent Ludger Rémy.

(i) Fortsetzung des Harmonischen Gottesdienstes: Cantatas 5: Ein Jammerton, en schluchzend Ach, TWV1:424; 35: Ertrage nur das Joch des Mängel, TWV1:479; 42: Die Glut des Zorns, TWV1:331; 48: Da, Jesu, Deinen Ruhm zu mehren, TWV1:531:67; Mein Glaube ringt in letzten Zügen, TWV:184; (ii) 20 Little Fugues for Organ, TWV30:6, 8, 20 & 30

 CPO 999 764-2. (i) Ziesak, Camerata Köln; (ii) Bauer.

The Harmonischen Gottesdienstes ('Harmonous Divine Service') of 1731/2 consists of no fewer than 72 Cantatas, of which these five are typical examples, each consisting of two arias (usually one fast and the other slow) with a brief linking recitative (in effect a miniature vocalised sermon). The settings depend a great deal for their appeal on their use of obbligato solo instruments, in 5 flute and oboe, in 35 (very attractive) and 67 two flutes, in 48 (the most engaging of all) recorder and oboe. Ruth Ziesak sings throughout with true baroque freshness, matching her woodwind partners most expertly, and the accompaniments have plenty of life. One of Telemann's Little Fugues for Organ, also dating from 1731, is effectively used as a brief interlude between each Cantata. The recording is excellent, and full texts and translations are provided.

Hamburg Admiralitätsmusik (1723); Water Music (Hamburger Ebb' und Fluth)

🔑  CPO 999 373-2 (2). Van der Sluis, Pushee, Müller, Mertens, Thomas, Schopper, Alsfeder Vokalensemble, Bremen Baroque O, Helbich

As the main work here is set to a poem by Michael Richey in praise of Hamburg, the allegorical characters represented by the soloists are all associated with the city. The soprano (as Hammonia) embodies Hamburg itself and the principal bass (as Neptunus) symbolizes the North Sea, and he has a memorable lyrical aria celebrating Hamburg's prosperity. More remarkably, the two tenors, as Themis and Mercurius, represent the prospering economy, and the privileges and rights of the constitution.

One of the other two basses symbolizes Mars, and sings a dramatic aria of defiance of lightning and stormy blasts. The third bass as Albis (the Elbe) celebrates his flowing currents and then has a charming tête-à-tête with Hammonia. Not surprisingly, there is a chorus of Nymphs and Tritons and the finale, Long live the Admiralty, is almost worthy of Sullivan! The performance is full of life, and of high quality, with no weak link in the cast, and with excellent recording, overall this is a delightful surprise.

Kapitänsmusik, 1724

* CPO SACD 777 176-2. Podkoscielna, Post, Vieweg, Abele, Telemannisches Collegium Michaelstein, Rémy

In Hamburg, Telemann often had to compose celebratory occasional pieces called Kapitänsmusik, consisting of an oratorio and serenata. The one on this CD was first performed in 1724 and this is the first time it has been performed complete since that time. The oratorio part has sacred texts, whilst the serenata part has secular texts but both find the composer providing some extraordinarily good music. This music shows Telemann as his most flamboyantly creative, with some brilliantly florid, virtuosic writing, performed with comparable vigour by the soloists and the orchestra. The lively arias in both the oratorio and serenata are very exciting, and the opening of the serenata with its minor-keyed woodwinds is deliciously piquant and memorable, as is the aria which follows. One marvels time and time again with Telemann's inventive orchestration, especially in his use of woodwind colouring, and this whole CD is one of flamboyant invigoration. Superbly recorded in SACD surround sound, warm yet sharply vivid. Full texts and translations are provided.

THOMAS, Ambroise (1811–96)

Mignon; Overture & Gavotte

🔑  Chan. 9765. BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier (with Concert: 'French bonbons' ***)

Thomas's opera Mignon has one of the most delectable of all French Overtures, with its opening woodwind and harp solos followed by a romantic horn tune. It is beautifully played and recorded on Chandos in this first-rate concert of French lollipops.

Mignon (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) SM3K 34590 (3). Horne, Vanzo, Welting, Zaccaria, von Stade, Méloni, Battedou, Hudson, Ambrosian Op. Ch., Philh. O, Almeida

Thomas's once-popular adaptation of Goethe has many vocal plums, and here a very full account of the score is given, with virtually all the alternatives that the composer devised for productions after the first, not least one at Drury Lane in London where recitatives were used (as here) instead of spoken dialogue; an extra aria was given to the soubrette Philine and other arias were expanded. The role of Frédéric was given to a mezzo-soprano instead of a tenor, and here the appropriately named Frederica von Stade is superb in that role, making one rather regret that she was not chosen as the heroine. However, Marilyn Horne is in fine voice and sings with great character and flair, even if she hardly sounds the frail figure of the ideal Mignon. Nonetheless, with Alain Vanzo a sensitive Wilhelm, Ruth Welting a charming Philine and colourful conducting from Almeida, this is an essential set for lovers of French opera. The 1977 recording has a pleasingly warm ambience and the voices are naturally caught in the present transfer.

THOMPSON, Randall
(1899–1984)

Alleluia; Choose something like a Star; The best of Rooms; The Eternal Dove; Felices ter

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1125. Harvard University Ch., Somerville; Johnson (organ) – BEACH: Choral Music ***

Commissioned by Koussevitzky in 1940 for the opening of the Tanglewood Music Center, Randall Thompson's Alleluia is for choral societies the American vocal equivalent of Barber's Adagio for string orchestras. Built on that single word it rises to a climax of comparable intensity, never losing its grip on the listener during its imaginative forward progress. The Eternal Dove and Choose something like a Star are much later works and in many ways equally fine and almost as memorable. Thompson is an individual writer, and all these works are very rewarding when so committedly sung.

THOMSON, Virgil (1896–1989)

(i) Autumn (Concertino for Harp, Strings, & Percussion); The Plow that broke the Plains; The River (Suite)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06612-2. (i) Mason; LAPO, Marriner

These pieces are often quite attractive even if none of them is really first-rate. Autumn has a cool yet distinctly American flavour, and many readers will find it highly attractive. The playing of the Los Angeles Orchestra is altogether excellent, and the recording has admirable space and realism.

Film music: Louisiana Story: Arcadian Songs & Dances & Suite; The Plow that Broke the Plains: Suite; Power among Men: Fugues & Cantilenas

(*) Hyp. CDA 66576. New L.O, Corp

Apart from his opera Four Saints in Three Acts (available on two separate recordings in the USA), Virgil Thomson is best known for his film score to Flaherty's Louisiana Story. Here we are offered both the four-movement suite and a series of brief vignettes, called Arcadian Songs and Dances, of which the first (Sadness) and last (The Squeeze Box) are the most striking. The Fugues and Cantilenas from Power among Men are also not what one might expect from the titles, but are atmospheric and imaginatively scored. All this music is quite appealing, even if only very occasionally does one feel it is first rate. The performances by Ronald Corp and the New London Orchestra, are deft, evocatively played, and well recorded.

Film Scores: The Plow that Broke The Plains; The River

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559291. Post Classical Ens., Gil-Ordóñez

Virgil Thomson's scores for the two American documentary films, The Plow that Broke the Plains (evoking the American 'Dust Bowl') and The River (making a spectacular case for flood control), are among the most deservedly famous in film history, and this is the first time they have been recorded in their entirety. Each is constructed in a series of musical vignettes, quoting cowboy songs, popular and patriotic melodies, nursery tunes, folk music and even jazz; but composed music also intervenes to create atmosphere and accompanies the final scenes of both films, the drought in one, the flooding waters in the other, devastation in both. They are remarkable kalaidescopic scores and are presented here in sequence, rather than seamlessly, very well played and recorded. Excellent notes too.

TIPPETT, Michael (1905–98)

Concerto for Orchestra; (i) Triple Concerto

🔑 * Chan. 93842. (i) Chilingirian, Rowland-Jones, De Groote; Bournemouth SO, Hickox

Hickox's coupling of these two major orchestral works is a fine supplement to his set of the four Tippett symphonies, also with the Bournemouth orchestra, warmly recorded in well-focused sound. Levon Chilingirian makes a powerful leader for the trio of soloists, heightening the sharp contrasts of the elliptical argument in Tippett's late return to lyricism. The Concerto for Orchestra is presented with similar concentration and concern for lyrical warmth.

(i) Concerto for Double String Orchestra; (ii) Piano Concerto; (iii) Fantasia concertante on a theme of Corelli

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Encore 2 35744-2. (i) Moscow Chamber O & Bath Fest. O, Barshai; (ii) Ogdon, Philh. O., C. Davis; (iii) Menuhin, Masters, Simpson, Bath Fest. O, Composer

Tippett's eloquent string concerto is well served by Barshai's performance, which has both warmth and vitality. The recording is lively but a shade dry in the upper range. The string textures are clear but not ideally expansive. The Fantasia concertante is not as immediately striking as its predecessor, but with the composer in charge and Menuhin as principal soloist, its inventiveness and expressive feeling are never in doubt. The Piano concerto also represents Tippett's complex-textured and starkly conceived earlier style. Ogdon gives it a fine performance, although he does not rescue it from waywardness. However the recording now sounds clearer than originally.

(i) Concerto for Double String Orchestra; (ii–iv) Piano Concerto; (i) Fantasia concertante on a Theme of Corelli; Little Music for Strings; (v; iv) Praeludium for Brass, Bells & Percussion; Suite for the Birthday of Prince Charles; (vi; iii–iv) Triple Concerto for Violin, Viola, Cello & Orchestra; (vii) The Blue Guitar (sonata for solo guitar). Vocal music: (viii; ix) Bonny at morn (Northumbrian folksong for unison voices and 3 recorders); (viii) A Child of Our Time: 5 Negro Spirituals. (viii; x) Crown of the Year (cantata); (viii) Dance, Clarion Air (madrigal); (xi) Evening Canticles; (viii) Music (unison song);

Plebs Angelica (motet for double choir); The Weeping Babe (motet for soprano and choir). The Midsummer Marriage: (v; iv) Ritual Dances; (xii) Sosostris's Aria

(BB)  Nim. NI 1759 (4). (i) E. String O, Boughton; (ii) Tirimo; (iii) BBC PO; (iv) cond. composer; (v) E.N. Philh. O; (vi) Kovacic, Causé, Baillie; (vii) Ogden; (viii) Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford (members), Darlington; (ix) Copley, Hodges, Nallen; (x) Medici Qt, with wind soloists, Jones (piano) and percussion; (xi) St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Guest; (xii) Hodgson

This bargain collection of Tippett, is specially valuable for containing two discs of recordings made by Tippett himself. When he did them, he was already in his late eighties, and the performance of the Ritual Dances from The Midsummer Marriage is not as incisive as most other versions, but the warmth of expressiveness and the sense of occasion conveyed are most compelling, the more so in Alfreda Hodgson's rich and resonant performance of Sosostris's aria from the same opera, even though the voice is backwardly balanced. It is good too to have Tippett offering a rare example of his occasional music in the uncomplicated Prince Charles Suite. Even more valuable is the concerto disc, again more relaxed at more spacious speeds than rival versions, but with outstanding soloists revealing Tippett at his most warmly magnetic. Martino Tirimo is particularly impressive in the elaborate figuration of the Piano Concerto, which can easily sound empty. Broad speeds, well sustained, also mark William Boughton's readings of the string pieces on the fourth disc; the Guitar Sonata, tautly played by Craig Ogden, and Evening Canticles sung by the St John's College Choir under George Guest (for whom they were written) make a splendid supplement. The choral singing from Christ Church Cathedral Choir on the second disc is also excellent, with the school Cantata, The Crown of the Year, revealing the composer at his most open and least enigmatic. Warm, atmospheric sound, characteristic of Nimbus.

'Tippett Collection': (i) Concerto for Orchestra; (ii) Concerto for Double String Orchestra; (ii; iii) Triple Concerto for Violin, Viola, Cello & Orchestra; (i) Fantasia Concertante on a Theme of Corelli; (iv) Fanfare for Brass; (i) Little Music for Strings; (v) Suite for the Birthday of Prince Charles; Symphonies (i) 1–2; (i; vi) 3; (v) 4; (vii) Sonata for 4 Horns; (viii) String Quartets 1–3; (ix) Piano Sonatas 1–3; (x) Midsummer Marriage; Ritual Dances

Ⓑ  Decca 475 6750 (6). (i) LSO, C. Davis; (ii) ASMF, Marriner; (iii) with Pauk, Imai, Kirshbaum; (iv) Philip Jones Brass Ens.; (v) Chicago SO, Solti; (vi) with Harper; (vii) Tuckwell Horn Qt; (viii) Lindsay Qt; (ix) Crossley; (x) ROHCG O, Pritchard

For those wanting to explore Tippett's music in depth, Decca provided, for the centenary of his birth, an even more extensive collection, which includes the four Symphonies, the first three conducted by Sir Colin Davis with the LSO fully committed, and the Fourth by Sir George Solti, who also offers the agreeable if less substantial Suite for the Birthday of Prince Charles.

Tippett himself described the Third as a hybrid symphony and he consciously follows the example of Beethoven's Ninth in the transition to the final vocal section, in which the soprano sings three blues numbers and Heather Harper almost manages to mute the comparative crudities of Tippett's text. Solti's brilliantly played account of the Fourth Symphony is comparably powerful, although there are depths and tenderness in this score yet to be uncovered. Certainly these recordings and performances have a special place in the catalogue, although (as Hickox has since shown) there are other dimensions to these scores which are not uncovered here.

(i) Concerto for Double String Orchestra; (ii) Fanfare for Brass; (i) Fantasia Concertante on a Theme of Corelli; Little Music for String Orchestra; (iii) Suite in D for the birthday of Prince Charles

✿ * Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 7960. (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) Philip Jones Brass Ens.; (iii) LSO, C. Davis

A splendid Tippett anthology and an ideal introduction to this composer. Beginning with the striking Fanfare for Brass, it moves on to the charming Suite in D for the Birthday of Prince Charles, full of attractive ideas and a distinct 'Robin Hood' atmosphere – the subject of an early folksong opera Tippett composed, parts of it used in this score. Next comes Marriner's classic Argo recording featuring some of his most inspired and approachable music. On any count, the Concerto for Double String Orchestra is one of the most beautiful works for strings of the 20th century. The Corelli Fantasia is a similarly sumptuous work, and the Little Music is very appealing too. Superb 1970s recordings and altogether an outstanding compilation.

Concerto for Double String Orchestra

Ⓑ  CfP 5 75978-2. LPO, Pritchard – BRITTEN: Violin Concerto; Serenade ***

() BBC BBCL mono 4059-2. LSO, Stokowski – GABRIELI: Sonata pian'e forte; LISZT: Mephisto Waltz 1; NIELSEN: Symphony 6 ***

This Classics for Pleasure reissue is a first-rate bargain, well recorded, and coupling one of the warmest and most memorable string works of the 20th century with two key works of Britten. In Handley's fine performance no one could miss the passion behind the sharp, rhythmic inspirations of the outer movement and the glorious lyricism of the central slow movement.

As far as we know Stokowski did not conduct any other Tippett and this eloquent account of the Double Concerto is a 'must', particularly as it comes with another rarity, a studio performance of Nielsen's Sixth Symphony. Commanding accounts, recorded in vivid and well-balanced mono sound.

Concerto for Double String Orchestra; Divertimento on 'Sellinger's round'; Little Music for Strings; (i) The Heart's Assurance (orch. Meirion Bowen)

(*) Chan. 9409. City of L. Sinf., Hickox; (i) with Mark Ainsley

Hickox draws warm and energetic performances from his chamber orchestra, opulently recorded with fine definition. The first movement of the Concerto may lack a little in bite, but the slow movement is ravishing and the finale fizzes with energy. The playing may not always be quite as polished as that of the Academy on the rival Decca disc, but the big bonus is the first recording of the song-cycle The Heart's Assurance in the orchestration prepared by Meirion Bowen with the composer's express approval. What with piano accompaniment can seem a gritty, uncompromising piece here emerges with warmth and beauty, thanks also to the fine singing of John Mark Ainsley.

Concerto for Double String Orchestra; Fantasia concertante on a Theme of Corelli; (i) The Midsummer Marriage: Ritual Dances

🔑 ❀ (BB) * Warner Apex 8573 89098-2. BBC SO, A. Davis; (i) with BBC Symphony Ch.

This outstanding bargain disc offers superb performances from Sir Andrew Davis and the BBC Symphony Orchestra. The Concerto and Fantasia are warmly passionate, yet wonderfully detailed, helped by a spaciously resonant recording which is internally clear, yet has a wide dynamic range to match the dynamic contrasts of the playing. In the third of the Ritual Dances, The air in spring, the chimerical delicacy of the orchestral playing makes the bold entry of the BBC Chorus, near the close, the more arresting and thrilling. If you buy only one Tippett CD, this is the one to have; for apart from being ridiculously inexpensive, it makes an ideal introduction to his music and the sound could hardly be more vivid.

Concerto for Double String Orchestra; Little Music for Strings

(BB)  ASV Resonance CD RSN 3057. E. Sinfonia, Farrer – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Dives & Lazarus; Partita ***

John Farrer conducts strong, athletic performances, very well played and recorded, with slow movements touching but not over-ripe. If you want the fine Vaughan Williams coupling, this is excellent value.

(i) Piano Concerto; Fantasia on a Theme of Handel; Piano Sonatas 1–4

* Hyp. CDA 67461/2. Osborne; (i) BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

The Piano Concerto represents Tippett's complex, rich-textured style. It is essentially a lyrical and inspired piece, and this fine new recording copes with it by making an overall blend between piano and orchestra. The Fantasia with its variations is an early work, slightly eclectic, based on a theme which mirrors that used also by Brahms. To quote the composer it is 'vigorous and gay', but it is also full-blooded and dramatic, very much a youthful piece. Stephen Osborne and the BBC Scottish Orchestra under Brabbins are fully at home here, and these performances are unsurpassed. Osborne is equally involved in the four Sonatas, matching Paul Crossley, who has been very much identified with them (see below). They are not easy works to bring off, being often prolix, but Osborne's total conviction carries the day and he is splendidly recorded.

(i) Piano Concerto; Piano Sonatas 1 & 2

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 86586-2. Ogdon; (i) Philh. O, C. Davis

John Ogdon and Sir Colin Davis present the Concerto persuasively enough. But Ogdon is at his best in the First Sonata. It has great vitality of invention, is harmonically direct and well suited to Ogdon's forthright approach. He plays it superbly and is movingly simple in his presentation of the Andante molto tranquillo, yet he readily catches the lighter, syncopated mood of the Rondo giocoso finale. The single-movement Second Sonata, written nearly three decades later, is more intractable. Without being as uninhibited as he might be, John Ogdon displays his usual virtuosity.

Divertimento for Chamber Orchestra (Sellinger's Round)

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 257. ECO, Del Mar – ARNOLD; BERKELEY; BRITTEN: Sinfoniettas; RAWSTHORNE: Divertimentos ***

A series of variations on the English folk-dance tune by different hands led Tippett to develop his variation into this lively work, diverting exactly as a divertimento should be. It comes in an excellent performance, beautifully recorded.

Little Music for String Orchestra

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6576. Soloists of Australia, Thomas – BLISS: Checkmate; RUBBRA: Symphony 5 ***

Tippett's Little Music was written in 1946 for the Jacques Orchestra. Its contrapuntal style is stimulating but the music is more inconsequential than the Concerto for Double String Orchestra. It receives a good if not distinctive performance here, truthfully recorded.

(i) The Rose Lake; (ii) The Vision of St Augustine

🔑 ❀ * RCA 82876 64284-2. LSO; (i) C. Davis; (ii) with Shirley Quirk, L. Ch., composer

As Sir Colin Davis's superb recording with the LSO demonstrates from first to last, The Rose Lake is arguably the most beautiful of all Tippett's works. It was in 1990 on a visit to Senegal that the 85-year-old composer visited a lake, Le Lac Rose, where at midday the sun transformed its whitish-green colour to translucent pink. It led to this musical evocation of the lake from dawn to dusk, centred round the climactic mid-moment when the lake is in full song. The 12 sections, sharply delineated, form a musical arch, with the lake-song represented in five of them on soaring unison strings in free variation form.

That culminating masterpiece is well coupled with Tippett's own 1971 recording, never previously available on CD, of his Cantata, The Vision of St Augustine. First heard in 1965, it is a work which can now be recognized as the beginning of his adventurous Indian Summer. His reading is expansively atmospheric rather than tautly drawn, bringing out the mystery of the piece.

Symphonies 1–4; New Year Suite

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 10330X (3). Robinson, Bournemouth SO, Hickox

Symphony 1; (i) Piano Concerto

🔑 * Chan. 9333. (i) Shelley; Bournemouth SO, Hickox

Those who thought that Sir Colin Davis's pioneering recordings of the first three Tippett symphonies were definitive will find fresh revelation in Richard Hickox's readings, not least in the First Symphony. Hickox gives an extra spring to the chattering motor rhythms at the start, and from then on the Bournemouth performance is regularly warmer and more expressive, as in the distinctive trumpet melody in the slow movement. In the last two movements too, Hickox finds more fun and jollity in Tippett's wild inspirations. The Piano Concerto, with Howard Shelley a superb soloist, brings another revelatory performance, warm and affectionate but purposeful too, rebutting any idea that with their fluttering piano figurations these are meandering arguments. Warm, full, atmospheric sound, with the piano balanced within the orchestra instead of in front of it. This must now be a first recommendation, although all four symphonies are now available in a box at mid-price.

Symphony 2; New Year (opera): Suite

 Chan. 9299. Bournemouth SO, Hickox

As in the First Symphony, Hickox brings out the joy behind Tippett's inspirations without ever losing a sense of purpose. This may be a less biting performance than Sir Colin Davis's was on Decca, but it is consistently warmer, with extra fun and wit in the third-movement Scherzo. The coupling is also valuable, when Tippett's own suite from his last opera, New Year, brings out the colour and wild energy of this inspiration of his mid-eighties. If anything, the music seems the more telling for being shorn of the composer's own problematic libretto. The obbligato instruments – saxophones, electric guitars and kit drums – are most evocatively balanced in the warm, atmospheric recording.

(i) Symphony 3; Praeludium for Brass, Bells & Percussion

 Chan. 9276. Bournemouth SO, Hickox; (i) with Robinson

In two long movements, each lasting nearly half an hour, the Third Symphony is not easy to hold together and, though Richard Hickox and the Bournemouth Orchestra cannot match the original performers, Sir Colin Davis and the LSO, in power, they find more light and shade. Though Faye Robinson's voice in the blues sections of the second movement is not as warm or firm as Heather Harper's was, she is more closely in tune with the idiom, helping to build the sequence to a purposeful conclusion in the long final scena. The recording is full and warm to match. The Praeludium for Brass, Bells and Percussion was written in 1962 for the 40th anniversary of the BBC, a gruff, angular piece hardly suggesting celebration, but none the less welcome in a well-played performance.

Symphony 4; Fantasia concertante on a Theme of Corelli; (i) Fantasia on a Theme of Handel (for piano and orchestra)

 Chan. 9233. (i) Shelley, Bournemouth SO, Hickox

In the Fourth Symphony, Richard Hickox and the Bournemouth Symphony are less weighty than the work's originators, but they are generally warmer and more atmospheric. The well-known Corelli Variations have never sounded quite as sumptuous and resonant as here, and the disc is generously rounded off with a welcome rarity: the early Handel Fantasia for Piano and Orchestra. Howard Shelley is most convincing in the weighty piano-writing, like his accompanists giving the music warmth. Full-blooded sound to match.

String Quartets 1–5

🔑  ASV (ADD/DDD) CDDCS 231 (2). Lindsay Qt

String Quartets 1, 2 & 4

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570496. Tippett Qt

String Quartet 4

 ASV CDDCA 608. Lindsay Qt – BRITTEN: Quartet 3 ***

This set neatly brings together the première recordings of Tippett's last two Quartets with the recordings the same players made in the 1970s for L'Oiseau-Lyre of the first three Quartets in the series, long unavailable. The notes include the composer's own commentary on the first three Quartets, written for the original issue. The Lindsays give performances as near definitive as could be, making one realize why they inspired the composer so positively. The analogue sound for 1–3, as transferred, is brighter, with less body than the digital recordings for 4 and 5. As can be seen, the Fourth Quartet is also available separately, well coupled with Britten's Third.

The eponymous Tippett Quartet give perceptive performances of three of the Quartets, but they are not as penetrating as the Lindsays, nor are the recordings so fresh and open. There is no lack of dedication or feeling, yet one does not feel these performances are as completely inside the music as their competitors.

Piano Sonatas 1 (Fantasy-Sonata); 2–3

 Chan. 9468. Unwin

Piano Sonatas 1 (Fantasy Sonata); 2–4

🔑 Ⓜ * CRD CRD 34301 (2). Crossley

Paul Crossley has been strongly identified with the Tippett Sonatas; he recorded the first three for Philips in the mid-1970s: indeed, 3 was written for him. The Fourth and last (1983–4) started life as a set of five bagatelles. Crossley contributes an informative and illuminating note on the Sonata and its relationship with, among other things, Ravel's Miroirs; his performance has all the lucidity and subtlety one would expect from him. These masterly accounts are matched by truthful and immediate sound-quality.

Nicholas Unwin has an exceptionally wide range of colour, though at times Crossley has more subtlety and delicacy when Tippett's fantasy takes wing. The Chandos recording is superb. Crossley's set takes two CDs but, if you happen not to need or want the Fourth, this is a viable alternative.

VOCAL MUSIC

Boyhood's End

* Hyp. CDA 67459. Padmore, Vignoles – BRITTEN: Who are these children?; 6 Holderlin Fragments; FINZI: A Young Man's Exhortation ***

Mark Padmore, in his first solo song-recital disc, makes an inspired choice, bringing together four cycles on the theme of youth and friendship. Warmly accompanied by Roger Vignoles, he sings with a heady beauty and deep understanding, not least in this unusual Tippett cycle. Asked by his friends Benjamin Britten and Peter Pears to write a piece for them when they returned from America in 1943, Tippett chose to set not verse but prose passages by W. H. Hudson. The result is very characteristic of his early style, with often craggy vocal lines, which Padmore copes with superbly, and awkwardly written piano accompaniment, which Vignoles equally masters with apparent ease.

A Child of Our Time (oratorio)

Ⓜ  LSO Live SACD LSO 0670. Thomas, Fujimura, Davislim, Rose, LSO & Ch, Colin Davis

🔑 * Chan. 9123. Haymon, Clarey, Evans, White, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

(BB)  Naxos 8.557570. Robinson, Walker, Garrison, Cheel, CBSO Ch. & O, composer

The outstanding quality in this SACD version of Tippett's oratorio is the richness and variety of the choral sound, a tribute not just to the singers but to the engineers. Davis recorded the work for Philips many years ago, but this LSO Live version completely supplants it, even though the line-up of soloists is not so starry.

'I have no money for my bread' sings the tenor representing the hero, and Steve Davislim's performance conveys that emotion naturally with no exaggeration. Indra Thomas is the vibrant soprano soloist, specially moving in her descants over some of the Spirituals which movingly take the place of chorales in the piece. Mihoko Fujimura, firmly focused, makes the most of her limited opportunities as mezzo soloist, and Matthew Rose is a powerful and sensitive bass soloist. Yet it is the crisply incisive singing of the chorus that above all makes this a totally compelling issue, ripely recorded in SACD surround sound.

Hickox's version of Tippett's oratorio A Child of Our Time establishes its place against severe competition largely through the exceptionally rich recording and its distinctive choice of soloists, a quartet of black singers. Not only do Cynthia Haymon, Cynthia Clarey, Damon Evans and Willard White make the transitions into the spirituals (used in the way Bach used chorales) seem all the more natural, their timbres all have a very sensuous quality. The London Symphony Chorus, though not at its most incisive, sings well, responding to Hickox's warmly expressive style, often even more expansive than the composer himself on his recent recording.

Sir Michael Tippett in his mid-eighties may not secure the best-disciplined performance on record of the earliest of his oratorios, but it is undoubtedly very moving. The spirituals have a heart-easing expressiveness, warmly idiomatic, while the lightness and resilience of Nobody knows allows the syncopations to be pointed with winning jazziness. Next to Sir Colin Davis's taut, tough reading (now reissued on Decca) this may be relatively slack, taking a full five minutes longer overall, but the sound on the Naxos disc (originally Collins) is fuller and warmer than that on the Davis set. The soloists are placed well forward, an outstandingly characterful team of singers especially associated with Tippett's music. Although overall the Hickox version on Chandos must be counted first choice, at Naxos price the composer's own version can certainly be recommended alongside it.

OPERA

King Priam (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) Arthaus DVD 102 087. Macann, Walker, Haskin, Mason, Janet Price, Jenkins, Ebrahim, Kent Opera Ch. & O, Norrington (Stage Director: Nicholas Hyntner; V/D: Robin Lough)

Tippett's King Priam is a work concerned with 'the psychological balance between the characters', and this is far from a conventional entertainment. Rodney Macann in the demanding title role, Sarah Walker's Andromache, Neil Jenkins's Achilles are all powerfully portrayed, but whether the opera communicates to the ordinary non-intellectual operagoer is another matter. Certainly this is a video to see, for Robin Lough's TV version is full of tension and Roger Norrington is at home with the music.

King Priam (complete; CD Version)

🔑 * Chan. 9406/7 (2). Bailey, Harper, Allen, Palmer, Langridge, Minton, Tear, Roberts, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Atherton

In King Priam the dry fragmentation of texture and choppy compression of the drama then seems at odds with an epic subject, particularly after the lyrical, expansive warmth of Tippett's preceding opera, The Midsummer Marriage. With an outstanding cast of the finest British singers of the time, Atherton in this 1980 recording brings out the sharp cogency of the writing, the composer's single-mindedness in pursuing his own individual line. The Wagnerian Norman Bailey sounds agedly noble in the title-role, with Robert Tear a shiningly heroic Achilles and Thomas Allen a commanding Hector, illuminating every word. The digital recording, originally made by Decca, comes out brilliantly on CD, with each Act fitted conveniently on a single disc.

The Midsummer Marriage (complete)

🔑 ❀ * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2217 (2). Remedios, Carlyle, Burrows, Herinx, Harwood, Watts, Ch. & O of ROHCG, C. Davis

At long last this outstanding (originally Philips) 1970 recording of Tippett's masterpiece reappears on CD. It is a work that should be in the standard repertoire, alongside Britten's Peter Grimes, for the music consistently has that inspired melodic flow which distinguishes all great operas. There are few operas of any period which use the chorus to such glorious effect, often in haunting offstage passages, and, with Sir Colin Davis a burningly committed advocate and with a cast that was inspired by live performances in the opera house, this is a set hard to resist, even for those not normally fond of modern opera. The so-called 'difficulties' of the libretto, with its mystical philosophical references, fade when the sounds are so honeyed in texture and so consistently lyrical, while the story – for all its complications – preserves a clear sense of emotional involvement throughout. The singing is glorious, the playing magnificent and the recording outstandingly atmospheric, and the Lyrita transfer brings an extraordinary sense of realism, the feeling of sitting in the stalls inside an opera house with quite perfect acoustics – even though the recording was made in Wembley Town Hall.

TOCH, Ernst (1887–1964)

(i) Cello Concerto; Dance Suite

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559282. Spectrum Concerts, Berlin; with (i) Poltera

The Cello Concerto in four movements has the solo cello, superbly played by Christian Poltera, well matched against a chamber group, with the soloist often playing without any accompaniment. The idiom in the first movement is less tonal than in the other three movements, demonstrating Toch's ability to bridge the gaps between the different modernist movements of the period. The work ends with a contrapuntal finale very close to the music of Toch's contemporary Hindemith. The Dance Suite, written at the same time as Bartók's Dance Suite, has six varied movements that are far from lightweight. The performances by a talented Berlin group are exemplary, very well recorded.

Symphonies 1, Op. 72; 2, Op. 73; 3, Op. 75; 4, Op. 80; 5, Op. 89 (Jephtha); 6, Op. 93; 7, Op. 95

 CPO 777 191-2 (3). Berlin RSO, Francis

Toch's First Symphony was written at the age of 61 in 1948, not long after he had suffered a heart attack. The Third Symphony won a Pulitzer Prize and was recorded in the mid-1950s by William Steinberg and the Pittsburgh orchestra on Capitol. His later music was relatively ignored, though the ever-enterprising Louisville Orchestra recorded the Fifth. Toch certainly made up for his neglect of the symphony (a genre which came so naturally to him), for the last three were written in under a year and a half, shortly before his death from cancer in October 1964. It is amazing how, when we think there are no composers of the 20th century left to rediscover, an unfamiliar – and major – figure surfaces. Those investing in this set will be well rewarded.

(i) Symphony 5 (Jephtha); (ii) Cantata of the Bitter Herbs

🔑  (BB) Naxos 8.559417. (i) Seattle SO; (ii) Bikel, Meyer, Shammash, Clement, Christopher, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Czech PO; Schwarz

What an interesting and rewarding composer Toch is! The Cantata of the Bitter Herbs for narrator, soloists, chorus and orchestra comes from 1938, four years after he had left Nazi Germany to settle in the United States. It is neo-romantic and at times even Straussian (he had, incidentally, gone with Strauss to Florence in 1934 to a musical conference). No doubt prompted by the death of his mother in Vienna, it is a work of much inventive resource and undoubted expressive eloquence. The Fifth of his seven Symphonies comes from 1962–3 and, like the Cantata, is based on Exodus. It is subtitled 'Rhapsodic Poem' and is altogether freer in style than 6 and 7, to which he turned in the last year of his life. Both works are of quality and are very well performed and recorded: at a fraction of the price of a concert ticket, this is a real bargain which will well repay curiosity.

Piano Quintet, Op. 64; 3 Impromptus for Cello, Op. 90c; Violin Sonata 2, Op. 44; (Piano) Burlesque, Op. 31

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8 559324. Spectrum Concerts (Berlin)

As we have discovered from his symphonies Toch is a highly rewarding composer, inventive yet unpredictable, as his fine Piano Quintet readily shows, with the four movements bearing out their sub-titles, 'Lyrical', 'Whimsical', 'Contemplative' and 'Dramatic'. The three Impromptus for Cello, written for Piatigorsky in 1963, are essentially lyrical, but the Second Violin Sonata offers real contrasts, the outer music stormy and the centrepiece grazioso. Of the three-part piano Burlesque, the final moto perpetuo, 'Der Jongleur' became something of a hit in its day (1923). Excellent performances throughout make all this music truly communicative. The recording is rather close but truthful. Well worth investigating.

TOLDRA, Eduardo (1895–1962)

Viste al Mar

 HM HMI 987072. Cuarteto Casals – RAVEL: String Quartet; TURINA: El Oracion del Torero ***

Here is a disc promoted by the Spanish department of Harmonia Mundi, designed to link the work of Ravel with that of two Catalan composers, Eduardo Toldra and Joaquin Turina. The players are the greatly talented young Cuarteto Casals, winners of the first prize in the 2000 London International Quartet Competition. Viste al Mar is the Catalan title of Toldra's 1921 String Quartet (in Spanish Vista del Mar, 'View of the Sea'). It was inspired by three poems by Joan Maragall. The composer's original idea was to have each movement prefaced by a recitation of the poem which inspired it, a device adopted on this disc. Though there are several recordings of the composer's orchestration of the piece for strings, this is unique in offering his first ideas for string quartet.

TOMKINS, Thomas (1572–1656)

Music for viols: Almain in F (for 4 viols); Fantasias 1, 12 & 14 (for 3 viols); Fantasia (for 6 viols); Galliard: Thomas Simpson (5 viols & organ); In Nomine II (for 3 viols); Pavane in A min. (for 5 viols & organ); Pavane in F; Ut re mi (Hexachord fantasia) (both for 4 viols); (Keyboard) (i) Fancy for two to play. Pavan & Galliard: Earl Strafford. (Organ) In nomine; Miserere; Voluntary; Verse anthems: Above the stars; O Lord, let me know mine end; Thou art my King

🔑 ❀ (BB) * Naxos 8.550602. Rose Consort of Viols, Red Byrd; Roberts; (i) with Bryan

This well-planned Naxos programme is carefully laid out in two parts, each of viol music interspersed with harpsichord and organ pieces and ending with an anthem. It gives collectors an admirable opportunity to sample, very inexpensively, the wider output of Thomas Tomkins, an outstandingly fine Elizabethan musician whose music is still too little known. Perhaps the most remarkable piece here is the Hexachord fantasia, where the scurrying part-writing ornaments a rising and falling six-note scale (hexachord). The two five-part verse anthems and Above the stars, which is in six parts, are accompanied by five viols, with a fine counter-tenor in Above the stars and a bass in Thou art my King.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Music for harpsichord and virginals: Barafostus Dreame; 2 Fancies; Fancy for 2 to Play; Fortune my Foe; Galliard of 3 Parts; Galliard Earl Strafford; 2 Grounds; In nomine; Lady Folliott's Galliard; Miserere; Pavan; Pavan Earl Strafford with its devision; Pavane of 3 parts; A Sad Pavane for these Distracted Times; Toy made at Poole Court; What if a Day; Worcester Brawls

🔑 * Metronome METCD 1049. Cerasi

Carole Cerasi offers here the finest available collection of the keyboard music of the last of the great English virginalists, Thomas Tomkins. Indeed, it is the repertoire played on the virginals that stands out, especially her exquisitely spontaneous performance of A Sad Pavane for these Distracted Times, and her equally sensitive response to the dolorous Fortune my Foe (the two most extended pieces here). In contrast, the charmingly good-humoured Toy made at Poole Court is given the lightest rhythmic lift. She uses a modern copy of an early 17th-century Ruckers and it could hardly be more realistically recorded. The harpsichord pieces (using a copy of an instrument by Bartolomeno Stephanini) are more robust and often have exuberant decoration, as in the disc's title piece Barafostus Dreame. Earl Strafford's Galliard is another splendid example of her exciting bravura on the latter instrument and the closing Ground with extended variations is a tour de force. The recording venue has a pleasing ambience and the balance is ideal if you set the volume level carefully.

Fancy; Fancy* (for Viols)*; Galliard; Ground; In Nomine, In Nomine Versions I–II; 4 Pavans; Prelude; Robin Hood; Toy – Made at Poole Court; Voluntary

 MDG 607 0704-2. Klapprott (harpsichord or virginal)

Bernhard Klapprott is well attuned to Tomkins with his often measured tread, especially in the Pavans, which are given a noble dignity. Yet he also seems outgoing, and in the single Galliard included here he obviously revels in the fast passage-work. The Toy – Made at Poole Court is a most engaging little tune, while the Robin Hood variations, using a memorable basic theme, suggest a horse-riding hero. Both this and the closing Ground are similarly lively. Excellent recording, not too close and not too resonant.

The Great Service (No. 3)*; Anthems: Know you not; Oh, that the Salvation; O Lord, let me know mine end; (i) Organ Voluntaries: *in A; C; G

🔑 Ⓜ * CRD CRD 3467. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom; (i) Burchell

The Great Service (No. 3); When David Heard; Then David Mourned; Almighty God, the Fountain of All Wisdom; Woe is Me; Be Strong and of a Good Courage; O Sing unto the Lord a New Song; O God, the Proud are then Risen Against Me

🔑 * Gimell CDGIM 024. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

The Great Service, in no fewer than ten parts, sets the four canticles – Te Deum, Jubilate, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis – with a grandeur rarely matched, using the most complex polyphony. The following motets bring comparable examples of his mastery. These complex pieces bring the flawless matching and even tone for which the Tallis Scholars are celebrated, and with recording to match.

Many will prefer the more direct and throatier style of the Choir of New College, Oxford; even if the choral sound (recorded in the chapel of New College) is less sharply defined, the effect is very satisfying and real. The service is given added variety by the inclusion of three organ voluntaries, well played by David Burchell. What makes this record especially attractive is the inclusion of three of Tomkins's most beautiful anthems. The treble solos in Know you not and Oh, that the Salvation are ravishingly done, and the alto soloist in O Lord, let me know mine end is hardly less impressive.

ANTHEMS AND MOTETS

Above the stars my Saviour dwells; Almighty God, the fountain of all wisdom; Arise O Lord, lift up thine hand; Behold the hour cometh and now is; Funeral Sentences; Great and marvellous are Thy works; My Shepherd is the living Lord; O sing unto

the Lord a new song; A Sad Psalm; Then David mourned; When David heard; Fifth Service: Magnificat and Nunc dimittis; (i) Organ Voluntary in D; Pavan & Galliard

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553794. Oxford Camerata, Summerly; (i) L. Cummings (organ)

Not surprisingly, Jeremy Summerly and his Oxford Camerata give us an outstanding collection of Tomkins's sacred vocal music, very well laid out. Among the highlights are the beautiful Funeral Sentences, and the following glorious Above the stars my Saviour dwells, the group which begins with When David heard that Absolom was slain and ends with the serene Almighty God, the fountain of all wisdom and the glowing O sing unto the Lord a new Song. Laurence Cummings adds A Sad Pavan for these distracted times to this melancholy sequence, but elsewhere he plays a cheerful Pavan and Galliard as another interlude. The choir (with fine soloists) are vividly recorded, with the acoustic resonance of Hertford College Chapel well controlled so that words are clear. An outstanding disc in every way.

Songs of 3, 4, 5 & 6 Parts (1622)

 Chan. 0680. I Fagiolini, Hollingworth

This enterprising Chandos disc introduces us to a side of Tomkins which, for the most part, is very different from his sacred music. Certainly this collection includes a few deeply religious settings, such as the meltingly beautiful Woe is me! that I am constrained (from Psalm 120) and its companion Turn unto the Lord our God. But many of these songs are madrigals concerned with more earthly love, even though they remain just as richly expressive, like Weep no more thou sorry boy. Others are jolly: Oyez! Has any found a lad and the delightful To the shady woods now wend we, with its 'fa-la-la-la-las' not as innocent as they seem. The charming, lightweight See, see the Shepherds' Queen is a glee which might almost have been written by Sullivan. I Fagiolini sing this nicely varied progarame expertly, with a neat rhythmic touch and an attractive blending of voices. They are beautifully recorded.

TOMLINSON, Ernest
(born 1924)

Aladdin: 3 Dances (Birdcage Dance; Cushion Dance; Belly Dance); Comedy Overture; Cumberland Square; English Folk-Dance Suite 1; Light Music Suite; Passepied; (i) Rhapsody & Rondo for Horn & Orchestra. Brigadoon; Shenandoah* (arrangement)

 Marco 8.223513. (i) Watkins; Slovak RSO (Bratislava), composer

The opening Comedy Overture is racily vivacious, and there are many charming vignettes here, delectably tuneful and neatly scored, and the pastiche dance movements are nicely elegant. The Pizzicato humoresque (from the Light Music Suite) is every bit as winning as other, more famous pizzicato movements, and in the Rhapsody and Rondo for horn Tomlinson quotes wittily from both Mozart and Britten. The composer finally lets his hair down in the rather vulgar Belly Dance, but the concert ends well with the charming Georgian Miniature. The playing is elegant and polished, its scale perfectly judged, and the recording is first class.

An English Overture; 3 Gaelic Sketches: Gaelic Lullaby; Kielder Water; Little Serenade; Lyrical Suite: Nocturne; Nautical Interlude; 3 Pastoral Dances: Hornpipe; Silverthorne Suite; 2nd Suite of English Folk Dances; Sweet and Dainty;* arr. of Coates: *The Fairy Coach; Cinderella Waltz

 Marco 8.223413. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), composer

Ernest Tomlinson's orchestral pieces charm by the frothy lightness of the scoring. The winningly delicate Little Serenade, which opens the disc, is the most famous, but the gentle, evocative Kielder Water, the captivating Canzonet from the Silverthorne Suite and the Nocturne are hardly less appealing. Love-in-a-mist is as intangible as it sounds, with the most fragile of oboe solos, and it is not surprising that Sweet and Dainty has been used for a TV commercial. There is robust writing, too, in the Folk Dance Suite – but not too robust, although the jolly English Overture begins with Here's a Health unto His Majesty and certainly does not lack vitality. The music is played with much grace and the lightest possible touch by the remarkably versatile Slovak Radio Orchestra under the composer, and the vivid recording has delightfully transparent textures, so vital in this repertoire.

TORCH, Sidney (1908–90)

All Strings and Fancy Free; Barbecue; Bicycle Belles; Comic Cuts; Concerto Incognito; Cresta Run; Duel for Drummers; Going for a Ride; London Transport Suite; Mexican Fiesta; On a Spring Note; Petite Valse; Samba Sud; Shooting Star; Shortcake Walk; Slavonic Rhapsody; Trapeze Waltz

 Marco 8.223443. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth

Sydney Torch worked frequently with the BBC Concert Orchestra (the orchestra on this CD), and for many he is remembered for his weekly broadcasts 'Friday Night is Music Night'. The London Transport Suite was commissioned by the BBC for their Light Music festival of 1957 and was inspired by the withdrawal of the 'Brighton Belle' on the London-to-Brighton railway service. All the music here is tuneful, at times wistful and nostalgic, at others bright and breezy – All Strings and Fancy Free is both. Barbecue sounds like a Scottish snap, while the Trapeze Waltz is reminiscent of the circus music of Satie. The Concerto Incognito is very much in the Warsaw Concerto mould, and the Petite Valse (also with piano) is more robust than its title suggests. The Mexican Fiesta and Samba Sud produce some fine local colour and are very jolly, while the Slavonic Rhapsody (with two pianos) is a fun work, drawing on the music of Rimsky-Korsakov, Tchaikovsky, Knipper, Borodin and Khachaturian, to form an entertaining if outrageous pastiche. The longest work is the Duel for Drummers, which, as its title suggests, is a tour de force for the percussion department; it has some ideas which are reminiscent of Eric Coates and a few surprises, including a cockerel crowing, and a desert-island storm in the central movement. It ends with a lively galop. Barry Wordsworth conducts with flair, and the recording is excellent.

TORELLI, Giuseppe (1658–1709)

Concerti musicali, Op. 6/1-12 ; Sonata a 4 in A min.

Ⓝ * Signum SIGCD 157. Charivari Agréable, Kah-Ming Ng

This set is given the sobriquet 'the original Brandenburg concertos'. Up to a point that is acceptable, but Bach's Margrave of Brandenburg was a different person from Torelli's employer, the Margrave of Brandenburg-Ansbach. However Torelli did dedicate his Concerti musicale to Sophie Charlotte, Electress of Brandenburg, although nothing came of the dedication. But the Concerti musicali are a real discovery and they are most attractively presented here. Originally intended for strings alone, the Charivari have included oboes, recorders and bassoon and a continuo featuring chamber organ as well as theorbo and harpsichord. The result is most enjoyable: allegros are jolly and slow movements expressive and appealing, and Kah Ming Ng brings the music to life vividly and spontaneously, helped by lively, truthful recording

(i) Violin Concertos, Op. 8/8, 9 & 11; (i; ii) Double Violin Concertos, Op. 8/2, 4, 5, 6; (iii) Sinfonias for Trumpet in D (G 8); (iii; iv) for 2 Trumpets, (G 23).

🔑 * Chan. 0716. (i) Standage; (ii) Weiss; (iii) Steele-Perkins; (ii) Blackadder; Coll. Mus. 90

While Torelli's earlier Concertos remain in the world of the concerto grosso, by the time he came to write Op. 8 (published in 1709), he had moved away to give his soloists independence. The lustrous, busy opening of Op. 8/2 is immediatialy enticing, but these are all attractive works, particularly 4 (where the pointed theme of the finale reminds one of 'All we like sheep') and 6, with its Largo e staccato central movement anticipating Vivaldi. The solo Concerto in E minor, Op. 8/11, is also a particularly fine work. Not surprisingly, the period performances here are first class. The rather more conventional Trumpet Concertos are also in confident hands, and throughout the accompaniments are characteristically stylish and the Chandos recording first rate.

TORMIS, Veljo (born 1930)

Autumn Landscapes; 3 Estonian Folk Songs; 4 Estonian Lullabies; Livonian Heritage; Singing aboard ship; 3 Songs from the epic 'Kalev's Son'; 2 Songs to Words by Ernst Enno

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67601. Holst Singers, Layton

Internationally, Arvo Pärt is the most familiar name among Estonian composers, but Veljo Tormis, five years older, and once his teacher, is the composer most loved in his own country. One has only to start this programme with his setting of Two Songs by Ernst Enno, Early Summer and Soundlessly somewhere murmurings homeward, to discover the harmonic richness and evocative atmosphere, to say nothing of the originality and passionate unpredictability of his music. In Waking the Birds from the Livonian Heritage he writes hypnotically over a quiet sustained pedal; in Shrovetide he alternates men's and women's voices in different rhythms; while in Singing aboard ship the women sing the poem while the men wordlessly create the rocking waves. Contrastingly, Wee winkie mouse is a delightfully gentle lullaby. The variety of style and feeling continues through the seven-part Autumn Landscapes, and the programme climaxes with the strongly felt Childhood memory (Herding Calls). All the music is melodically rich, and it is all sung gloriously by the Holst Singers under Stephen Layton, who obviously identifies completely with the composer's muse. Splendid recording too, clear yet with a warm ambience.

TÓRROBA, Federico (1891–1982)

Luisa Fernanda (complete; DVD and CD versions)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0969 D.; CD 0028947658252 Domingo, Herrera, Bros, Cantarero, Teatro Madrid Ch. & O, López-Cobos (Dir: Emilio Sagi, V/D: Angel Luis Ramirez)

Plácido Domingo has been a lifelong advocate of the zarzuela, the Spanish genre of operetta. Here he takes the lead in one of the most celebrated, full of attractive tunes, not least the Romanza di Vidal. Vidal's rival in love for his beloved Luisa, well taken by the soprano Nancy Herrera, is another tenor, who offers vocal as well as dramatic rivalry to Domingo, José Bros as Javier, though he is no match for Domingo as an actor. Among the jewels here are a number of ensemble numbers, including the martial finale to Act II and a ballet in Mazurka rhythm. The staging is generally traditional and effective, a co-production between Madrid and the opera companies of Washington and Los Angeles. Full, bright sound.

The CD version includes full documentation including a libretto.

TOURNEMIRE, Charles (1870–1939)

L'Orgue mystique, Op. 56: Volumes 1 & 2

 Priory PRCD 669 AB. Dufourcet (organs of Sainte-Trinité, Paris, & Basilique du Sacré-Coeur de Montmartre, Paris)

L'Orgue mystique (of which these are only the first two volumes) was designed for use within the Masses on Sundays and Feast Days, being useful for organists who have not the skill to improvise their own voluntaries. Tournemire uses no fewer than 300 different chants throughout his work, providing spectacular Postludes for the exit music. But the centrepieces of each of these two volumes include Paraphrases, Fantaisies and four or five Chorale Alleluias. The music is diverse and often powerful, but some of the intricate passagework tends to get lost in the reverberation, an effect that must be intended, as the recording is obviously truthful. Marie-Bernadette Dufourcet is a splendid advocate, using the Sainte-Trinité organ throughout, except for the Fantasie for Epiphany in Volume 1 and the closing Fantaisie on the Te Deum in Volume 2, where she chooses the organ at Sacré-Coeur.

Choral-improvisation on the Victimae pascachali laudes; Lento; Suite évocatrice, Op. 74; Office: Domenica Resurrectionis: 5 Petites fleurs musicales, Op. 66; Postludes pour les Antiennes de Magnificat: Amen & Postlude; L'Orgue mystique: Volume 17, Op. 56 (excerpts); Toccata, Op. 19/3

 ATMA ACD2 2470. Boucher (Casavant organ at L'Eglise des Saints-Anges-Gardiens, Lachine, Quebec)

This collection is a much more enjoyable way of discovering the variety of Tournemire's output than L'Orgue mystique. Vincent Boucher opens dramatically with a Choral-improvisation and follows with a rather beautiful, brief Lento that immediately reveals Tournemire as able to compose a slow movement without sentimentality, far more appealing than a comparable Widor piece. The Suite évocatrice is made up of five neatly registered miniatures, of which the closing Caprice is engagingly playful, and the Petites fleurs musicales offer comparable diversity. The Amen and Postlude each last barely a minute, yet again make their mark with gentle colouring, and the closing five movements from L'Orgue mystique show this work at its most impressive. The Quebec organ has a fine weight of sonority, but also in the hands of the excellent Boucher a rich palette of colour.

TOVEY, Donald (1875–1940)

Piano Concerto in A, Op. 15

 Hyp. CDA 67023. Osborne, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – MACKENZIE: Scottish Concerto ***

Hyperion in its imaginative series of Romantic Piano Concertos here offers two Scottish works. Sir Donald Tovey is best known for his analytical essays, and his Concerto, if less distinctively Scottish, is the grander work, with weighty textures and a strongly controlled structure. The young Scottish pianist Steven Osborne is a brilliant advocate.

TREDICI, David Del (b. 1937)

Final Alice

Ⓝ * Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9955. Hendricks, Chicago SO, Solti

Improbably commissioned to celebrate the bicentennial of the United States in 1976, this instalment of Del Tredici's sequence of Lewis Carroll settings has much to fascinate the ear, particularly in a virtuoso performance like this. Familiar texts are neatly assembled, with a minimum of violence to the original, to present a dramatic cantata for just one voice and orchestra. Barbara Hendricks proves a characterful and urgent guide, a vibrant narrator as well as a fine singer. Solti and his superb orchestra plainly enjoy the fun from first to last: it is good to welcome an extended work which sustains its length without pomposity and with immediate warmth of communication. The recording is outstandingly brilliant and its premiere release on CD is enormously welcomed.

TUBIN, Eduard (1905–82)

(i) Balalaika Concerto; Music for Strings; Symphony 1

🔑  BIS CD 351. (i) Sheynkman; Swedish RSO, Järvi

The opening of the First Symphony has a Sibelian breadth, but for the most part it is a symphony apart from its fellows. The quality of the musical substance is high; its presentation is astonishingly assured for a young man still in his twenties, and the scoring is masterly. Emanuil Sheynkman's account of the Balalaika Concerto with Neeme Järvi is first class, both taut and concentrated. Excellent recording.

(i) Ballade for Violin & Orchestra; (ii) Double-bass Concerto; (i) Violin Concerto 2; Estonian Dance Suite; Valse triste

🔑  BIS CD 337. (i) Garcia; (ii) Ehren; Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Tubin's highly imaginative Double-bass Concerto has an unflagging sense of momentum and is ideally proportioned; the ideas never outstay their welcome and one's attention is always held. The Second Violin Concerto has an appealing lyricism, is well proportioned and has a strong sense of forward movement. The Ballade is a work of gravity and eloquence. Valse triste is a short and rather charming piece, while the Dance Suite is the Estonian equivalent of the Dances of Galánta. Splendid performances from both soloists in the Concertos and from the orchestra under Järvi throughout, and excellent recording.

Symphonies (i) 1 in C min.; 2 (The Legendary); 3 in D min.; (ii) 4 in A (Sinfonia lirica); (iii) 5 in B min.; (ii) 6; (iv) 7; (ii) 8; (iv) 9 (Sinfonia semplice); 10; (ii) Suite from the ballet, Kratt; (iv) Toccata for Orchestra

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * BIS CD 1402/06 (5). (i) Swedish RSO; (ii) Bergen PO; (iii) Bamberg SO; (iv) Gothenburg SO; Järvi

Neeme Järvi's survey of the Tubin Symphonies is here packaged shorn of some of its couplings and presented in an attractive and competitive format (five CDs for the price of three). These are marvellous works, rich in invention and with the real breadth of the symphonist about them. Anyone who is attuned to the symphonies of Sibelius or Prokofiev will find themselves at home in this world. The opening of the Second Symphony is magical: there are soft, luminous string chords that evoke a strong atmosphere of wide vistas and white summer nights, but the music soon gathers power and reveals a genuine feeling for proportion and of organic growth. If there is a Sibelian strength in the Second Symphony, the Sixth, written after Tubin had settled in Sweden, has obvious resonances of Prokofiev – even down to instrumentation – and yet Tubin's rhythmic vitality and melodic invention are quietly distinctive. The first two movements of the wartime Third Symphony are vintage Tubin, but the heroic finale approaches bombast. The Eighth is his masterpiece; its opening movement has a sense of vision and mystery, and the atmosphere stays with you. This is the darkest of the symphonies and the most intense in feeling, music of great substance. The first two movements of the wartime Third Symphony are vintage Tubin, but the heroic finale approaches bombast. The Eighth is his masterpiece; its opening movement has a sense of vision and mystery, and the atmosphere stays with you. This is the darkest of the symphonies and the most intense in feeling, music of great substance. The Fourth is a highly attractive piece, immediately accessible, the music well argued and expertly crafted. The opening has a Sibelian feel to it but, the closer one comes to it, the more individual it seems. The Ninth Symphony is in two movements: its mood is elegiac and a restrained melancholy permeates the slower sections. Its musical language is direct, tonal and, once one gets to grips with it, quite personal. If its spiritual world is clearly Nordic, the textures are transparent and luminous, and its argument unfolds naturally and cogently. The Fifth makes as good a starting point as any to investigate the Tubin canon. Written after he had settled in Sweden, it finds him at his most neoclassical; the music is finely paced and full of energy and invention. The Seventh is a marvellous work and it receives a concentrated and impressive reading. As always with Tubin, you are never in doubt that this is a real Symphony, which sets out purposefully and reaches its goal. The ideas could not be by anyone else and the music unfolds with a powerful logic and inevitability. The Tenth Symphony is a one-movement piece that begins with a sombre string idea, which is soon interrupted by a periodically recurring horn call – and which resonates in the mind long afterwards. The recordings are absolutely first class.

(i; iii) Ballade; Capricci 1 & 2; The Cock's Dance; Meditation; 3 Pieces; Prelude; (i) Sonata for Unaccompanied Violin; (i; iii) Violin Sonatas 1 & 2; Suite of Estonian Dance Tunes; Suite on Estonian Dances; (ii; iii) Viola Sonata; Viola Sonata (arr. of Alto Saxophone Sonata)

 BIS CD 541/542 (2). (i) Leibur; (ii) Vahle; (iii) Rumessen

Although the smaller pieces are finely wrought, Tubin seems to come into his own on a larger canvas. Particularly impressive are the Second Violin Sonata (In the Phrygian Mode), the visionary Second Piano Sonata, and the two sonatas for viola, one a transcription of the Alto Saxophone Sonata with its foretaste of the Sixth Symphony (1954) in which that instrument plays a prominent, almost soloistic role, and the later Viola Sonata (1965). Highly accomplished performances from Arvo Leibur and Petra Vahle, and exceptionally thorough documentation from the pianist Vardo Rumessen, with over 40 music-type examples. The recording is truthful, but the acoustic lends a shade too much resonance to the piano, which is often bottom-heavy.

Complete piano music: Album leaf; Ballad on a Theme by Maat Saar; 3 Estonian folk-dances; 4 Folksongs from my Country; A Little March for Rana; Lullaby; 3 Pieces for Children; Prelude 1; 7 Preludes; Sonatas 1-2; Sonatina in D min.; Suite on Estonian Shepherd Melodies; Variations on an Estonian folk-tune

 BIS CD 414/6. Rumessen

Tubin's first works for piano inhabit a world in which Scriabin, Ravel and Eller were clearly dominant influences but in which an individual sensibility is also to be discerned. The resourceful Variations on an Estonian folk-tune is a lovely work that deserves a place in the repertoire, as does the Sonatina in D minor, where the ideas and sense of momentum are on a larger scale than one would expect in a sonatina. The Second Sonata is a key work in Tubin's development. It opens with a shimmering figure in free rhythm, inspired by the play of the aurora borealis, and is much more concentrated than his earlier piano works. Vardo Rumessen makes an excellent case for it and it is impressive stuff. The performances are consistently fine, full of understanding and flair, and the recording is very natural.

OPERA

Barbara von Tisenhusen

 Ondine ODE776-2 (2). Raamat, Sild, Kuusk, Puurabar, Kollo, Estonian Op. Company & O, Lilje

Tubin's opera with its theme of illicit passion is not long, consisting of three acts of roughly 30 minutes each. It has pace and a variety of dramatic incident and musical textures, and the main roles in the action are vividly characterized. The musical substance of the opera is largely based on a chaconne-like figure of nine notes heard at the very outset, yet the theme changes subtly and skilfully to meet the constantly shifting dramatic environment so that the casual listener will probably not be consciously aware of the musical means Tubin is employing. All the singers are dedicated and serve the composer well and, though the orchestra is not first class, it too plays with spirit and enthusiasm under Peeter Lilje. The recording produces a sound comparable to that of a broadcast relay rather than the opulent sound one can expect from a commercial studio recording. A strong recommendation.

The Parson of Reigi; (i) Requiem for Fallen Soldiers

 Ondine ODE783-2 (2). Maiste, Eensalu, Tõnuri, Kuusk, Estonian Op. Company & O, Mägi; (i) Tauts; Deksnis, Leiten; Tiido, Roos, Estonian Nat. Male Ch., Klas

After the success of Barbara von Tisenhusen, the Estonian Opera immediately commissioned Tubin to compose The Parson of Reigi, and it, too, concerns an illicit relationship. Tubin's music powerfully evokes the claustrophobic milieu of a small, closely knit fishing community and is particularly successful in conveying atmosphere. The dawn scene, where the parson, Lampelius, blesses the departing fishermen, is particularly imaginative, as is the evocation of the white summer nights in the garden scene, where the heroine confesses her illicit passion. As in Barbara von Tisenhusen, Tubin's powers of characterization of both the major and supporting roles are striking, and there is a compelling sense of dramatic narrative as well as variety of pace. The performance of the three principal singers is very good – especially the parson, splendidly sung by the baritone Teo Maiste – and the only let-down is in the quality of the orchestral playing, which is little more than passable.

The coupled Requiem for Fallen Soldiers is generally to be preferred to the rival account on BIS coupled with the Tenth Symphony (see above). The Estonian singers produce better focused and darker tone than their Swedish colleagues, though the BIS recording has some amazingly lyrical playing by Håkan Hardenberger. The Estonian player, Urmas Leiten, is very eloquent too. Strongly recommended.

TURINA, Joaquin (1882–1949)

Danzas fantásticas, Op. 22; La Procesión del Rocio, Op. 9; Sinfonia sevillana, Op. 23

🔑 Ⓜ * Telarc CD 80574. Cincinnati SO, López-Cobos – DEBUSSY: Ibéria ***

As we have already discovered with his earlier Decca recording of the Danzas fantásticas, Jesús López-Cobos is at his finest in these alluring and exotically orchestrated pieces. The Cincinnati Orchestra play throughout with voluptuous brilliance and are especially exciting in the closing Orgía of the Danzas fantásticas. The recording is of Telarc's finest quality, a rich, glittering tapestry of sound.

(i) Danzas fantásticas; (ii) La Oración del Torero, Op. 34; La Procesión del Rocio, Op. 9; (i; iii) Rapsodia sinfonica; (i) Sinfonia Sevilla

Ⓝ (BB)  Regis RRC 1299. Bátiz with (i) LPO; (ii) Mexico City PO; (iii) Wibaut

The three LPO items were recorded in 1983 and originally released on HMV. The three Danzas fantásticas are understandably better known than the other two works included on the original LP. The Sinfonia is a programmatic triptych, with an attractive nocturnal slow movement, the scoring of the outer movements (as in the Danzas) is gaudy but effective. The Rapsodia is a pleasant if not especially memorable piece for piano and orchestra. Bátiz is a sympathetic exponent of this repertoire and, with the LPO, he brings out the Latin colours and atmosphere. Two further colourful pieces have been added to this bargain release, with the Mexico City Philharmonic, also conducted by Bátiz. They are similarly well played and well recorded. An undoubted bargain.

La oración del torero (version for string orchestra)

 Chan. 9288. I Musici di Montréal, Turovsky – SHCHEDRIN: Carmen ballet suite etc ***

The composer's string-orchestral version of the haunting Oración del torero is warmly and sensitively played and very well recorded here, and if the quartet version is even more subtle (see below) this makes an enjoyable foil for Shchedrin's brilliant arrangement of music from Bizet's Carmen.

Rapsodia sinfónica (arr. Halffter)

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 448 243-2. de Larrocha, LPO, Frühbeck de Burgos – ALBÉNIZ: Rapsodia española; RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez, etc ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2971. de Larrocha, LPO, Burgos – ALBÉNIZ: Rapsodia española; MONTSALVATGE: Concerto breve; SURINACH: Piano Concerto ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89223-2 Heisser, Lausanne CO, López-Cobos – ALBÉNIZ: Concierto fantástico; Rapsodia española; FALLA: Nights in the Gardens of Spain ***

Turina's Rapsodia sinfónica has been recorded by others, but in the hands of Alicia de Larrocha it is played with such éclat that it becomes memorable and thoroughly entertaining. This performance is also available on an Australian Decca reissue, coupled to rare concertos by other lesser-known composers.

The performance by Jean-François Heisser (with López-Cobos a brilliantly idiomatic partner) is also first class in every way, combining seductive poetic feeling, brilliant colouring and excitement. The digital recording is vividly balanced and the couplings are no less attractive.

CHAMBER MUSIC

La oración del torero

 HM HMI 987072. Casals Qt – RAVEL: String Quartet; TOLDRA: Viste al Mar ***

() Testament mono SBT 1053. Hollywood Qt – CRESTON: Quartet; DEBUSSY: Danses sacrée; RAVEL: Introduction & Allegro; VILLA-LOBOS: Quartet 6. ()

The idea of the bullfighter's prayer inspires Turina to a warmly lyrical piece which nicely complements the Ravel and Toldra works under the title Influencias. Well recorded by Spanish Harmonia Mundi.

It is difficult to imagine Turina's famous piece being played with greater expressive eloquence or more perfect ensemble than by the incomparable Hollywood Quartet, and it comes as part of a valuable and beautifully transferred anthology.

Piano Quartet in A min., Op. 67

 Black Box BBX 1048. Lyric Piano Qt – STRAUSS: Piano Quartet in C min., Op. 13 ***

Turina's Piano Quartet in A minor comes from 1931, and though it is not great music it is far from negligible. It is well played and recorded here, and the coupling is equally rare.

Contes d'espagne, Series I & II, Opp. 20 & 47; Silhouettes, Op. 70; Souvenirs de l'Ancienne Espagne, Op. 48

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570370 Jordi Masú

The two volumes of the Contes d'espagne established Turina's keyboard reputation. The first series (1918) offers seven impressionistic 'perceptions', but not picture postcards, of various areas in Spain, with themes that recur cyclically in each movement. The second series offers impressionistic vignettes, evocative but in no way pictorial. The Silhouettes are more tangibly evocative of famous landmarks including Segovia's Roman Aqueduct and the Lighthouse at Cádiz, while the Souvenirs recreate famous Spanish characters including Carmen (though not reflecting Bizet's opera) and Don Juan as drawn from José Zorrilla's play. Jordi Masú plays with a nice balance between virtuosity and an evocative colour palette, and he is well recorded.

TURNAGE, Mark-Anthony
(born 1960)

Blood on the Floor (DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 100 430. Ens. Modern, Rundel (Dir: Doris Götzl; V/D Dir: Barrie Gavin)

With Peter Rundel conducting a group of German musicians, Blood on the Floor is a powerful piece inspired by a painting of Francis Bacon. A complete performance is here introduced by a feature film. Characteristically the idiom is abrasive with a jazz element important, making it attractive despite the unpleasantness of the subject with its element of drug addiction. It would be hard to imagine a better performance, very well played and recorded.

CHAMBER MUSIC

An Invention on Solitude; Cortège for Chris; 2 Elegies Framing a Shout; 3 Farewells; 2 Memorials; Sleep On; True Life Stories: Tune for Toru

🔑 * Black Box BBM 1065. Nash Ens. (members)

Anyone coming new to Turnage could not do better than start here, for all this music is intensely expressive and instantly communicative. Its overriding character is thoughtful and contemplative, although An Invention of Solitude is the exception, for while inspired by the Brahms Clarinet Quintet, the writing, for the same combination, 'fluctuates between stillness and violence'. The Cortège for Chris (Christopher Van Kempen, the Nash Ensemble's cellist who died in 1998) features both cello and clarinet, as well as a ruminative piano, while the Two Memorials are commemorated with haunting soliloquizing from the solo saxophone.

The Three Farewells are strangely obsessive: each has a hidden text, the second, Music to Hear, for viola and muted cello, a Shakespeare sonnet. The finale, All will be well, was written as a wedding piece, and the composer observes ironically 'the marriage didn't last'. Not surprisingly, some of the most peaceful and serene writing comes in Sleep On, for cello and piano, a triptych framed by a lovely Berceuse, and a restful Lullaby. The solo saxophone returns for the first of the Two Elegies and after being exuberantly interrupted by the Shout – a spiky and restlessly energetic boogie – the piano (with the saxophone) 'searches for and finds repose'.

The reflective closing Tune for Toru (a gentle piano piece) was written in response to the death of the Japanese composer Toru Takemitsu and readily finds the stillness the composer was searching for in his Invention on Solitude. Superbly responsive performances throughout and vividly real recording, within an attractively spacious acoustic.

Greek (opera; complete; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 102 105. Hayes, Kimm, Suart, Charnock, Almeida Ens., Bernas (V/D: Dennis Marks)

Mark-Anthony Turnage's Greek, based on a libretto by Steven Berkoff, is an opera of violence, a retelling of the Oedipus myth. It is an abrasive piece but is nevertheless most approachable. This BBC production introduces the work as well as presenting the opera complete. It is a memorable work well worth investigating, very well performed and recorded.

TVEITT, Geirr (1908–81)

Piano Concertos (i) 1, Op. 1; (ii) 4 (Northern Lights), Op. 130; (iii) The Turtle

 BIS CD 1397. Stavanger SO, Ruud; with (i) Bjelland; (ii) Austbø; (iii) Kosmo

The First Piano Concerto, written in his early twenties, has a natural fluency and a certain Gallic charm. The opening of The Turtle, a setting of a passage from Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath, once again leaves no doubt as to the vividness of his orchestral imagination. Like our own Robert Simpson, Tveitt was a keen amateur astronomer, and the Fourth Concerto, inspired by the Aurora Borealis, shows his strong fascination with the heavens. It is imaginative if diffuse and wanting in concentration; but there are flashes of colour and inspiration that really reward investigation. Exceptionally wide-ranging recorded sound.

Piano Concertos 1 in F, Op. 1; 5, Op. 156.

BB  Naxos 8.555077. Gimse, RSNO, Engeset

Geirr Tveitt (pronounced with a soft 'G' and surname as in 'Tate') was obviously an accomplished pianist as, when he gave the first performance of the Fifth Piano Concerto in 1954 in Paris under Jean Martinon, he also played the B flat minor Concerto of Tchaikovsky and Brahms's D minor Concerto! Håvard Gimse is an artist of quality and well supported by the Royal Scottish National Orchestra under Bjarte Engeset.

Piano Concerto 4 (Aurora borealis), Op. 130; (i) Variations on a Folksong from Hardanger for 2 Pianos & Orchestra

BB  Naxos 8.555761. Gimse, RSNO, Engeset; with (i) Süssmann

Geirr Tveitt's Fourth Piano Concerto of 1947 is highly original and, as its subtitle suggests, evokes the extraordinary display and movement of the Northern Lights. It is superbly played by Håvard Gimse and the Scottish Orchestra under Bjarte Engeset. The Variations, in which Gimse is joined by Gunilla Süssmann, are also full of character and colour, even if they somewhat outstay their welcome. Strongly recommended.

A Hundred Hardanger Tunes, Op. 151: Suites 1, 1–15; 4 (Nuptials) 46–60.

(BB)  Naxos 8.555078. RSNO, Engeset

A Hundred Hardanger Tunes: Suites 2: 15 Mountain Songs (Nos. 16–30); 5: Troll Tunes (61–75)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555770. RSNO, Engeset

Try 'So stilt dei ror på glitre-fjord' (How silently they row on the glittering fjord), and you will understand why Tveitt enjoyed such an enviable reputation as an orchestrator. His sound world is highly original and imaginative, and unfailingly inventive. Each of these suites comprises fifteen numbers, which some may find too much of a good thing, and there is something to be said for making one's own shorter compilations. The Royal Scottish National Orchestra play with evident enthusiasm for Bjarte Engeset, who has collated the various different sources in preparing his edition. Nearly all these pieces are delightful and many are quite captivating. The second selection is every bit as imaginative and colourful as the earlier sets. Something of a find.

TYE, Christopher (c. 1505–c. 1572)

Complete instrumental music: Amavit a 5; Christus Resurgens a 5; Dum Transisset a 5 (4 versions); In Nomines a 4, a 5, a 6 (21 settings); Lawdes Deo a 5; Sit fast a 3

Ⓜ (*) Astrée ES 9939. Hespèrion XX, Savall

Tye's consort music is unjustly neglected. The present collection includes all of his surviving instrumental pieces. Virtually all the music is slow and expressive; many of the In nomine pieces have biblical allusions in their simple titles. The performances here make a very strong impression; the viol timbre unexpectedly full-bodied. Indeed, the playing of Hespèrion XX has been criticized for being too rich in timbre for the period. We have no quarrel with the sound, but would have liked greater dynamic contrast in the playing. Excellent recording.

Euge bone; Kyrie: Orbis factor; Motets: Miserere mei, Deus; Omnes gentes, plaudite minibus; Peccavimus cum patribus nostris; Quaesumus omnipotens Deus

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55079. Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill

Masses: Euge bone; Peterhouse; Western Wind

🔑 Ⓜ * ASV CDGAU 190 (2). Ely Cathedral Ch., Trepte

Christopher Tye spent most of his musical life in Cambridge and Ely and became master of the chorus and organist at Ely Cathedral in 1543; he retired to take holy orders in 1560 but remained living near Ely. So the soaring acoustics of Ely Cathedral and performances by its present-day choir could not be more apt for his three greatest Masses, of which the large-scale Euge bone is the most splendid. The passionate singing on ASV is fully worthy, the choral sound glorious. With a playing time of 83 minutes, the three works would not fit onto a single CD, but the two discs are offered for the price of one.

The performance from the splendid Winchester Cathedral Choir under David Hill is no less eloquent; the contrast between the Gloria, pressed on ardently, and the serene Sanctus is particularly telling. Moreover, the four accompanying motets are also very fine, especially the exuberant Omnes gentes (a setting of Psalm 46 from the Vulgate), and the extended and very beautiful supplication, Peccavimus cum patribus nostris, which soars up to the heavens. Fine atmospheric recording makes this bargain reissue particularly tempting.

VAET, Jacobus (c. 1529–1567)

Antevenis virides; Miss Ego flos campi.Ecce apparebit Dominus; Filiae Jerusalem; Magnificat octavi toni;.Miserere mei, Deus; Musica Dei donum; Spiritus Domini; Salve regina

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67733. Cinquecento (augmented) (with CLEMENS NON PAPA: Ego flos campi ***)

Jacobus Vaet is an unfamiliar name today but in the mid-1550s he had become Kapellmeister to the Archduke Maximilian, the nephew of the emperor, Charles V. His output was considerable (9 mass settings and 66 motets!) Jacob Clemens non Papa was the obvious influence on him and it is he who provides the motet on which the mass, Ego flos camip is built, immediately drawing its opening material. Vaet moves between six and four voices although the Agnus Dei is expanded to eight. His use of imitation flows pleasingly, yet his word-setting is often vivid and this applies also to the motets. The Magnificat also has plenty of variety in this respect, and the Salve regina is again imaginatively set. The performances by Cinquecento are very persuasive and beautifully recorded.

VAINBERG, Moishei (See also under Weinberg) (1919–96)

Violin Concerto

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557194. Grubert, Russian PO, Yablonsky – MIASKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ***

The Lithuanian violinist Ilya Grubert on Naxos couples Miaskovsky's glorious Concerto with the relatively little known Concerto of Mieczyslaw (or Moishei) Vainberg, composed in 1958 for Leonid Kogan. The concerto owes a lot to Shostakovich, but an individual voice can be discerned as one comes closer to it.

Sinfonietta 1, Op. 41; Symphony 5, Op. 76

 Chan. 10128. Polish Nat. RSO, Chmura

All the Symphonies we have heard betray a debt to Shostakovich, without being entirely overwhelmed by him. The Fifth is a long piece dating from 1962, and it holds the listener even when it doesn't wholly satisfy him or her. The slow movement is a little too long, given the quality of its ideas, but generally speaking the work has considerable power and eloquence. It has thoroughly committed players in Gabriel Chmura and his fine Polish Orchestra – and superb Chandos recording. The Sinfonietta 1 (1948) makes use of Jewish melodies, which Vainberg fashions in a style influenced by Bartók. Well worth investigating.

VALEN, Fartein (1887–1962)

An Die Hoffnung; Epithalamion; Nenia; Symphonies 2–3

(N)  BIS CD 1632. Stavanger SO, Eggen

Fartein Valen enjoyed cult status in the late 1940s but has rather disappeared from view in recent years. Brought up in Madagascar where his father was a missionary, Valen studied philology in Oslo, becoming the University librarian in the 1920s. A reclusive and isolated figure he was to become the first dodecaphonic composer in northern Europe.

The three non-symphonic works on this CD were all composed in the space of over a year and express the composer's interest in classical antiquity and in Rome, where he visited in 1922. These works are atmospheric, rather than descriptive tone poems and one enjoys the richness of the work's textures rather than any lively, descriptive writing. The Second Symphony's four movements each uses all twelve notes of the scale to make up its principle themes. It is a 'pure' music symphony, although the composer's biographer, Olav Gurvin, claims there to be a Christmas feeling in the first movement, which the present writer finds hard to detect. The rather ambiguous mood of the Second Symphony is also carried over to the Third, though that has a rather more dramatic third movement. None of this is particularly easy music, but the sound world is often quite haunting and the sincerity of the composer and the cogency of the musical argument is never in doubt. First class performances and recording, and helpful notes by the conductor are included.

(i) Piano Concerto, Op. 44. The Churchyard by the Sea; Ode to Solitude; The Silent Island; Symphony 4, Op. 43

(N)  BIS CD1642. Stavanger SO, Christian Eggen with (i) Smebye

Valen's elegiac Violin Concerto (not included here, but promised on a future disc) is a haunting and poignant work which, like Berg's, commemorates the death of a young person. However the evocative tone-poems which are recorded here are most impressive. They are quite unlike any other Norwegian music and have no touch of folk nationalism. The shortish (ten-minute) piano concerto is not so memorable as its companions, but like everything on this disc, it is well played and eminently well recorded. We look forward to further issues in this series.

VALLS, Francisco (1665–1747)

Missa Scala Aretina

(BB) (*) DHM 05472 77842-2. Piau, Van der Sluis, Lettinga, Elwes, Van der Kamp, Netherlands Bach Fest. Bar. O, Leonhardt – BIBER: Requiem in F min **(*)

Francisco Valls, another name to spring suddenly out of the past, was choirmaster at Barcelona Cathedral, and the Missa Scala Aretina (1702) is the only one of his ten Masses to have gained any kind of fame outside Spain. It is a powerfully expressive piece, not always with conventional harmony. It is laid out for four separate groups of performers, containing, respectively, the soloists, instrumentalists (including harp in the continuo) and two choral ensembles. Leonhardt delivers a committed spontaneous performance, but the choral singing does not convey the impression that the Netherlanders are thoroughly at home in the Spanish idiom nor is it ideally crisp in ensemble. Nevertheless, with rich recording, this is by no means unimpressive and it is certainly not dull.

VAŇHAL, Jan (1739–1813)

Violin Concertos in G, GI & GII; in B flat, Bb1

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557815. Nishizaki, Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

Naxos follows up its series of Vaňhal symphonies with this excellent disc of three of his 17 Violin Concertos. The most celebrated of these unpretentious works is the B flat Concerto, which Mozart is recorded as having played, alongside his own K.216. The writing involves little virtuosity, but it never flags in its easy energy, with opening movements relaxed rather than thrusting and lively music restricted to the finales. Takako Nishizaki gives a modern-instrument performance with fresh, clean intonation, very well accompanied by the Cologne Chamber Orchestra under Müller-Brühl. First-rate sound.

Symphonies in A, Bryan A9; in C, Bryan C3; in C, Bryan C11; in D, Bryan D17

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554341. Esterházy Sinfonia, Grodd

Symphonies in B flat, Bryan 3; in D min., Bryan d2; in G, Bryan G11

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554138. City of L. Sinfonia, Watkinson

Among the many new discs of forgotten music by Mozart's contemporaries this Naxos issue stands out. These compact Symphonies are all winningly colourful and inventive, often bringing surprises that defy the conventions of the time. The Esterházy Sinfonia under Uwe Grodd give attractively lively performances with some stylish solo work, vividly recorded.

The B flat Symphony (from the early 1760s) reminds the listener of both Haydn and Mozart. The D minor Symphony in only three movements, written a decade later, is scored for five horns, yet the main string theme of the first movement is quite haunting. The G major work (1775) also has an endearingly gracious first movement, although horns are still prominent in the scoring. Excellent, polished performances from the City of London Sinfonia under Andrew Watkinson and very good recording.

Symphonies in C min., Bryan Cm2; in D, Bryan D4; in G min., Bryan Gm2

🔑 * Chan. 9607. LMP, Bamert

The G minor Symphony, the second of Vaňhal's symphonies in that key, is an absolute delight, full of good ideas and comparable with the Sturm und Drang of Haydn's 39 or Mozart's 25 in the same key. The C minor Symphony (1770) is also a work of originality with an occasional foreshadowing of Beethoven. Matthias Bamert and the London Mozart Players give an excellent account of themselves, and are recorded with great clarity and warmth.

Missa pastoralis in G; Missa solemnis in C

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.555080. Haines, Ainsworth, Pitkanen, Tower Voices, New Zealand Arcadia Ens., Grodd

Vaňhal's Pastoral Mass has a delightfully lyrical cantabile feeling, which gives the music a warmth and Arcadian simplicity that is very beguiling. Not all the solo contributions are absolutely secure, especially when two female voices are combined, but the choral response is very persuasive and the result is most rewarding. The Missa solemnis is rather more conventional, but Vaňhal's setting is still richly enjoyable with the Bendictus and Agnus Dei particularly lovely. And he always makes the most of his 'Amens'. The spacious recording adds to one's enjoyment, and any minor reservations are swept aside when the disc is so inexpensive.

VARÈSE, Edgar (1883–1965)

Tuning Up; Amériques (original version); Arcana; Dance for Burgesses; (i) Density 21.5; Déserts; (ii) Ecuatorial; (iii; iv) Un grand sommeil noir (original version); (iii) Un grand sommeil noir (orch. Beaumont); Hyperprism; Intégrales; Ionisation; (v; vi) Nocturnal; Octandre; (v) Offrandes; Poème électronique

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca 460 208-2 (2) Concg. O or ASKO Ens., Chailly; with (i) Zoon; (ii) Deas; (iii; iv) Delunsch; (iv) Kardoncuff; (v) Leonard; (vi) Prague Philharmonic Male Ch.

This comprehensive coverage of the music of Varèse was given the 1999 Gramophone Award for 20th-Century Music. He first came to public notice in the 1930s when Percy Scholes chose him to represent the last word in zany modernity in his 'Columbia History of Music', but his mockery backfired. Octandre (one movement then recorded) sounds as quirkily original now as it did then (it is played marvellously here). The witty opening Tuning Up sets the mood for writing which is ever ready to take its own course regardless of tradition and set new musical paths. Amériques, which follows, is heard in its original (1921) version, lavishly scored, with reminiscences of music by others, not least the Stravinsky of The Rite of Spring. It makes fascinating listening. Ionisation, less ear-catching, stands as a historic pointer towards developments in percussion writing. Poème électronique originated at the 1958 Brussels World Fair, where it was played through more than 400 loudspeakers inside the Philips pavilion. The montage of familiar and electronic sounds (machine noises, sonorous bells, etc.) comes from the composer's own original four-track tape. The vocal pieces are among the most fascinating aurally, not least Ecuatorial, a setting in Spanish with bass soloist of a Maya prayer, brightly coloured and sharp with brass, percussion, organ, piano and ondes martenot. Un Grand Sommeil noir is a rare surviving early song, lyrically Ravelian in feeling, heard here in both the original version with piano, and in an orchestration by Antony Beaumont. Nocturnal, Varèse's haunting last piece, was left unfinished. Completed by Professor Chou, it is as extravagant and uninhibited as ever, featuring male chorus and a solo soprano voice, used melodically to evoke a mysterious dream-world. All the performances here are superbly definitive and this set will be hard to surpass. The recording acoustic, too, is open, yet everything is clear.

Tuning Up; Amériques (original version); Dance for Burgess; Density; Ecuatorial; Un grand Sommeil noir; Hyperism; Ionisation

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Naxos 8.557882 Watts, Gruchowska, Bloch, Camerata Silesia Men's Voices, Polish Nat. RSO, Lydon-Gee (piano & conductor)

Amériques (revised version); Arcana; (i) Densité; Déserts; Hyperprism; Intégrales; Ionisation; Octandre; (ii) Ecuatorial; (iii; iv) Nocturnal; (iii) Offrandes

🔑 Ⓑ  Warner Apex 2564 62087-2. O de France, Nagano; with (i) Philippe Pierlot; (ii) Isherwood; (iii) Bryn-Julson; (iv) Male Ch. of R. France

Anyone wanting an inexpensive voyage through Varèse's extraordinary sound-world can turn to Nagano and his team on Apex. The Erato recording is both strikingly vivid and atmospheric. The Stravinsky associations (and in one instance a virtual quotation) in Arcana and Amériques come over dramatically and with plenty of vitality. The latter gains from its revision: more concise and orchestrally hardly less luscious. Ionisation (for percussion) is surprisingly listener-friendly, and Octandre even has an element of wit. Both soloists are excellent, Nicholas Isherwood in Ecuatorial, with its weirdly exotic jungle background including two ondes martenot and organ, all but out-Loboses Villa-Lobos, and Phyllis Bryn-Julson is engagingly refined, especially in Offrandes; while the choral contribution to Nocturnal is quite extraordinary. Déserts ends the programme even more spectacularly. What Nagano achieves here (helped by the excellent performances and often sensational sound) is to make this music seem just as audaciously new and uncompromisingly avant garde as when it first astonished the musical public. And no one could say, when it is presented so vitally and spontaneously, that it is not stimulating – though not heard all at once!

The Naxos performances (and recording) are also vividly full of life and the recording has striking clarity and presence. Although the offering is not as generous as the Warner Apex collection it remains very enticing, if for bargain-hunters Nagano's disc is an obvious first choice.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Ralph (1872–1958)

The Life of Vaughan Williams: 'O Thou Transcendent'

✿ * Isolde Films DVD TPDVD 106. Ursula Vaughan Williams, Kennedy (Dir: Tony Palmer)

Even among Tony Palmer's many documentaries of musicians, this study of Vaughan Williams, lasting some two and a half hours, gives the most illuminating picture of the composer and his music, with an astonishing line-up of contributors, led by the composer's widow and his biographer, Michael Kennedy. The whole film brings home what an astonishingly wide range the composer's music covered, starting with the English pastoral style; then, after the composer's traumatic experience in the First World War, his style grew much tougher and abrasive. The revelations are many, as for example that Ursula Vaughan Williams had an abortion in the 1930s, before VW's first wife died, and that the American composer, John Adams, was profoundly influenced by the Tallis Fantasia, the very first orchestral music he heard live as a child. The result is both moving and beautiful, fulfilling in every way, demonstrating what a passionate personality VW was.

(i) Concerto accademico; Fantasia on Greensleeves; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; 2 Hymn-Tune Preludes; (i) The Lark Ascending; (ii) Oboe Concerto; Old King Cole (ballet); The Poisoned Kiss: Overture; 49th Parallel: Prelude; Prelude on an Old Carol Tune; 2 Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes; The Running Set; Sea Songs: Quick march. Serenade to Music (orchestral version); (ii) 5 Mystical Songs

Ⓑ  EMI 5 73986-2 (2). (i) Creswick; (ii) Wingfield; (iii) Roberts; E. N. Sinfonia, Hickox

This disc comprises the bulk of three LPs Richard Hickox made in the mid-1980s. It includes some rarities and occasional pieces written for particular events or projects, such as the Prelude to the film, 49th Parallel. The ballet music for Old King Cole is lively and full of charm, as is the tuneful overture to the sadly neglected opera, The Poisoned Kiss. Bradley Creswick's account of the Concerto accademico is one of the finest available, with the complex mood of the Adagio, both ethereal and ecstatic, caught on the wing, and he seems equally at home in The Lark Ascending. Roger Wingfield is hardly less engaging in the Oboe Concerto, his timbre full of pastoral colour, while he displays a deliciously light touch in the finale. Greensleeves is taken spaciously, but Hickox brings out the breadth as well as the lyrical beauty of the melody. Dives and Lazarus, rich in sonority, and the two Hymn-Tune Preludes have their elegiac mood judged perfectly. The Five Mystical Songs are sensitively done, though Stephen Roberts displays a rather gritty vibrato. All in all, an excellent bargain collection, very well recorded. The Serenade to Music, however, loses a dimension in its orchestral version.

(i) Concerto accademico for Violin; Concerto grosso for Strings; (ii) Oboe Concerto; (iii) Piano Concerto in C; (iv) Tuba Concerto. 2 Hymn-Tune Preludes; (v) The Lark Ascending; Partita for Double String Orchestra; (vi) Towards the Unknown Region

 Chan. 9262/3. (i) Sillito; (ii) Theodore; (iii) Shelley; (iv) Harrild; (v) M. Davis; (vi) L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Thomson

With immaculate LSO string ensemble, the Concerto grosso under Thomson's persuasive direction shows how in glowing sound its easy, unforced inspiration brings it close to the world of the Tallis Fantasia. While many performances of the Concerto accademico make the composer's neoclassical manner sound like Stravinsky with an English accent, Thomson and Sillito find a rustic jollity in the outer movements very characteristic of Vaughan Williams. David Theodore's plangent tones in the Oboe Concerto effectively bring out the equivocal character of this highly original work, making it far more than just another pastoral piece. Howard Shelley addresses the neglected Piano Concerto with flair and brilliance, making light of the disconcerting cragginess of the piano writing and consistently bringing out both the wit and the underlying emotional power. The bluff good humour of the Tuba Concerto is beautifully caught in Patrick Harrild's rumbustious account, and this outstanding tuba soloist plays with wit and panache. Michael Davis makes a rich-toned soloist in The Lark Ascending, presenting it as more than a pastoral evocation. The Hymn-Tune Preludes are unashamedly pastoral in tone; then the Partita finds the composer in more abrasive mood, less easily sympathetic. Towards the Unknown Region is the only relative disappointment – a setting of Whitman that antedates the Sea Symphony. The choral sound is beautiful, but this early work really needs tauter treatment.

(i) Concerto grosso for Strings; (i; ii) Oboe Concerto; (i) English Folksongs Suite (trans. Gordon Jacob); Fantasia on Greensleeves (arr. GREAVES); (iii) Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; (i; iv) The Lark Ascending; (iii) 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; In the Fen Country; Norfolk Rhapsody 1; (v) Partita for Double String Orchestra; (i; vi) Romance for Harmonica, Strings & Piano

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca ADD/DDD 460 357-2 (2). (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) Nicklin; (iii) New Queen's Hall O, Wordsworth; (iv) Brown; (v) LPO, Boult; (vi) Reilly

This Double Decca offers a fascinating comparison in that the first disc brings modern-instrument recordings (from Marriner and his Academy) and the second a special kind of period-instrument performance, although it is Boult and the LPO who give us the Partita. With the ASMF, Celia Nicklin gives a most persuasive account of the elusive Oboe Concerto, while the Concerto grosso is lively and polished. The atmospheric Romance, although not one of the composer's most inspired works, is still worth having, and the Folksongs could hardly be presented more breezily; The Lark Ascending is superbly balanced and refined, with Iona Brown an inspirational soloist. The performances on the second disc are given by the re-formed New Queen's Hall Orchestra playing instruments in use at the turn of the century. Portamento is featured in the string style but here it is applied very judiciously, and for the most part the ear notices the fuller, warmer sonority of the violins, the treble less brilliant in attack. In works like the Tallis Fantasia and Dives and Lazarus one can readily wallow in the richly refined textures, but Wordsworth's performance of Tallis misses the final degree of intensity at the climax, and the opening of Dives and Lazarus is also rather relaxed, even indulgent in relishing the sheer breadth of sonority achieved, though the closing pages are ethereally lovely. The performers are at their finest in the evocative opening of the Norfolk Rhapsody, while In the Fen Country has a fine idyllic ardour, with some very sensitive playing from wind and brass in the coda. The Wordsworth recording, made in Walthamstow Assembly Hall, is splendidly expansive and natural.

Concerto grosso; English Folksongs Suite; Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; Fantasia on Greensleeves; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; In the Fen Country; Norfolk Rhapsody 1 in E min.; (i) Romance for Harmonica & Strings; Variations for Orchestra (orch. Jacob); The Wasps: Overture (with English folk songs arrangements: The British Grenadiers; Early one morning; I will give my love an apple; John Peel; The jolly miller; The keeper; The oak and the ash; Summer is a'coming; The turtle dove)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 442 8341 (2). ASMF, Marriner; (i) with Reilly

This two-CD compilation combines Marriner's digital 1995 Vaughan Williams collection with his vintage Argo ones from the 1970s. The former offers a bright and brisk account of the Wasps Overture and the rare Variations, written as a brass test-piece in 1957 and skilfully orchestrated by Gordon Jacob. It is not a masterpiece but is well worth having on disc. The Tallis is beautifully played, though it lacks the last degree of ethereal beauty. Marriner makes up for this with the climax of Dives and Lazarus, which is really expansive, and he and the ASMF are at their finest in the gentle, evocative opening and closing sections of the First Norfolk Rhapsody. In the Fen Country brings more fine playing, and the digital recording is good rather than outstanding. The rest of the items are classic accounts in every way. Highlights include the breezy performance of the delightful English Folksongs Suite and the lively and polished Concerto grosso. The Vaughan Williams items are almost upstaged by the outstanding 30-minute collection of folk-songs arrangements by Leslie Pearson and Chris Hazell. These very enjoyable folk tunes, from the rousing British Grenadiers to the haunting melody of The oak and the ash, have been superbly orchestrated, full of apposite and piquant colour, very well played and recorded in the best Decca/Argo tradition.

Concerto grosso; Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; In the Fen Country; Norfolk Rhapsody 1

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555867. New Zealand SO, Judd

A sequence of recordings by this orchestra has demonstrated what a fine body it has become, and there are outstanding solo contributions from the leading string-players in the Tallis Fantasia. The folk-based writing of the Norfolk Rhapsody and the impressionistic study In the Fen Country are given a satisfying firmness of purpose, with climaxes surging passionately. The Greensleeves Fantasia is treated with a degree of reserve, avoiding all sentimentality, and although the Concerto grosso, with its contrasted groups of players is a degree less polished in ensemble, the warmth and impulsiveness make ample amends, helped by the full-bodied sound.

(i; ii) Concerto grosso; (iii; iv) Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; (i; ii; v) The Lark Ascending; (i; ii) Partita; (vi; iv) Romance in D flat; (i; ii; vii; viii) Dona nobis pacem; (i; ii; vii; ix) Fantasia on the Old 104th Psalm Tune; (x) Magnificat; (i; ii; vii; viii) Towards the Unknown Region

Ⓑ (*) EMI mono/stereo 5 74782-2 (2). (i) LPO; (ii) Boult; (iii) Philh. O; (iv) Sargent; (v) with Pougnet; (vi) Adler, Gritton, BBC SO; (vii) LPO Ch.; (viii) Armstrong, Carol Case; (ix) Katin; (x) Watts, Amb. S., O Nova of London, Davies

This self-recommending Vaughan Williams anthology includes some unexpected items, notably the atmospheric Romance, beautifully performed by Larry Adler, its dedicatee, in 1952. Boult's affinity with this composer is well known, and it is good to hear again just how well he presents the powerful and sustained climax in the Dona nobis pacem. As for the Fantasia on the Old 104th (for piano, chorus and orchestra) – far from the composer's greatest work – Boult's team (with Peter Katin as the pianist) makes it sound better than it really is. The Partita and Concerto grosso are beautifully done, and Towards the Unknown Region is similarly impressive. The Lark Ascending is the only Boult item not dating from the 1970s: it was recorded (in mono) with Jean Pougnet as the soloist in 1952 and made its CD début here. It's a good performance, though some allowances have to be made for the sound. Also, it was a pity that Boult's 1970s version of the Tallis Fantasia was not chosen; Sargent doesn't quite produce the spiritual quality this work ideally needs, despite the beautiful playing and good 1959 sound. The Holstian Magnificat is performed with sympathy and imagination by Meredith Davies's team, and the 1970 recording has transferred well. This set is well worth considering, even though no texts are offered.

(i; ii) Oboe Concerto; (i; iii) Tuba Concerto; (iv) Fantasia on Greensleeves; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; Sinfonia Antartica (No. 7); The Wasps: Overture

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 66543-2 (2). (i) LSO; with (ii) Rothwell; (iii) Catelinet; (iv) Hallé O, Barbirolli – ELGAR: Cockaigne; Introduction & Allegro; Serenade ()

Vividly transferred, this double-disc collection brings together Barbirolli's superb readings of Vaughan Williams and Elgar from the early 1950s. Strong and warmly expressive, these performances reflect the quality of the Hallé in the early 1950s, with the LSO equally responsive in the Concertos. Central to the collection is the première recording of the Sinfonia Antartica, made only five months after Barbirolli had conducted the first performance in January 1953. The thrust and power have never been surpassed, and the clear, immediate recording brings out the originality of the orchestration. Evelyn Rothwell, Lady Barbirolli, plays the Oboe Concerto with heartfelt warmth and understanding, while the Tuba Concerto is superbly characterized, bluff in the outer movements, tender in the slow movement. With the coupled Elgar items, an outstanding reissue.

'Portrait of Vaughan Williams': (i–iii) Oboe Concerto; (i; ii) Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; (i; ii; iv) The Lark Ascending; (i; ii) The Wasps Overture; (v; vi) Phantasy Quintet; (v) String Quartets 1–2; (vii; viii; i) Flos campi; (vii) Mass in G min.; (vii; i) O, clap your hands; The Old Hundredth Psalm Tune; (viii; i; ix) An Oxford Elegy; (vii) 3 Shakespeare Songs. Sacred and secular songs: Blessed Son of God; Lord, Thou hast been our refuge; No sad thought his soul affright; O taste and see; Valiant for truth; (vii; i) Te Deum

🔑 (BB) * Nim. NI 1754 (4). (i) English String O; (ii) Boughton; (iii) with Bourge; (iv) with Bochman; (v) Medici Qt; (vi) with Rowland-Jones; (vii) Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford, Darlington; (viii) with Best; (ix) with May (narrator)

This super-budget Nimbus boxed set offers a wonderfully illuminating cross-section of Vaughan Williams's music, showing its consistent inspiration, and both its diversity and its linkages. The orchestral and concertante music included here is all very familiar, but is most sympathetically played under William Boughton (with sensitive soloists) and presented amply and atmospherically, and with a rich amplitude of string tone. The chamber music shows a more intimate side of the composer: the special atmosphere of these works, with moments of haunting delicacy, is warmly and idiomatically caught, but with no lack of concentration and intensity. The Medici players were recorded in The Maltings, which means a sympathetic ambience, but also that the microphones are rather close. The glorious sonorities of the unaccompanied Mass in G minor, with its double choir and four soloists, draw an immediate vocal parallel with the Tallis Fantasia. The Mass opens with a Kyrie which looks back to the Elizabethan era and beyond, and then blossoms polyphonically in the Gloria and swaying Sanctus before the beautiful closing Agnus Dei. The Oxford Elegy brings more fine music, but the narrative, confidently and clearly delivered here by Jack May, remains as intrusive as ever (its inclusion was not one of the composer's best ideas). With Roger Best a fine viola soloist, Flos campi is particularly successful, as are the Te Deum and the shorter unaccompanied choral songs, especially the three imaginative Shakespeare settings. All in all this is a cornucopia of musical joys, worth getting, even if you already have recordings of the better-known orchestral pieces.

(i) Oboe Concerto; Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; (ii) The Lark Ascending; The Wasps: Overture

🔑 Ⓜ  Nim. NI 7013. (i) Bourgue; (ii) Bochmann; E. String O or SO, Boughton

Opening with an exuberant account of The Wasps Overture, this is a very attractive and generous 70-minute collection of favourite Vaughan Williams orchestral pieces, taken from the anthology above.

(i; ii; iii) Oboe Concerto; (ii; iv) Fantasia on a theme by Thomas Tallis; Symphonies: (v; iii) 4 in F min.; (v; vi) 5 in D; (ii; iii) 6 in E min; (ii; iv) The Wasps Overture

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI ADD/DDD 2 16146-2 (2). (i) Williams; (ii) Bournemouth SO; (iii) Berglund; (iv) Silvestri; (v) RPO; (vi) Gibson

This anthology draws on the HMV back catalogue with recordings of varying interest dating from between 1967 and 1982. The delightful Oboe Concerto is beautifully played by the principal oboist of the Bournemouth Orchestra. Silvestri then gives a brilliant reading of the Tallis Fantasia, less expansive than some, but bringing remarkable tension to the opening and closing pages. The central climax of the work is tremendously passionate, in a tighter more direct way than with Barbirolli. His account of The Wasps Overture also makes the most of the brio, with crisp, fast tempi and the expansiveness of the great tune in the middle not allowed to interfere with the forward momentum. In both works the vivacity of the playing and the vivid recording adds to the listener's enjoyment. Berglund directs a rugged, purposeful account of the Fourth Symphony, following the composer in preferring an unusually fast speed in the first movement, while the second is superbly sustained at a very slow tempo. He then brings out the Sibelian undertones in the Sixth Symphony in a strong, direct performance, very well recorded, and with the long unrelieved pianissimo finale sustaining a hushed concentration to hold the listener in its spell. Gibson's account of the beautiful Fifth Symphony is attractively flowing and direct, but other versions get closer to the heart of the music with more refinement and more power at climaxes.

Piano Concerto in C

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 211 [id.]. Shelley, RPO, Handley – FOULDS: Dynamic Triptych ***

🔑 Ⓑ  CFP 575 9832. Lane, RLPO, Handley – DELIUS: Piano Concerto; FINZI: Eclogue ***

This Lyrita version was the first recording of the Concerto in solo form, not quite as originally written, because the definitive score, published not too long before this record was made and giving the alternatives of one or two pianos, opts for ending with a serene coda instead of the original brief dispatching coda of ten bars. That is certainly an improvement, and the wonder is that, though the solo piano writing is hardly pianistic, the very challenge to as fine an exponent as Howard Shelley brings out an extra intensity to a highly individual work. Since this record was made, Shelley has re-recorded the piece digitally for Chandos (see below), but that is coupled with the Ninth Symphony, and many may find the stimulating Foulds coupling on Lyrita even more enticing. The 1984 recording is very impressive in its remastered form.

Piers Lane defies the old idea of this as a grittily unpianistic work, giving it a powerful, refreshing reading, helped by fine playing from the RLPO under Handley, always a sympathetic Vaughan Williams interpreter, while the apt and unusual coupling can be warmly recommended.

(i) Piano Concerto; Symphony 9 in E min.

 Chan. 8941. (i) Shelley, LPO, Thomson

In his Chandos version Howard Shelley addresses the concerto with flair and brilliance. He makes light of the disconcerting cragginess of the piano writing and consistently brings out both the wit and the underlying emotional power. Bryden Thomson conducts a powerful performance of the last of Vaughan Williams's symphonies. Though the playing may not be ideally incisive, it brings out an extra warmth of expression. Both performances are greatly helped by the richness and weight of the Chandos sound, warmly atmospheric but with ample detail and fine presence.

'Essential Vaughan Williams': English Folk Songs Suite (orch. Jacob); Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; Five Variants of Dives & Lazarus; The Lark Ascending; Rhosymedre; The Wasps Overture; Serenade to Music. Excerpts from: Hodie; Job; Sinfonia antartica; Mass in G min.; On Wenlock Edge. Songs include: The Call; The Lamb; Linden Lea; Orpheus with his lute; Silent Noon; The Vagabond. Hymns & Folk Song Arrangements. The Old Hundredth

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI 2 07992-2 (2). Artists include: LSO or LPO, Boult; L. Sinf., Barbirolli; Jacques O, Willcocks; Bean(vln), New Philh., Boult; ASMF, Marriner; King's College Cambridge Ch., Cleobury; Shirley-Quirk; Janet Baker; Ian Bostridge; Ian Partridge; Rolfe Johnson; David Daniels

While much is omitted, including the symphonies, many favourites are here from The Lark Ascending and Barbirolli's Tallis Fantasia, to Janet Baker's Linden Lea and The Old Hundredth from King's College. All-in-all a superb collection, even if duplication is involved.

English Folksongs Suite; Flourish for Wind Band; Toccata marziale

 Chan. 9697. Royal N. College of Music Wind O, Reynish – HOLST: Hammersmith, etc. ***

Vaughan Williams's music for wind band is less inspired than that of Holst, but the jaunty English Folksongs Suite certainly sounds more vivid in its original scoring than it does in the orchestral version. It could hardly be played more breezily than it is here, and the other two pieces also come off splendidly. Demonstration sound.

Fantasia on Greensleeves; (i) Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67240-2. Sinfonia of L.; (i) with Allegri Qt; Barbirolli – ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro for Strings, etc. **** ✿

(i) Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis; (ii) The Lark Ascending

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61763-2 (2). (i) LCO, Warren-Green; (ii) with Warren-Green (violin) – DVOŘÁK: Serenade for Strings; ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro; Serenade; SUK: Serenade; TCHAIKOVSKY: Serenade ***

🔑 Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 62645. (i) Phd. O, Ormandy; (ii) Druian, Cleveland Sinf., Lane – DELIUS: Brigg Fair, etc. ***

Barbirolli's inspirational performance of the Tallis Fantasia now rightly takes its place among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. His ardour combined with the magically quiet playing of the second orchestra is unforgettable. The recording has magnificent definition and sonority, achieving dramatic contrasts between the main orchestra and the distanced solo group, which sounds wonderfully ethereal.

Christopher Warren-Green and his London Chamber Orchestra give a radiant account of The Lark Ascending, in which Warren-Green makes a charismatic solo contribution, very free and soaring in its flight and with beautifully sustained true pianissimo playing at the opening and close. For the Tallis Fantasia, the second orchestra (2.2.2.2.1) contrasts with the main group (5.4.2.2.1) and here, though the effect is beautifully serene, Warren-Green does not quite match the ethereal, otherworldly pianissimo that made Barbirolli's reading unforgettable. The performance overall has great ardour and breadth, almost to match the coupled Introduction and Allegro of Elgar in its intensity. The recording, made at All Saints' Church, Petersham, has resonant warmth and atmosphere yet sharp definition.

The excellent performances from 1963 on Sony demonstrate the special feeling American musicians can find for English music. In the Tallis Fantasia Ormandy (like Barbirolli) characteristically underlines the drama of a work that is often regarded as delicate and atmospheric. The recording of The Lark Ascending was made during the period when Louis Lane was a colleague of George Szell at Cleveland and the orchestra was at the peak of its form. Rafael Druian is the intensely poetic violin soloist, producing the most delicate sustained pianissimos, even though the balance is close. The orchestral playing is both polished and characterful. The CD transfers have expanded the original sound most strikingly. With expressive Delius performances as coupling, this is one of the most desirable of Sony's 'Essential Classics'.

(i) Fantasia on Greensleeves; (ii) Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants on Dives and Lazarus; In the Fen Country; (i; iii) The Lark Ascending; (ii) Norfolk Rhapsody 1

 Chan. 9775. (i) LSO; (ii) LPO; Thomson; (iii) with M. Davis

It is good to have In the Fen Country and the First Norfolk Rhapsody in such beautiful modern digital sound and played so sympathetically. Indeed, Bryden Thomson is a most persuasive guide in all this repertoire, although in the Tallis Fantasia he is rather more concerned with sonority, beauty and contrasts of texture than with subtlety. Michael Davis makes a rich-toned soloist in The Lark Ascending, presenting it as more than a gentle pastoral invocation. Although these recordings are now nearly a decade old, the generous measure (79 minutes) almost compensates for the continued premium price.

Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; The Wasps: Overture

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 3 82157-2. LSO, Previn (with BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow) – ELGAR: Enigma Variations ***

Coupled with Elgar's most popular orchestral work, Previn's performances of the Tallis Fantasia and the Wasps Overture are warmly persuasive. The wasps' music buzzes with point and energy, while the Tallis Fantasia, after a restrained opening, builds up finally with great conviction into a blazing climax, with no inhibition over stringendo. Warm, opulent recording to match.

Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ () EMI mono 4 76880-2. Philh. O, Karajan (with HANDEL (arr. Harty): Water Music Suite) – BRITTEN: Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge *** ✿

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61437-2. RPO, Warren-Green – BRITTEN: Simple Symphony; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow; ELGAR: String Serenade; HOLST: St Paul's Suite ***

*() BBCL (ADD) 4205-2. New Philh. O, Stokowski (with: KLEMPERER: Merry Waltz; NOVÁČEK: Perpetuum mobile (*())) – BRAHMS: Symphony 4 ; RAVEL: Rapsodie espagnole *()

Karajan's version of the Tallis Fantasia, coupled with Britten's Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge, is one of his greatest records, sounding as fresh and sonorous today as it did in the 1950s, when it first appeared. Sonically it is little short of amazing, and artistically it is no less impressive. The playing of the Philharmonia strings for Karajan is altogether superlative, and the Tallis Fantasia sounds both idiomatic and vivid, rather like a newly cleaned painting. Recordings of this work are legion, and stereo undoubtedly brings an added dimension, but this mono version ranks among the best. The Water Music is an unexpected but welcome bonus, also superbly played.

Christopher Warren-Green's rich-textured RPO performance is even finer than his earlier, Virgin version in creating the necessary dynamic contrast between the opposing string goups, with the tension in pianissimos raptly sustained and climaxes richly expansive. This is part of an outstanding anthology of English music, all excellently played and recorded.

On the BBC disc a wonderfully warm account of the Tallis Fantasia from a live Royal Albert Hall performance in 1974. The New Philharmonia strings ooze Stokowski magic and this account is compelling and highly distinctive in every way: the pianissimos are simply ravishing!

Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; In the Fen Country; Norfolk Rhapsody

 Chan. 8502. LPO, Thomson

Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; In the Fen Country; (i) The Lark Ascending; Norfolk Rhapsody 1; (ii) On Wenlock Edge

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 85151-2. LPO, Haitink; with (i) Chang; (ii) Bostridge

Bryden Thomson is a most persuasive guide in all this repertoire and more than holds his own with most of the opposition.

Haitink's way with the Tallis Fantasia, where the straight rhythmic manners sound somewhat unidiomatic, is certainly powerful in its monumental directness, especially with the wide-ranging recording. In the Norfolk Rhapsody there is also a direct quality which is certainly appealing, especially with the beautiful playing of the LPO; the same comments apply to In the Fen Country. Sarah Chang proves an intensely poetic soloist in The Lark Ascending magnetically concentrated throughout. Ian Bostridge is the sensitive, honey-toned soloist in the Housman song-cycle, On Wenlock Edge, which ends this disc.

Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; Symphony 5 in D; (i) Serenade to Music

🔑 * Telarc CD 80676. Atlanta SO, Spano; (i) with Rivera, O'Connor, Studebaker, Ford, Atlanta Chamber Ch. – TALLIS: Psalm Tune: Why fum'th in fight?

Tallis's hauntingly simple psalm tune makes a perfect prelude to create the atmosphere for a very fine performance of the Vaughan Williams work, in which the playing of the second, smaller string group is memorably ethereal, and beautifully balanced and recorded. Then follows a superb account of the D major Symphony, passionate and moving, with the opening and closing horn motive particularly evocative. As if that was not enough, the performance of the Serenade to Music, in the composer's alternative version for four soloists and choir, is equally understanding, with Jessica Rivera a fine, ardent soprano soloist leading the team spiritedly as well as lyrically. Throughout, the recording is of Telarc's demonstration quality. Altogether a splendid disc, and a great credit to the conductor Robert Spano, readily showing that American performers can find a real identification with the music of Vaughan Williams.

Film Music: Coastal Command (suite); Elizabeth of England: Three Portraits; 49th Parallel: Prelude; The Story of a Flemish Farm (suite)

(*) Marco 8.223665. RTE Concert O, Dublin, Penny

Vaughan Williams's wartime film music was of the highest quality. The Powell/Pressburger movie 49th Parallel (1941), made in the early years of the war, inspired a Prelude with a nostalgic patriotic feeling. Coastal Command (1942) was a dramatized documentary which centred on the romantic profiles of the Catalina flying-boats, resulting in warmly evocative music, with echoes from the composer's symphonic writing. The even more imaginative (1943) score for The Story of a Flemish Farm (a true story about personal sacrifice which enabled a wartime escape to England) brings similar resonances. Elizabeth of England (1955–7), another documentary, narrated by Alec Clunes, has a haunting Poet sequence which introduces a magically gentle tune, also used in the Sea Symphony. Andrew Penny is a splendid advocate in performances eloquent in their mood-painting. The recording is bright and full, if rather two-dimensional.

Film Music: Coastal Command; The People's Land; Scott of the Antarctic

 Chan. 10007. Gamba, Sheffield Philh. Ch., BBC PO, Gamba

When, in 1947, Vaughan Williams was asked to write the music for Michael Balcon's film Scott of the Antarctic, he was so enthusiastic about the idea that he composed a great deal of the score before he had even seen the script. This 40-minute suite brings together virtually all the music he wrote, including much striking material not used in either the film or the symphony. Helped by vividly atmospheric sound, Rumon Gamba draws superb playing from the BBC Philharmonic, and there are haunting vocal effects from Merryn Gamba and the Sheffield Philharmonic Choir. Suites from two other characterful film scores make a colourful supplement.

Film Music: The Dim Little Island; Elizabeth of England; 49th Parallel (all ed. Stephen Hogger)

 Chan. 10244. Soloists, Chetham's Chamber Ch., BBC PO, Gamba

The magnetic nobilmente theme for the title and closing sequence of 49th Parallel is totally memorable, to match the outstanding film it illustrated, and much of the rest of this score shows the composer at his most pictorially imaginative. For the ten-minute short, The Dim Little Island, however, VW effectively reworked his Variants on Dives and Lazarus. The documentary Elizabeth of England, with its generous folk-song and folk-dance influences, shows how he felt completely at home in the musical world of Tudor England. Splendidly restored by Stephen Hogger, the music is superbly played, sung and recorded.

5 Variants on Dives and Lazarus; Partita for Double String Orchestra

(BB)  ASV Resonance CD RSN 3057. E. Sinfonia, Farrer – TIPPETT: Concerto for Double String Orchestra, etc. ***

John Farrer conducts a particularly fine account of Dives and Lazarus, opening delicately and finding plenty of contrast between the five variants, leading to a richly eloquent conclusion. The underrated Partita too is very persuasively played, again opening seductively, providing a brilliant Scherzo ostinato and finale, athletic yet full of lyrical fervour.

5 Variants of Dives and Lazarus; (i) The Songs of Light; Toward the Unknown Region; The Voice out of the Whirlwind; (ii) Willow Wood

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557798. (i) RLPO Ch.; RLPO, Lloyd-Jones; (ii) with Williams

Toward the Unknown Region, like the glorious Dives and Lazarus, is comparatively well known, but The Songs of Light less so. It is a setting of three poems about the creation by Vaughan Williams's wife, Ursula. The Voice out of the Whirlwind draws on the magical Galliard for the Songs of the Morning from Job. But the real novelty here is Willow Wood, which lasts about a quarter of an hour and is a setting of Rossetti for baritone, optional female chorus and orchestra; and it is really rather beautiful. Altogether an unexpectedly attractive disc, very well sung and played and recorded.

Job (A Masque for Dancing)

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 443 394-2. BBC SO, A. Davis – WALTON: Belshazzar's Feast ***

Job (A Masque for Dancing); Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants on Dives and Lazarus

🔑 (B) * CfP (ADD/DDD) 5 75314-2. LPO, Handley

Job (A Masque for Dancing); (i) The Lark Ascending

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553955. E. N. Philh., Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Greed

David Lloyd-Jones – at super-budget price on Naxos – upstages all competition. He gives a performance tingling with drama, yet with great delicacy. The opening scene is particularly atmospheric and the Saraband of the Sons of God brings a noble dignity, especially when it returns expansively on the full brass. There is much fine orchestral playing. The big climaxes bring a superb brass contribution, almost submerging the organ at the vision of Satan. The Epilogue is touchingly ethereal. The recording, made in Leeds Town Hall, has an ideal spaciousness, yet combines vivid detail with glowing textures. For an encore the orchestral leader, David Greed, provides an exquisitely delicate portrayal of The Lark Ascending, with a beautifully sustained closing pianissimo.

Handley's performance of Job too is outstandingly fine. His dedicated approach shows the composer's inspiration at its most deeply characteristic and most consistently noble. The breadth of dynamic of the EMI analogue recording is used to enormous effect to increase the drama: the organ entry representing Satan enthroned in heaven has great presence and is overwhelming in impact. Comparably the ravishingly luminous espressivo playing in the work's quieter lyrical pages is movingly beautiful, with the music's evocative feeling memorably captured. The other works also show Handley at his best, especially Dives and Lazarus.

The BBC Symphony Orchestra plays Job splendidly, and the recording is spacious. As in Davis's other Vaughan Williams records, the orchestra is set back and some of their power is lost. However, no one could say that the spectacular organ entry (recorded earlier by Andrew Davis in King's College Chapel, Cambridge, and effectively dubbed in) does not make a huge impact, while Job's comforters are strongly characterized and the serene closing music, including the lovely Pavane of the Sons of the Morning, is radiantly presented.

The Lark Ascending

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 03417-2. Kennedy, CBSO, Rattle – ELGAR: Violin Concerto ***

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 62813-2. Kennedy, CBSO, Rattle – WALTON: Viola Concerto; Violin Concerto ***

 DG 476 6198. Benedetti, LPO, Litton – TAVENER: Song for Athene; Dhyana; Lalishri ***

Nigel Kennedy provides a valuable and welcome fill-up to his fine remake of the Elgar Concerto in this spacious and inspirational account of Vaughan Williams's evocative piece.

Vaughan Williams's piece also makes a fine bonus for the two Walton Concertos chosen to represent Nigel among EMI's 'Great Artists of the Century'. It is beautifully recorded.

The Lark Ascending, voted in a Classic fM poll the country's most popular work, also makes a good fill-up for Nicola Benedetti's Tavener pieces. It comes in a spacious performance, not just reflective and pure-toned but powerful too in the tuttis, thanks to the weighty accompaniment from Andrew Litton and the LPO.

(i) Old King Cole (ballet); (ii) On Wenlock Edge; (iii) Serenade to Music; (i; iv) Song of Thanksgiving

❀ (*) Regis Alto (mono) ALC 1025. (i) LPO, Boult; (ii) Maran, L. String Qt, Newton; (iii) 16 soloists, BBC SO, Sir Henry Wood; (iv) with Speight (nar.), Betty Dilmore, Luton Girl's Ch.

Boult's spirited, early (1954) recording of Old King Cole reveals it as a first-class work, boisterously tuneful and of immediate appeal. Then follows George Maran's moving performance of A Shropshire Lad, with Is my Team Ploughing? especially dramatic and moving, but with the whole cycle memorably sung and played. Robert Speight's commanding RP narration and Boult's stirring conducting ensures that The Song of Thanksgiving is more than just an occasional piece. But the highlight of the disc is the remastered recording of Sir Henry Wood's inspired original performance of the Serenade to Music, with the 16 soloists, including Elsie Suddaby, Margaret Balfour, Muriel Brunskill, Heddle Nash, Parry Jones, Roy Henderson, Harold Williams, Stiles-Allen, Eva Turner, Astra Desmond, Mary Jarred, Walter Widdop, Frank Titterton, Robert Easton and Norman Allin, and with Isobel Baillie soaring radiantly up into the heavens. Apart from the solo contributions, how well they blend together! Excellent transfers bring all these mono recordings vividly to life.

Preludes on 3 Welsh Hymn Tunes

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55070. L. Brass Virtuosi, Honeyball – ELGAR: Severn Suite; IRELAND: Comedy Overture **(*)

The three hymn tunes which Vaughan Williams favours and which are united here are Ebenezer, Calfaria and Hyfrydol, and the result is quite short and very effective, if not memorable, on a brass group.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–9

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ () Decca mono 473 241-2 (5). LPO, Boult, with I. Baillie, Cameron, Ritchie, Gielgud, LPO Ch. in No. 1

In some ways Boult's mono set of the Vaughan Williams symphonies (8 is in stereo) is unsurpassed and the recording still sounds amazingly realistic, especially in the Sea Symphony, a demonstration LP in its day. The composer was present at the recording sessions, and the orchestral playing was notable for its inspirational intensity. The five discs come in a strong cardboard box. A set which is as indispensable as it is inexpensive. Boult's first recording of 9 is an Everest recording.

(i) Symphonies 1–9; (ii) Concerto accademico in D min.; (iii) Tuba Concerto in F min.; 3 Portraits from Elizabeth of England; The Wasps: Overture

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ * RCA 82876 55708-2 (6). LSO, Previn; with (i) Harper, Shirley-Quirk, Amb. S., L. Symphony Ch., R. Richardson (speaker); (ii) J. O. Buswell; (iii) J. Fletcher

Symphonies 1–9; Oboe Concerto; English Folksongs Suite; Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; 5 Variants on Dives and Lazarus; Flos Campi; Job; Partita for String Orchestra; Serenade to Music

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (DDD/ADD) 575 7602 (7). Soloists, incl. Chrisopher Balmer, RLPO Ch. & O, Handley

Symphonies 1–9; (i) Double Piano Concerto; English Folk Song Suite; Fantasia on Greensleeves; Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis; In the Fen Country; Job; (ii) The Lark Ascending; Norfolk Rhapsody; The Wasps: Overture & Suite; (iii) Serenade to Music

Ⓑ  EMI 5 73924-2 (8). (i) Vronsky & Babin; (ii) Bean; (iii) 16 Vocal Soloists; LPO Ch., LPO, New Philh. O, or LSO Boult.

Symphonies: 1–9; Flos Campi; Norfolk Rhpsody; The Wasps Overture

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.506017 (6). Soloists & Ch., Bournemouth SO, Kees Bakels; Paul Daniel

Previn recorded the Vaughan Williams Symphonies over a five-year span from 1968 to 1972, and his achievement in this repertoire represented a peak in his recording career at that time. Here the nine Symphonies plus their original fill-ups have been neatly compressed on to six CDs. The most striking performances are those which were recorded last, 2, 3 and 5; for these Previn achieves an extra depth of understanding, an extra intensity, whether in the purity of pianissimo or the outpouring of emotional resolution. For the rest there is only one performance that can be counted at all disappointing, and that is of the Symphony one might have expected Previn to interpret best, the taut and dramatic Fourth. Even that is an impressive account, if less intense than the rest. Otherwise, the great landscape of the whole cycle is presented with richness and detail in totally refreshing interpretations, brilliantly recorded and impressively transferred to CD. The extra items are worth having too, notably the two Concertos with responsive soloists.

For its reissue, Handley's set has been expanded to seven bargain CDs to include more of the extra works he recorded so sympathetically. It will especially suit those requiring modern digital sound, for only the Sinfonia Antartica is analogue – and that is still a fine, modern recording, offering also the orchestral version of the Serenade to Music as a fill-up. In all his Vaughan Williams recordings Handley shows a natural understanding for expressive rubato and is totally sympathetic. Many of his performances are first or near first choices. 5 is also outstanding in every way and was given a Rosette by us on its first appearance. Its original coupling, a very successful account of Flos campi, is also included here, as is his memorable version of Job.

Boult's late 1960s vintage stereo performances remain very satisfying indeed. Boult's approach to Vaughan Williams was firmly symphonic rather than evocative, and many lovers of the composer will like them for their warmly consistent view, patiently studied and broadly presented. If at times the playing is not so electrically urgent as with, for instance, Previn, the maturity of Vaughan Williams's vision has never been more convincingly presented. This newest collection includes also the shorter pieces originally included as fill-ups on LP, plus some extra and important bonuses including the 2-Piano Concerto and Job, a work dedicated to Boult and for which he had a special affinity, and which is suberbly recorded. But overall the sound is full-bodied and well-focused, and this set presents a comprehensive portrait of the composer, unmatched by any other single issue.

The Naxos cycle was recorded between 1992 and 2003 and to high standards of fidelity and realism. The performances are mostly of quality and the Bournemouth Orchestra plays with zest and enthusiasm with Kees Bakels taking over from Paul Daniel after the Sea Symphony. He draws lovely playing throughout, and especially in the Pastoral and Fifth Symphonies. The visionary beauty of the Ninth Symphony is well caught and the Sinfonia antartica is very impressive both as a performance and a recording (with the superscriptions, read by David Timson, separately cued) and an atmospheric vocal contribution from Lynda Russell. 8 is strongly characterised too, although in 6 Bakels misses much of the menance if not the intensity of the slow movement. The six discs are available separately and are coupled as listed below: A Sea Symphony (Naxos 8.557059 with Rodgers, Maltman, Bournemouth Ch., Daniel). Symphony 2; The Wasps Overture (Naxos 8.550734). Symphonies 3 & 6 (Naxos 8.550733 both Bournemouth SO, Bakels). Symphony 4; Norfolk Rhapsody; (i) Flos Campi (Naxos 8.550734 Bournemouth SO, Daniel with (i) Paul Silverthorne, Bournemouth Symphony Ch). Symphonies 5 & 9 (Naxos 550738). Symphonies 7 & 8 (Naxos 8.550737 both Bournemouth SO, Kees Bakels).

A Sea Symphony (1)

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP 575 3082. Rodgers, Shimell, RLPO & Ch., Handley

🔑 (BB) () Belart mono 450 144-2. Baillie, Cameron, LPO Ch. & O, Boult

Ⓜ  EMI 7 64016-2. Armstrong, Carol Case, LPO Ch., LPO, Boult

A Sea Symphony; The Wasps: Overture

🔑 * Chan. SACD CHSA 5047. Gritton, Finlay, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

Vernon Handley conducts a warmly idiomatic performance, which sustains relatively slow speeds masterfully. The reading is crowned by Handley's rapt account of the slow movement, On the Beach at Night Alone, as well as by the long duet in the finale, leading on through the exciting final ensemble, Sail Forth, to a deeply satisfying culmination in O my Brave Soul! Joan Rodgers makes an outstandingly beautiful soprano soloist, with William Shimell drier-toned but expressive. The recording, full and warm, has an extreme dynamic range, placing the two soloists rather distantly.

As a performance, Boult's (early 1952) Decca mono recording with outstanding soloists and incisive and sympathetic singing from the LPO Choir has never been surpassed. This conveys the urgency of a live performance, with the dramatic opening astonishingly vivid and real in the vintage sound. Boult was at his most inspired. This Belart CD makes the very most of the master tape, and only the lack of body of the massed upper strings betrays the age of the original. The choral sound is full and well focused and the Kingsway Hall acoustic spacious and warm; the closing section, Away O soul, is particularly beautiful.

Hickox's version of Vaughan Williams's first and most ambitious symphonic venture comes in vivid sound on surround sound SACD, with more bloom and atmosphere than usual in this venue and with clean, natural separation. The performance gains greatly from being recorded live, with the LSO and London Symphony Chorus in superb form, backing up the two excellent soloists (Susan Gritton sweet and pure, Gerald Finlay dark and firm) over the widest dynamic range – as in the meditative second movement, On the Beach at Night, Alone. Where studio versions of this massive work tend to tail off a degree in the long final movement, The Explorers, even the excellent CfP version from Handley, Hickox's offers mounting excitement as in the concert hall. A splendid addition to Hickox's RVW series.

Boult's stereo version demonstrates his affectionate style, drawing consistently expressive but never sentimental phrasing from his singers and players. John Carol Case's baritone does not sound well on disc with his rather plaintive tone-colour, but his style is right, and Sheila Armstrong sings most beautifully. The set has been remastered with outstanding success.

A London Symphony (2) (original 1913 version)

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9902. LSO, Hickox– G. BUTTERWORTH: The Banks of Green Willow. ()

A London Symphony was Vaughan Williams's own favourite among his symphonies (and I. M.'s too). It was the one he revised most often, first between 1918 and 1920, and later even more radically in the 1930s, with the definitive score finally published in 1936. What this revelatory recording demonstrates is that the 20 minutes or so of music that were excised include many passages that represent the composer at his most magically poetic. Vaughan Williams undoubtedly made the work structurally tauter, but discursiveness in a symphony is no longer regarded as a necessary fault.

Hickox draws ravishing sounds throughout from the LSO, with an unerring feeling for idiomatic rubato and a powerful control of massive dynamic contrasts. In this first version the first movement is no different, but each of the other movements here includes substantial sections completely eliminated later, some of them echoing the Ravel of Daphnis and Chloé, including an extended one in the Scherzo. The sumptuous Chandos sound, with an extraordinarily wide dynamic range, adds to the impact of the performance, which comes with a short but valuable and beautifully played fill-up.

A London Symphony (2) (1920 version)

() Biddulph mono WHL 016. Cincinnati SO, Goossens – WALTON: Violin Concerto () (with Concert ())

This is the only recording ever made of the 1920 version of Vaughan Williams's London Symphony. That involves three minutes of intensely poetic music, later excised in RVW's definitive 1936 edition. The sessions immediately followed the first recording of the Walton Violin Concerto with Heifetz in 1941 in which Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Orchestra provided the accompaniment. The coupling (together with other British music) is among the most valuable of all the reissues in the Biddulph catalogue, with excellent CD transfers.

A London Symphony; The Wasps: Overture

(BB)  Naxos 8.550734. Bournemouth SO, Bakels

The Naxos version of Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, coupled with the Wasps Overture, is powerful and dedicated. Kees Bakels draws ravishing sounds from the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, notably the strings, with the Scherzo cleanly pointed and the slow movement both warm-hearted and refined, and with pianissimos that have you catching the breath. The problem is the extreme range of dynamic in the recording. A thrilling experience nonetheless.

(i) A London Symphony (2); Fantasia on Greensleeves; The Wasps: Overture. (ii) Serenade to Music

(BB) () Dutton Lab. mono CDBP 9707. (i) Queen's Hall O; (ii) Baillie, Stiles-Allen, Suddaby, Turner, Balfour, Desmond, Brunskill, Jarred, Nash, Widdop, Jones, Titterton, Henderson, Easton, Williams, Allin, BBC SO; Wood

The historic Decca recording of Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, with the specially assembled group of musicians designated as the 'Queen's Hall Orchestra', conducted by Sir Henry Wood, brings a most striking discrepancy of pace with modern performances. The first movement alone takes over three minutes less than in most latter-day recordings. The not-so-slow introduction may lack mystery but there has never been a more passionate account of the work than this on record, and even with limited dynamic range – no true pianissimo is caught – the hushed intensity of the slow movement is tellingly conveyed. The Symphony comes coupled with shorter Vaughan Williams works: The Wasps Overture, Greensleeves and, best of all, the original (1938) Columbia recording of the Serenade to Music, with the 16 soloists specified in the score, a stellar group. The gently soaring phrase 'of sweet harmony' has never sounded so sweetly angelic as when sung here by Isobel Baillie. The Dutton Laboratory transfers are outstandingly true to the originals.

Symphonies 2 (London); 6 in E min.; (i) Prelude & Fugue in C min.

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 86592-2 (2). LPO, Handley; (i) with Bell

These recordings of Vaughan Williams's Second and Sixth were made by Vernon Handley and the London Philharmonic in the late 1970s. When Handley went on to record a complete cycle of the nine Vaughan Williams Symphonies for CfP in digital sound, these earlier versions were put to one side and largely forgotten. Yet they stand up extraordinarily well, and in some ways are even preferable to the rightly praised CfP versions. That is especially so of the wonderfully rich and evocative London Symphony, which benefits from the fuller-bodied, analogue recording, here transferred more immediately and at a higher level. Though the interpretation is very little different, there is more mystery and hushed intensity in this earlier account. The advantages of late analogue sound over early digital are not so great in the Sixth Symphony. As fill-up, the rare Prelude and Fugue in C minor, originally written for organ in 1921 and orchestrated a decade later, makes a relatively brief but worthwhile supplement, pointing forward to the later symphonies.

A London Symphony (2); Symphony 8 in E min.

Ⓑ  CfP 575 3092. RLPO, Handley

Vernon Handley gives a beautifully paced and well-sprung reading of the London Symphony, although not as crisp in ensemble as some and with sound diffused rather than sharply focused. The result is warmly sympathetic and can be strongly recommended if the generous coupling of the Eighth Symphony, an underestimated work, is preferred.

A Pastoral Symphony (3); Norfolk Rhapsodies 1 in E min.; 2 in D min.; The Running Set

🔑 * Chan. 10001. LSO, Hickox; (i) with Evans

The Pastoral Symphony, inspired not by the English countryside as much as by the composer's experiences on the Western Front in the First World War, is among his most elusive works, yet here, with Rebecca Evans a radiant soprano soloist in the melismatic writing of the finale, the magnetism of Vaughan Williams's spacious inspirations is irresistible. The three folk-based works make an apt coupling. The Norfolk Rhapsody 1 has remained in the regular repertory over the years, but the Norfolk Rhapsody 2, just as warmly attractive in its use of folk material, was here receiving its first performance since 1914, with two missing pages of the score judiciously reconstructed by Stephen Hogger.

(i) A Pastoral Symphony (3); Symphonies 4 in F min.; 5 in D; 6 in E min.

🔑 Ⓑ  RCA (ADD) 74321 88680-2 (2). LSO, Previn; (i) with Harper

The most striking of Previn's performances is the Fifth Symphony, and the only performance that can be accounted at all disappointing is the dramatic Fourth. This work is the tautest and most dramatic of the cycle, but the somewhat ponderous tempo he adopts for the first movement lets it down. Nevertheless, on the whole it is a powerful reading and is vividly recorded.

Previn draws an outstandingly beautiful and refined performance from the LSO of the Pastoral Symphony, the bare textures sounding austere but never thin and the few climaxes emerging at full force with purity undiminished. In the third movement the final coda – the only really fast music in the whole work – brings a magic tracery of pianissimo in this performance, lighter, faster and even clearer than achieved by Boult.

The Sixth Symphony, with its moments of darkness and brutality contrasted against the warmth of the second subject or the hushed intensity of the final, otherworldly, slow movement, is a work for which Previn has an innate affinity. In the first three movements his performance is superbly dramatic, clear-headed and direct, with natural understanding. His account of the mystic final movement with its endless pianissimo is not, however, on the same level, for – whether on not the fault of the recording – the playing is not quite hushed enough and the tempo is just a little too fast.

In the Fifth Previn refuses to be lured into pastoral byways. His tempi may – rather surprisingly – be consistently on the slow side, but the purity of tone he draws from the LSO strings, the precise shading of dynamic and phasing and the sustaining of tension through the longest, most hushed passages produce results that will persuade many not normally convinced of the greatness of this music. In the first movement Previn builds the great climaxes of the second subject with much warmth, but he reserves for the climax of the slow movement his culminating thrust of emotion, a moment of visionary sublimity, after which the gentle urgency of the Passacaglia finale and the stillness of the Epilogue seem a perfect happy conclusion. Special tribute must also be paid to the uncredited remastering engineer and to the producer of this reissue, Lionel Falleur, for the sound really is superb throughout the set.

(i) A Pastoral Symphony (3); (ii) Symphony 5 in D

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 64018-2. (i) M. Price, New Philh. O; (ii) LPO; Boult

(BB) () Belart mono 461 118-2. (i) Ritchie; LPO, Boult

On EMI, in the Pastoral Symphony Boult is not entirely successful in controlling the tension of the short but elusive first movement, although it is beautifully played. The opening of the Lento moderato, however, is very fine, and its close is sustained with a perfect blend of restraint and intensity. In a generous coupling Boult gives a loving and gentle performance of 5, easier and more flowing than most rivals', and some may prefer it for that reason, but the emotional involvement is a degree less intense, particularly in the slow movement. Both recordings have been very successfully remastered.

It is good to have Boult's earlier, Kingsway Hall recordings back in the catalogue although some allowances have to be made for the lack of amplitude in the upper string climaxes, the CD transfer is impressively full and the recording luminous. The translucent textures Boult creates in the Pastoral Symphony, with its ethereal opening, and his delicacy later are balanced by his intensity in the Fifth, where the climax of the first movement has wonderful breadth and passion. The LPO of the time play with great sympathy and warmth.

Symphony 4 in F min.

Ⓝ  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4237-2. BBC SO, Sargent – SIBELIUS: Symphony 4 ***

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0528. NBC SO, Stokowski – ANTHEIL: Symphony 4 (); BUTTERWORTH: Shropshire Lad ()

Symphony 4; Norfolk Rhapsody 1; (i) Flos campi

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557276. Bournemouth SO, Daniel; (i) with Silverthorne, Bournemouth SO Ch.

Symphony 4 in F min.; (i) Mass in G min.; (ii) Six Choral Songs to be Sung in Time of War

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9984. (i) Hickox Singers; (ii) L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Hickox

Richard Hickox's searing reading of the Fourth Symphony matches, and even outshines in its fury, the première recording conducted by the composer in 1937. Hickox even manages to match the very fast speed RVW set, angry to the very last bar. The intensity of the LSO's playing, brilliant from first to last, has one magnetized in all four movements, chill in the slow movement with its eerie polytonal writing, and unrelenting even in the skipping rhythms of the Scherzo and the oompah sequences of the finale. The Mass in G minor makes a fine and unusual coupling, here given sharper focus than usual, with dramatic contrasts underlined, and with the precision of ensemble compensating for having women's rather than boy's voices in the upper parts. The six unison Songs to be Sung in Time of War, which come as a unique supplement, were written at the outbreak of war in 1939 to texts by Shelley, miniatures that in their natural lyrical intensity rise beyond the limits of scale. Superb Chandos sound in both the symphony and the choral works.

Vaughan Williams's abrasive Fourth Symphony emerges in Paul Daniel's powerful performance as one of the most vital of Vaughan Williams's works, at once chilling and lyrical in its forward thrust. The impact of the opening has never been sharper than here, helped by the weighty and atmospheric recording. The Symphony is superbly contrasted with a masterpiece from the 1920, the visionary piece, Flos campi, for viola and orchestra, inspired over its six sections by the Song of Solomon, with Paul Silverthorne a superb soloist. Covering the full range of Vaughan Williams's achievement, the disc also includes the Norfolk

Rhapsody 1 of 1906, representing the composer's early pastoral style at its most attractive.

Sargent performed Vaughan Williams Fourth Symphony with impressive directness, with the strong emotions of this work compellingly brought out. The slow movement is particularly impressive for its warmth, and if the Scherzo lacks the sheer bite that others have bought to it, the finale is excitingly done, generating real electricity. The 1963 stereo recording, from a live Albert Hall performance, is surprisingly vivid and warm.

The only time that Stokowski ever conducted Vaughan Williams's provocative Fourth Symphony was in March 1943, when this high-powered, red-blooded reading was recorded, the first to be made outside Britain, and throughout the performance one marvels that Stokowski could draw sounds from the NBC Orchestra so different from those the same players produced under Toscanini. The chill and poignancy of the slow movement and the bluff humour of the Scherzo, each strongly characterized, lead to a comparably positive account of the finale. The sound, limited in range, is yet satisfyingly full-bodied.

Symphony 5 in D; (i) Oboe Concerto; (ii) Flos campi

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP 575 3112. (i) Small; (ii) Balmer, RLPO Ch.; RLPO, Handley

Symphony 5 in D; Hymn-Tune Prelude; Prelude & Fugue in C min.; (i) The Pilgrim Pavement; Psalm 23; Valiant for Truth.

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9666. (i) Hickox Singers; LSO, Hickox

Hickox with the LSO captures a visionary fervour in this most characteristic of the series. Hickox's style is warmly expressive, moulding phrases and tempo affectionately, always sounding spontaneous, building climaxes with shattering power. The LSO respond with playing both rich and refined, helped by the wide-ranging Chandos sound. Equally, the rarities on the disc are most persuasively done, three of them première recordings. The Pilgrim Pavement is a touchingly direct devotional motet written for the Church of St John the Divine in New York, and the setting of Psalm 23 for soprano is adapted from his opera The Pilgrim's Progress, while the Prelude and Fugue is an amplification of an organ work of 1930, which anticipates the abrasive Vaughan Williams of Job.

Vernon Handley's disc is also outstanding in every way, a spacious yet concentrated reading, superbly played and recorded, which masterfully holds the broad structure of this Symphony together, building to massive climaxes. The warmth and poetry of the work are also beautifully caught. The rare and evocative Flos campi, inspired by the Song of Solomon, makes a generous and attractive coupling, equally well played if rather closely balanced. The sound is outstandingly full, giving fine clarity of texture. For this reissue Jonathan Small adds a delectable account of the charmingly lyrical Oboe Concerto.

(i) Symphony 5; (ii) Dona nobis pacem

() Somm mono SOMMCD 071. (i) LPO; (ii) Flynn, Henderson, BBC Ch. & SO; composer

Transferred from LP acetate originals, this recording of the Fifth Symphony derives from a 1952 Promenade Concert with the composer at the helm. What an occasion it must have been! Vaughan Williams creates real tension in a reading that is as noble and inspirational as it is spacious, increasing in spontaneous feeling as it proceeds. The coupling comes from the BBC – the première broadcast of Dona nobis pacem, with fine, ardent soloists and a comparable response from the BBC Chorus and Symphony Orchestra. The sound is less than ideal, but this is a coupling not to be missed by any VW aficionado.

Symphonies 5 in D; 9 in E min.

(BB)  Naxos 8.550738. Bournemouth SO, Bakels

Kees Bakels and the Bournemouth Symphony follow up their earlier issues with a superb coupling of 5, arguably the peak of the series, and the very last Symphony, long underestimated. Drawing the most refined playing from the Bournemouth orchestra, not least the strings, he finds in a relatively direct reading an extra purity and nobility, pointing the big emotional climaxes of the first and third movements most tellingly. Speeds are on the fast side, but the visionary beauty is perfectly caught. 9, with its original structure flouting convention, emerges strong and fresh, with the Andante tranquillo finale bringing echoes of the comparable movement of 6. Clear, refined recording to match.

Symphony 6 in E min

((*)) Cala mono CACD 0537. NYPO, Stokowski – TCHAIKOVSKY: Romeo and Juliet (abridged version); MOZART: Symphony 35 (Haffner); SCOTT: From the Sacred Harp; WEINBERGER: Schwanda the Bagpiper: Polka & Fugue ()

Symphony 6; Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis

Ⓝ  BBC Legends BBCL 4256-2. New Philh. O, Boult (with BAX: Mediterranean; HADLEY: One Morning in Spring; BERG: Lyric Suite ***)

Symphony 6 in E min.; Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis; (i) The Lark Ascending

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49584-2. (i) Little; BBC SO, A. Davis

Andrew Davis's reading of the Sixth is taut and urgent, with emotions kept under firm control. The two shorter works which come as supplement are given more warmly expressive, exceptionally beautiful performances, with Tasmin Little an immaculate soloist in The Lark Ascending. Warner Apex's wide-ranging sound, setting the orchestra at a slight distance, blunts the impact of the Symphony in the first three movements, but then works beautifully in the chill of the hushed pianissimo meditation of the finale, as it does too in the fill-ups.

It was Boult who in 1948 conducted the first performance of this apocalyptic work, and he has recorded it in the studio several times since, but this live account from the Vaughan Williams Centenary concert in Cheltenham Town Hall in July 1972 far outshines any of them, reflecting the atmosphere of a special occasion. The BBC recording splendidly captures the weight of sound in the tuttis and the otherworldly calm of the pianissimo finale. One admires afresh the way that the jaunty second subject in the first movement is transformed into the richly lyrical melody in the coda, also the ominous interruptions in crescendo in the second movement and the haunting saxophone theme in the central section of the Scherzo. The extra items add to the value of the disc.

The Cala performance has a riveting foward impetus and, characteristically, Stokowski relishes the big tune on the strings in the first movement; but the slow movement is controversially fast. The Haffner is Stokowski's only recording of any Mozart Symphony: it is certainly lively and has a beautifully pointed Andante and a sparkling finale. But it suffers badly from audience noises. Romeo and Juliet is well played but hardly riveting, and the recording lacks range. Moreover, Stokowski substitutes a quiet ending for the composer's dramatic final chords, doubtfully claiming that such an alteration had Tchaikovsky's sanction. Thomas Jefferson Scott's folksy From the Sacred Harp is hardly one of the conductor's major discoveries, but the Weinberger Polka and Fugue is certainly successful, and the only time Stokowski conducted any music by this composer. Good transfers, but not really a satisfying collection.

(i) Symphony 6 in E min.; (ii; iii) The Lark Ascending; (iii; iv) A Song of Thanksgiving

Ⓑⓑ () Dutton Lab. mono CDBP 9703. (i) LSO; (ii) Pougnet; (ii, iii) LPO; (iii) with Dolemore, Speight, Luton Choral Soc. & Girls' Ch.; Boult

Boult's pioneer 1949 recording of the Sixth Symphony with the LSO, vividly transferred from 78s, has the original, heavily scored version of the Scherzo included as a supplement. It remains among the finest ever versions of this bitingly dramatic work. The total chill of the slow finale has never been more tellingly conveyed, even though the relatively close-up sound cannot convey an extreme pianissimo. Jean Pougnet, then leader of the LPO, proves a most understanding soloist in The Lark Ascending, with A Song of Thanksgiving providing an attractive makeweight, a piece with narrator, soprano soloist and chorus, written to celebrate victory in the Second World War.

Symphonies 6 in E min.; 8 in D min.; (i) Nocturne

🔑  Chan. SACD CHSA 5016; CD Chan. 10103. LSO, Hickox; (i) with Roderick Williams

Richard Hickox is particularly fine in the dedicated slow finale of 6 with its visionary overtones; yet in the first three movements of that darkly intense work the abrasiveness of the writing is a little muted, thanks to the mellow recording acoustic of All Saints', Tooting. It does not help either that the transfer level is on the low side, so that the heavy brass passages, for all their weight, lack something in bite. In 8 the acoustic is less of a problem, even if the Scherzo for wind alone could be even more jaunty. The slow movement for strings brings tender refinement and the rumbustious finale a swaggering conclusion. The Nocturne for baritone and orchestra makes a most valuable supplement and demonstrates here what mastery he already had over orchestral colour, giving forecasts of A London Symphony.

Symphonies 6 in E min.; 9 in E min.; Fantasia on Greensleeves

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 3122-2. RLPO, Handley

Next to Previn's now withdrawn recording in the same coupling, Handley lacks some of the darker, sharper qualities implied. Though his speeds are consistently faster, his is a more comfortable reading, and the recording adds to that impression. Handley's approach is a valid one as the slow pianissimo finale, here presented as mysterious rather than desolate, was inspired not by a world laid waste by nuclear war (as was once thought), but by Prospero's 'cloud-capp'd towers' in Shakespeare's The Tempest. The Greensleeves Fantasia is now added as a contrasting encore.

Sinfonia Antartica (7) (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑⓑ  RCA Navigator (ADD) 74321 29248-2. Harper, Richardson, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Previn – WALTON: Cello Concerto ***

(i) Sinfonia Antartica (7); (ii) Serenade to Music (choral version); Partita for Double String Orchestra

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 3132. (i) Hargan; (ii) RLPO Ch.; RLPO, Handley

(i) Sinfonia Antartica (7); The Wasps (incidental music): Overture & Suite

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 7 64020-2. (i) Armstrong; LPO, Boult

Previn's interpretation concentrates on atmosphere rather than drama in a performance that is sensitive and literal. Because of the recessed effect of the sound, the portrayal of the ice-fall (represented by the sudden entry of the organ) has a good deal less impact than in Vernon Handley's version. Before each movement Sir Ralph Richardson speaks the superscript written by the composer on his score. As can be seen, Previn's Sinfonia Antartica is coupled with Walton's Cello Concerto.

Handley shows a natural feeling for expressive rubato and draws refined playing from the Liverpool Orchestra. At the end of the epilogue Alison Hargan makes a notable first appearance on disc, a soprano with an exceptionally sweet and pure voice. In well-balanced digital sound it makes an outstanding bargain, particularly when it offers an excellent fill-up, the Serenade to Music (though in this lovely score a chorus never sounds as characterful as a group of well-chosen soloists). Also added for this latest reissue is the rare Partita, very well-played and sonorously recorded.

Sir Adrian Boult gives a stirring account and is well served by the EMI engineers. The inclusion of Vaughan Williams's Aristophanic suite, The Wasps, with its endearing participation of the kitchen utensils plus its tuneful Overture, is a bonus, although in the Overture the upper strings sound a bit thin.

(i) Sinfonia Antartica (7); Symphony 8 in D min.

🔑 (BB)  Belart mono/stereo 461 116-2. LPO, Boult; (i) with Ritchie, LPO Ch. (superscriptions spoken by Gielgud)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550737. Bournemouth SO, Bakels; (i) with Russell, Waynflete Singers (superscriptions read by Timson)

Boult's 1953 mono performance of the Sinfonia Antartica has never been surpassed; the atmospheric recording, with its translucent icy vistas and Margaret Ritchie's floating, wordless soprano voice sounding ethereal, remains a model of balancing. Boult and the LPO achieve keen concentration throughout, and the evocation of the frozen landscapes and the shifting ice-floes is as compelling as his control of the structure of a work that is never easy to hold together. Sir John Gielgud's superscriptions (from the score) act as moving preludes. The recording of the Eighth Symphony is early stereo (1956). The LPO plays beautifully, and the Decca engineers have relished the challenge of balancing the exotic sounds of glissando tubular bells, tuned gongs, vibraphone and xylophone. The string-tone sounds far fuller than it did when this recording last appeared.

Kees Bakels's Antartica is particularly impressive, helped by vividly atmospheric recording that, with superb separation, clarifies textures – not least the percussion and wind-machine – and beautifully captures the ethereal sound of Lynda Russell singing off-stage. Bakels's fast speed for the opening movement tautly draws together a structure which can seem dangerously episodic, and the thrust is maintained through the other movements. Sensibly, the superscriptions are included on separate tracks at the end of the disc. 8 is excellently done too, with an element of wildness brought out in the sharp contrasts of the first movement, bouncing humour in the Scherzo and refinement in the slow movement and finale.

Symphony 8 in D min. (DVD version)

🔑  EMI DVD DVB 38845690. LPO, Boult – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ***

Filmed at a Royal Festival Hall concert in October 1972, this offers Boult's telling reading of Vaughan Williams's least-performed Symphony, a work which the conductor opens magically and then brings out its rich vein of lyricism – the tender expression of the slow movement alongside the colourful wind scoring in the Scherzo and the percussive detail in the finale – without exaggeration. Fine playing, well-detailed recording, and what a pleasure to watch Boult's economy of gesture as he holds the work's structure firmly together.

Symphony 9 in E min.

() Cala mono CACD 0539. O, Stokowski – RIEGGER: New Dance; HOVHANESS: Symphony 2; CRESTON: Toccata, Op. 68 ()

Stokowski was a fervent advocate of Vaughan Williams; the Symphony is given with great dedication and authority and is a reading that is second to none despite some slight tape imperfection at the beginning of the first movement. Percy Grainger, who was in the audience, wrote of its beauty and cosmic quality, and the 76-year-old Stokowski certainly conveyed its power and nobility. The American works have comparable authority and vitality, and there need be no reservations concerning the quality of the mono sound, given the period.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Piano Quintet in C min.; Quintet in D for Clarinet, Horn, Violin, Cello & Piano; String Quartet; Nocturne & Scherzo; 3 Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes; Romance; Romance & Pastorale; Scherzo; Suite de Ballet

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67381/2 (2). Nash Ens.

On the first of the two discs the Piano Quintet of 1903 opens strikingly with sharp discords and then whirls you into a vigorous movement with French overtones. The String Quartet of 1898, with its folk-like pentatonic writing, sounds more like the RVW we know, and again his mastery in handling a difficult medium is perfectly clear, as it is even more strikingly in the Quintet for the difficult and unusual combination of piano, clarinet, horn, violin and cello. The Nocturne and Scherzo (1906) for string quintet clearly anticipate the song-cycle On Wenlock Edge, and other shorter works for various combinations from later in his career help to fill out the musical portrait of a composer whose music seems to grow in vitality with the years, largely thanks to brilliant performances like these. The recording is well up to house standards.

Piano Quintet; Romance and Pastorale; (i) On Wenlock Edge (song-cycle)

 Chan.10465. Schubert Ens.; (i) with Padmore

Mark Padmore proves a passionate interpreter of Vaughan Williams's cycle of settings from Housman's The Shropshire Lad, with accompaniment for piano quintet. The result is thrillingly dramatic with high dynamic contrasts, notably in the eerie song, Is my Team Ploughing?, with the ghostly ploughman eliciting powerful responses from his live companion. The build-up there is thrilling, but all these songs have maximum impact and the rare coupling makes the disc especially attractive. The Piano Quintet is hardly typical of the mature composer, but various lyrical passages point forward, even if the melodic writing is more repetitious than in the later VW. The Romance and Pastorale also dates from before the First World War, a charming miniature dedicated to a friend's wife.

6 Studies in English Folksong for Clarinet & Piano

 Chan. 8683. Hilton, Swallow – BAX: Sonata (*); BLISS: Quintet ***

These Folksong Studies, which Vaughan Williams published in arrangements for the viola and cello, come from the mid-1920s and are very beautiful, most sensitively played by Janet Hilton and Keith Swallow.

String Quartets 1 in G min.; 2 in A min.; (i) Phantasy Quintet

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.555300. Maggini Qt; with (i) Jackson

The Magginis find a rare clarity and warmth in both quartets. The First was written soon after Vaughan Williams's studies with Ravel in Paris, with obvious echoes not just of Ravel but of the Debussy Quartet. The Second Quartet dates from 1942 to 1943, written in the crucial gap between the lyrical Symphony 5 and the abrasive 6. Most revelatory of all is the Maggini performance of the Phantasy Quintet of 1912, a masterpiece long neglected, weighty and compressed. A slow prelude as intense as that of a Purcell Fantasy leads to three comparably strong and sharply characterized sections.

VOCAL MUSIC

Benedicite; Let Us Now Praise Famous Men; O Clap Your Hands; Old Hundreth Psalm; O Taste and See; Toward the Unknown Region

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 467 613-2. Byram-Wigfield, Winchester Cathedral Ch., Waynefleet Singers, Bournemouth SO, Hill – WALTON: Coronation March & Te Deum, etc. **(*)

Enthusiastic performances, set in a reverberant acoustic and well recorded. They may not be the most polished available but the infectious quality of the music-making is very involving. The Benedicite, a strong 16-minute work, which is too often overlooked, is hugely enjoyable. Well worth considering.

(i; ii) Dona nobis pacem; (i; iii) Fantasia (quasi variations) on the Old 104th Psalm Tune; (iv) Magnificat; (i) Toward the Unknown Region

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 74782-2 (2). (i) LPO Ch., LPO, Boult; (ii) with Armstrong, Carol Case; (iii) Katin; (iv) Watts, Amb. S., O Nova, Davies – Concerto grosso, etc. **(*)

Dona nobis pacem, which appeared in 1936 as a direct response to the dark uneasy peace of the 1930s, is a work that was obviously relevant but is still elusive. The central setting of a Whitman poem, 'Dirge for Two Veterans' presents a strong and sustained climax, while the more austere settings of biblical texts have a dark simplicity that is most compelling. The Magnificat shows Vaughan Williams in his most Holstian vein. It dates from the early 1930s and has strong suggestions of Flos campi. Its inspiration is of high quality, and it is performed here with sympathy and imagination. The Psalm Tune Fantasia, however, is not one of the composer's most successful works, although these artists do their best for it. The early setting of Whitman, Toward the Unknown Region, is much more rewarding and is finely sung.

Dona nobis pacem; 4 Hymns; Lord, Thou hast been our refuge (Psalm 90); O clap your hands (Psalm 47); Toward the Unknown Region

 Hyp. CDA 66655. Howarth, Ainsley, Allen, Corydon Singers & O, Best

(i; ii) Dona nobis pacem; (ii; iii) Sancta civitas

🔑 * EMI 7 54788-2. (i) Kenny; (ii) Terfel; (iii) Langridge, St Paul's Cathedral Choristers; L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

These two visionary masterpieces, both seriously neglected, both with Latin titles and both dating from the interwar period, make an ideal and generous coupling on EMI. Drawing passionate performances from his choir and soloists (notably from Bryn Terfel in both works), Hickox brings out not only the visionary intensity and atmospheric beauty – as in the offstage trumpets and 'Alleluias' near the start of Sancta civitas – but also the dramatic power. Both these works may be predominantly meditative, but they have moments of violence which relate directly to the dark side of VW, as expressed in the Fourth Symphony, such as the chorus Beat! Beat! Drums!, the second section of Dona nobis pacem. Hickox is a degree broader in his speeds than previous interpreters on disc, but is all the warmer for it.

Using a relatively small choir and orchestra, Best takes an intimate view of Dona nobis pacem but one which, as a result, is even sharper in focus, capturing the dramatic contrasts as a big performance would, with words unusually clear. The sweet-toned Judith Howarth and the warmly expressive Thomas Allen are ideal soloists. Toward the Unknown Region was VW's first big choral work, not as distinctive as his later music but with many typical fingerprints. Best brings out the beauty of the choral writing, as he does in the even rarer Four Hymns for tenor, viola and strings, which the composer intended as a counterpart to the Five Mystical Songs. Ainsley is the clear tenor soloist, though strained a little at the top. The setting of Psalm 90 is the more effective here for having, instead of a semi-chorus, the optional baritone soloist, with Allen again singing with deep dedication.

5 English Folk Songs; An acre of Land; Bushes and Briars; Ca' the Yowes; Early in the Spring; Greensleeves; John Dory; Loch Lomond; The Seeds of Love; The Turtle Dove; The Unquiet Grave; Ward the Pirate

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 2 16155-2. L. Madrigal Singers, Bishop – HOLST: Choral music ***

Using a choir of hand-picked singers Christopher Bishop provides here a delightful collection of part songs, far more varied than one might expect, each one showing subtly the distinction of Vaughan Williams's mind, never falling into mere routine. The singing of the London Madrigal Singers is admirably lithe and sensitive and this is altogether a most rewarding disc, beautifully engineered.

(i) Arrangements of Folk Songs from East Anglia; France; Herefordshire Carols; Newfoundland; Wessex; (ii) 3 Arrangements with Violin; (iii) 6 Studies in English Folk-Song

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 2 16156-2. (i) Tear, Ledger; (ii) with Hugh Bean; (iii) Jean Stewart, Daphne Ibbott

Robert Tear, who earlier made a delightful record of Benjamin Britten's folksong settings here turns to the very different, more innocent settings of Vaughan Williams and conveys comparable intensity, not least in those songs where the singer has a stanza or so unaccompanied. The selection could hardly be more attractive or more varied in mood and expression. Stylish accompaniments. Hugh Bean's sensitive violin obbligati in the three closing songs of the recital are a highlight. For this reissue Jean Stewart adds the engaging Six Studies in English Folk Song.

Fantasia on Christmas Carols; The First Nowell; On Christmas Night (Masque)

 Chan. 10385. Fox, Williams, Joyful Company of Singers, L. Sinf. Ch. & O, Hickox

Vaughan Williams's love of Christmas and carols has long been familiar from his Fantasia, here premièred in a version for baritone soloist (the warm-voiced Roderick Williams), chorus, strings and organ, a performance unsurpassed on record. But his masque On Christmas Night (adapted from A Christmas Carol) is an attractive surprise, showing the composer at his most winningly inventive, closely following the Dickens narrative. The First Nowell (centring on a favourite carol featured in all three works) is described as a nativity play, but is an entirely musical setting, featuring more traditional melodies handled with loving expertise. Richard Hickox has said how much he and his singers and players enjoyed making these recordings, and their pleasure comes over in these moving and exhilarating performances, superbly sung, played and recorded. A splendid Christmas gift for anyone.

(i) Fantasia on Christmas Carols; (ii) Flos campi; (i) 5 Mystical Songs; (iii) Serenade to Music

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH55004. (i) Allen; (ii) Imai & Corydon Singers; (iii) 16 soloists; ECO, Best

This radiant record centres round the Serenade to Music and, as in the original performance, sixteen star soloists are here lined up; though the team of women does not quite match the stars of 1938, the men are generally fresher and clearer. Above all, thanks largely to fuller, modern recording, the result is much more sensuous than the original, with ensemble better matched and with Matthew Best drawing glowing sounds from the English Chamber Orchestra. The other items are superbly done too, with Nobuko Imai a powerful viola soloist in the mystical cantata Flos campi, another Vaughan Williams masterpiece. Thomas Allen is the characterful soloist in the Five Mystical Songs. Warmly atmospheric sound to match the performances.

(i) Flos campi; Household Music (3 Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes)

 Chan. 9392. (i) Dukes; N. Sinfonia, Hickox – Riders to the Sea ***

Philip Dukes proves a rich and eloquent viola soloist in Flos campi, in which the Northern Sinfonia Chorus is balanced more forwardly and powerfully than usual, and this is a remarkably successful performance on all counts. The Household Music, never recorded before, offers three delightful miniatures, written in 1941 as a wartime exercise, intended for amateur musicians as well as professionals.

(i) Hodie (Christmas Cantata); (ii) Fantasia on Christmas Carols

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67427-2. (i) Baker, Lewis, Shirley-Quirk, Bach Ch., Westminster Abbey Ch., LSO, Willcocks; (ii) Barrow, Guildford Cathedral Ch. & String O, Rose

(BB)  Naxos 8.570439. Watson, Hoare, Gadd, Guildford Ch. Soc., RPO, Davan Wetton

Hodie is, above all, bluff and jolly, not very subtle in its effects, but full of open-hearted humanity. Those qualities are splendidly realized in this fine performance, not just by the choir, but most of all by the excellent trio of soloists, with Dame Janet Baker as ever giving heartfelt intensity to Vaughan Williams's broad melodic lines. The Fantasia on Christmas Carols, easy and approachable, makes a generous and apt coupling. The transfers of both recordings are newly done and give an excellent example of mid-1960s EMI sound.

In Hodie there is an attractive medieval flavour to these settings of Christmas texts, with sharp cross-rhythms, which is well brought out on Naxos – with Janice Watson an excellent, creamy-toned soprano. The main vocal items are linked by narration in recitative, with the recording bringing excellent separation of the different elements, including the organ. The brassy March of the Three Kings brings a colourful oriental flavour. The much better-known Fantasia on Christmas Carols, dedicated to the leading folk-songs collector, Cecil Sharp, makes an ideal coupling, similarly well performed, making this Naxos disc a fine alternative to the EMI pairing.

22 Hymns

Ⓝ  Griffin GCCD 4063 Cardiff Fest. Ch., Arwel Hughes

Vaughan Williams harmonised or adapted tunes for all the hymns for a new edition of The English Hymnal, it took him two years to complete, and he did so in his own individual way. For instance He who would valiant be uses the folk tune 'Our captain calls'. All his original tunes are included here, of which All the Saints is the most famous (to the tune which he named Sine Nomine, a quite arbitrary choice). He said afterwards: 'I know that two years of close association with some of the best (as well as some of the worst) tunes in the world was a better musical education than any amount of sonatas and fugues'. Here they all are, splendidly sung by the Cardiff Festival Choir, with Owain Arwel Hughes making the most of dynamic contrast to give the simple melodies variety of presentation.

The House of Life (6 sonnets); Songs of Travel; 4 Poems by Fredegond Shove; 4 Last Songs: 2, Tired; Songs: In the spring; Linden Lea

(*) Chan. 8475. Luxon, Williams

Though Benjamin Luxon's vibrato is distractingly wide, the warmth and clarity of the recording help to make his well-chosen collection of Vaughan Williams songs very attractive, including as it does not only the well-known Stevenson travel cycle but the Rossetti cycle, The House of Life (including The water mill), as well as the most famous song of all, Linden Lea.

Lord Thou hast been our refuge; Prayer to the Father of Heaven; A Vision of Aeroplanes

 Chan. 9019. Finzi Singers, Spicer – HOWELLS: Requiem, etc. ***

These three choral pieces make an apt coupling for the Howells choral works on the Finzi Singers' disc. A Vision of Aeroplanes improbably but most imaginatively uses a text from Ezekiel.

SONGS

'The Sky Shall be our Roof' (Opera Songs)

Ⓝ  Albion ALB 001. Fox, Pochin, Staples, Williams, Burnside

The 19 songs on this attractive disc, sponsored by the Vaughan Williams Society, are drawn from three of Vaughan Williams's operas: ten from Hugh the Drover, two from Sir John in Love (including Greensleeves), and seven from The Pilgrim's Progress. The most varied group are those from Hugh the Drover with vigorous songs like Hugh's Song of the Road, beautifully sung in a light tenor by Andrew Staples and two charming duets for Hugh and Mary with Staples joined by the soprano, Sarah Fox. Also a lively song for the Showman sung by the baritone, Roderick Williams. Helpfully, complete texts are provided. The whole collection has been masterminded by Iain Burnside who winningly accompanies at the piano. Well-balanced sound.

'Kissing her Hair': 20 Early Songs

Ⓝ  Albion ALBCD 002. Fox, Staples, Williams, Burnside

This second disc sponsored by the Vaughan Williams Society is again masterminded by the fine accompanist, Iain Burnside with similar singers. This time the excellent baritone, Roderick Williams has the biggest share of the choice, with Linden Lea, by far the most popular of Vaughan Williams's songs sung by Williams in a fair attempt at an authentic Dorset accent. The atmosphere of Thomas Hardy country is reflected in a fair proportion of the songs, with a delightful duet 'If I were queen' sung by Sarah Fox, with a second stanza, 'If I were king' sung by the tenor, Andrew Staples.

For variety there are several songs in French and The Sky Above the Roof which is a translation of Verlaine's 'Le ciel est pardessus le toit' by the wife of Percy Dearmer, which she wanted for a play. It was a commission which Vaughan Williams did not want so he wrote it in double quick time. There is also a sensitive setting of Tennyson's The Splendour Falls, which yet can hardly compare with Britten's inspired setting in his Serenade. As an exception to early songs there are three Walt Whitman settings from 1925. Detailed notes are provided on each song in turn as well as texts.

Choral Songs (for mixed chorus): 'Where Hope is Shining'

Ⓝ  Albion ALBCD 006 Joyful Company of Singers, Alistair Young (piano), Peter Broadbent.

These 23 Songs for Mixed Chorus span the widest repertory. The most ambitious piece is a group of four, Sun, Moon, Stars and Man, ending triumphantly on The Song of the Sons of Light, Vaughan Williams at his most exhilarating. There are a number of Shakespeare settings as well as folk-song settings, an arrangement of Vaughan Williams's own Linden Lea by Arthur Somervell, and an ingenious arrangement of Loch Lomond. Most of the songs are unaccompanied, but piano accompaniment adds to the power of Sun, Moon, Stars and Man, as well as The Mermaid and the Turtle Dove. Immaculate performances by the Joyful Company of Singers under Peter Broadbent. As a charming bonus to this issue, sponsored by the Vaughan Williams Society the cover has an infectious portrait of the composer with his second wife, Ursula.

5 Mystical Songs; O Clap Your Hands

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 65588-2. Shirley-Quirk, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., ECO, Willcocks – FINZI: Dies natalis; HOLST: Choral Fantasia; Psalm 86 ***

In the Five Mystical Songs to words by George Herbert, John Shirley-Quirk sings admirably, and the motet O Clap Your Hands makes a fine bonus for a recommendable triptych of English vocal works.

(i) 5 Mystical Songs; (i; ii) 5 Tudor Portraits

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55004. (i) Herford; (ii) Walker; Guildford Ch. Soc., Philh. O, Davan Wetton

The contrast of the religious pastoralism of the Five Mystical Songs and the rumbustious vigour of the Tudor Portraits is well understood by Hilary Davan Wetton. Henry Herford is the rather restrained but sympathetic soloist in the former (an early work, concurrent with the Sea Symphony); his vocal style is less well suited to the portrait of Pretty Bess in the latter, written a quarter of a century later. Sarah Walker touchingly sings her Lament for her pet sparrow (the victim of her cat). She also paints a robust picture of The Tunning of Elinor Rumming. The chorus are boldly enthusiastic both here and in the burlesque Epitaph on John Jayberd of Diss. The recording is truthful, although the chorus could have been given more bite, for the words are not ideally clear. Otherwise an enjoyable and recommendable bargain coupling, which supplies full texts and even a brief glossary of unfamiliar Elizabethan terms.

Mass in G min.; Silence and Music

Ⓝ  Hänssler SACD 93.250. SWR Vocal Ens, Marcus Creed

Vaughan Williams wrote his Mass in G minor for his friend Gustav Holst to be given at the festival he organised. It is one of Vaughan Williams gentler works, beautifully crafted, echoing traditional examples. Silence and Music is a lovely setting of words by Vaughan Williams's second wife, Ursula Wood.

(i) On Wenlock Edge; (ii) Songs of Travel (song-cycles)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 7 64731-2. (i) Tear; (ii) Allen; CBSO, Rattle – BUTTERWORTH; ELGAR: Songs ***

Vaughan Williams's own orchestration of his Housman song-cycle, made in the early 1920s, has been curiously neglected. It lacks something of the apt, ghostly quality of the version for piano and string quartet, but some will prefer the bigger scale. The orchestral version brings home the aptness of treating the nine songs as a cycle, particularly when the soloist is as characterful and understanding a singer as Thomas Allen. The Housman settings in the other cycle are far better known, and Robert Tear, as in his earlier recording with Vernon Handley, proves a deeply perceptive soloist. Warm, understanding conducting and playing, and excellent sound.

(ii) The Pilgrim's Journey (arr. Roy Douglas); (i) Serenade to Music

Ⓝ () Albion mono ALBCD 009 (2). (i) Allen, Baillie, Mitchell, Suddaby, Brunskill, Desmond, Jarred, Ripley, Herbert, Lewis, Manton, Nash, Allin, Easton, Henderson, Williams, Liverpool PO, Composer; (ii) Plymouth Church of the Pilgrims, Pfohl

The Pilgrim's Journey is made up of items from the opera, The Pilgrim's Progress, selected by Roy Douglas and Christopher Morris. It makes a delightful work well sung by the Choir of the Plymouth Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn New York with Henry Pfohl, recorded in April 1965. A valuable extra item comes on a bonus disc with the composer giving a half-hour of comments on his musical education with Parry, Stanford and others, recorded in November 1955. His voice is wonderfully characterful and expressive. There is also an excerpt from the composer's funeral service in September 1958 included. But the really valuable item in this live recording from the Royal Festival Hall in 1951, is the Serenade to Music conducted by Vaughan Williams himself with 11 of the original soloists taking part, including all four of the basses. The sound is scrubby in reproducing the instrumental accompaniment, but the voices are well caught, and the magic of the occasion is superbly conveyed, a most moving performance of one of the composer's most magical works.

The Pilgrim's Progress (incidental music, ed. Palmer)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66511. Gielgud, Pasco, Howells, Corydon Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, Best

Vaughan Williams had a lifelong devotion to Bunyan's great allegory, which fired his inspiration to write incidental music for a BBC radio adaptation of the complete Pilgrim's Progress. Much of the material, but not all, then found a place in the opera. Christopher Palmer has here devised a sequence of 12 movements, which – overlapping with the opera and the Fifth Symphony – throws up long-buried treasure. Matthew Best draws warmly sympathetic performances from his singers and players, in support of the masterly contributions of Sir John Gielgud, taking the role of Pilgrim as he did on radio in 1942, and Richard Pasco as the Evangelist.

The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains; 3 Choral Hymns; Magnificat; A Song of Thanksgiving; Psalm 100

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66569. Gielgud, Dawson, Kitchen, Wyn-Rogers, Mark Ainsley, Bowen, Thompson, Opie, Terfel, Best, Corydon Singers, L. Oratory Junior Ch., City of L. Sinfonia, Best

With Sir John Gielgud as narrator and Lynne Dawson as the sweet-toned soprano soloist, Best gives A Song of Thanksgiving a tautness and sense of drama, bringing out the originality of the writing, simple and stirring in its grandeur, not for a moment pompous. The Magnificat brings more buried treasure, a massive setting designed not for liturgical but for concert use. With its haunting ostinatos it is closer to Holst's choral music than most Vaughan Williams. The Three Hymns and the setting of Psalm 100 are comparably distinctive in their contrasted ways, and it is good to have a recording of the Bunyan setting, The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains. Most of the solo singing is excellent, and the chorus is superb, helped by warmly atmospheric recording.

The Sons of Light

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 270. Royal College of Music Ch., LPO, Willcocks – HOLST: The Mystic Trumpeter; PARRY: Ode on the Nativity ***

Composed for the Schools Music Association in 1951 and given its first performance at the Royal Albert Hall by massed school choirs under Sir Adrian Boult, The Sons of Light has been unfairly neglected. Its three sections set words by Ursula Vaughan Williams graphically and colourfully, starting with trumpet calls. Only marginally did the composer modify the tangy bluffness of his late idiom for young performers. In a strong and committed performance, it makes a valuable coupling for the Holst and Parry works.

The Wasps (complete recording of Aristophanes' play with Overture and incidental music; English translation by David Pountney)

🔑 Ⓜ * Hallé HLD 7510 (2). Goodman (nar.), Hallé Ch. & O, Elder

Vaughan Williams composed his score for Aristophanes' satirical comedy The Wasps for a production of the play in Greek at Cambridge University in 1909. Since then the justly famous Overture and a 1912 suite (admittedly containing almost all the best music) is all that has been heard of the score. But the choral writing itself is splendid, and the most ambitious part of the score is the Parabasis (a diatribe on human behaviour, drawing a parallel with the conduct of wasps, sung directly by the chorus to the audience).

The original play had three characters, but David Pountney's translation reduces the text to a narration from just one, Procleon, a 'curmudgeonly old codger, an old soldier, and a bigot', a part which Henry Goodman takes with relish. A full text is included, but if you do not want to repeat the dialogue it is cued separately; you can programme your player accordingly and just enjoy the superb singing and playing of the Hallé Chorus and Orchestra, vividly directed by Mark Elder, and excellently recorded. A major scoop for the Orchestra's own record label.

OPERA

A Cotswold Romance (adapted by Maurice Jacobson in collaboration with the composer from Hugh the Drover); Death of Tintagiles

 Chan. 9646. Mannion, Randle, Brook, LPO Ch., LSO, Hickox

This makes a splendid supplement to Hickox's outstanding recording of Vaughan Williams's last opera, The Pilgrim's Progress. Saddened towards the end of his life that his tuneful ballad opera, Hugh the Drover, was seriously neglected, he adapted some of the most winning sequences to produce this cantata, A Cotswold Romance, never recorded before. Even though some striking items from the opera are omitted, it helps that the role of the chorus is expanded, with the colour and vigour of the original enhanced. The Death of Tintagiles, even more neglected, is drawn from Vaughan Williams's incidental music for a Maeterlinck play, six dark and spare fragments anticipating later Vaughan Williams works.

Hugh the Drover (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22049 (2). Bottone, Evans, Walker, Van Allan, Opie, New L. Children's Ch., Corydon Singers & O, Best

Described as a ballad opera, Hugh the Drover uses folk-themes with full-throated Puccinian warmth. The Hyperion version in atmospheric digital sound offers a fresh, light view, resilient and urgent in the first act, hauntingly tender in the second. Rebecca Evans is superb as the heroine, Mary, with Bonaventura Bottone an amiable Hugh, only occasionally strained, well supported by a cast of generally fresh young singers.

The Poisoned Kiss (complete)

🔑  Chan. SACD 5020 (2); CD 10120 (2). Watson, Gilchrist, Helen Stephen, Williams, N. Davies, Collins, Adrian Partington Singers, BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Vaughan Williams began writing The Poisoned Kiss in 1927 yet it has been consistently neglected, not just in performance but on disc too, for this is its very first complete recording. It centres round a beautiful princess who lives on poison.

This recording helps towards rehabilitating the opera by eliminating virtually all the spoken dialogue, including it merely in the libretto, printed in shaded sections. Despite the irritations of the libretto, repeated hearings bring out how rich this score is in vintage Vaughan Williams inspiration. The inspiration never flags, charm predominating, with tenderly beautiful melodies like that in the Act I duet of Amaryllus and Tormentilla, Blue Larkspur in a Garden, and a surgingly emotional climax in the ensemble which crowns Act II, when their love leads passionately to the poisoned kiss and the threat of death to Amaryllus.

Janice Watson as Tormentilla sings with sweetness and warmth, while giving point to the literally poisonous side of the character, and James Gilchrist makes an ardent Amaryllus, with Pamela Helen Stephen as Angelica and Roderick Williams totally affecting in their love music, given many of the most charming moments of all. Neal Davies is firm and strong as the magician, Dipsacus, and, though the Empress does not arrive until Act III, she then dominates things, following the G&S tradition of formidable contraltos: in that role the veteran Anne Collins is aptly larger than life. The incidental trios of Hobgoblins and Mediums are also cast from strength with leading singers, the chorus is fresh and bright, and the BBC National Orchestra of Wales plays throughout with winning warmth. Outstandingly atmospheric recording, especially on SACD.

The Pilgrim's Progress (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Chan. 9625 (2). Finley, and soloists, ROHCG Ch. & O, Hickox

Richard Hickox not only brings out the visionary intensity of much of the writing – notably in the ideas drawn from the Fifth Symphony – but also the passion and urgency, pacing the music to bring out the underlying drama in heightened contrasts. As in his recording of that symphony, Hickox is masterly in moulding phrases to magnetize the ear, always a warm interpreter, reflected in the unfailing ardour of the Covent Garden Chorus and Orchestra. The big cast is a strong one, mainly of young singers, led by Gerald Finley as a firm, fresh-voiced Pilgrim, and with Peter Coleman-Wright introducing the opera strongly as John Bunyan. The Chandos recording is superb, spacious and atmospheric, with the many offstage effects beautifully balanced, yet with words always clear.

Riders to the Sea (DVD version)

Ⓝ  NVC Arts DVD 50-51442 9784-2-1 Walker, Brennan, Tynan, Mackey, R & TV Eireann Ch. & O, Thomson (with M. Murphy as J.M. Synge) (Director: Louis Lentin)

J.M. Synge lived on the Aran Islands, and was an onlooker for some of the tragic events on which his play is based. So it was appropriate for the opening of the present production of Vaughan Williams's opera to be introduced with a brief spoken scene featuring the author. The opera itself is short (44 minutes), succinct and emotionally harrowing. Sarah Walker's performance as the mother who has lost her husband and entire family of six sons to the sea is powerfully telling, dramatically and vocally and she receives fine support from the excellent cast. The music, including the closing lament, anticipates Vaughan Williams's later writing especially that for Scott of the Antarctic. The video presentation is simple with an excellent set, and Bryden Thomson's musical direction is thoroughly sympathetic.

Riders to the Sea (complete; CD version)

 Chan. 9392. Finnie, Daymond, Dawson, Attrot, Stephen, N. Sinfonia, Hickox – Flos campi, etc. ***

As in other Vaughan Williams works, Hickox takes a broad, warmly idiomatic view, less urgent than the previous EMI recording, more timeless and mysterious, helped by opulently atmospheric recording. He is helped too by an excellent cast. Even if Linda Finnie as the old woman, Maurya, who loses all her sons to the sea, cannot quite match Helen Watts on the original recording, her final monologue of lament and resignation provides a moving, deeply expressive culmination. Among the others, Karl Daymond as Bartley, the last son to drown, is a newcomer to note, as impressive here as he was in Hickox's recording of Purcell's Dido. The generous coupling adds to the disc's attractions.

Sir John in Love (complete)

🔑  Chan. 9928 (2). Maxwell, Gritton, Claycomb, Connolly, Owens, Padmore, Thompson, Best, Williams, Varcoe, Sinfonia Ch., Northern Sinf., Hickox

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66123-2 (2). Herincx, Bainbridge, Watts, English, Eathorne, Tear, John Alldis Ch., New Philh. O, M. Davies

As an opera this may not match Verdi's Falstaff in polish or sophistication, but in its more relaxed, more lyrical way it offers a comparably individual slant on Shakespeare, with the title, Sir John in Love, clearly indicating a different emphasis on the character of Falstaff.

In the casting the central strength of the Chandos set is the Falstaff of Donald Maxwell, with his full, dark bass fatter-sounding than that of Raimund Herincx. Susan Gritton is also outstanding as Anne, rich and golden, relishing the glorious duet she sings with Fenton in the very first scene, with Mark Padmore fresh and youthful too. Not all the others are as characterful as their predecessors, good as they are, as for example Laura Claycomb as Mistress Page. Yet the very large cast works together splendidly, with clear differentiation of the many extra characters that Vaughan Williams includes.

In the EMI set Meredith Davies relishes the colourfulness of the score. Raimund Herincx is a positive and sympathetic Falstaff, and Helen Watts as Mrs Quickly and Elizabeth Bainbridge as Mrs Ford rise ripely to the occasion. Wendy Eathorne as Anne Page and Robert Tear as Fenton make a delightful pair of lovers, and such singers as Gerald English as Dr Caius add to the stylishness. The 1974 Abbey Road recording is vivid and warmly atmospheric and beautifully balanced, and this is still very much worth considering at mid-price.

VEALE, John (born 1922)

Violin Concerto

🔑  Chan. 9910. Mordkovitch, BBC SO, Hickox – BRITTEN: Violin Concerto ***

Surgingly lyrical in a melodic idiom echoing Mahler on the one hand and Walton on the other, John Veale's Violin Concerto of 1984 makes an unusual, highly enjoyable coupling for Lydia Mordkovitch's searching account of the Britten. His development was strongly influenced by his consultations with Walton, and the vigorous finale of this concerto with its swinging Cuban rhythms directly echoes not only Walton but Lambert too. That prompts Mordkovitch to a dazzling performance, with Hickox drawing brilliant, vigorous playing from the BBC orchestra.

Yet the first two movements, both more expansive, are the ones that bear the main emotional weight, with Mordkovitch's passionate intensity heightening the impact. The central slow movement is entitled Lament, but the mood is sensuous rather than elegiac, with ecstatic outpouring of melody high above the stave from the soloist at the beginning and end, and with a passionate climax in the middle. A most rewarding coupling for the Britten for anyone who enjoys post-romantic writing, superbly recorded in the richest Chandos sound.

VECCHI, Orazio (1550–1605)

L'amfiparnaso (commedia harmonica)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553312. Cappella Musicale di Petronio di Bologna, Vartolo

Unlike Lassus, Vecchi, although earning his living as a maestro di capella in the church, leaned in his own music towards the secular. Described as a 'madrigal comedy', L'amfiparnaso, first performed in 1594, fascinatingly points forward to the development of opera as a new genre in the following decade. The text in a Prologue and three brief acts develops a comic plot stocked with commedia dell'arte characters, but, instead of solo voices representing different characters, here each scene is set as a madrigal for a small group of voices. Each madrigal, three in the first act, five in both the other two, is preceded by a brief spoken summary, the whole making up a taut entertainment that still sounds fresh and charming after 400 years. Much is owed to the liveliness of the Naxos performance, using a first-rate ensemble from Bologna under Sergio Vartolo. With splendidly crisp ensemble the singers consistently bring out the sharply rhythmic quality of Vecchi's writing, with clear, well-balanced sound. Full texts and an English translation are provided.

VERACINI, Francesco Maria (1690–1768)

Violin Concertos: a cinque in A & D; a otto stromenti in D; Aria schiavona in B flat for Orchestra (attrib.); Overture 5 in B flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553413. Accademia I Filarmonici (Verona), Martini

Veracini's Violin Concerto a otto stromenti is endearingly ambitious in its scoring, and the brilliant opening, with its two trumpets and oboes, must have made quite an impression when it was first heard in Venice in 1712. Tartini's influence is apparent. The decorative figurations in the outer movements rise and fall in scalic sequence. Some solo passages are left to the soloist to fill in and the unusual minor-key slow movement is very improvisatory in feeling.

The two earlier Concerti a cinque are more modest, closer to Vivaldi, although Veracini's own presence is very apparent at times and especially in the finale of the A major work. The Overture in B flat is one of the finest of the complete set discussed below, and the Aria schiavona is an engaging minuet lollipop, very gallant in feeling and almost certainly not by Veracini at all. First-class performances throughout with fine solo contributions, presumably from Alberto Martini, the leader of the Accademia I Filarmonici, which claims to have no conductor. The recording is excellent.

Overtures (Suites) 1–6

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553412. Accademia I Filarmonici (Verona), Martini

These overtures were composed for the Dresden court orchestra, probably around 1716. Their character brings a curious amalgam of Italian volatility and German weight, and they have something in common with the orchestral suites of Telemann. Yet Telemann loved instrumental light and shade, whereas Veracini favoured tutti scoring. The music is strong in personality and there is no shortage of ideas, but energy is more important than expressive lyricism, with usually a single brief sarabande to provide contrast as the centrepiece of up to half-a-dozen dance movements.

The Accademia I Filarmonici claim to use the original manuscripts, but they play on modern instruments, and their bright, gleaming sound is full of Italian sunshine. The performances are Italianate and they play the Sarabandes of 1 and 2 with an attractive air of relaxed graciousness, while the sparkling opening movement of 6 is made to seem almost a tarantella. So at Naxos price this could well be an attractive introduction to this composer.

12 Sonate accademiche, Op. 2

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44241/3 (3). Locatelli Trio

The 12 Sonate accademiche are much more Italianate than the overtures, though German influence remains strong. The writing has a rhapsodic exuberance and drive, and, as with the overtures, dance movements predominate. But there are touching lyrical interludes and some lovely slow movements. The last Sonata is masterly, opening with a descending minor scalic theme, which is first used for a Passacaglia, then for a Capriccio cromatico, and finally provides the basis for an ambitious closing Ciaccona. The Locatelli Trio, led by Elizabeth Wallfisch, are a first-class group, and their authentic style, strongly etched, is full of joy in the music's vitality, while the composer's lyrical side is most persuasively revealed. Paul Nicholson's continuo is very much a part of the picture, especially in the works using an organ, which is very pleasingly balanced. The recording is vivid and immediate.

VERDI, Giuseppe (1813–1901)

The Lady and the Fool (ballet suite; arr. Mackerras)

Ⓑ  CfP 3 93231-2. LPO, Mackerras – SULLIVAN: Pineapple Poll ***

The Lady and the Fool (ballet; arr. Mackerras); Overtures: Alzira; La forza del destino; Nabucco.

() Testament mono/stereo SBT 1326. Philh. O, Mackerras

Three of Verdi's finest overtures come in a coupling with the ballet score, The Lady and the Fool, which Mackerras drew from the lesser-known operas of Verdi. To choreography by John Cranko. Mackerras's aim was to follow up the brilliant success of his earlier ballet score, Pineapple Poll, which in a very similar way uses material drawn from Sullivan's operettas and other works. This is the only complete recording ever made, demonstrating what a superb sequel it is. Not only has Mackerras drawn on dozens of delectable Verdian ideas, he has woven them into a scintillating tapestry. The orchestration too is far more adventurous than the originals, while remaining broadly faithful to Verdi's distinctive timbre. Though the recording is in mono only, the sense of presence is most impressive, at least as vivid as in the stereo recordings of the three overtures which come as bonus to the 50-minute ballet, all of them combining brilliance and expressive warmth.

Those content with the Ballet Suite only can choose Mackerras's later stereo recording which is equally vivacious and appropriately coupled with Pineapple Poll.

Ballet Music from: (i) Il trovatore; I vespri siciliani; (ii) Otello; (i) Overture: Luisa Miller

() Testament (ADD) SBT 1327. Mackerras with (i) Philh. O; (ii) ROHCG O – PONCHIELLI: La Gioconda: Dance of the Hours ; WOLF-FERRARI: Overtures, Intermezzi and Dances ()

This mixed bag of Mackerras's recordings from the mid-1950s has as its centrepiece his brilliant recordings of the Luisa Miller Overture and three examples of the ballet music which Verdi provided for Paris productions of his operas. It is striking, even in the Otello ballet music with its orientalism, how Verdi regularly harks back to a much earlier, less sophisticated style than he uses in the main body of the opera in question, perhaps a reflection on Parisian taste. The results may have their banalities – even the more ambitious Four Seasons, written for the original production of Les Vêpres siciliennes – but Mackerras's springing of rhythm and the sparkle of the Philharmonia playing fully bring out their unassuming delights. He is helped by the finely balanced stereo sound in all but the Otello music, which curiously seems only ever to have been issued on a 45-r.p.m. EP.

Complete Overtures, Preludes and Ballet Music

Vol. 1: Overtures and Preludes: Alzira (overture); Attila (prelude); La battaglia di Legnano (overture); Il corsaro; I due Foscari; Ernani (preludes); Un giorno di regno (Il finto Stanislao); Giovanna d'Arco (overtures); Macbeth (prelude with ballet music); I Masnadieri (prelude); Nabucco; Oberto (overtures) (Chan. 9510)

Vol. 2: Jérusalem (overture and ballet music); Luisa Miller (overture); Rigoletto (prelude); Il trovatore (ballet music) (Chan. 9594)

Vol. 3: Un ballo in maschera (prelude); Simon Boccanegra (prelude: 1st version, 1857); La traviata (preludes to Acts I & III); Les Vêpres siciliennes: Ballet of the 4 Seasons (Chan. 9696)

Vol. 4: Aida (prelude for Cairo première, 1871; Overture for Italian première, 1872; 2 Dances & Act II ballet music); Don Carlos (prelude to Act III and ballet music: La peregrina); La forza del destino (prelude, 1862); Otello (ballet music, Act III) (Chan. 9788)

 BBC PO, Downes

Preludes, Overtures and Ballet Music (as above)

 Chan. 9787 (4). BBC PO, Downes

Overtures and Preludes: Aida; Alzira; Aroldo; Un ballo in maschera; La battaglia di Legnano; Il corsaro; Ernani; La forza del destino; Un giorno di regno; Giovanna d'Arco; Luisa Miller; Macbeth; I Masnadieri; Nabucco; Oberto; Rigoletto; La traviata; I vespri siciliani

(M)  DG 453 058-2 (2) BPO, Karajan

Karajan's 1975 complete set of Overtures and Preludes was one of the best analogue recordings made in the Philharmonie and the performances have an electricity, refinement and authority that sweep the board. The best known overtures are given with tremendous panache and virtuosity without the slightest suggestion of routine.

Overtures and Preludes: Aida (prelude); Alzira (sinfonia); Aroldo (sinfonia); Attila (prelude); Un ballo in maschera (prelude); Il corsaro (prelude); Luisa Miller (sinfonia); Oberto, Conte di San Bonifacio (sinfonia); La traviata (preludes to Acts I & III); I vespri siciliani (sinfonia)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553018. Hungarian State Op. O, Morandi

Overtures: Aida (reconstructed and arr. Spada); La forza del destino; I vespri siciliani

(BB)  RCA 74321 68012-2. LSO, Abbado – ROSSINI: Overtures ***

Overtures and Preludes: La battaglia di Legnano (sinfonia); Don Carlos (prelude to Act III); I due Foscari (prelude); Ernani (prelude); La forza del destino (sinfonia); Un giorno di regno (sinfonia); Giovanna d'Arco (sinfonia); Macbeth (sinfonia); I Masnadieri (prelude); Nabucco (overture); Rigoletto (prelude)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553089. Hungarian State Op. O, Morandi

Edward Downes's Verdi survey covers virtually all the overtures, preludes and ballet music, the latter full of charm when so elegantly played and beautifully recorded. Original versions are chosen where available, so we get the first 1857 score of the Prelude to Simon Boccanegra and the brief 1862 Overture to La forza del destino, rather than the familiar expanded, 1869 version. The outstanding novelty is Verdi's extended 1872 overture written for the Italian première of Aida. The shorter Prelude heard at the opera's Cairo première was substituted at the last moment. The 1872 piece was never heard of again. The ballet music was, of course, an essential requirement if a work was to be performed at the Paris Opéra. Verdi often rises to the occasion and produces charming, tuneful music, felicitously scored. In the suite from Il trovatore (an unlikely subject for a balletic diversion), the delightful third section, La Bohémienne, is worthy of Delibes in its use of the graceful violins and piquant woodwind. Not surprisingly Edward Downes has the full measure of this music. The finer Overtures are played with bold characterization and dramatic fire, Nabucco, with its dignified sonority, and Giovanna d'Arco both show the BBC Philharmonic brass at their finest in quite different ways, and Luisa Miller is another very strong performance. The strings play most beautifully in the Traviata Preludes. With such richly expansive recording, showing Chandos engineering at its most spectacular, the effect is less bitingly leonine than in Karajan's electrifying two-disc survey. But even if not all of this music is top-class Verdi, the Chandos set offers much to enjoy, and the spontaneity and elegance of the music-making are never in doubt.

Morandi has served his time conducting at La Scala and he gives ripely robust accounts of these colourful Overtures and sinfonias, with excellent playing from his Hungarian musicians, notably from the strings in the Traviata and Aida Preludes and from the brass in Nabucco. La forza del destino ends the second disc strongly. Full-bloodedly resonant sound (with the second collection at times marginally sharper in definition) makes this an excellent bargain, even if the readings are not as individual as those of Downes and Karajan.

Abbado also included the Overture which Verdi originally wrote for the first Italian performance of Aida. It is a considerably extended piece in Spada's reconstruction and one can hear why the composer decided against anticipating effects in instrumental terms far more telling in the full operatic setting. But heard independently it is most entertaining and deftly scored. Together with the other two familiar Overtures it is given a strong and brilliant performance with the conductor's magnetism felt not only in the pianissimo string playing but especially in the exciting account of La forza del destino. The sound is bright, but has supporting weight and a concert-hall resonance.

String Quartet in E min.

🔑 (M)  CRD 3366. Alberni Qt – DONIZETTI: Quartet 13; PUCCINI: Crisantemi ***

(M) (*) HM HMA 1951671. Melos Qt – SIBELIUS: String Quartet in D min. **(*)

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55012. Delmé Qt – RICHARD STRAUSS: Quartet **(*)

The Alberni Quartet's performance is strong and compelling, and it is most imaginatively and attractively coupled with the Puccini and Donizetti pieces.

The distinguished Melos ensemble give a suitably well-turned-out performance of the Verdi, though they tend to underplay its pure lyricism. We are not so well served in this repertoire at present that new Verdi Quartets can be lightly passed over. The recording is truthful but with the Voces intimae as its sole companion, the 50 minutes or so of this issue makes for relatively short measure.

The Delmé are not a 'high-powered', jet-setting ensemble and they give a very natural performance of the Verdi, which will give much pleasure: there is the sense of music-making in the home among intimate friends, refreshingly unforced, even if the sound is on the dry side.

String Quartet in E min. (arr. for string orchestra)

 Channel Classics SACD CCS SA 21504. Amsterdam Sinf., Thompson – TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir de Florence ***

The Amsterdam Sinfonietta, recording for the first time under its new name and with its new leader/conductor Candida Thompson, plays with phenomenal unanimity, demonstrating what gains there are in having a full string orchestra performing the Verdi String Quartet. As in the Tchaikovsky Souvenir de Florence, with which it is aptly coupled, speeds are ideally chosen, with the second movement clearly an Andantino, light and elegant, and the chattering quavers of the fugal finale shaped more clearly. The thrust and warmth of the performance is enhanced by the wide dynamic range of the playing, well caught in the opulent recording (with the option of surround sound).

CHORAL MUSIC

Messa per Rossini (includes VERDI's Libera me) (DVD version) (other composers contributing: BUZZOLA, BAZZINI, PEDROTTI, CAGNONI, RICCI, NINI, BOUCHERON, COCCIA, GASPARI, PLATANIA, ROSSI, MABELLINI)

 Warner DVD 50-51011 7396-2-0. Benačkova, Quivar, Wagner, Agache, Haugland, Stuttart Gächinger Kantorei, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Stuttgart RSO, Rilling

When Rossini died in 1868, Verdi conceived the idea of promoting a composite requiem in his memory, to which he would (and did) contribute the closing Libera me. But the rest was to be written by 'the best composers in Italy'. This splendid performance, recorded live in 1988 in Württemberg, shows how successfully he chose his colleagues, for, if none of the contributions matches his, all are impressively written in a winningly communicative Italianate, operatic style. Melodically fluent, with the choruses all stirring (Pietro Platania's lovely Sanctus particularly fine), the work stands up well, and this performance is very enjoyable indeed. While Helmuth Rilling takes much credit for directing his forces so powerfully and spontaneously, the soloists too make a fine team, with no weak link. Gabriella Benačkova (especially) and Florence Quivar are outstanding, singing together especially beautifully in Antonio Cagnoni's Quid sum miser, while the tenor James Wagner is very stirring in Alessandro Nini's Ingemisco. Each of the 13 composers wrote substantially, so the total timing is about two and a half hours! But the work is most rewarding to watch and to listen to, and Rilling makes sure that Verdi's finale is overwhelming.

Requiem Mass (DVD versions)

🔑 * EMI DVD DVB4 92693-9. Gheorghiu, Barcellona, Alagna, Konstantinov, Swedish Radio Ch., Eric Ericson Chamber Ch., BPO, Abbado

🔑  DG DVD 730 055. L. Price, Cossotto, Pavarotti, Ghiaurov, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 146. Price, Norman, Carreras, Raimondi, Edinburgh Fest. Ch., LSO, Abbado

The EMI DVD offers the video version, very well presented, of Abbado's superb live recording of the Verdi Requiem made at the Philharmonie in Berlin in January 2001 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the composer's death. The visual element adds significantly to the impact with the chorus full-toned and weighty, and with the four soloists an outstanding team of singers, all still young. The power and beauty of Gheorghiu's singing are even more striking when one can see as well as hear the vibrant intensity with which she attacks her key solos.

Karajan, for his performance at La Scala in 1967, chose the starriest possible quartet of soloists, and all four are at their peak, even the still-young Luciano Pavarotti, who, beardless, is barely recognizable visually, even if the voice is already glowingly distinctive. The firmness and focus of all four is a joy to the ear, and the 1967 recording is surprisingly full and bright, which makes it marginally more recommendable than Abbado's Edinburgh Festival recording, below. The great French film director Henri-Georges Clouzot is relatively conservative in his camerawork but regularly uses his shots for beautifully stylized pattern-making, with the members of the chorus and the orchestra often symmetrically placed.

As a performance, Abbado's earlier live DVD recording, made for television at the Edinburgh Festival in 1982, outshines his regular audio recordings of the Requiem, not least thanks to the extraordinary line-up of soloists, with Jessye Norman taking the mezzo role against Margaret Price as the soprano. All four soloists are in superb voice, with Ruggiero Raimondi almost sinister in Mors stupebit when viewed in close-up, his villainous expressions projected, quite apart from the power and precision of his singing. Similarly, José Carreras has never sounded more powerful, with the big solo Ingemisco flawlessly delivered. Jessye Norman sings gloriously too, in such solos as the Liber scriptus and the Recordare, and she makes a fine match with Margaret Price in their duetting, equally firm and secure, distinct yet blended.

Yet it is Margaret Price who crowns the whole performance in the final Libera me, deeply moving and keenly dramatic, the more so when seen in close-up. The Edinburgh Festival Chorus sing as though possessed, and Abbado draws passionate playing from the LSO, with none of the coolness that can mark this conductor's work in the studio. The sound cannot match the finest modern recordings, and it is not helped by the dryness of the Usher Hall, where the performance was recorded, but, as transferred to DVD, the result is still full and vivid, with powerful impact.

Requiem Mass (CD versions)

🔑 * Chan. 9490. Crider, Hatziano, Sade, Lloyd, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

🔑 Ⓜ () DG mono 447 442-2. Stader, Radev, Krebs, Borg, St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch., Berlin RIAS O, Fricsay

(*) Ph. 468 079-2 (2). Fleming, Borodina, Bocelli, d'Arcangelo, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev

Ⓜ (*) RCA 82876 62318-2 (2). L. Price, J. Baker, Luchetti, van Dam, Chicago Symphony Ch. & O, Solti

(i) Requiem Mass; (ii) 4 Sacred Pieces

🔑 * Ph. 442 142-2 (2). (i) Orgonasova, von Otter, Canonici, Miles; (ii) D. Brown; Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 7735 (2). (i) Sutherland, Horne, Pavarotti, Talvela; VPO, Solti

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 67560-2. (i) Schwarzkopf, Ludwig, Gedda, Ghiaurov; (ii) J. Baker; Philh. Ch. & O, Giulini

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 467 119-2 (2). (i) L. Price, Elias, Björling, Tozzi, V. Musikverein, VPO, Reiner; (ii) Minton, Los Angeles Master Ch., LAPO, Mehta

Requiem Mass. La forza del destino: Overture

((*)) BBC Legends mono BBCL 4144-2 (2). (i) Ligabue, Bumbry, Kónya, Arié, Philh. Ch.; Philh. O, Giulini (also Interview: Giulini in Conversation wih Michael Oliver)

(i) Requiem Mass. Choruses from: Aida; Don Carlo; Macbeth; Nabucco; Otello

🔑  Telarc CD 80152 (2). (i) Dunn, Curry, Hadley, Plishka; Atlanta Ch. & SO, Shaw

It says much for Richard Hickox's recording for Chandos with the LSO and London Symphony Chorus that in important ways – not just practically as the only modern single-disc version – it marked the first of a new generation of readings of Verdi's choral masterpiece. His pacing flows more freely than has become the rule in latterday performances, yet there is never a feeling of haste, simply of heightened intensity when his control of rubato and phrase is so warmly idiomatic. These are very much the speeds which made the vintage Serafin recording of 1939 so compelling, but with singing from the London Symphony Chorus infinitely finer than that of Serafin's Italian chorus. In their fire they rival Giulini's classic Philharmonia set, even outshining that in luminosity, thanks in part to the spacious and full recording which, in a reverberant church acoustic, yet reveals ample detail. The warm-toned soprano, Michele Crider, has a glorious chest register, and the mezzo, Markella Hatziano, is equally warm and characterful, while the tenor, Gabriel Sade, sings with clear, heady beauty, not least in a radiant Ingemisco, and Robert Lloyd gives one of his noblest, most commanding performances. A winning set in every way.

Gardiner, using period forces, is searingly dramatic and superbly recorded, with fine detail, combining transparent textures, weight and atmospheric bloom. It can still be recommended as a fine alternative among modern digital recordings even to collectors not drawn to period performance. The soloists make a characterful quartet, with the vibrant Orgonasova set against the rock-steady Von Otter, and with Canonici bringing welcome Italianate colourings to the tenor role. The Four Sacred Pieces are equally revealing. The longest and most complex, the final Te Deum, is the most successful of all, marked by thrillingly dramatic contrasts, as in the fortissimo cries of 'Sanctus'.

Giulini's performances of the Verdi Requiem in the early 1960s have become legendary, electrifying occasions that led to a benchmark studio recording of 1964. Here the BBC Legends series puts an important gloss on that in offering a Prom recording of 1963, even more dramatically involving for the extra spontaneity of a live performance. The stereo sound is first-rate, and though the British soloists may not be such stars as their studio counterparts, they sing beautifully, with firm, clear tone. The Schubert Mass, recorded at the Edinburgh Festival of 1968, makes a welcome and generous coupling (BBCL 4029-3).

Six months later Giulini performed the Requiem once more, again with Philharmonia forces, but this time at the Royal Festival Hall and with a starrier international quartet of soloists. This second live recording comes as a valuable supplement, though it hardly replaces the earlier BBC version. Sadly, it comes in mono only, with the dry Festival Hall acoustic unhelpful, not nearly as warm or atmospheric as the stereo recording from the Prom. The biting drama of Giulini's performance comes over thrillingly, but with some harshness in such passages as the Dies irae, and, though the singing of the international quartet is more strongly characterized than that of the fine British one at the Prom, they are no more imaginative. The Overture makes a good supplement, and Michael Oliver's interview with Giulini on the subject of recording is more valuable still (how easy to create a 'beautiful corpse' in the studio, he says), but the extras on the rival BBC version are much more generous.

Robert Shaw, in the finest of his Atlanta recordings, may not have quite the same searing electricity as Toscanini's classic NBC recording (for which he trained the chorus), but it regularly echoes it in power and the well-calculated pacing. In the Dies irae, for example, like Toscanini he gains in thrust and power from a speed marginally slower than usual. With sound of spectacular quality, beautifully balanced and clear, the many felicities of the performance, not least the electricity of the choral singing and the consistency of the solo singing, add up to an exceptionally satisfying reading. The fill-up of five Verdi opera choruses is colourful, and again brings superb choral singing.

Fricsay's superb earlier mono studio recording of Verdi's Requiem caused a sensation when it first appeared on LP in 1954. This makes a worthy reissue in DG's 'Legendary Recordings' series, with the full, spacious mono recording already showing that the DG engineers, using mono techniques, could achieve a combination of clarity and atmosphere. The solo team is first class with the contribution of Kim Borg standing out, as in the live performance.

Recorded during the Kirov Company's visit to Covent Garden in 2000, Gergiev's reading is one of high contrasts. Though the chorus often sounds misty and distant in hushed passages, the fervour of the singing is never in doubt in the big dramatic moments, as in the opening of the Dies irae. Yet what above all makes a powerful impact is the orchestra recorded close, so that the instrumental fire of the Dies irae has rarely come over so vividly, complete with shattering bass drum. Renée Fleming and Olga Borodina could hardly be bettered as the two women soloists, both characterful and well-contrasted, yet with a fine blend in their duets. Andrea Bocelli produces a fine flow of sweet tenor-tone controlling the Ingemisco well, if at times with excessive portamento, but Ildebrando d'Arcangelo sounds rather underpowered in the bass role.

What Giulini on EMI proved was that refinement added to power can provide an even more intense experience than the traditional Italian approach. The array of soloists could hardly be bettered. Schwarzkopf caresses each phrase, and the exactness of her voice matches the firm mezzo of Christa Ludwig in their difficult octave passages. Gedda is at his most reliable, and Ghiaurov with his really dark bass actually manages to sing the almost impossible Mors stupebit in tune without a suspicion of wobble. Giulini's set also finds space to include the Four Sacred Pieces in polished and dramatic performances which bring out the element of greatness in often uneven works. This has been carefully remastered as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' but the otherwise excellent new transfer of the 1963/4 recording still reveals roughness in heavy climaxes of the Dies irae in the Requiem.

Reiner's opening of the Requiem is very slow and atmospheric. He takes the music at something like half the speed of Toscanini and shapes everything very carefully. Yet as the work proceeds the performance soon sparks into life, and there is some superb and memorable singing from a distinguished team of soloists. The recording has a spectacularly wide dynamic range, and, with the chorus singing fervently, the Dies irae is overwhelming. Mehta's performance of the Sacred Pieces is enhanced by brilliant, sharply focused recording.

Solti's Decca performance, now reissued as one of Universal's series of Originals, is not really a rival to any other. He plays up the dramatic side of the work at the expense of the spiritual, his conception very operatic. The team of soloists is strong, so if you want an extrovert performance with spectacular recording, you could hardly do better.

On RCA, with an unusually sensitive and pure-toned quartet of soloists – Luchetti perhaps not as characterful as the others, Leontyne Price occasionally showing strain – and with superb choral singing and orchestral playing, Solti's 1977 Chicago version has all the ingredients for success. The set is well worth having for Dame Janet Baker's deeply sensitive singing, but the remastered recording – less than ideally balanced – tends to be fierce on climaxes; and in other ways too, Solti's earlier Decca/Vienna set is preferable.

Te Deum (from Quattro pezzi sacri)

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89128-2. Soloists, Bielefeld Musikvereins Ch., Philh. Hungarica, Stephani – BRUCKNER: Te Deum ***

Although Verdi's Te Deum was published as the last of the Four Sacred Pieces, Verdi did not expect them to be performed as a group, and the Te Deum for double chorus makes a fine independent work. The choral singing is first class, the brass resplendent and the conductor, Martin Stephani, keeps everyone on their toes. The recording has a warmly resonant acoustic against which the singing projects thrillingly. Aptly coupled with Bruckner's much more devotional setting, this can be strongly recommended, especially at such a modest cost. Text and translation are included.

OPERA

Aida (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  DG DVD 073 001-9. Millo, Domingo, Zajick, Milnes, Burchuladze, Kavrakos, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

🔑 ✿ * NVC Arts DVD 0630 198389-2. Chiara, Cossotto, Martinucci, Scandola, Zanazzo, Ch., O & Corps de Ballet of Verona Arena, Guadagno (Producer: Giancarlo Sbragia, V/D: Brian Large)

Recorded live at the Metropolitan in New York in October 1988, James Levine's powerful and starrily cast DVD of Aida brings a grandly traditional staging. The sets and costumes are so lavish that the unveiling of the same scene in Act II prompts enthusiastic applause. In that same scene Plácido Domingo is encumbered not only with his golden armour but with a ridiculously tall egg-shaped headdress. Yet he still manages to sing superbly throughout, a believable hero, and though Aprile Millo has her edgy moments, her poise as well as her power are impressive, not least in the Nile Scene. Dolora Zajick is a vibrant, powerful Amneris, and Sherrill Milnes, only just past his peak, is a magnificent Amonasro. Luxury casting brings Paata Burchuladze in as Ramfis, though Dimitri Kavrakos is less impressive as the King. Levine is in his element, drawing warm and dramatic playing and singing from his formidable team at the Met. Good, bright sound.

Recorded in the Verona Arena, from which we have already had a splendid Tosca, the spectacle of Aida with its dignified Triumphal March (with a surprise at the climax) is ideal for the spaciousness available, and Vittorio Rossi has designed a wonderful set, geometrically based round a pyramid to provide a satisfying backcloth. But the singing is superb. Maria Chiara sings gloriously in the title-role and never more affectingly than in the great closing duet. Fiorenza Cossotto is a memorable foil as Amneris, Nicola Martinucci is a properly heroic Radames, with a strong voice to match a striking presence, and the others complete a fine team, with Amonasro (Giuseppe Scandola) standing out. Brian Large deals with the huge set by varying between long shots and intimate close-ups for the main solos and duets. Anton Guadagno conducts with consistent vitality, the ballet is visually pleasing, and the huge chorus is very impressive indeed. The excellent stereo brings out the antiphonal trumpets in the March, yet strangely the camera fails to do so. Nevertheless, this is both vocally and visually a feast, and the applause is fully acceptable in the context of a live performance so powerful and finely sung by all concerned.

Aida (complete; CD versions)

🔑 (B) * EMI (ADD) 3 81877-2 (3). Freni, Carreras, Baltsa, Cappuccilli, Raimondi, van Dam, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111240/1 (2). Callas, Barbieri, Tucker, Gobbi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

🔑 (BB) () Regis mono RRC 1074 (2). Callas, Barbieri, Tucker, Gobbi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

🔑 (B)  Double Decca (ADD) 460 765-2 (2). L. Price, Gorr, Vickers, Merrill, Tozzi, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Solti

🔑 (M)  Decca (ADD) 475 8240 (3). Tebaldi, Simionato, Bergonzi, MacNeil, van Mill, Corena, V. Singverein, VPO, Karajan

() Testament (mono) SBT2 1355 (2). Callas, Baum, Simionato, Walters, Neri, ROHCG Ch. & O, Barbirolli

(BB) () Naxos 8.110156/7. Caniglia, Gigli, Tajo, Stignani, Bechi, Pasero, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Serafin

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 56316-2 (2). Callas, Tucker, Barbieri, Gobbi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

On EMI, Karajan's is a performance of Aida full of splendour and pageantry, which is yet fundamentally lyrical. On disc there is no feeling of Freni lacking power even in a role normally given to a larger voice, and there is ample gain in the tender beauty of her singing. Carreras makes a fresh, sensitive Radames, Raimondi a darkly intense Ramfis and van Dam a cleanly focused King, his relative lightness no drawback. Cappuccilli gives a finely detailed performance as Amonasro, while Baltsa as Amneris crowns the whole performance with her fine, incisive singing. Despite some overbrightness on cymbals and trumpet, the Vienna Orchestra's sound for Karajan, as transferred to CD, is richly atmospheric, both in the intimate scenes and, most strikingly, in the scenes of pageant, reflecting the Salzburg Festival production which was linked to the recording. The set has been attractively re-packaged and remains a first choice, irrespective of price.

Leontyne Price is an outstandingly assured Aida on Decca, rich, accurate and imaginative, while Solti's direction is superbly dramatic, notably in the Nile Scene. Merrill is a richly secure Amonasro, Rita Gorr a characterful Amneris, and Jon Vickers is splendidly heroic as Radames. Though the digital transfer betrays the age of the recording (1962), making the result fierce at times to match the reading, Solti's version otherwise brings full, spacious sound, finer, more open and with greater sense of presence than most versions since. As a Double Decca reissue this is a formidable bargain, and the new-style cued synopsis with 'listening guide' is a fair substitute for a full libretto.

On Decca, as on EMI, Karajan was helped by having a Viennese Orchestra and Chorus; but most important of all is the musical teamwork of his soloists. Bergonzi in particular emerges here as a model among tenors, with a rare feeling for the shaping of phrases and attention to detail. Cornell MacNeil too is splendid. Tebaldi's creamy tone-colour rides beautifully over the phrases and she too acquires a new depth of imagination. Among the other soloists Arnold van Mill and Fernando Corena are both superb, and Simionato provides one of the finest portrayals of Amneris. The recording has long been famous for its technical bravura and flair. It has now been impressively remastered for Decca's current Legend series, and remains a remarkable technical achievement.

This is arguably the finest commercial recording of an opera that Maria Callas ever made. With her portrayal of the Ethiopian princess wonderfully intense, opposite the masterfully dramatic Tito Gobbi as her father, Amonasro, this readily matches their similar partnership in Puccini's Tosca. Their duet at the climax of the Nile Scene, following on Aida's big aria, O patria mia, has never been matched, and though Callas's top notes are not quite as firm as they had been in her live Covent Garden recording of two years earlier under Barbirolli (Testament), few will resist. Though Richard Tucker as Radames is not the subtlest of tenors, his is a fine, heroic performance, and Fedora Barbieri is an impressive Amneris. The mono sound is clear and generally well balanced in Mark Obert-Thorn's excellent transfer. But the Regis transfer (by Tony Watts) is pretty sophisticated too. In the first Act it sounds remarkably full, with the solo voices splendidly caught (especially Callas's) and, while Gloria all'Egitto remains two-dimensional, overall there is no lack of atmospheric warmth. Both sets include cued libretti and you could be happy with either. But one or other is essential.

It was in 1953, during the Coronation season at Covent Garden, that Callas took the title-role in Verdi's Aida, with John Barbirolli conducting; as this CD set of the live broadcast vividly demonstrates, it was in many ways a performance that outshines almost all her studio recordings, with the stage atmosphere well caught. Barbirolli too is a winningly warm and sympathetic Verdian. The Czech tenor Kurt Baum, as Radames, may not have an Italianate voice, but he sings clearly, without strain or exaggeration, and Giulietta Simionato is a superb Amneris, searingly powerful. As Amonasro, the American baritone Jess Walters sings firmly and incisively, with Giulio Neri as Ramfis and Michael Langdon as the King both excellent. As a curiosity, the tiny role of the Priestess who sings off-stage at the start of the second scene is taken by the young Joan Sutherland, sounding very distant but perfectly identifiable.

Serafin's 78-r.p.m. version was recorded in July 1948, the last of the complete opera sets from HMV that featured Beniamino Gigli as the hero. It is an electrifying performance, with Serafin at his most magnetic leading an outstanding cast of principals, all with voices firm and true. Heralded by trumpets that vividly leap out of the speakers, Gigli launches into Celeste Aida at the start with a clarity and bravura that mark his whole performance. Maria Caniglia in the title role is at her very finest, using the widest range of expression, a fire-eater who knows tenderness too, while Gino Bechi is a superbly sinister Amonasro with a natural snarl in the voice. The others characterize strongly too, with the close balance of the voices and relative dryness of acoustic vividly bringing out words and expression. The transfers by Ward Marston are outstanding, making this one of the very finest of the impressive Naxos historic opera series.

The Nile Scene has never been performed more powerfully and characterfully on record than in this vintage La Scala set. Though Callas is not a sweet-toned Aida, her detailed imagination is irresistible, and she is matched by Tito Gobbi at the very height of his powers. Tucker gives one of his very finest performances on record, and Barbieri is a commanding Amneris. The mono sound is greatly improved in the latest transfer, but this remains at full price.

Aida (highlights)

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 1283. Price, Gorr, Clabassi, Vickers, Merrill, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Solti

This is an expanded highlights CD from Solti's superb Aida from the early 1960s. All excerpts have been chosen with care and this classic recording is self-recommending. The remastering for this Australian Decca release is superb, bringing out all the dramatic qualities of both the performance and recordings very vividly indeed.

Aida (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3074 (2). Eaglen, Plowright, O'Neill, Yurisich, Rose, Alistair, Miles, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

Central to the Chandos set's success is the formidable assumption of the title role by Jane Eaglen, here sounding more comfortable singing in English than she often has in international original-language recordings. The voice is rich and warm, better focused than it often has been, with fearless attack above the stave, and fine poise in reflective moments. After his strenuous start O'Neill sings most sensitively, so that even by the end of his first aria he achieves a quiet top B flat such as Verdi wanted, and sustains it impressively using a head-voice. Rosalind Plowright, gravitating down to the mezzo register, makes a suitably fruity and vehement Amneris, not quite steady enough, with Gregory Yurisich an incisive Amonasro, and Peter Rose and Alastair Miles strongly cast as Pharaoh and Ramfis respectively. Though David Parry does not always keep dramatic tensions as taut as they might be, the rich and vividly atmospheric Chandos sound regularly compensates.

Alzira (complete)

 Orfeo (ADD) CO 57832 (2). Cotrubas, Araiza, Bruson, Rootering, Bav. R. Ch., Munich RO, Gardelli

Alzira, dating from 1845, is at once the least cherished and the most compact of Verdi's operas, yet on disc, when brevity is often an asset, it emerges as far from perfunctory. Indeed, it can stand comparison with any of the other operas Verdi wrote in his years 'in the galleys'. Gardelli recorded the piece for Orfeo with an excellent cast, helped by warm and well-balanced recording supervised by Munich Radio engineers, with Cotrubas flexible in coloratura, Francisco Araiza as the Inca hero, Zamoro, and Renato Bruson as Gusmano, Governor of Peru. Though the Orfeo recording is excellent, the earlier, deleted Philips set was finer on all counts.

Attila (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD 09478 03010. Ramey, Zancanaro, Studer, Kaludov, Gavazzi, Luperi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. and O, Muti

The 1991 production of Attila from La Scala with Riccardo Muti taut and incisive in this strong, compact piece is outstandingly dramatic. It helps that the chorus takes a vital part, rather as it does in the even earlier Nabucco. There are also anticipations of later Verdi operas like Rigoletto, notably in the storm scene. The relative brevity of the piece, with one key number following promptly on another, makes a strong impact on DVD, in a production with traditional costumes and using minimal but atmospheric sets. Samuel Ramey in the title-role and and Giorgio Zancanaro as the Roman general, Ezio, both at their peak, in their nicely contrasted ways firm and dark, are ideally cast, with Cheryl Studer also outstanding as Odabella.

Attila (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. (ADD) 475 6786-2 (2). Raimondi, Deutekom, Bergonzi, Milnes, Amb. S., Finchley Children's Music Group, RPO, Gardelli

With its dramatic anticipations of Macbeth and musical ones of Rigoletto, and the compression which (on record if not on the stage) becomes a positive merit, Attila, in a fine performance under Gardelli on this Philips set, is an intensely enjoyable experience. Deutekom, not a sweet-toned soprano, has never sung better on record, and the rest of the cast is outstandingly good. The 1973 recording is well balanced and atmospheric, and this reissue in the Classic Opera series comes with a full libretto.

Un ballo in maschera (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3227 (2). Pavarotti, Ricciarelli, Quilico, Blegen, Berini, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Patanè (Producer: Elijah Moshinsky, V/D: Brian Large)

🔑 * EuroArts DVD 2055 108. Pisapia, Vassallo, Talgi, Chiuri, You, Leipzig Op. Ch. & ballet, Leipzig GO, Chailly (Dir: Ermanno Olmi, V/D: Don Kent)

This 1980 live performance is another of the productions from the New York Met. to show Pavarotti at his very finest, both as singer and actor. (His dying scene of forgiveness is especially telling.) He is in splendid voice as Riccardo and is partnered by Katia Ricciarelli as Amelia, also at her finest, and looking ravishing. Their great love-duet in Act II is gloriously sung and Patanè rises to the occasion and creates a richly romantic orchestral outburst, all but anticipating Puccini. Among the others in this superb cast, Judith Blegen is a delightful Oscar, with sparkling coloratura, and Bianca Berini an unforgettable fortune-teller (Ulrica) virtually stealing the scenes in which she appears (with her eyes as well as her voice). Louis Quilico make an effectively agonized Renato, Amelia's unfortunate husband. The costumes are traditional, the sets practical. Patanè conducts throughout with flair and Brian Large's video direction could hardly be bettered. Highly recommended.

Ermanno Olmi's production offers traditional costumes and stylized sets, though visually the tenor, Massimilliano Pisapia, taking the role of Riccardo, is not helped by an unbecoming high collar in Act I which exaggerates his absence of neck. What matters is that he has a cleanly focused, agile voice, revealing few signs of strain, and bringing out the fun in the role. Chiara Talgi as Amelia has a pure, warm soprano, finely controlled in her legato singing, and Franco Vassallo sings magnificently, making his defying aria, Eri tu, a powerful climax, helped by Riccardo Chailly's inspired conducting. Ein Yee You is brilliant in the trouser role of Oscar the page; and as the witch, Ulrica, Anna-Maria Chiuri sings with a tough, throaty contralto, characterful but not quite steady. The Leipzig Opera Ballet adds effectively to the final Ball Scene.

Un ballo in maschera (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Double 453 148-2 (2). Ricciarelli, Domingo, Bruson, Obraztsova, Gruberová, Raimondi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Abbado

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 477 5641 (2). Domingo, Barstow, Nucci, Quivar, Jo, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Karajan

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111278/9. Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Ratti, Barbieri, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto

🔑 () EMI mono 5 56320-2 (2). Callas, di Stefano, Gobbi, Ratti, Barbieri, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 8278 (2). Bergonzi, MacNeil, Nilsson, Simionato, Krause, Corena, Santa Cecilia Ch. & O, Solti

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (IMS) (ADD) 460 762-2 (2). Tebaldi, Pavarotti, Milnes, Resnik, Donath, St Cecilia Academy, Rome, Ch. & O, Bartoletti

Ⓝ ((*)) ROH Heritage mono ROHS 009 (2). Vickers, Shuard, Bastianini, Resnik, Carlyle, ROHCG Ch. & O, Downes

Abbado's powerful reading, admirably paced and with a splendid feeling for the sparkle of the comedy, remains highly recommendable at bargain price. The cast is very strong, with Ricciarelli at her very finest and Domingo sweeter of tone and more deft of characterization than on the Muti set of five years earlier. Bruson as the wronged husband Renato (a role he also takes for Solti) sings magnificently, and only Obraztsova as Ulrica and Gruberová as Oscar are less consistently convincing. The analogue recording clearly separates the voices and instruments in different acoustics, which, though distracting at first, brings the drama closer.

Recorded in Vienna early in 1989, Un ballo in maschera was Karajan's last opera recording. Standing out vocally is the Gustave of Plácido Domingo, strong and imaginative, dominating the whole cast. Josephine Barstow as Amelia certainly makes for a striking and characterful performance, even if it is flawed vocally, with the tone growing raw under pressure. Nevertheless, this is Barstow's finest achievement on record, and she is most compelling dramatically. Leo Nucci, though not as rough in tone as in some of his other recent recordings, is over-emphatic, with poor legato in his great solo, Eri tu. Sumi Jo, a Karajan discovery, gives a delicious performance as Oscar, the page, coping splendidly with Karajan's slow speed for her Act I solo. Florence Quivar produces satisfyingly rich tone as Ulrica. Though the sound is not as cleanly focused as in the Decca recording for Solti, it is warm and full.

Votto's 1956 mono recording, with voices set close but with a fair amount of space round them, is among the best of the sets with Callas from La Scala, and the CD focuses its qualities the more sharply. Cast from strength, with all the principals – notably Gobbi and Giuseppe di Stefano – on top form, this is indispensable for Callas's admirers.

However, Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer for Naxos immaculately preserves the recording with plenty of bloom on the voices, and there seems no reason to prefer the EMI set which is still at full price, especially when the Naxos documentation is excellent.

The Guide has always been rather rude about the 1961 Decca performance, but listening to it again calls for re-assessment. There are far too many good points, not least in terms of sheer voice – where would you find singers like this today? Birgit Nilsson may not sound totally idiomatic in Verdi, but the voice is glorious and she is far from the cold performer which she has sometimes been accused of being. Simionato is full of character, MacNeil is warmly impressive, and all the smaller parts have been cast with excellent singers, notably Fernando Corena and Tom Krause. Carlo Bergonzi is a stylish Verdian as always. Solti's lively conducting suits the vivid and theatrical Decca recording. Texts and translations included.

The main interest in the earlier Decca set rests in the pairing of Tebaldi and Pavorotti. The latter was in young, vibrant voice but Tebaldi made her recording in the full maturity of her career. She gives a commanding performance, but there is no mistaking that her voice here is not as even as it once was. The supporting cast is strong, not only Milnes as Renato and Donath as Oscar, but Resnik a dark-voiced Ulrica. Bartoletti directs the proceedings dramatically, and the (1970) Decca recording remains strikingly vivid and atmospheric. Now reissued as a Double Decca with new-style cued synopsis, this makes a good bargain recommendation.

Jon Vickers is unquestionably the star of this 1962 Covent Garden performance. Amy Shuard is unmemorable and Bastianini fails to meet full expectations. Overall not as exciting as expected; and why was a 1962 performance not recorded in stereo?

La battaglia di Legnano (complete; CD version)

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8694 (2). Ricciarelli, Carreras, Manuguerra, Ghiuselev, Austrian R. Ch. & O, Gardelli

La battaglia di Legnano is a compact, sharply conceived piece, made the more intense by the subject's obvious relationship with the situation in Verdi's own time. One weakness is that the villainy is not effectively personalized, but the juxtaposition of the individual drama of supposed infidelity against a patriotic theme brings most effective musical contrasts. Gardelli directs a fine performance, helped by a strong cast of principals, with Carreras, Ricciarelli and Manuguerra all at their finest. Excellent recording.

Il Corsaro (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. 475 6769 (2). Norman, Caballé, Carreras, Grant, Mastromei, Noble, Amb. S., New Philh. O, Gardelli

In Il Corsaro, although the characterization is rudimentary, the contrast between the two heroines is effective, with Gulnara, the Pasha's slave, carrying conviction in the coup de foudre which has her promptly worshipping the Corsair, an early example of the Rudolph Valentino figure. The rival heroines are splendidly taken here, with Jessye Norman as the faithful wife, Medora, actually upstaging Montserrat Caballé as Gulnara. Gardelli directs a vivid performance, with fine singing from the hero, portrayed by José Carreras. Gian-Piero Mastromei, not rich in tone, still rises to the challenge of the Pasha's music. Excellent, firmly focused and well-balanced, mid-1970s Philips sound, well transferred in this mid-priced reissue, with full libretto included.

Don Carlos (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Warner DVD 0630 16318-2. Alagna, Hampson, van Dam, Mattila, Meier, Halfvarson, Théâtre du Châtelet Ch., O de Paris, Pappano

TDK DVD DVWW OPCARLOS. Miles, Vargas, Skovhus, Tamar, Michael, V. State Op. Ch. & O, De Billy (Dir: Peter Kowitschny, V/D: Anton Reizenstein)

This fine Warner issue provides one of the clearest instances where DVD scores on almost every level over the equivalent CD set. Here you have a full three and half hours of music on a single disc, as against the three-CD set from EMI. The sound on DVD may be marginally less full than on CD, but it would take someone with an exceptional ear to feel short-changed. The chorus is rather less crisply disciplined in places, but rises splendidly to the big challenge of the Auto da fé scene of Act III. And where too many DVDs skimp on the number of index points, this one follows the normal CD practice of having them at every crucial point.

All that plus the advantage of having a visual presentation of Luc Bondy's production. Though the sets are simple and stylized, the production never gets in the way of the music, with the costumes of Moidele Bickel (coloured black, white or crimson) close enough to 17th-century fashion not to distract from the drama. The score is tautly and warmly presented, as on CD, by Antonio Pappano and the principals are as fine a team as have ever been assembled for this opera on disc – here using the original French text and the full five-act score complete with Fontainebleau scene. Karita Mattila gives the most masterly performance as the Queen, with one inspired passage after another culminating in a supreme account of her Act V aria. Roberto Alagna is in superb voice too, firm and heroic, well-matched against Thomas Hampson, noble as Rodrigo. José van Dam may not have the deep bass normal for the role of Philip II, but having a more lyrical voice brings compensating assets, and he contrasts well with the Grand Inquisitor of Eric Halfvarson. An outstanding issue.

While Bertrand De Billy conducts his Viennese forces with conviction and the singing on the TDK set is often impressive, the cast is a good deal more than adequate; sample the famous duet between Don Carlos and King Philip (Ramón Vargas and Alastair Miles). But the production is a travesty, mirroring modern political chicanery, with secret police wearing dark glasses and hitting out with clubs; and the unpleasant action comes right out into the theatre. The set is white and square, the costumes are mixed, both ancient and modern, and there is much else besides that has no connection with Verdi. There is even booing from the audience – and rightly so. How can stage directors get away with such rubbish! Keep away.

Don Carlos (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 56152-2 (3). Alagna, van Dam, Hampson, Mattila, Meier, Ch. de Théâtre du Châtelet, O de Paris, Pappano

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 7 69304-2 (3). Carreras, Freni, Ghiaurov, Baltsa, Cappuccilli, Raimondi, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67401-2 (3) [567397]. Domingo, Caballé, Raimondi, Verrett, Milnes, Amb. Op. Ch., ROHCG O, Giulini

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 478 0345 (3). Tebaldi, Bergonzi, Bumbry, Fischer-Dieskau, Ghiaurov, ROHCG Ch. & O, Solti

(*) DG 415 316-2 (4). Ricciarelli, Domingo, Valentini Terrani, Nucci, Raimondi, Ghiaurov, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Abbado

Ⓜ () ROH mono RPHS 003 (3). Vickers, Brouwenstijn, Barbieri, Gobbi, Christoff, ROHCG Ch. & O, Giulini

Ⓜ (*) EMI 3 58631-2 (3). Pavarotti, Conti, Ramey, Dessi, D'Intino, Anisimov, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8111132/4 (3). Filippeschi, Stella, Nicolai, Gobbi, Christoff, Rome Opera Ch. & O, Santini (with bonus: historical duets and arias from Don Carlo from Bjorling & Merrill, Pinza, Marian Anderson, Battistini & Seinmeyer)

(BB) ((*)) Regis mono RRC 3011 (3). Filippeschi, Stella, Nicolai, Gobbi, Christoff, Rome Opera Ch. & O, Santini (with bonus: excerpts from Don Carlo (Bjoerling & Merrill); I vespri siciliani; Ernani (Christoff); Forza del destino; Un ballo in maschera; Otello (Gobbi))

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.660096/8. Cleveman, Ryhänen, Mattei, Rundgren, Martinpelto, Tobiasson, Sörensen, Hedlund, Wallén, Leidland, Royal Swedish Op. Ch. & O, Hold-Garrido

In the five-act CD version Pappano may not include as much of the extra and optional material as Abbado has on his four-disc DG La Scala set (the only rival in French), but his judgement on the text is good, with one or two variants included. The whole performance sounds more idiomatic, helped by a cast more fluent in French than Abbado's. Regularly Pappano conveys the dramatic thrust more intensely. Naturally impetuous as well as expressive, he inspires his players as well as his singers, an exceptionally strong team. Waltraud Meier is not caught at her best as Eboli, but relishes the drama of O don fatale. As the Grand Inquisitor, Eric Halfvarson is not quite steady enough, even if (thanks to Pappano) the confrontation with the King is thrilling. The live recording brings some odd balances, with the sound transferred at a lowish level, but the opera-house atmosphere, vividly caught, amply compensates for any shortcoming.

Karajan opts for the four-act version of the opera, merely opening out the cuts he adopted on stage. The Auto da fé scene is here superb, while Karajan's characteristic choice of singers for refinement of voice rather than sheer size consistently pays off. Both Carreras and Freni are most moving. Baltsa is a superlative Eboli and Cappuccilli an affecting Rodrigo. Raimondi and Ghiaurov as the Grand Inquisitor and Philip II provide the most powerful confrontation. The sound is both rich and atmospheric and is made to seem even firmer and more vivid in its current remastering, giving great power to Karajan's uniquely taut account, full of panache.

Yet it is Giulini's 1971 set that EMI have chosen as one of their 'Great Recordings of the Century'. He uses the full, five-act text. Generally the cast is strong; the only vocal disappointment among the principals lies in Caballé's account of the big aria Tu che le vanità in the final act. The CD transfer of the analogue recording brings astonishing vividness and realism, a tribute to the original engineering of Christopher Parker. Even in the big ensembles the focus is very precise, yet atmospheric too, not just analytic. Excellent documentation and a full libretto and translation.

Unlike earlier 'complete' recordings, which used the four-act revision, the Decca version included the important passages excised, notably the Fontainebleau scene, and that may underline the one major deficiency of the set, that the dramatic temperature fails to rise as it should until the duet between Philip and Rodrigo at the end of Act II (Act I in the four-act version). Till then Solti tends to be somewhat rigid, but once the right mood is established he does marvellously with his own Covent Garden forces, and the result is that the Auto da fé scene is very fine. Tebaldi too in this most exacting Verdian role warms up well, and gives a magnificent account of Tu che la vanità. Bumbry and Bergonzi both sing splendidly, and after some rather gritty singing early on Fischer-Dieskau rises fittingly to Rodrigo's great death scene. Ghiaurov as Philip brings a nobility, a sense of stoic pride to his characterisation, that is most compelling. The recording is one of Decca's best and this is welcome back to the catalogue as one of Decca's 'Originals' with a full libretto.

Abbado's set was the first recording to use the language which Verdi originally set, French, in the full five-act text. The first disappointment lies in the variable quality of the sound, with odd balances, yet the cast is a strong one. Domingo easily outshines his earlier recording with Giulini (in Italian), while Katia Ricciarelli as the Queen gives a tenderly moving performance, if not quite commanding enough in the Act V aria. Ruggero Raimondi is a finely focused Philip II, nicely contrasted with Nicolai Ghiaurov as the Grand Inquisitor in the other black-toned bass role. Lucia Valentini Terrani as Eboli is warm-toned if not very characterful, and Leo Nucci makes a noble Posa.

The immediate impact of Luchino Visconti's production of Don Carlos in 1958, then a relatively little-known Verdi opera, comes over vividly in this live recording, made in bright mono sound. Carlo-Maria Giulini was making his Covent Garden debut, and the power and intensity of his conducting match the strength of an outstanding cast. Jon Vickers in the name-part was at his formidable peak, and the sweet-toned Dutch soprano, Gre Brouwenstijn, is most impressive in the placement of the voice, rising superbly to the challenge of Tu che le vanità in the final Act. Tito Gobbi sings magnificently as Rodrigo, not least in his death scene, and Boris Christoff is most moving as King Philip, bringing rare tenderness to his big aria, Ella gimmai m'amo. Hearing this, one cannot be surprised that this Visconti–Giulini production became one of the classics at Covent Garden over many years.

The EMI set with Muti was recorded at La Scala in the run of performances in 1992 which followed Pavarotti's first appearance as Don Carlo, and his magnetism and sensitive control of word-meaning provide a fine focus, even though he is inclined to rush his fences, rarely singing gently. Even so, in the final duet he makes amends; Muti, uncomfortably taut for much of the opera and pressing ahead with fast, unsprung tempi, finds more relaxation and a more lyrical style by the close. Daniela Dessi is a positive, characterful Elisabetta, though often gutsy in production. Ramey is a sympathetic Philip II, though the voice is not quite dark or firm enough, and Paolo Conti is a strong if not very imaginative Rodrigo. Luciana D'Intino is a fine Eboli. The sound is dry in the La Scala manner, with voices placed forward, though some bloom remains. The recording returns to the catalogue at mid-price with a cued synopsis.

The 1954 EMI recording of Don Carlos is chiefly memorable for the incomparable contributions of Tito Gobbi and Boris Christoff, but Santini conducts a strong performance, well transferred in both these reissues, the Naxos the more vivid, the Regis smoother but with rather less range. It is a seriously cut version of the four-Act score, but it is still an indispensable set and well worth having at budget price, with performances from Gobbi as Rodrigo and Christoff as Philip which have never been matched since. Gobbi's singing in the Death Scene is arguably the finest recorded performance that even this glorious artist ever made, with a wonderful range of tone and feeling for words. The bitingly dark tone of Christoff as the King also goes with intense feeling for the dramatic situation, making his big monologue one of the peaks of the performance. Antonietta Stella, never a very distinctive artist, gives one of her finest recorded performances as Elisabetta, only occasionally squally. As Eboli, Elena Nicolai controls her fruity mezzo well, even if the vibrato becomes obtrusive; and the most serious blot is the singing of the tenor, Mario Filippeschi, and even that is not as coarse as we have often had latterly. Choice might rest on the supplementary historic recordings offered on each alternative set, with the Naxos selection of recordings from Don Carlos marginally the more interesting: it includes Bjoerling and Merrill in the Oath Duet, Pinza in Philip II's aria, Marian Anderson as Eboli, Battistini in 1913 as Rodrigo, and Seinemeyer as Elisabetta in her Act IV aria. The Regis reissue includes a number of key Verdi performances by the principal artists here, including also the big Don Carlos duet scene from Bjoerling and Merrill, plus six other solo contributions from Christoff and Gobbi.

Edited together from three live performances, the Naxos Swedish set offers a lively, incisive account of the five-act version of Don Carlos, with the Swedish Opera's Spanish music-director, Alberto Hold-Garrido, drawing out the formidable talents of his company in a warmly idiomatic reading. It is the more impressive that this is a repertory performance without imported stars. Hillevi Martinpelto, commanding as Elisabetta, and Peter Mattei, the powerful Rodrigo.

In the title-role, Lars Cleveman may not be a match for such a star as Plácido Domingo in imagination, but this is a fresh, gripping performance which in Carlo's duets with Rodrigo can live up to almost any comparison. As Philip II, Jaakko Ryhänen sings magnificently, movingly so in his monologue, carrying on the Finnish tradition of Martti Talvela, while Ingrid Tobiasson makes a feisty Eboli. As usual with this opera the text is an amalgam, mainly drawn from the 1886 Modena version. An outstanding bargain issue that even includes the full Italian libretto.

(i) Don Carlo, Act III, Scene 2; (ii) Simon Boccanegra, Act I, Scene 2

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 62777-2. Gobbi, (i) Filippesci; (ii) de los Angeles; (i) Rome Op. O, Santini – PUCCINI: Gianni Schicchi ***

Rodrigo in Don Carlo and his golden-voiced Simon Boccanegra were two of Tito Gobbi's most famous roles, and they are well celebrated in this dramatic pair of excerpts, with honeyed support from de los Angeles as Amelia and Mario Filippesci as Don Carlo. Texts and translations are included.

Ernani (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3228. Pavarotti, Mitchell, Milnes, Raimondi, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (Dir: Kirk Browning)

🔑 * Warner DVD 4509 99213-2. Domingo, Freni, Bruson, Ghiaurov, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti

This live (1983) recording from the Met. is magnificent. Like Trovatore, it needs four great singers, and here it has Pavarotti (in magnificent form), Leona Mitchell (in splendid voice), Sherrill Milnes (a commanding Don Carlo) and Ruggero Raimondi (a memorably powerful Don Ruy Gomez de Silva). While all four solo performances are superb, one has only to sample the finale to Act I to discover what an electrifying team they make, while the close of Act II, led by Pavarotti, is equally thrilling. If Pavarotti dominates by the sheer ardour of his singing, overall this is a totally gripping performance, unlikely to be surpassed on DVD. Fortunately, costumes and sets are colourful and traditional. Throughout, James Levine conducts with consistent zest and Verdian vitality, and the choruses are a joy. The camerawork is well managed too. Not to be missed.

Although the cast is starry, it is Muti who ensures that this live La Scala, Milan, production of Ernani is so gripping, as we know from the CD set. Even if Mirella Freni at the opening sounds strained, it is still a powerful, rich-voicd performance, and Bruson is here on better form than on the CD set and he makes a superb contribution as Don Carlo, while Ghiaurov, as on CD, is a characterful Silva. But it is Domingo's set and he sings magnificently, while the staging is traditional, thank goodness, though not unimaginative. Good camera angles, too.

Ernani (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7008 (2). Pavarotti, Sutherland, Nucci, Burchuladze, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Bonynge

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) GD 86503 (2). L. Price, Bergonzi, Sereni, Flagello, RCA Italiana Op. Ch. & O, Schippers

Bonynge's celebrated Decca (late 1990s) recording now returns to the catalogue at mid-price (with libretto included). Sutherland gives a commanding account of the role of Elvira, and though the beat in her voice betrays her age, the challenging aria, Ernani involami, brings not just power but all the old flexibility. Helped by the sympathetic conducting of her husband, she endearingly throws caution to the winds. Pavarotti too, balanced rather close, gives a vividly characterful portrait of Ernani himself, always ready to shade down his tone, characteristically bringing out the word-meaning. Leo Nucci as Don Carlo, the King, his rival in love, is also firmer and more characterful than others on disc, and Paata Burchuladze as the vengeful de Silva was caught here at the brief peak of his career, his dark, sinister bass well controlled. On sound terms, this reissue easily outshines its CD rivals.

Leontyne Price may take the most celebrated aria, Ernani involami, rather cautiously, but the voice is gloriously firm and rich, and Bergonzi is comparably strong and vivid, though Mario Sereni, vocally reliable, is dull, and Ezio Flagello gritty-toned. With Schippers drawing the team powerfully together, it remains a highly enjoyable set, with the digital transfer making voices and orchestra sound full and vivid.

Ernani (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3052 (2). Gavin, Patterson, Opie, Wedd, Rose, ENO Ch. & O, Parry

In a lively, vibrant performance like this, recorded soon after the ENO production in 2000, it is in some ways even more vital than a performance in Italian. The principals are first rate, with Susan Patterson a formidable Elvira, tackling her big aria in Act I firmly and confidently, at once rich-toned and agile with a perfect trill. The Australian tenor Julian Gavin is also well cast in the title role, with a cleanly focused voice and clear diction, while Alan Opie gives a vintage performance in the baritone role of the King. Full, vivid recording. A welcome if unexpected addition to the Peter Moores/Chandos Opera in English series.

Falstaff (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Warner DVD 50-51442-0494-2-8. Bruson, Ricciarelli, Nucci, Hendricks, Gonzales, Valentini-Terrani, ROHCG Ch. & O, Giulini

(*) BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0812D. Terfel, Frittoli, Rancatore, Manca di Nissa, Montague, Frontali, Tarver, Leggate, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Haitink

((*)) Arthaus DVD mono 101 083. Gramm, Luxon, Griffel, Gale, Cosotti, Condo, Fryatt, Dickerson, Trama, Glyndebourne Ch., Philh. O, Pritchard (V/D: Dave Heather)

On Warner a very similar cast to the Philips Los Angeles CD version, also conducted by Giulini spaciously, but with comparable flair. Renato Bruson emerges here visually as well as vocally as an ideal Falstaff and his comic timing cannot be faulted. Barbara Hendricks is again a charmer as Nanetta and Dalmacio Gonzales is a most appealing Fenton. Leo Nucci is an excellent Ford, the rest of the cast come up trumps and the whole opera moves with a lively swing. The production is both dramatic and civilized in that costumes and set would not disappoint the composer. Recommended alongside the Muti version.

Graham Vick's provocative DVD production with crudely-coloured toy-town sets by Paul Brown is powerfully conducted by Bernard Haitink. The production's principal asset is the strong, characterful Falstaff of Bryn Terfel, musically and dramatically most satisfying despite his grotesquely exaggerated costume and pot-belly. In the tradition of the finest Falstaffs, he is at once comic and dignified and ultimately moving, while the voice is in splendid form. Barbara Frittoli also makes an excellent Alice, and the rest of the cast is consistently fine. The problem lies in the sets with their aggressive primary colours and simplistic lines, though the false perspectives have a vaguely medieval look. The costumes, although equally garish, are in Elizabethan style, and Vick allows Falstaff to be tipped into the Thames in a genuine laundry basket, but he removes all magic from the final Windsor Forest scene, with a tower of bodies (intrepid members of the chorus) taking the place of Herne's Oak. Unlike many operas on DVD this one has ample index points, with 31 chapters or tracks.

Donald Gramm's Falstaff is well (if not memorably) sung and elegantly characterized and with a proper touch of dignity; and he gets excellent support from a fine cast, notably from Benjamin Luxon as Ford and Kay Griffel's bright-eyed portrayal of Alice. Elizabeth Gale's fresh Nannetta and Max-René Cosotti's very eligible Fenton make a delightful pair of lovers, silhouetted behind sheets in Act I, an example of Jean-Pierre Ponnelle's engaging production, typical of Glyndebourne at its finest in 1976. The lesser characters, John Fryatt's Dr Caius, Bernard Dickerson's Bardolph and Ugo Trama's Pistol, are all well observed, and there are nice touches of humour. Pritchard keeps the action sparkling and the cameras seem always to be in the right place. The sound is mono, but very acceptable.

Falstaff (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 471 194-2 (2). Terfel, Pieczonka, Diadkova, Hampson, Röschmann, Shtoda, Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Abbado

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 77349-2 (2). Gobbi, Schwarzkopf, Zaccaria, Moffo, Panerai, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan

🔑 (BB) * LSO Live 0055 (2). Pertusi, Alvarez, Ibarra, Domashenko, Henschel, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 6677 (2). G. Evans, Ligabue, Freni, Kraus, Elias, Simionato, RCA Italiana Op. Ch. & O, Solti

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) SM2K 91181 (2). Fischer-Dieskau, Panerai, Ligabue, Sciutti, Oncina, Resnik, Rössl-Majdan, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Bernstein

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110198/9 (2). Rimini, Tassinari, Tellini, Buades, D'Alessio, Monticone, Ghirardini, La Scala Ch. & O, Molajoli (with arias by MASCAGNI, MASSENET, MOZART, PUCCINI, WAGNER())

Bryn Terfel gives a vital, three-dimensional reading as one might expect, but uses tone-colours that do not generally have you picturing a fat character, a point that also applies to the classic portrayal by Tito Gobbi in the first Karajan recording on EMI. The darkness of Falstaff's Act III monologue after his ducking is as intense as you will ever hear it, while the final fugue at a very fast tempo is thrillingly precise, thanks to a team of leading singers who respond brilliantly to Abbado's strong, thoughtful direction. Adrianna Pieczonka is a superb Alice, full-toned and characterful, and Dorothea Röschmann a charming Nannetta, with Larissa Diadkova a fruity Mrs Quickly. The male characters are well contrasted too, and though Thomas Hampson's velvety baritone hardly conveys the meanness of Ford, the sensitive detail in his characterization is magnetic. For most collectors this will now be the primary recommendation.

The earlier (1956) Karajan recording presents not only the most pointed account orchestrally of Verdi's comic masterpiece (the Philharmonia Orchestra at its very peak) but the most vividly characterful cast ever gathered for a recording. If you relish the idea of Tito Gobbi as Falstaff (his many-coloured voice, not quite fat-sounding in humour, presents a sharper character than usual), then this is clearly the best choice. The rest of the cast too is a delight, with Schwarzkopf a tinglingly masterful Mistress Ford, Anna Moffo sweet as Nannetta and Rolando Panerai a formidable Ford. On CD the digital transfer is sharply focused.

Davis springs rhythms infectiously, bringing out the sparkle and wit in this magical score. The recording helps, with voices cleanly separated so that, though this was taken from concert performances, the sense of live drama is irresistible. Pertusi is brilliant in the title-role, bluff and powerful, with voice cleanly focused over the widest expressive range. Carlos Alvarez as Ford is nicely contrasted, his dark anger coming over powerfully in his Act II monologue, while Ana Ibarra as Alice Ford leads a superb team of women soloists, phenomenally precise in their chattering ensembles, with Jane Henschel a wonderfully fruity Mistress Quickly. Maria José Moreno as Nannetta and Bülent Bezdüz as Fenton make a winning pair of lovers. Above all, the liveness of the experience adds to the electricity, as it does in the classic Toscanini version. Like all LSO Live issues, this one comes at budget price, making it an astonishing bargain, with libretto and translation included in the booklet, as well as a thoughtful essay by Rodney Milnes.

Sir Geraint Evans's 1963 assumpion of the role of Verdi's Falstaff in partnership with Sir George Solti was originally issued by RCA, and here it returns to the catalogue in Decca's Classic Opera series, in a mid-priced box (with libretto) as sparkling as ever. There is an energy, a sense of fun and vivacity that outshines most rival versions, outstanding though they may be. Evans never sounded better on record, and the rest of the cast live up to his example admirably. Solti drives hard, but it is an exciting and well-pointed performance, and the rest of the cast is well contrasted.

Bernstein's mid-1960s set, with Fischer-Dieskau in the title-role, is flawed by Sony's inept presentation. The Allegros may be consistently faster than Toscanini's, but they never sound rushed, and always Bernstein conveys a sense of fun, while in relaxed passages, helped by warm Viennese sensitivity, he allows a full rotundity of phrasing, at least as much as any rival. Fischer-Dieskau does wonders in pointing the humour. In his scene with Mistress Quickly arranging an assignation with Alice, he can inflect a simple 'Ebben?' to make it intensely funny, but he finally suffers from having a voice one inevitably associates with baritonal solemnity. The others are first rate – Panerai singing superbly as Ford, Ilva Ligabue as Mistress Ford, Regina Resnik as Mistress

Quickly, and Graziella Sciutti and Juan Oncina as the young lovers. Excellent engineering (by a Decca recording team) together with effective remastering have produced a very satisfactory sound-balance. But this set is let down by its inadequate documentation.

Recorded in 1930 for Italian Columbia, the La Scala version of Falstaff in Naxos's historical series was the first ever made and is here superbly restored on CD by Ward Marston. Giacomo Rimini, with his firm, dark voice, not only articulates well but also conveys the humour of the fat knight, and Pia Tassinari, then not quite 30 years old, is a fresh, characterful Alice. Aurora Buades is a fruity Mrs Quickly with a formidable chest register, and the casting of the rest is also near-ideal. The first two acts are contained complete on the first disc, leaving room for a 35-minute supplement on the second, gathering together arias and ensembles with Pia Tassinari, mostly dating from 1941–3 when her voice was weightier but still fresh and pure. A cherishable supplement, with Tassinari's husband, Ferruccio Tagliavini, joining her in the concluding quartet from Act III of Puccini's La Bohème.

Falstaff (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 3079 (2). Shore, Kenny, Gritton, Holland, Banks, Kale, De Pont, Davies, Coote, ENO Ch. & O, Daniel

Paul Daniel's brilliant version of Falstaff is among the finest of the Opera in English series sponsored by the Peter Moores Foundation. The role of Falstaff is a speciality of Andrew Shore, and he delivers a vivid portrait, at once comic and weighty, but with lightness and sparkle part of the mixture, and with the Act III monologue of disillusion after his ducking ('Your world is crumbling' in the excellent translation of Amanda Holden) a high point. The voice grows rough in places, but Shore is unfazed by the high-lying passages, which come over well. There is no weak link in the rest of the cast, with Yvonne Kenny as Alice and Susan Gritton as Nannetta both outstanding. Yet above all, it is the taut and finely paced conducting of Paul Daniel and the playing of the orchestra, superbly recorded, which make this set musically competitive with the finest versions in Italian. As they sing in the final fugue, 'Life is a burst of laughter'.

La forza del destino (1862 version; complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 078. Gorchakova, Putilin, Grigorian, Tarasova, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev. (Producer: Elijah Moshinsky, V/D: Brian Large.)

Ⓝ (*) TDK DVD DVWW-OPFORZA. Urmana, Guelfi, Giordani, Dal Monte, Giordani, Gertseva, Scandiuzzi, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Ch. & O, Mehta (Stage Director: Nicolas Joël; V/D Andrea Bevilacque)

Gegam Grigorian is an impressively confident Alvaro, and Nikolai Putilin's Don Carlo is every bit as good as on CD. Tarasova's Preziosilla does not disappoint, and Sergei Alexashin's Guardiano is better focused than Mikhail Kit in the 1996 CD. The opera looks very good – and sounds very good: the audio balance is first class. Brian Large's video direction is first class, too, and although Moshinsky's direction is busy, it is for the most part effective.

The DVD production of the 1862 version of La forza comes from St Petersburg, where the opera had its première. In 1862 the overture was replaced by a short prelude, but otherwise the changes concern the final scenes of Act III, where the duo between Don Alvaro and Don Carlo follows rather than precedes the encampment scene. The finale is also different: the Alvaro–Carlo duel takes place on stage and Alvaro does not survive, but takes his own life. Of particular interest is the fact that the Kirov reproduce the original sets, which look quite handsome, even if the staging is at times a bit hyperactive.

The performance is much stronger than in the version that the Kirov brought to Covent Garden in the summer of 2001, and Valéry Gergiev here proves a more idiomatic Verdi conductor than he was during the London season. The cast is strong, with Gorchakova in good form as Leonora, singing with great dramatic eloquence.

This Florentine Forza del destino is enjoyable but not really distinctive. All the soloists sing to quite a high standard (with vibratos well in evidence). Violeta Urmana is an impressive and often moving Leonora, and she sings her most famous aria quite memorably, and Carlo Guelfi as Don Carlo and Marcello Giordani as Don Alvaro are all generally vocally strong, but are not always individually memorable. Bruno De Simone as Fra Melitone and Julia Gertseva as Preziosilla are excellent, but the opera doesn't stand or fall by them. The chorus sings well enough, but the big scenes, though vocally impressive, are visually static. Mehta conducts the orchestra vividly and keeps the tension quite high. The sets are quite acceptable but the costumes are a something of a compromise between ancient and modern.

La forza del destino (1862 version; complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 74321 39502-2 (3). L. Price, Domingo, Milnes, Cossotto, Giaiotti, Bacquier, Alldis Ch., LSO, Levine

Ⓜ  DG 477 5621 (3). Plowright, Carreras, Bruson, Burchuladze, Baltsa, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Sinopoli

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 8681 (3). Tebaldi, Del Monaco, Bastianini, Siepi, Simionato, Corena, Maionica, St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Ch. & O, Molinari-Pradelli

Leontyne Price recorded the role of Leonora in an earlier RCA version made in Rome in 1956, but the years hardly touched her voice. The roles of Don Alvaro and Don Carlo are ideally suited to the team of Plácido Domingo and Sherrill Milnes so that their confrontations are the cornerstones of the dramatic structure. Fiorenza Cossotto makes a formidable rather than a jolly Preziosilla, while on the male side the line-up of Bonaldo Giaiotti, Gabriel Bacquier, Kurt Moll and Michel Sénéchal is far stronger than on rival sets. In a vivid transfer of the mid-1970s sound, this is a strong, well-paced version with an exceptionally good and consistent cast.

Sinopoli's performance is notable for the creamy soprano of Rosalind Plowright, Agnes Baltsa's splendidly assured Preziosilla and Paata Burchuladze's resonant portrayal of the Padre Guardiano. Sinopoli draws out phrases lovingly, sustaining pauses to the limit, putting extra strain on the singers. Happily, the whole cast thrives on the challenge, and the spaciousness of the recording acoustic not only makes the dramatic interchanges the more realistic, it brings out the bloom on all the voices. Though José Carreras is sometimes too conventionally histrionic, even strained, it is a strong, involved performance. Renato Bruson is a thoughtful Carlo, while some of the finest singing of all comes from Agnes Baltsa as Preziosilla.

The 1955 Decca set with Renata Tebaldi on top form is now reissued as one of Decca's Originals, and the recording is outstanding for its time. Tebaldi, as always, makes some lovely sounds and the mezza voce in the soaring theme (first heard in the overture) in Madre madre pietosa Vergine is exquisite. Mario del Monaco never really matches this. He sings straight through his part – often with the most heroic-sounding noises – with little attention to the finer points of shading that Verdi expects. That the whole performance does not add up the sum of its parts is largely the fault of the conductor, Molinari-Pradelli. He can be exciting, but his control of ensemble is weak at times.

La forza del destino (slightly abridged)

🔑 (BB) () Naxos 8.111322/4. Callas, Tucker, Tagliabue, Nicolai, Rossi-Lemeni, Capecchi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin (with Forza del destino (highlights): Milanov, Peerce, Warren, Moscona, Shaw Chorale, RCA Victor O, Perlea)

🔑 () EMI mono 5 56323-2 (3). Callas, Tucker, Tagliabue, Nicolai, Rossi-Lemeni, Capecchi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

Though there are classic examples of Callas's raw tone on top notes, they are insignificant next to the wealth of phrasing which sets a totally new and individual stamp on even the most familiar passages. Apart from his tendency to disturb his phrasing with sobs, Richard Tucker sings superbly; but not even he – and certainly none of the others (including the baritone Carlo Tagliabue, well past his prime) – begin to rival the dominance of Callas. Serafin's direction is crisp, dramatic and well paced, again drawing the threads together. The 1955 mono sound is less aggressive than many La Scala recordings of this vintage and has been freshened by EMI on CD.

However, Mark Obert-Thorn's newest transfer is splendid, beautifully smooth and clean, seemingly even fresher than the full-priced original. But what makes this Naxos set indispensable is the coupling, a generous set of highlights from a vintage set of the opera with Zinka Milanov on top form and a splendid supporting cast. Her glorious Madre, pietosa Vergine and La Vergine degli angeli with chorus are alone worth the cost of the set!

Un giorno di regno (complete)

🔑 (BB) * Ph 475 6772 (2). Cossotto, Norman, Carreras, Wixell, Sardinero, Ganzarolli, Amb. S., RPO, Gardelli

Un giorno di regno may not be the greatest comic opera of the period, but this scintillating performance under Gardelli clearly reveals the young Verdi as more than an imitator of Rossini and Donizetti, and there are striking passages that clearly give a foretaste of such numbers as the duet Si vendetta from Rigoletto. Despite the absurd plot, this is as light and frothy an entertainment as anyone could want. Excellent singing from a fine team, with Jessye Norman and José Carreras outstanding. The recorded sound is vivid, and the Philips reissue includes full libretto.

Giovanna d'Arco (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 7 63226-2 (2). Caballé, Domingo, Milnes, Amb. Ch., LSO, Levine

The seventh of Verdi's operas, based very loosely indeed on Schiller's drama, is typical of the works which the master was writing during his 'years in the galleys', exuberantly melodic. James Levine, a youthful whirlwind in his very first opera recording, presses on too hard in fast music, with the rum-ti-tum hammered home, but is warmly sympathetic in melodic writing, particularly when Caballé is singing. What had become a standard trio of principals for the 1970s here gives far more than a routine performance. With fine recording there is much to enjoy, even when the plot – involving merely Joan, her father (who betrays her) and the King – is so naive.

I Lombardi (complete)

🔑 * Decca 455 287-2 (2). Pavarotti, Anderson, Leech, Ramey, Met. Opera Ch. and O, Levine

Ⓜ (*) Ph. (ADD) 475 8700 (2). Deutekom, Domingo, Raimondi, Amb. S., RPO, Gardelli

With the help of brilliant Decca recording, Levine consistently brings out this early work's adventurousness, its striking anticipations of La forza del destino. Based on the staging of the opera at the Met. in New York, the chief glory of the set is the casting of Pavarotti as the hero, Oronte. As Oronte does not appear until Act II and dies at the end of Act III (signal for the Great Trio, much the finest number in the opera), it is not a role one would have expected Pavarotti to take on at this stage of his career. He does it masterfully, on the whole. Unfortunately, the visionary appearance of the dead hero in Act IV (Benedetto del cielo) has the singer placed far too close, a very corporeal ghost. Samuel Ramey sings strongly in the baritone role of the evil brother, Pagano (who appears later as a Hermit). June Anderson as the heroine, Giselda, is both sweet and sympathetic.

I Lombardi reaches its apotheosis in the famous Trio, well known from 78-r.p.m. recordings. By those standards Cristina Deutekom is not an ideal Verdi singer: her tone is sometimes hard and her voice is not always perfectly under control. However, Domingo as Oronte is in superb voice, and the villain, Pagano, is well characterized by Raimondi. Impressive singing too from Stafford Dean and Clifford Grant. Gardelli conducts dramatically, heightening the impact of the plot. However, Levine's Decca set is the one to go for.

Luisa Miller (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4027. Scotto, Domingo, Milnes, Morris, Giaiotti, Met. Ch. & O, Levine (Dir: Nathaniel Merrill, V/D: Roland Ott)

Recorded at the Met. in New York in 1979, James Levine's version of Luisa Miller consistently demonstrates his Verdian mastery, and not just in the best-known masterpieces. This production is superbly cast, with Renata Scotto agile, bright and characterful in the title-role, with Plácido Domingo singing gloriously as the enamoured Rodolfo and Sherill Milnes comparably fine as Luisa's father. This opera is unusual in not having the principal baritone as the villain, but here James Morris as Wurm and Bonaldo Giaiotti as Count Walter provide the necessary bite. Not only in Levine's conducting but also in the sets and costumes of Nathanial Merrill's production the attractive rustic element of the piece is effectively brought out.

Luisa Miller (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 8496-2 (2). Caballé, Pavarotti, Milnes, Reynolds, L. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Maag

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 459 481-2 (2). Ricciarelli, Obraztsova, Domingo, Bruson, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Maazel

On Decca, Caballé, though not flawless vocally, gives a splendidly dramatic portrait of the heroine, and Pavarotti's performance is full of creative, detailed imagination. As Federica, Anna Reynolds underlines the light and shade, consistently bringing out atmospheric qualities. Vividly transferred to CD. This is now reissued at mid-price, neatly repackaged in Decca's Compact Opera Collection, with a cued synopsis and the libretto obtainable via a CD-ROM, which is provided with the set.

Maazel's 1979 Covent Garden set returns to the catalogue as a DG Double and would have been very competitive indeed had it included a full libretto and translation instead of just a synopsis. Though taut in his control, Maazel uses his stage experience of working with these soloists to draw them out to their finest, most sympathetic form. Ricciarelli gives one of her tenderest and most beautiful performances on record, Domingo is in glorious voice, and Bruson as Luisa's father sings with a velvet tone. Gwynne Howell is impressive as the Conte di Walter, and Wladimiro Ganzarolli's vocal roughness is apt for the character of Wurm. The snag is the abrasive Countess Federica of Elena Obraztsova.

Macbeth (1847 version; complete)

🔑 * Opera Rara ORCV 301 (2). Glossop, Hunter, Tomlinson, Collins, BBC Singers & Concert O, Matheson

What till now have been seriously neglected on disc have been Verdi's first thoughts, the versions of operas which he went on to revise, none more radically than his first Shakespearean venture, Macbeth. This fascinating recording of the original version will be a revelation to most Verdians. Taken from a BBC studio broadcast of 1979, masterminded by the Verdi scholar Julian Budden, it demonstrates very clearly how many of the most strikingly original passages were already there in Verdi's first version. Lady Macbeth's great sleepwalking scene of Act IV, one of the most memorable passages of all, is already fully developed. Yet the revisions, involving almost a third of the score, are radical, the more strikingly so as the opera progresses. So in Act II, instead of the dramatic aria, La luce langue, Lady Macbeth sings a more conventional display piece which, like her Brindisi later in the act, involves a jolly oompah rhythm, while in Act III, the scene of Macbeth's hallucinations is quite different. Act IV is what Verdi changed most. Here it opens with a bold chorus involving a big tune sung in unison on the lines of Va pensiero, the chorus of Hebrew Slaves from Nabucco. Like almost all of Verdi's other first thoughts, it is not as refined musically as the magnificent chorus of lamentation with which it was replaced in 1865, but stylistically it is more consistent with the rest of the opera. The final scene too is quite different in this first version. A sequence of fanfares instead of a fugato represents the battle, with the whole opera ending on a death scene for Macbeth instead of a victory chorus.

This set is the more cherishable when the performance, incisively conducted by John Matheson, is so strongly cast. In this version the central roles of Macbeth and Lady Macbeth are vocally even more demanding than in Verdi's revision, and the baritone, Peter Glossop, here gives a searingly powerful performance as Macbeth. Rita Hunter is equally commanding as Lady Macbeth, as for her massive soprano, Wagnerian in scale, is surprisingly flexible in coloratura, with a perfectly controlled trill. The young John Tomlinson is magnificent as Banquo, and the tenor Kenneth Collins makes a fine Macduff.

Macbeth (complete; DVD versions)

 TDK DVD DVWW-OPMACPA. Nucci, Valayre, Iori, Iuliano, Pascoli, Parma Teatro Regio Ch. & O, Bartoletti (Dir: Liliana Cavani, V/D: Andrea Amodio)

Ⓝ  EMI DVD 206304-9 (2). Luči , Guleghina, Relyea, Renault, Pittas, Met. Ch. Ballet & Opera O, Levine (Director: Gary Halvorsen)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0922 D (2). Alvarez, Guleghina, Scandiuzzu, Berti, Liceu Ch. & O, Campanella (Dir: Phyllida Lloyd, V/D: Toni Bargallo)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 140. Bruson, Zampieri, Morris, O'Neill, Deutsche Op. Ch. & O, Sinopoli. (Dir: Luca Ronconi.)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101 895. Paskalis, Barstow, Morris, Erwin, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Pritchard (V/D: Dave Heather)

This 2006 live Parma production goes to the top of the list because Leo Nucci's unforgettably powerful portrayal of Macbeth is a tower of strength. Sylvie Valayre as Lady Macbeth, if not Callas, is physically attractive and resourcefully seductive in dominating her husband in their joint Machiavellian plotting. Her voice has a certain amount of intrusive vibrato but is strong and clear, and her acting is vivid yet not overtly melodramatic. Her sleepwalking scene (seemingly filmed separately) is most tellingly done and very well sung. Roberto Iuliano is an excellent Macduff. The rest of the cast gives good support, especially the Chorus, who sing superbly throughout, with Bartoletti preventing the closing sequence (with both principal characters dead) from being an anticlimax. The production is acceptable, although having the audience visible on either side of the stage is disconcerting. Moreover, the witches' scenes are extraordinarily conceived, with the witches apparently doing their laundry, so that when Macbeth arrives he has to push his way through the washing on the line outside! However, even with these distractions, this is all very compelling, especially the banquet scene in Act II, when Macbeth loses his reason; here both the two principal characters are at their finest.

The Met Production is characteristically lavish, with a big chorus, singing really splendidly, and a whole bevy of witches, malignant enough, but dressed in simple peasant costumes, which do not set any positive period for the narrative. The sets are realistic, with generally dark lighting to amplify the generally sinister atmosphere, and there's plenty of blood about! Željco Lučić as a murderous Macbeth, singing strongly, is determined enough, but Maria Guleghina is even more so; she is a powerful Lady Macbeth, with a big voice, but a wide vibrato under pressure. She does the sleepwalking scene impressively. The rest of the male cast make a good team. As for the effects: the appearance of Macbeth's vision in a kind of bubble is not very convincing and frankly, the Birnam Wood advance of the British troops is poorly handled. Moreover, they are carrying modern weapons, which doesn't fit in with the production as a whole. Levine conducts dramatically and the production gains from its spectacle, and with a powerfully sung close, many will feel that this should be a primary choice.

Extravagantly spread over two DVDs, the production from the Liceu in Barcelona offers a striking version, set on a bare stage with stylized geometric squares taking the place of scenery. It works surprisingly well, with the opening chorus of witches – a large contingent – singing powerfully, dressed in black with vermilion turbans. Otherwise costumes are relatively conventional. The drama of the piece is intensified by the sharp attack and crisp ensemble secured by the conductor, Bruno Campanella, though the dryness of the Liceu acoustic is no help for the atmospheric moments. Even more than Carlos Alvarez as a fine Macbeth, Maria Guleghina dominates the performance as Lady Macbeth, singing with a generous vibrato, well controlled, and staring hypnotically with wide, madly obsessed eyes. She rises well to the challenge of her sleepwalking scene, even if her final top note develops into a scream. Roberto Scandiuzzi is first rate as Banquo, but Marco Berti makes a coarse if confident Macduff.

In his second recording, on DVD, made at the Deutsche Oper in Berlin in 1987, Giuseppe Sinopoli conducts a dramatic reading of Macbeth, dominated by the fine Macbeth of Renato Bruson, his self-searching the more compelling in close-up on DVD, and the powerful, if sometimes hooty, Lady Macbeth of Mara Zampieri, perfectly looking the part, young and handsome still. She points the drinking-song well, and although she avoids the final top note of the sleep walking scene, it is still a magnetic performance. The rest of the cast is strong too, with Dennis O'Neill as Macduff and James Morris as Banquo. The chorus sings splendidly, with a line-up of dozens of witches in the opening scene, gathered behind the long table that dominates a fair proportion of scenes in Luca Ronconi's bare production, with sets and costumes by Luciano Damiani. Excellent, well-separated sound.

It was at Glyndebourne in the 1930s that Verdi's Macbeth was first produced in Britain, and the 1972 television recording demonstrates what power the piece has when presented in an intimate setting. Dominating the performance is the young Josephine Barstow as Lady Macbeth, singing powerfully and acting with venom and malice mixed with humour. Hers is hardly a beautiful voice as recorded, but the bite and edge add greatly to the impact. As Macbeth, Paskalis sings powerfully too, presenting in Michael Hadjimischev's production a worryingly equivocal character. The young James Morris as Banquo focuses his voice cleanly and incisively, and Keith Erwin as Macduff provides a refreshing contrast. Strong choral work and atmospheric sets by Emanuele Luzzati.

Macbeth (complete; CD versions)

Ⓜ  Ph 475 8393 (3). Bruson, Zampieri, Shicoff, Lloyd, Deutsche Oper, Berlin, Ch. & O, Sinopoli

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 732-2 (2). Cappuccilli, Verrett, Ghiaurov, Domingo, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Abbado

Ⓜ (*()) EMI mono 5 66447-2 (2). Callas, Mascherini, Tajo, Penno, Della Pergola, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, de Sabata

Even more than his finest rivals, Sinopoli presents this opera as a searing Shakespearean inspiration, scarcely more uneven than much of the work of the Bard himself. In the Banqueting Scene, for example, Sinopoli creates extra dramatic intensity by his concern for detail and his preference for extreme dynamics, and Renato Bruson and Mara Zampieri respond vividly. Zampieri's voice may be biting rather than beautiful, occasionally threatening to come off the rails; but, with musical precision an asset, she matches exactly Verdi's request for the voice of a she-devil. Neil Shicoff as Macduff and Robert Lloyd as Banquo make up the excellent quartet of principals, while the high voltage of the whole performance clearly reflects Sinopoli's experience with the same chorus and orchestra at the Deutsche Oper in Berlin. The recording is vivid, well balanced and focused, but atmospheric.

At times Abbado's tempi are unconventional, but with slow speeds he springs the rhythm so infectiously that the results are most compelling. Together making a fine team, each of the principals is meticulous about observing Verdi's detailed markings, above all those for pianissimo and sotto voce. Verrett, powerful above the stave, makes a virtue out of necessity in floating glorious half-tones, and with so firm and characterful a voice she makes a highly individual Lady Macbeth. Cappuccilli has never sung with a finer range of tone or more imagination on record than here, and Plácido Domingo makes a real, sensitive character out of the small role of Macduff. Excellent recording, splendidly remastered and now at mid-price on two discs.

The role of Lady Macbeth could hardly have been more perfectly suited to Maria Callas, and though there are serious flaws in this live recording of 1952 – evidently taken off a radio relay – the commanding presence, the magnetic musical imagination and the abrasive tones make this a unique experience. In 1952 the vocal flaws that beset Callas were largely in the future, and there is a thrilling sound in every register. Also Victor de Sabata, despite some odd misjudgements like his brisk tempo for the sleepwalking scene, is comparably incisive. Sadly, nothing else in the performance matches such mastery, with Enzo Mascherini a dull, uncharacterful Macbeth and only the resonant Italo Tajo as Banquo otherwise commanding attention. Scrubby, limited sound, which most ears will still accommodate for the sake of such a performance.

I Masnadieri (complete; CD version)

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8703 (2). Caballé, Bergonzi, Raimondi, Cappuccilli, Amb. S., New Philh. O, Gardelli

Few will seriously identify with the hero-turned-brigand of I Masnadieri, who stabs his beloved rather than lead her into a life of shame; but on record, flaws of motivation are of far less moment than on stage. The melodies may only fitfully be of Verdi's more memorable quality, but the musical structure and argument often look forward to a much later period, with hints of Forza, Don Carlo, and even Otello. With Gardelli as ever an urgently sympathetic Verdian, and a team of four excellent principals, splendidly recorded, this set can be warmly welcomed back to the catalogue.

Nabucco (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * NVC Arts DVD 0630 19390-2. Bruson, Dimitrova, D'Artegna, Petkov, Baglioni, Garaventa, Ch. & O of Verona Arena, Maurizio Arena (Producer: Renzo Giacchieri, V/D: Brian Large)

 Decca DVD 074 3245. Nucci, Colombara, Guleghina, Sartori, Surguladze, Striulli, Verona Arena Ch. & O, Oren (Dir: Denis Krief, V/D: Tiziano Mancini)

 EuroArts DVD 2056228. Morosow, Yang, Morigi, Ribeiro, Kulman, Monarcha, Arad State Philharmonic Ch., Europa SO, Märzendorfer (Dir: Robert Herzi, V/D: Rudi Dolezal & Hannes Rossacher)

 TDK DVD DVWW OPNAB. Nucci, Dvorský, Prestia, Guleghina, Domashenko, V. Op. Ch. & O, Luisi (Dir: Gunter Kraker, V/D: Anton Reitzenstein)

In some ways Verdi's Nabucco, dealing as it does with the conflict between a pagan religion and Christianity, is half-opera, half histrionic-oratorio, and Renzo Giacchieri's somewhat stylized production – the clashes between the rival groups of soldiers are symbolic rather than realistic – against a comparatively primitive rocky set is highly effective, with the costumes providing plenty of colour. Yet the two 'miracles', when Nabucco is struck down by a thunderbolt and, later, the destruction of the statue of Baal, are simply and effectively managed. The opera is cast from strength, with Renato Bruson's Nabucco dominating the action powerfully and the High Priest (Ellero D'Artegna) singing nobly. Dimitrova is hardly less commanding as Abigaille; her big Act II aria and her scene with Nabucco in Act III are equally memorable. But, above all, Nabucco grips its audience with its big choruses, and they are splendidly sung here. The orchestra too plays vibrantly under the appropriately named Maurizio Arena, and altogether this is visually and vocally first class.

Leo Nucci has already given us outstanding portrayals of Macbeth and Rigoletto, and now in a 2007 Verona production he is equally commanding as an unforgettable Nabucco. Maria Guleghina does not quite match him, but she is vocally strong as Abigaille, if not without an intrusive vibrato. Nevertheless, she sings her closing aria, as she dies, very movingly. Fabio Sartori, an ardent Ismaele, and the very attractive Fenena of Nino Surguladze, curiously modern-looking and not a strong acting personality, make a personable pair of lovers and Carlo Colombara is a fine Zaccaria. So the performance overall works well, even though it is hampered by a set which consists mainly of scaffolding which, though presumably representing the Hebrews' prison, is visually unappealing. However, the special effects work well enough, and the whole performance is well held together by Daniel Oren and the magnificent singing of the Verona Chorus.

The emphasis of the EuroArts version is the sheer spectacle of this 2007 production from the St Margareten Opera Festival. It really goes over the top, with Nabucco making his entry on a huge siege machine, belching fire from the gold dragon-mouth at its summit. Everywhere else there are plenty of flames and light, and (incongruously) searchlights occasionally light up the background. However, Igor Morosow, if not as individual as Nucci in the name-role, makes a strong characterization of Nabucco. Gabriella Morigi is a properly histrionic Abigaille, though her voice is not always perfectly focused and at times her vibrato is intrusive. But apart from Nabucco, the performance is dominated by Simon Yang's splendid, memorable portrayal of Zaccaria, his rich voice and resonant bass notes a vocal joy. Elisabeth Kulman is a very self-possessed Fenena, and her lover, Bruno Ribeiro, is a very believable and youthfully impetuous Ismaele. Once again, it is the superb singing of the chorus which is the most thrilling part of the opera, with the performance excellently directed by Ernst Märzendorfer.

Recorded at the Vienna State Opera in 2001, the TDK disc offers a spectacular production, which makes full use of the very large stage. At the opening, the enormous chorus instantly establishes the dominance of choral music in this work, not just the ever-popular Chorus of Hebrew Slaves but in key numbers throughout the piece. This biblical story is updated to the 1940s, bringing out the parallels with the plight of the Jewish people in Europe at that time. The costumes are drab and dark, with the men in trilbies or bowler hats, with Abigaille providing a contrast in her elaborate costumes, reflecting her association with Nabucco and the Babylonian court. Maria Guleghina sings compellingly; but it is the two bass roles that provide the key to any performance and, though Giacomo Prestia is not always ideally steady, his is a powerful performance, a good match for the strong Nabucco of Leo Nucci. Marina Domashenko as Fenena and Miroslav Dvorský as Ismaele are well cast, too; but it is the chorus that dominates, with Fabio Luisi securing splendid ensemble. Sadly, there is no synopsis of the plot, but instead a good essay about the background to this first of Verdi's big successes.

Nabucco (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 413 321-2 (2). Cappuccilli, Dimitrova, Nesterenko, Domingo, Ch. & O of German Op., Berlin, Sinopoli

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 417 407-2 (2). Gobbi, Souliotis, Cava, Previdi, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Gardelli

With Sinopoli one keeps hearing details normally obscured. Even the thrill of the great chorus Va, pensiero is the greater when the melody first emerges at a hushed pianissimo, as marked. Dimitrova is superb in Abigaille's big Act II aria, noble in her evil, as is Cappuccilli as Nabucco, less intense than Gobbi was on Gardelli's classic set for Decca, but stylistically pure. The rest of the cast is strong too, including Domingo in the unusually small tenor role and Nesterenko superb as the High Priest, Zaccaria. Bright and forward digital sound, less atmospheric than the 1965 Decca set with Gobbi and Souliotis, conducted by Gardelli.

On Decca, the Viennese chorus lacks bite in Va, pensiero; but in every other way this is a masterly performance, with dramatically intense and deeply imaginative contributions from Tito Gobbi as Nabucco and Elena Souliotis as the evil Abigaille. Souliotis made this the one totally satisfying performance of an all-too-brief recording career, wild in places but no more than is dramatically necessary. Though Carlo Cava as Zaccaria is not ideally rich of tone, it is a strong performance, and Gardelli, as in his later Verdi recordings for both Decca and Philips, showed what a Verdian master he is, whether in pointing individual phrases or whole scenes, simply and naturally. Vivid and atmospheric 1965 Decca recording.

Nabucco (highlights)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 458 246-2 (from above recording, with Souliotis, Gobbi; cond. Gardelli)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 393374-2 (from complete recording, with Manuguerra, Scotto, Luchetti, Obraztsova, Ghiaurov, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Muti)

Souliotis's impressive contribution is well represented on the Decca highlights disc, and there are fine contributions too from Gobbi. Needless to say the chorus Va, pensiero is given its place of honour and the reissued selection now runs for 69 minutes. As in other Opera Gala reissues, a full translation is now included.

Muti's 1978 set has a cast as impressive as could be assembled at the time, with Matteo Manuguerra an imaginative choice as Nabucco. He proves strong and reliable but lacks something in flair, and overall the singing fails to equal the three-dimensional characterizations of its competitors. Renata Scotto sings well but is not entirely inside her role. The complete set is still available (EMI 7 47488-8) but the above 65 minutes of bargain highlights would seem a better investment for those interested in the cast.

Nabucco (complete; sung in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3136 (2). Opie, Capalho, Miles, Patterson, Irwin, Op. N. Ch. & O, Parry

Based on the staged production of Opera North, the version of Nabucco in English is one of the best in the long series promoted by Sir Peter Moores. Alan Opie is at his finest in the title-role, commanding and characterful, well contrasted with Alastair Miles as Zachariah, the High priest. Other principals are first rate, even if Jane Irwin as Fenena, the king's daughter, is less weighty than most mezzos in that role. The chorus – so important in this work – are outstanding, with David Parry drawing crisp, incisive performances from singers and orchestra, while the Chandos sound is weighty and well balanced.

Otello (complete; DVD versions)

* Opus Arte DVD OAR3102D. Domingo, Te Kanawa, Leiferkus, ROHCG Ch. & O, Solti (Dir: Elijah Moshinsky, VD: Brian Large)

🔑 * DG DVD 0734040. Vickers, Freni, Glossop, Malagu, Bottion, Deutsche Oper Ch., BPO, Karajan (Dir: Karajan, V/D: Georges Wakhevitch)

* NVC Arts DVD 4509 99214-2. Te Kanawa, Atlantov, Cappuccilli, Bevacqua, Schiavon, Rafanelli, Ch. & O of Verona Arena, Peskó (Producer: Gianfranco de Bosio; V/D: Preben Montell)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 092-9. Domingo, Fleming, Morris, Bunnell, Croft, Anthony, Metropolitan Ch. & O, Levine (Producer: Louisa Briccetti, V/D: Brian Large)

 TDK DVD DV-OPOTEL. Domingo, Frittoli, Nucci, Catani, Ceron, La Scala, Milan, Children's Ch., Ch. & O, Muti (V/D: Carlo Battistoni)

Filmed in 1992, Moshinsky's traditional Covent Garden production with lavish costumes and sets makes an ideal DVD with an almost unmatchable cast of principals. Plácido Domingo was at his peak as Otello, powerful and heroic, while Dame Kiri Te Kanawa as Desdemona sings ravishingly, fining her tone down to a mere whisper at times. Sergei Leiferkus too was at his finest as Iago, and Sir Georg Solti conducts his Covent Garden forces with characteristic high drama. Well recorded, it is an outstanding DVD.

Filmed in Munich and Salzburg in 1972/3, Karajan's disc offers a vivid production, taken from the Salzburg Festival and superbly cast. Jon Vickers sings gloriously in the title-role, a heroic tenor who sings cleanly and accurately and with great passion, totally unstrained. Though Mirella Freni's soprano might seem a little lightweight for Desdemona, it is sweetly beautiful, a totally charming portrayal of the wronged heroine, with Peter Glossop at his peak as the most sinister Iago, again totally unstrained. The coordination that Karajan obtains from his fine team, not just soloists but chorus and orchestra too, is a model for any rival, with Wakhevitch adding to the impact in the visual element, often set in the open air with a spectacular stormy seascape at the start (where the singers mime their parts) and architectural sets. The film was made in conjunction with an audio recording, and the only slight snag is that there is a minor cut in the big central ensemble of Act III.

The Verona producer Gianfranco de Bosio and designer Vittorio Rossi have chosen a very plain set, yet they used the full resources of Verona for the one big scene at the end of Act III, which is magnificently staged. Vladimir Atlantov is a very real, believable Otello, often grim-faced yet obviously melted in Act I by Desdemona's love. Kiri Te Kanawa is at her glorious best as Desdemona, ravishingly clear-voiced and true, and her final Willow Song is infinitely touching before the opera's terrible close. Piero Cappuccilli is an obsequiously wily Iago. As we discover in his Creed, his voice is less strong than Atlanov's powerful Otello, but his false-friendly Era la notte is superbly characterized, and in the big duet with Otello at the end of Act II the two voices are naturally blended. In short there are no flaws here, and the video direction centres on the principal characters very vividly, while Zoltan Peskó keeps the tension at a high level. Another Verona triumph, which is very compelling.

It is good to have so telling a reminder on DVD of Plácido Domingo's masterly assumption of the role of Otello: commanding in every way, particularly when at the Met. in New York in 1996 he was singing opposite Renée Fleming as Desdemona, then at her freshest and purest, yet also with power, looking and sounding girlish. James Levine's direction is high-powered from beginning to end, matching the singing of his principals, controlling the massive forces provided in this lavish production directed by Elijah Moshinsky with sets by Michael Yeargan and costumes by Peter J. Hall. Though James Morris is not the most sinister of Iagos, his singing is clean and firm, well varied in the two big monologues of Act II. Excellent singing too from Jane Bunnell as a very positive Emilia and Richard Croft as Cassio, a tenor well contrasted with Domingo. The only bonuses on DVD are a picture gallery and trailer.

Imaginatively overseen by Graham Vick, who never seems to let his personal conception override Verdi's intentions, and with an imaginative set and traditional costumes, this La Scala Otello is very recommendable, with Domingo and Frittoli always singing and acting movingly, to create a real-life situation of passion and tenderness ruined by unthinking jealousy. By their side, Leo Nucci's Iago is disappointingly low-key, and Cesare Catani's Cassio is not memorable either. But Muti directs with his usual brio and the video presentation is admirable. Even with the disappointing Iago, this still projects Verdi's great opera very powerfully, for the sound is first class.

Otello (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 439 805-2 (2). Domingo, Studer, Leiferkus, Ch. & O of Bastille Opera, Chung

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 74321 39501-2 (2). Domingo, Scotto, Milnes, Amb. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Levine

 Decca 433 669-2 (2). Pavarotti, Te Kanawa, Nucci, Rolfe Johnson, Chicago SO & Ch., Solti

Ⓜ  EMI 7 69308-2 (2). Vickers, Freni, Glossop, Ch. of German Op., Berlin, BPO, Karajan

Ⓑ (*) HM Music & Arts CD 1043 (2). Domingo, Freni, Cappuccilli, Ciannella, Raffanti, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, C. Kleiber

✿ Ⓜ  EMI 3 58670 (2). Domingo, Ricciarelli, Diaz, Zaharia, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Maazel

Ⓜ (*) Decca 411 618-2 (2). Del Monaco, Tebaldi, Protti, V. State Ch., VPO, Karajan

On CD, Plácido Domingo's third recording of Otello proves to be more freely expressive, even more involved than his previous ones; the baritonal quality of his tenor has here developed to bring extra darkness, with the final solo, Niun mi tema, poignantly tender. Cheryl Studer gives one of her finest performances as Desdemona, the tone both full and pure, while Sergei Leiferkus makes a chillingly evil Iago, the more so when his voice is the opposite of Italianate, verging on the gritty, which not everyone will like. With plenty of light and shade, Myung-Whun Chung is an urgent Verdian, adopting free-flowing speeds yet allowing Domingo full expansiveness in the death scene. The Chorus and Orchestra of the Bastille Opera excel themselves, setting new standards for an opera recording from Paris, and the sound is first rate.

On RCA, Domingo as Otello combines glorious heroic tone with lyrical tenderness. Scotto is not always sweet-toned in the upper register, and the big ensemble at the end of Act III brings obvious strain; nevertheless, it is a deeply felt performance which culminates in a most affecting account of the all-important Act IV solos, the Willow Song and Ave Maria. Milnes makes a powerful Iago, a handsome, virile creature beset by the biggest of chips on the shoulder. In the transfer of the 1977 analogue original the voices are caught vividly and immediately, and the orchestral sound too is fuller and cleaner than in many more recent versions.

In the Decca Chicago set the key element is the singing of Pavarotti, new to his role of Otello, as was Nucci as Iago. In obedience to Solti, Pavarotti often adopts faster speeds than usual. Whatever the detailed reservations, this is a memorable reading, heightened by Pavarotti's keen feeling for the words and consistently golden tone. With a close microphone-balance, like the others he is prevented from achieving genuine pianissimos; but above all he offers a vital, animated Otello, always individual. Dame Kiri Te Kanawa produces consistently sumptuous tone; the Willow Song is glorious. The impact of the whole is greatly enhanced by the splendid singing of the Chicago Symphony Chorus, helped by digital sound that is fuller and more vivid than on any rival set.

On EMI, Karajan directs a big, bold and brilliant account, for the most part splendidly sung and with all the dramatic contrasts strongly underlined. There are several tiny, but irritating, statutory cuts, but otherwise on two mid-price CDs this is well worth considering. Freni's Desdemona is delightful, delicate and beautiful, while Vickers and Glossop are both positive and characterful, only occasionally forcing their tone and losing focus. The recording is clarified on CD.

Carlos Kleiber demonstrates the high voltage electricity he can produce on a big occasion, here matching the searing intensity of Toscanini in this work. Plácido Domingo, having just completed a series of performances in Hamburg and Paris, is in superb form, with the voice at its finest, and his personal magnetism as an actor is heightened by the conductor's challenge. Mirella Freni as Desdemona is at her freshest, sweet and vulnerable, while Cappuccilli sings with keen incisiveness as Iago, not always sinister-sounding but musically superb. Stage noises are endlessly intrusive, but the atmosphere of a great occasion is vividly caught.

Maazel's 1986 version, used as a soundtrack for the Zeffirelli film but with the text uncut (unlike that of the film), brings another fine performance from Domingo and generally taut, subtle control from Maazel, particularly good in the spacious, tenderly emotional treatment of the final scene but with a disappointingly negative, un-sinister

Iago in Justino Diaz, the result often loses in dramatic bite, and Maazel's direction occasionally sags, as in the closing pages of Act II at the end of the oath duet. Ricciarelli, though not an ideal Desdemona, sings most affectingly, with pianissimos beautifully caught in the Willow Song and Ave Maria. One snag is the sound, which is curiously recessed, with the voices often not quite in focus and with little sense of presence.

Karajan's 1961 version, flawed in its casting, yet brings remarkably fine sound to match any version since – a tribute to the artistry of the producer, John Culshaw, and the skill of his team of Decca engineers. Its main flaw is the casting of Aldo Protti whose Iago is undercharacterized. He is always reliable but never imaginative or even sinister – a very obvious drawback in an opera whose plot hinges on Iago's machinations. Mario Del Monaco is hardly a subtle Otello, but his voice is gloriously heroic, and this is one of his finest collaborations with Renata Tebaldi on disc. There is much to enjoy in the conducting of Karajan – even more so on this latest release, as it now includes the tuneful ballet music for the first time.

Otello (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3068 (2). Craig, Plowright, Howlett, Bottone, ENO Ch. & O, Elder

The ENO version of Otello is flawed both vocally and in the sound with the level of stage noise, the thud and ramble of wandering feet all the more noticeable on CD. The performance itself is most enjoyable, with dramatic tension building up compellingly. Charles Craig's Otello is most moving, the character's inner pain brought out vividly, though top notes are fallible. Neil Howlett as Iago may not have the most distinctive baritone, but finely controlled vocal colouring adds to a deeply perceptive performance. Rosalind Plowright makes a superb Desdemona, singing with rich, dramatic weight but also with poise and purity. The death scene reveals her at her finest, radiant of tone, with flawless attack.

Rigoletto (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3220. Wixell, Pavarotti, Furlanetto, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Chailly

🔑 * TDK DVD DV-OPRIGM. Nucci, Mula, Machado, Luperi, Ch., O & Corps de Ballet of Verona Arena, Viotti (Dir: Charles Roubaud, V/D: Pierre Cavassilas & Resina Stefanini)

 Arthaus DVD 101 285. Nucci, Mosuc, Beczala, Polgár, Zürich Op. Ch. & O, Santi

(*) TDK DVD DVWW-OPRIGL. C. Alvarez, Mula, M. Álvarez, Konstaninov, O & Ch. Gran Teatre del Liceu, López-Cobos (Dir: Graham Vick, V/D: Xavi Bové)

(*) BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0829D. Gavanelli, Schäfer, Alvarez, Halfvarson, ROHCG Ch. & O, Downes (Director: David McVicar)

Chailly's Rigoletto was filmed on location in Italy in 1982 with the cast miming to a recording made in Vienna the year before. It is truly memorable, with Pavarotti a Bacchus-like figure in the orgy scene of Act I, which is both spectacular and very dramatic. He acts the part of the Count as believably as if the latter's philosophy was his very own, and he sings gloriously throughout. But Ingvar Wixell's magnificently powerful Rigoletto still dominates the narrative, while Edita Gruberová is in exquisitely fresh voice as a vulnerable Gilda. The production is traditional in the best sense; costumes are colourful, sets believable. The abduction of Gilda is especially well managed and the closing scene, with Wixell at his most moving, is very telling indeed. Chailly keeps the action flowing splendidly and the recording is vivid and spacious. A clear first choice.

Verona productions seldom disappoint, and this 2001 traditional Rigoletto is in every way outstanding. As it so happens, the Gilda, Inva Mula acts splendidly in both this and the other TDK version, but in Verona she is three years younger, her voice at its lovely peak. Moreover, she has the superb Leo Nucci as Rigoletto, and his is a great performance, gathering strength and power as the opera proceeds. Their closing duet in Act II, Sì vendetta, tremenda vendetta, makes the hair stand on end in its passion, and rightly brings the house down. Aquiles Machado isn't a very romantic figure as the Duke, but he sings ardently, even getting an encore for his stylish La donna è mobile. But the other star of the occasion is the conductor Marcello Viotti, who creates consistent tension, especially at that riveting end of the second Act and at the close of the opera; his orchestra is recorded with great vividness, surging out at climaxes. The Verona stage is huge, of course, and lends itself to the spectacle of the first Act, ballet included, and the choral scenes are excellent. But it is the interchanges between the principal characters that matter, and Nucci dominates the opera, and the camera often dwells on his face in close-up, revealing the agony of his despair.

Nucci's characterization of Rigoletto is justly famous (as we know from the Verona version above) both for his vividly memorable acting and for his singing. He could well treasure his daughter in Elena Mosuc's portrayal of her as a simple soul with the sweetest way of remembering her lover in Caro nome. Piotr Beczala's Duke is splendidly ardent and self-centred, to complete a strong trio of principals. The stage director rightly chooses an authentic period setting, but the costumes are of a later period; never mind, he maintains a period flavour and there are no directorial excrescences. Excellent, vivid conducting from Nello Santi, but it is Rigoletto's haunted, staring eyes one remembers most.

Graham Vick's competing TDK production has an ingeniously designed revolve at the centre of the set, around which the Duke's past female conquests are paraded in tableau at the opening, and which later makes for quick, dramatically effective scene-changes. The performance is strongly conducted by Jesus López-Cobos, and Inva Mula again makes a memorable and moving Gilda, with her voice still appealing and her acting poignantly dramatic. Carlos Alvarez, too, is a powerful and dominating Rigoletto, although his vibrato may not please all ears. The one flaw in the production is at the close, when Rigoletto props up the dying Gilda on the bare stage, and on to a (comparatively) modern armchair.

David McVicar's Covent Garden production of Rigoletto was one of the offerings leading towards the Verdi centenary in January 2001, strongly cast with Paolo Gavanelli firm and powerful in the title-role. McVicar points out that the opera dates from the period of Marx and the Communist Manifesto, though the menace in the production has as much to do with sado-masochistic violence as with politics, helped by Tanya McCallin's costumes (with a leather clown costume making Rigoletto into a gnome-like figure and the Duke's leather outfit when he meets Gilda underlining his role as predator). The setting is rough too in what looks like an old junk-yard with much wire-netting and corrugated-iron sheets. However, this twentieth-century touch hardly gets in the way of the drama, with the costumes broadly traditional in period.

The casting is first rate, with Gavanelli well matched by the girlish Gilda of Christine Schäfer (not previously known as a coloratura but admirably flexible) and the menacingly seductive Duke of Marcelo Alvarez. Edward Downes as ever is a masterly Verdi interpreter, pacing the drama strongly and purposefully. The extra features include a BBC documentary celebrating the Verdi centenary, with atmospheric shots of Busseto, doing for Verdi what Salzburg has done for Mozart.

Rigoletto (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo 462 158-2 (2). Bruson, Gruberová, Shicoff, Fassbaender, Lloyd, St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Ch. & O, Sinopoli

🔑  Decca (ADD) 414 269-2 (2). Milnes, Sutherland, Pavarotti, Talvela, Tourangeau, Amb. Op. Ch., LSO, Bonynge

🔑 * DG 447 064-2 (2). Chernov, Pavarotti, Studer, Scandiuzzi, Graves, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

🔑 (BB) * Naxos mono 8.111242/3 (2). Callas, Gobbi, Di Stefano, Lazzarini, Zaccaria, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

🔑 * EMI mono 5 56327-2 (2). Gobbi, Callas, di Stefano, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 2076 (2). Gobbi, Callas, di Stefano, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin (with Forza del destino: Madre, pietosa Vergine and Pace, pace, mio Dio – 1954 recording)

Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 82623-2 (2). Merrill, Moffo, Kraus, Flagello, Elias, RCA Italiana Op. Ch. & O, Solti

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8-111276/7 Merrill, Bjoerling, Peters, Tozzi, Rome Opera Ch. & O, Perlea

Edita Gruberová might have been considered an unexpected choice for Gilda, remarkable for her brilliant coloratura rather than for deeper expression, yet here she makes the heroine a tender, feeling creature, emotionally vulnerable yet vocally immaculate. Similarly, Renato Bruson as Rigoletto does far more than produce a stream of velvety tone, detailed and intense, responding to the conductor and combining beauty with dramatic bite. Even more remarkable is the brilliant success of Neil Shicoff as the Duke, more than a match for his most distinguished rivals. Here the Quartet becomes a genuine climax. Brigitte Fassbaender as Maddalena is sharply unconventional but vocally most satisfying. Sinopoli's speeds, too, are unconventional at times, but the fresh look he provides is most exciting, helped by full and vivid recording, consistently well balanced.

Just over ten years after her first recording of this opera, Sutherland appeared in it again, this time with Pavarotti, who is an intensely characterful Duke: an unmistakable rogue but a charmer, too. Thanks to him and to Bonynge above all, the Quartet, as on the Sinopoli set, becomes a genuine musical climax. Sutherland's voice has acquired a hint of a beat, but there is little of the mooning manner that disfigured her earlier assumption, and the result is glowingly beautiful as well as supremely assured technically. Milnes makes a strong Rigoletto, vocally masterful rather than strongly characterful. The digital transfer is exceptionally vivid and atmospheric.

With an excellent cast James Levine conducts a thrustful, exceptionally high-powered reading of Rigoletto, vividly dramatic. The sound is full and immediate, with the solo voices in sharp focus, enhancing the power. Vladimir Chernov is a firm, clear, virile Rigoletto, not as searchingly characterful as some, but maybe because he sings with no hint of strain, with the beauty and accuracy of the singing consistently satisfying. Cheryl Studer is a tenderly affecting Gilda, singing with a bright, girlish tone, at once youthful and mature, defying age. Pavarotti was fresher in his earlier recording with Bonynge, but heard in close-up his is a thrillingly involving performance still, and the rest of the cast are first-rate too. Not a first choice perhaps, but a strong and sound one.

With her fiery temperament one would not naturally have thought of Callas as an apt choice for the innocent Gilda, yet her singing freshly conveys just that quality, while her voice was still at its peak, with none of the flaws that later came to mar her vocal production. Her command in her big aria, Caro nome, is complete, yet the set is even more remarkable for the magnificent assumption of the title-role by Tito Gobbi, dark, intense and deeply moving in his portrayal of the hunchback jester, which has never been surpassed on disc. Giuseppe di Stefano, also at his peak, completes a trio of principals that became a watchword of excellence in these recordings masterminded by Walter Legge. The EMI set remains at full price, but there is full-bodied sound in Mark Obert-Thorn's Naxos transfer which is first rate.

The Regis reissue also costs much less than the EMI version and, apart from a tiny blip at the very opening of the Prelude, the transfer is smooth and clean, with voices vivid, although we marginally prefer the Naxos version. However, on the Regis set there is a bonus of two key Callas arias from La forza del destino, the 1954 recording.

Robert Merrill sang Rigoletto in a very early RCA LP version of the opera (see below) but this reissued set is more impressive, with its rich flow of tone and clean-styled musical strength. The Gilda of Anna Moffo is enchanting and, aided by the rest of the production, gives a firm interpretation. Admittedly she is not always helped by Solti's conducting, for he seems determined to rush everyone on, and his beat is often too stiff for middle-period Verdi. But that is a comparatively small drawback, for the briskness brings a consistent intensity to the interpretation, and there are only the barest 'statutory' cuts. The recording too, now on SACD, like the rest of this series, is very good for its period.

Naxos have made an excellent transfer of one of the earliest mono LP recordings of Rigoletto dating from June 1956. The set is mainly of interest for Jussi Bjoerling's contribution, although not one of his outstanding opera sets. It opens well and generally the conducting of Jonel Perlea controls the music effectively. But he is hampered by Robert Merrill's rather hammy Rigoletto and the fact that Roberta Peters, although she sings very nicely, does not project the character of Gilda at all. Indeed the whole atmosphere of the set is of a concert performance, and the close of the opera degenerates into melodrama.

Rigoletto (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3030 (2). Rawnsley, Field, A. Davies, Tomlinson, ENO Ch. & O, Elder

The flair of the original English National Opera production, setting Rigoletto in the Little Italy area of New York in the 1950s and making the Mafia boss the 'Duke', is superbly carried through to this originally EMI studio recording. The intensity and fine pacing of the stage performances are splendidly caught, thanks to Mark Elder's keenly rhythmic conducting, making this one of the most successful of the ENO's Verdi sets. Outstanding vocally is the heady-toned Duke of Arthur Davies, and though neither John Rawnsley as Rigoletto nor Helen Field as Gilda has a voice so naturally beautiful, they too sing both powerfully and stylishly. Excellent recording, clean and full, and the production of the opening scene includes an effective crowd ambience of the kind pioneered by Decca.

Simon Boccanegra (1857 version; complete)

(*) Opera Rara ORCV 302 (2). Bruscantini, Ligi, Turp, Elvin, Howell, Hudson, BBC Singers, BBC Concert O, Matheson

The revision of Simon Boccanegra which, prompted by Boito's rewriting of the libretto, Verdi produced in 1881 has now firmly been accepted as one of the composer's supreme masterpieces, defying the old idea that it could never be popular. This valuable Opera Rara issue, like that company's recording of the original version of Verdi's Macbeth, is taken from a BBC recording made in 1976. The sound is satisfyingly vivid and well balanced, and the performance under John Matheson is warmly idiomatic, with the BBC Concert Orchestra rivalling the work of the other BBC orchestras. Casting is strong, with Sesto Bruscantini (towards the end of his career) as characterful as ever, with the voice still lyrical, set in striking contrast against the powerful Fiesco of the bass, Gwynne Howell, singing magnificently. Josella Ligi, little known on disc, makes an appealing Amelia, with the Canadian tenor André Turp singing strongly as Gabriele. Even so, the set is rather of specialist than of general interest, when this first version is disappointingly conventional. So even the great Recognition scene fails in its timing and structure to have the overwhelming impact of the revised version, and the scene which was later replaced by the great Council Chamber scene seems astonishingly flat and perfunctory by comparison.

Simon Boccanegra (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * TDK DVD DVWW OPSIBOW. Hampson, Gallardo-Domas, Furlanetto, Dvorsky, Daniel, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Gatti (Dir: Peter Stein, V/D: Anton Reitzenstein)

Ⓝ  DG DVD 073 4403. Milnes, Tomowa-Sintow, Moldoveanu, Plishka, Met. Opera Ch. & O, Levine (Producer: Tito Capobianco; V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ (*) Arthaus DVD 101 307. Frontali, Giannattasio, Prestia, Gipali, Teatro Comunale di Bolgna, Mariotti (Director: Giorgio Gallione; V/D: Francesca Nesler)

It is rare that you have a quintet of principals who sing with such clear and rock-steady tone as those chosen for Peter Stein's Vienna State Opera production of Simon Boccanegra in 2002. Thomas Hampson as Boccanegra is at his peak, singing and acting magnificently. He is deeply moving opposite Cristina Gallardo-Domas as Maria in their great Recognition scene, one of the most touching moments in all Verdi. Hampson is well matched by Ferruccio Furlanetto with his dark, finely controlled bass as Fiesco, his adversary, and by Boaz Daniel as Paolo. The great Council Chamber scene is not only sung superbly, starting with Hampson in his address, Plebe, Patrizi, Chailly builds up to the 'gulp' moment unerringly. At this point the set is less minimally stylized and more realistic than in other scenes of this great opera, setting the seal on a fine version, well recorded.

Not surprisingly, Sherrill Milnes's Boccanegra is totally memorable, sung and acted completely within a believable human characterisation. He is well partnered by the not quite as memorable, but still impressive Amelia of Anna Tomowa-Sintow. Paul Plishka is a commanding Jacobo Fiesco and the cast is completed by the excellent Vasile Moldoveanu. Add to this the characteristic Met production values, with a superb chorus and more than excellent orchestra under the inimitable and always reliable James Levine. 'Live from the Met' usually means something special, and it does here.

The Bologna production is enjoyable too but not quite on this level. The Amelia, Carmen Giannattasio, is genuinely moving and Roberto Fontali sings strongly and characterises well, but he is not as three-dimensional as Milnes. The rest of the Bologna cast provides a good professional team. Michele Mariotti conducts with considerable flair, and this is an enjoyable realisation of Verdi's masterly opera. But the production values are dwarfed by what the Met can and does provide.

Simon Boccanegra (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 752-2 (2). Freni, Cappuccilli, Ghiaurov, van Dam, Carreras, La Scala, Milan, Ch. and O, Abbado

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110119-20. Gobbi, Christoff, de los Angeles, Campora, Rome Opera House Ch. & O., Santini

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 2083 (2). Gobbi, Christoff, de los Angeles, Campora, Rome Opera House Ch. & O., Santini

Ⓜ  Decca 475 7011 (2). Nucci, Te Kanawa, Burchuladze, Aragall, Coni, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Solti

Abbado's 1977 recording of Simon Boccanegra is one of the most beautiful Verdi sets ever made. The playing of the orchestra is brilliantly incisive as well as refined, so that the drama is underlined by extra sharpness of focus. The cursing of Paolo after the great Council Chamber scene makes the scalp prickle, with the chorus muttering in horror and the bass clarinet adding a sinister comment, here beautifully moulded. Cappuccilli, always intelligent, gives a far more intense and illuminating performance than the one he recorded for RCA earlier in his career; and Ghiaurov as Fiesco sings beautifully too. Freni as Maria Boccanegra sings with freshness and clarity, while van Dam is an impressive Paolo. With electrically intense choral singing as well, this is a set to outshine even Abbado's superb Macbeth, and it is superbly transferred to CD. The set is now all the more desirable at mid-price.

An enthusiastic welcome to this classic recording, now over half-a-century old, which is admirably brought back to life by Mark Obert-Thorne on Naxos and Tony Watts and Hilton Grove on Regis. The set preserves two outstanding interpretations, Gobbi's Boccanegra and Christoff's Fiesco, the brothers-in-law who rival each other in dramatic conviction. Gobbi's superb diction and subtle gradations of tone magisterially portray the Doge's changes of character. He is matched by Christoff's masterly and commanding performance as Fiesco which musicians will relish. Los Angeles's tone is exquisite and the performance is expertly characterised. Gabrieli Santini's conducting and the playing of the Rome Opera Orchestra fall short, perhaps, of the ideal but no collectors interested in great recordings of Verdi operas will want to miss this – in spite of the small cuts that are made. Both transfers are excellent: there is little to choose between them in terms of the vocal projection, but we were struck by the body of sound achieved in the orchestra on Regis.

The glory of Solti's reissued set from the late 1980s is the singing of Kiri Te Kanawa as Amelia, a beautiful, touching performance. The freedom and absence of strain in the voice go with an almost Straussian quality in her characterization, with the widest dynamic and expressive range. Giacomo Aragall makes a strong, unforced Gabriele, but the others are less distinguished. Leo Nucci is most disappointing, the voice showing signs of wear, not nearly steady enough. He sings powerfully, but Boccanegra's solo in the great Council Chamber scene finds the voice spreading. Burchuladze also is surprisingly less steady than usual, and Paolo Coni as Paolo is capable but undistinguished. What also makes this a less compelling reading compared with the DG is Solti's obsession with observing the metronome markings in the score very precisely – laudable in theory, but often questionable in practice; so the great Recognition scene lacks tenderness and fails to convey the joy of recognition which Abbado finds so movingly.

Stiffelio (complete; DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4288. Domingo, Sweet, Chernov, Riberi, Plishka, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (Dir: Giancarlo Del Monaco, V/D: Brian Large)

This was something of a historical coup for the Met., being in 1993 the first authentic production since the opera's début. (The score was thought to have been lost, but in 1992 Verdi's original manuscript came to light, to form the basis for the Met. performances.) The story concerns a pastor who preaches forgiveness yet finds it difficult to forgive his own wife for adultery. It was Plácido Domingo who initiated the project and he is clearly the star of the performance in the name-role. Otherwise the cast is mixed, with Vladimir Chernov's excellent performance as Count Stankar not balanced by Sharon Sweet's Lina (his daughter and Stiffelio's errant wife), who is neither vocally or dramatically well cast opposite Domingo. Nevertheless, because of Domingo's powerful performance the opera is really gripping; it is well staged and costumed without eccentricity, and Levine's conducting is well up to form.

Stiffelio (complete; CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. 475 6775-2 (2). Carreras, Sass, Manuguerra, Ganzarolli, Austrian R. Ch. & SO, Gardelli

Coming just before the great trio of masterpieces, Rigoletto, Il trovatore and La traviata, Stiffelio is still a sharply telling work, largely because of the originality of the relationships and the superb final scene in which Stiffelio reads from the pulpit the parable of the woman taken in adultery. Gardelli directs a fresh performance with consistent singing, notably from Carreras and Manuguerra. First-rate recording from Philips, typical of this fine series, and including a full libretto.

La traviata (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Decca DVD 071 431-9. Gheorghiu, Lopardo, Nucci, ROHCG Ch. & O, Solti. (Dir: Richard Eyre, V/D: Humphrey Burton & Peter Maniura)

🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3215 Fleming, Villazón, Bruson, Los Angeles Op. Ch. & O, Conlon (Dir: Marta Domingo, V/D: Brian Large)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4189. Netrebko, Villazón, Hampson, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Rizzi (Producer: Willy Decker, V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 343 (or Blu-ray 101 344). Gheorghiu, Vargas, Frontali, La Scala Milan Ch. & O., Maazel (Stage Director: Liliana Cavani; V/D: Paola Longobardo)

 DG DVD 073 4364. Stratas, Domingo, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (Dir: Franco Zeffirelli)

 Arthaus DVD 100 112. McLaughlin, MacNeil, Ellis, LPO & Glyndebourne Ch., Haitink. (Dir & V/D. Dir: Peter Hall)

 Warner NVC DVD 4509 92409-2. Gruberová, Shicoff, Zancanaro, La Fenice Ch. & O, Rizzi

As the DVD rightly claims, this famous Solti performance of La traviata captures one of the most sensational debuts in recent operatic history. Singing Violetta for the first time, Angela Gheorghiu made the part entirely her own. But the DVD can also claim a special plaudit for the magical opening, when the camera focuses closely on Solti while he conducts the Prelude, with every movement of his hands and the concentration in his eyes creating the music in front of us. He holds the tension at the highest level throughout, with the strings playing marvellously, and recorded with absolute realism. Then the curtain goes up and Bob Crowley's superb stage spectacle spreads out in front of our eyes. The singing is glorious, and this is one of the DVDs that should be a cornerstone in any collection.

Defying the problems of recording opera live at Covent Garden, the Decca engineers here offer one of the most vivid and involving versions ever of La traviata. As on stage, Gheorghiu brings heartfelt revelations, using her rich and vibrant, finely shaded soprano with consistent subtlety. Youthfully vivacious in Act I, dazzling in her coloratura, she already reveals the depths of feeling which compel her later self-sacrifice. In Act II she finds ample power for the great outburst of Amami, Alfredo, and in Act III almost uniquely uses the second stanza of Addio del passato (often omitted) to heighten the intensity of the heroine's emotions. Frank Lopardo emerges as a fresh, lyrical Alfredo with a distinctive timbre, passionate and youthful-sounding too. Leo Nucci, a favourite baritone with Solti, provides a sharp contrast as a stolid but convincing Germont.

As we could guess from her Tatiana in Eugene Onegin, Renée Fleming is an ideal Violetta, singing radiantly, and Rolando Villazón is both ardent and rich-toned, never coarse. Their two personalities strike sparks off each other, yet their voices blend rapturously. Renato Bruson, too, is splendid, making a dignified and strong character of Germont Senior, splendidly costumed (so important), and his scene with Violetta in Act II is very telling. The sumptuous set for the opening is visually spectacular to make the party very much an occasion. Overall, Conlon paces the score spaciously and holds the tension well in the very moving closing scene. Brian Large, as usual, covers the action with his cameras very perceptively, and the only slight drawback is the frequent, understandably enthusiastic applause.

Remarkably, the 2005 Salzburg Festival saw yet another sensational debut from Anna Netrebko, also making the role of Violetta totally her own, which understandably prompted huge ovations, not seen in Salzburg since Karajan's heyday. This is an astonishingly successful modern production, staged by Willy Decker and passionately conducted by Carlo Rizzi with the Vienna State Opera Konzertvereinigung and VPO contributing magnificently. Throughout the opera Netrebko sings gloriously, her tone pure, the lyrical line effortless, with exquisite controlled pianissimos. Moreover, she is partnered by the equally charismatic and equally glorious-voiced Rolando Villazón, who makes a perfect partner for her as Alfredo, their acting as well as their singing consistently real and spontaneous. Thomas Hampson, too, is a quite unforgettable Germont père. He is dressed plainly and soberly to preserve the character of the unrelenting father figure, holding completely to the original characterization and giving the story its period reality, even when Violetta, in her seductive red dress, brings the narrative into our time. The bright, spacious modern set is dominated by a huge clock which Violetta desperately tries to turn back in Act I; but it remains to dominate the final, infinitely touching scene of her death, with the doctor standing as a gaunt warning figure throughout the Act. In short, this is a production, full of imagination. The DVD comes with an additional disc with a documentary 'Behind the Scenes', excerpts from rehearsals, and an introduction by Rolando Villazón himself.

Angela Gheorghiu as both golden-toned singer and actress doesn't disappoint in her alternative recording with Ramón Vargas and father, Giorgio (Roberto Frontali). The two men do almost all that is needed in their roles, and both sing with feeling and ardour if with no special imagination. The stage spectacle, as one would expect from this source, is full of colour too and the production overall is satisfying. Lorin Maazel directs his La Scala forces with vitality and warmth and there is excellent camera control. From the beginning to the close, one is caught up in the tragedy of the characters who sadly cannot manage their lives more successfully. While the earlier Decca version must be a primary recommendation this Arthaus alternative is still rewarding. As can be seen there is an enhanced Blu-ray version for which you need special reproducing equipment.

It is Zeffirelli who dominates the filmed Met. production, which can move out and about as well as providing the most lavish interiors. But that does not detract from the passion or the tragedy. Teresa Stratas may not quite match Fleming, say, in sheer liquid beauty, but she totally identifies with Violetta and movingly carries us with her through all her reversals of fortune. Domingo is Domingo, and he sings with the fullest, boldest ardour. Cornell MacNeil is a less cultured Germont than usual, and this is reflected not only in his singing and manner but also, once more, in his costume. But Levine puts plenty of life into the performance, and overall this is a very telling production; and its spectacle is visually distinctly appealing. There are some small cuts, but none is vital.

Sir Peter Hall's production of La traviata for Glyndebourne in 1988, powerfully directed for television by Sir Peter himself, makes a very satisfying DVD version. The camera is used to disguise the relative smallness of the stage in the old Glyndebourne, with the necessary grandeur of the two party scenes, both at the start and at the end of Act II, vividly conveyed. At the same time, the intimacy of the drama of the dying Violetta is made the more affecting in close-up. Marie McLaughlin sings beautifully, yet too often fails to convey her deepest emotions in facial expressions, although arguably understatement is a fault on the right side. Only in the coloratura at the end of Act I does she have moments of vocal uncertainty, for this was a role that drew out her finest qualities. One is glad to have both verses of the Addio del passato. Walter MacNeil is a winningly lyrical Alfredo, and Brent Ellis is a strong, if slightly gruff Germont. Bernard Haitink is refreshingly direct in bringing out the drama of Verdi's score. The video direction is the more effective when this was recorded on stage but not in a live performance.

The alternative Warner DVD offers a moving performance, well cast and with sympathetic conducting from Carlo Rizzi, despite an excessively slow opening prelude. Though Neil Shicoff as Alfredo is made to look like a Victorian bank-clerk, hardly a romantic figure in metal-framed spectacles, the production is traditional, with colourful costumes and evocative sets. Romantic or not, Shicoff is in splendid voice, phrasing and shaping his big set-pieces sensitively, and Edita Gruberová makes a moving Violetta, jolly and vivacious in Act I, taking to the coloratura like a bird before gradually transforming into the haggard tragic figure of Act IV, crowning her performance with the most tender singing. Just as Giorgio Zancanaro as a strong, forthright Germont sings both verses of Di Provenza al mar in Act II, Gruberová sings both verses of the Addio del passato, surpassing herself in the whispered half-tone, perfectly controlled, of the second stanza.

La traviata (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Decca 448 119-2 (2). Gheorghiu, Lopardo, Nucci, ROHCG Ch. & O, Solti

🔑 * Decca 430 491-2 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Manuguerra, L. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Bonynge

Ⓜ (*) EMI 7 47538-8 (2). Scotto, Kraus, Bruson, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Muti

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 82623 (2). Moffo, Tucker, Merrill, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Previtali

() Testament mono SBT2 1369 (2). Carteri, Valletti, Warren, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Monteux

Ⓜ (*) DG SACD 477 0772 or CD 415 132-2 (2). Cotrubas, Domingo, Milnes, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, C. Kleiber

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 460 759-2 (2). Sutherland, Bergonzi, Merrill, Ch. & O of Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Pritchard

Ⓑ (*) DG (ADD) 4775665-2 (2). Scotto, Raimondi, Bastianini, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto

ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.110115/6 (2). Steber, di Stefano, Merrill, Met Ch. & O, Antonicelli (with Steber Recital ())

Ⓜ () Fonit mono 3984 29354-2 (2). Callas, Albanese, Savarese, Turin R. Ch. & O, Santini

ⒷⒷ (*) Naxos mono 8.110300/01. Callas, Albanese, Savarese, Turin R. Ch. & O, Santini

Ⓜ *() EMI mono 5 66450-2 (2). Callas, di Stefano, Bastianini, La Scala Ch. & O, Giulini

Sutherland's second recording of the role of Violetta has a breadth and exuberance beyond her achievement in the earlier version of 1963, conducted by John Pritchard, and the richness and command of the singing put this among the very finest of her later recordings. Pavarotti too, though he overemphasizes Di miei bollenti spiriti, sings with splendid panache as Alfredo. Manuguerra as Germont lacks something in authority, but the firmness and clarity are splendid. Bonynge's conducting is finely sprung, the style direct, the speeds often spacious in lyrical music, generally undistracting. The digital recording is outstandingly vivid and beautifully balanced but the CD booklet includes a libretto.

Muti has no concern for tradition; at the start of the Act I party music, he is even faster than Toscanini, but the result is dazzling; and when he needs to give sympathetic support to his soloists, above all in the great Act II duet between Violetta and Germont, there is no lack of tenderness. Overall, it is an intensely compelling account, using the complete text (like Bonynge), and it gains from having three Italy-based principals. Scotto and Kraus have long been among the most sensitive and perceptive interpreters of these roles, and so they are here; with bright digital recording, however, it is obvious that these voices are no longer young, with Scotto's soprano spreading above the stave and Kraus's tenor often sounding thin. Bruson makes a fine, forthright Germont, though it does not add to dramatic conviction that his is the youngest voice. Small parts are well taken, and the stage picture is projected clearly on CD in a pleasantly reverberant acoustic.

It is good to be reminded in this vividly remastered set how sensitive and powerful Anna Moffo's singing was in her prime. Her coloratura is impeccable in Act I of La traviata, yet consistently she conveys a girlish freshness apt for the character. She is particularly remarkable, when she goes on to produce beautiful lyric singing in Act II, opposite the powerful Robert Merrill as Germont père, while her dramatic singing in the Addio del passato in Act III is deeply moving, though, sadly, only one of the two verses is included, a regular cut at the Met. in 1960.

In 1956 one of the first recordings made by RCA in Rome, this version of La traviata on Testament brings together three principals better known at the Met. in New York than in Europe, notably the American baritone, by then a legendary figure, Leonard Warren, who here sings the role of Germont père with deep feeling. As Alfredo, Cesare Valletti sings most sensitively, colouring each phrase individually, with no hint of strain in his mellifluous tenor. Rosanna Carteri in the title-role sings with poise and tenderness, as well as brilliance in the coloratura of Act I, if with some edge. Her legato in her Addio del passato and Violetta's final solo in Act II are exquisite. Yet perhaps the principal reason for valuing this vintage set lies in the conducting of the octogenarian, Pierre Monteux. He brings together lyrical warmth and vigour with a rhythmic lift that is amazing in an ageing conductor. The mono sound is nicely balanced.

Cotrubas makes an ideal heroine in this opera, for her characterization combines strength with vulnerability. But Kleiber's direction is controversial, with more than a hint of Toscanini-like rigidity in the party music, and an occasional uncomfortable insistence on discipline. The characteristic contributions of Domingo and Milnes, both highly commendable, hardly alter the issue. However, played back in surround sound, the sense of presence in a three-dimensionsal acoustic is very impressive, particularly in the party scenes where the 'offstage' orchestra is cunningly repositioned, as indeed is Domingo. There is still spotlighting of soloists, but Cotrubas projects very realistically and vividly. While the balance still underlines the fierce side of Kleiber's conducting, which contrasts strongly with his ripely romantic side, the overall effect is highly involving, indeed thrilling, and this reissue must be counted an outstanding success.

In Sutherland's 1963 recording of La traviata, it is true that her diction is poor, but it is also true that she has rarely sung on record with such deep feeling as in the final scene. The Addio del passato (both stanzas included and sung with an unexpected lilt) merely provides a beginning, for the duet with Bergonzi is most winning, and the final death scene, Se una pudica vergine, is overwhelmingly beautiful. This is not a sparkling Violetta, but it is vocally close to perfection. Bergonzi is an attractive Alfredo and Merrill a clean-cut Germont. This is excellent value as a Double Decca, although now the libretto has been replaced with Decca's cued synopsis and 'listening guide'.

It is worth having the 1962 DG La Scala set for the moving and deeply considered singing of Renata Scotto as Violetta, fresher in voice than in her later, HMV set. In a role which has usually eluded the efforts of prima donnas on record, she gives one of the most complete portraits, with thrilling coloratura in Act I and with the closing scene unforgettably moving. It is sad that the rest of the cast is largely undistinguished. Gianni Raimondi as Alfredo is stirring if not refined, and Bastianini is a coarse Germont père. The conductor, Antonino Votto, gives routine direction but keeps the music alive. The usual stage cuts are observed. The recording is vividly atmospheric, a fair bargain. There are good notes and a well-cued synopsis.

Few singers on disc can match Eleanor Steber as Violetta in the historic live recording of La traviata, made at the Met; in New York on New Year's Day 1949, and now reissued on Naxos. The beauty and precision as well as the power of Steber's singing are phenomenal, with each note clearly defined down to ornamentation of diamond clarity. With the eager and youthful Giuseppe di Stefano as Alfredo, and Robert Merrill as a rock-steady, intense Germont, the emotional thrust of the drama comes over at full force, with Giuseppe Antonicelli drawing playing and singing from his Met. forces to match even a Toscanini. Limited radio sound clearly transferred. As a very welcome supplement come a series of Steber's commercial recordings of different arias, showing her versatility, from Verdi, Rossini and Puccini to Romberg and Richard Rodgers.

Like the companion Cetra set of La gioconda, this Fonit set was made by Callas very early in her career (in 1952) and in the present transfer the overall effect is quite open. Callas's characterization of Violetta had not fully reached maturity, but the fresh youthfulness of the voice more than compensates. All the singing is very characteristic (including an odd mistake in the vocal flurries before Sempre libera – otherwise an excitingly brilliant account). Francesco Albanese is a sympathetic Alfredo, especially in the closing act, but Ugo Savarese as Germont père is no more distinguished than Bastianini in the later La Scala set. However, Callas admirers will surely find this reissue worth having alone for Callas's very moving closing scene. The Italian libretto, though, is without a translation. However, Naxos have now made available a superior transfer by Ward Marston, still shrill at the opening but catching the voices well. The documentation includes a cued synopsis and this is a super-bargain issue.

Callas's version with Giulini was recorded in 1955. There is no more vividly dramatic a performance on record than this, unmatchable in conveying Violetta's agony; sadly, the sound, always limited, grows crumbly towards the end. It is sad too that Bastianini sings so lumpishly as Germont père, even in the great duet of Act II, while di Stefano also fails to match his partner in the supreme test of the final scene. The transfer is fair.

La traviata (complete; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3023 (2). Masterson, Brecknock, Du Plessis, E. Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Mackerras

Mackerras directs a vigorous, colourful reading which brings out the drama, and Valerie Masterson is given the chance on record she has so long deserved. The voice is caught beautifully, if not always very characterfully, and John Brecknock makes a fine Alfredo, most effective in the final scene. Christian Du Plessis's baritone is less suitable for recording. The conviction of the whole enterprise is infectious.

Il trovatore (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * TDK DVD DV-CLOPIT. Kabaivanska, Domingo, Cappuccilli, Cossotto, van Dam, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Karajan (V/D: Günther Schneider-Siemssen)

(*) NVC Arts DVD 4509 99215-2. Plowright, Cossotto, Bonisolli, Zancanaro, Ch. & O of Verona Arena, Giovaninetti (Video Producer: Robin Scott, V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 276. Sutherland, Collins, Summers, Elms, Shanks, Australian Op. Ch., Elizabethan Sydney O., Bonynge (Dir: Elijah Moshinsky.)

Domingo joined the production only at the last moment and so ensured that this 1978 Il trovatore was all but ideally cast and with Karajan returning to the Vienna State Opera to direct an undoubtedly great performance. How lucky we are that the cameras were there and that the staging was traditional, with no silly quirks, indeed nothing to mar an evening of glorious singing, with Cappuccilli in first-class voice as Count de Luna matching his famous troubador adversary. As for Fiorenza Cossotto's Azucena, it is surely unsurpassable in our own time. And José van Dam is there too, to sing one of Verdi's finest arias at the opening of the opera. Perhaps Raina Kabaivanska does no quite match the others in sheer beauty of voice, but dramatically she is a very convincing Leonora indeed. Fortunately, Günther Schneider-Siemssen's video direction is very well managed, and the sound is first class.

At the opening of the Verona Il trovatore, the camera focuses on the audience, then moves forward and turns to show the Count de Luna's soldiers with their siege machine and the wooden set which is obviously connected with the planned attack in Act III. Thereafter Brian Large ensures that we are drawn closely into the interplay of the characters. However, this opera (as Caruso told us) is concerned with great voices, and one welcomes in the opening scene the richness of Ferrando's timbre as he relates to the soldiers the grim tale on which the opera is based. The three principal characters soon arrive, the fine Leonora of Rosalind Plowright clear and true, the richly dramatic baritone of the Count di Luna (Giorgio Zancanaro) and the bold but less distinctive tenor of Manrico (Franco Bonisolli) who, later in Act III, almost shouts Di quella pira. If Leonora were to choose her lover on vocal power alone, it would have to be the Count, unattractive though his character may be. Fiorenza Cossotto is the ever reliable, intensely dramatic Azucena, and the chorus are splendidly drilled in their crisply dotted numbers. Under the baton of Reynald

Giovaninetti the whole opera goes foward with a vibrant propulsion, with the various duets and unforgettable trios splendidly gutsy. All in all, a most enjoyable DVD, very well recorded, but not the finest performance on record.

Recorded live in July 1983, the Australian Opera DVD presentation of Il trovatore offers a bravura display from Dame Joan Sutherland as Leonora, bringing the rarest combination of weight and flexibility to the role, surpassing in mastery her Decca studio recording of six years earlier, gloriously free over the widest range. Though the rest of the cast may not be so starry, they all sing with firmness and clarity to make it an exceptionally satisfying performance, with Richard Bonynge persuasively idiomatic in his conducting. Kenneth Collins is far more sensitive than many more celebrated Manricos – even though he is made to look like a Sicilian bandit – and Jonathan Summers is a strong, handsome di Luna, with Lauris Elms as Azucena making one wonder why she was never used as she should have been in recordings. Elijah Moshinsky's production updates the story to the time of Verdi, with characterful backcloths by Sydney Nolan, colourful if not always helpful to the story. The sound on DVD has an edge to it that does not help the voices, but the magnetism of the occasion has one forgetting that.

Il trovatore (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 57360-2 (2). Gheorghiu, Alagna, Hampson, Diadkova, d'Arcangelo, L. Voices, LSO, Pappano

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 74321 39504-2 (2). L. Price, Domingo, Milnes, Cossotto, Amb. Op. Ch., New Philh. O, Mehta

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 477 5915 (2). Plowright, Domingo, Fassbaender, Zancanaro, Nesterenko, Ch. & O of St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Giulini

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110240/1 (2) Milanov, Bjorling, Warren, Barbieri, Robert Shaw Ch., RCA Victor O, Cellini (with 6 Songs of Yugoslavia; Milanov, with piano & violin)

🔑 (BB) () Regis mono RRC 2060 (2). Milanov, Björling, Warren, Barbieri, Moscona, Robert Shaw Ch., RCA Victor O, Cellini

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62898-2 (2). Callas, Barbieri, di Stefano, Panerai, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111280/1. Callas, Barbieri, di Stefano, Panerai, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan

Ⓝ () ROHCG mono ROHS 011 (2). Previdi, G. Jones, Glossop, Simionato, ROHCG Ch. & O, Giulini

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 477 5662 (2). Stella, Bergonzi, Cossotto, Bastianini, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

(BB) () Regis Alto mono ALC 2004 (2). Callas, Barbieri, di Stefano, Panerai, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan

The problem for the two principals on EMI CD, Angela Gheorghiu and Roberto Alagna, is rather greater than in their previous recordings with Pappano, when their lyric voices might not seem weighty enough for the roles of Leonora and of Manrico. Gheorghiu characteristically capitalizes on the problem, bringing a rare tenderness to her big arias, floating her top notes ravishingly, and exploiting her formidable coloratura powers in cabalettas, always stylish in ornamentation. Only in the bravura aria Tu vedrai che amore in terra and the final scenes does she press the voice, so that it flickers in emotion. Though in the heroic outburst of Di quella pira Alagna tends to force his tone, holding on provocatively to his final top C, that is rather the exception, and generally this is a performance marked, like Gheorghiu's, by individual phrasing to bring out the warmth of emotion along with the meaning of the words. Thomas Hampson as di Luna is at once sinister and ardently sincere in his love for Leonora, giving a warmly involved performance, while Larissa Diadkova with a Slavonic tang in her mezzo tone is a formidable and moving Azucena. Ripely atmospheric recording beautifully balanced, with fine playing and singing from the LSO and London Voices. This is now a pretty clear first choice, though the mid-priced RCA set is still very strongly recommendable, and will still be first choice for some collectors.

The soaring curve of Leontyne Price's rich vocal line is immediately thrilling in her famous Act I aria, and it sets the style of the RCA performance, full-bodied and with dramatic tension consistently high. The choral contribution is superb; the famous Soldiers' and Anvil Choruses are marvellously fresh and dramatic. When Di quella pira comes, the orchestra opens with great gusto and Domingo sings with a ringing, heroic quality worthy of Caruso himself. There are many dramatic felicities, and Sherrill Milnes is in fine voice throughout; but perhaps the highlight of the set is the opening section of Act III, when Azucena finds her way to Conte di Luna's camp. The ensuing scene with Fiorenza Cossotto is vocally and dramatically electrifying.

As it so happens, DG have also re-released, as one of their Originals, Domingo's later (1984) portrayal of Manrico on CD, perhaps even more heroic and only very occasionally showing signs of vocal strain. Giorgio Zancanaro matches him with a firmly resonant Count, but the special joy of this set is Rosalind Plowright's Leonora, the singing not just having sweetness and purity (one can imagine her ending up in a convent) but with spirited and brilliantly flexible coloratura. Giulini's tempi are measured, but the intensity of concentration is in no doubt, and the recording is both naturally balanced and vivid.

The classic RCA recording of 1952, with four of the reigning stars of the Metropolitan Opera at their peak, remains among the very finest recorded versions. The transfers by Mark Obert-Thorn bring out the full beauty and character of all four principals very vividly and are particularly valuable when Zinka Milanov, always an iconic figure at the Met., is here recorded with a purity and firmness that transcends many of her later, all-too-rare recordings. Bjorling is, as ever, superb in his heroic projection, though in a performance with the usual cuts he is allowed only one stanza of Di quella pira. Leonard Warren and Fedora Barbieri are also perfectly focused, with Renato Cellini drawing lively playing and singing from the RCA Victor Orchestra and the hand-picked Robert Shaw Chorale. A recording to treasure and not to be missed at Naxos price. The bonus items of six songs from Milanov's native Yugoslavia, recorded in New York in 1944, give a different perspective on the voice: closer and earthier if just as characterful.

The new Regis transfer seems to us to give the voices marginally more presence, although there is not a great deal in it, and the Naxos sound is a little more rounded. Both sets are very enjoyable indeed, so choice can be made by considering whether or not you require the Naxos bonus of six Yugoslavian folksongs sung by Milanov. Incidentally, we omitted to mention the superb contribution of Nicola Moscona as Ferrando in the opera's first scene.

The combination of Karajan and Callas is formidably impressive. There is toughness and dramatic determination in Callas's singing, whether in the coloratura or in the dramatic passages, and this gives the heroine an unsuspected depth of character which culminates in Callas's fine singing of an aria that used often to be cut entirely – Tu vedrai che amore in terra, here with its first stanza alone included. Barbieri is a magnificent Azucena, Panerai is a strong, incisive Count, and di Stefano is at his finest as Manrico. On CD the 1956 mono sound, now greatly improved, is one of the more vivid from La Scala at that period. The set is now available fully documented at mid price as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

The Naxos transfer is well up to Mark Obert-Thorn's usual high standard, and one is struck by the wide dynamic range of the recording. The Regis Alto transfer is clear and clean, but the upper range is sharper and the orchestral strings thinner. The voices however are well caught and this is certainly worth its modest cost.

Gwyneth Jones was at her peak in 1964 (substituting for Leontyne Price) when this set was recorded live in 1964. Peter Glossop as Il Conte di Luna also sung splendidly, warm-toned and full-bodied. Simionato, however, was past her best as Azucena, but Bruno Previdi's Manrico certainly had its thrills. Giulini conducts with real electricity although without pressurising the singers, and altogether this is worth its relatively modest cost. But again we ask: why was it not recorded in stereo?

Serafin's splendidly red-blooded La Scala version on a DG Double is most enjoyable, with the contributions of Cossotto as Azucena and Carlo Bergonzi, splendid as Manrico, matching almost any rival. Stella and Bastianini give flawed performances, but they have many impressive moments; as Leonora's opening aria readily demonstrates, Stella is in full voice and identifies strongly with the heroine. The conducting of Serafin is crisp and stylish, and the 1963 recording is vividly transferred to CD with plenty of atmosphere.

Il trovatore (highlights)

Ⓑ (*) CfP 3 93375-2 (from complete recording, with Corelli, Tucci, Merrill, Simionato, Mazzoni, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Schippers)

The 1964 EMI Rome set of Il Trovatore is a long way short of ideal, but Merrill's Conte di Luna is characterful and firmly sung, if sometimes ungainly. Simionato is an excellent Azucena; Tucci, though less assured than her colleagues, sings beautifully. Corelli is at his powerful best as Manrico, a really heroic tenor, if not always subtle. His Di quella pira displays rather crude histrionics, but its gutsiness is welcome when Schippers's conducting is inclined to be rigid; however, his incisiveness is also compelling. The highlights disc comprises over 70 minutes and would seem a good recommendation.

I vespri siciliani (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OALS 3008D. Studer, Zancanaro, Mritt, Furlanetto, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti (V/D: Preben Montell)

As with Ernani, we have had this production already on CD and it is Muti who, conducting tautly, ensures that this live performance carries high drama, with the orchestra too playing splendidly. Cheryl Studer sings gloriously as Elena and Chris Merritt (as Arrigo) is in even better form here than on the CD set. They get excellent support from Giorgio Zancanaro as Montfort, the Governor of Sicily who also turns out to be Arrigo's father – while Ferruccio Furlanetto, who is vocally less strong than his colleagues, still cuts a convincing figure as Procida. As with Ernani, the production is straightforward, with no crazy impositions from a self-conscious stage director. The ballet is included, but it is presented effectively and danced well, and the music is tuneful enough. Excellent sound, too.

I vespri siciliani (CD version)

() Testament mono SBT 21416 (2). Callas, Christoff, Kokolios Bardi, Mascherini, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino Ch. & O, Erich Kleiber

This Testament reissue derives from a live recording which Walter Legge made on tape when Callas sang in Florence at the very beginning of her career in 1951. She is already magnetic, the voice at its freshest. She is partnered by the Greek tenor, Giorgio Kokolios Bardi who, while no Caruso, is very acceptable. Remarkably, Boris Christoff stars as a melancholy Procida, and Enzo Mascherini is a telling Montfort (not a grateful part to sing). The sound has been again remastered and, though very variable, is certainly acceptable.

Les Vêpres siciliennes (original; French version)

🔑  Opera Rara ORCV 303 (3). Brumaire, Bonhomme, Taylor, Baran, BBC Concert O, Rossi (or Lawrence in ballet)

Musically, the differences between this and I vespri siciliani are relatively small, but the use of French does alter the feel of Verdi's big melodies, even in the famous bass aria for the rebel, Procida, Et toi, Palerme, instead of 'O tu Palermo', well sung by Ayhan Baran, if with some flutter. As the hero, Henri, Jean Bonhomme is ideally cast with his very French-sounding tenor and stylish phrasing. As the Duchess Hélène, Jacqueline Brumaire sounds equally French with her warm, vibrant and agile soprano, and Neilson Taylor is excellent in the baritone role of the Sicilian Governor, Guy de Montfort. Mario Rossi conducts a lively, very well-paced reading of the score, totally idiomatic – though, oddly, the Act III ballet is conducted not by him but by Ashley Lawrence.

COLLECTIONS

'Verdi Heroines'; Arias from: Aida; Un ballo in maschera; Ernani; La forza del destino; Macbeth (sleepwalking scene); Otello; La traviata; Il trovatore

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 82876 7629-2. Leontyne Price (with various orchestras and conductors)

A famous collection from the 1960s, issued without additions. However, Leontyne Price, peerless in her generation, is here at her finest in virtually all these arias, recorded between 1959 and 1967, at the peak of her career, with the glorious voice well caught in the transfers. Full texts and translations included.

Arias from: (i) Aida; (ii & iii) Don Carlo; (ii) Ernani; Macbeth; (i) Otello; (ii) Nabucco (with bonus DVD: 1965 Paris recital, arias by Massenet; Bellini; Puccini)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI Legends (ADD) 5 57760-2. Callas; with (i) Paris Conservatoire O; (ii) Philh. O; Rescigno

The Philharmonia recordings, made in 1958, marked Callas's only visit to record at Abbey Studios. Much of the content shows the great diva at her very finest. Dismiss the top-note wobbles from your mind, and the rest has you enthralled by the vividness of characterization as well as musical imagination. It is sad that Callas did not record the role of Lady Macbeth complete. Here La luce langue is not as intense as the Act I aria and sleepwalking scene, which are both unforgettable, while she holds the tension masterfully in the long Don Carlos scene. Abigaille, Elvira and Elisabetta all come out as real figures, sharply individual. Finely balanced recordings, sounding good in their Legends transfer. The Paris recordings (with the orchestra's distinctive timbre) are exciting too, with the Desdemona from Otello commandingly taken, Aida's Ritorna vincitor vehemently done, and O don fatale as theatrical as you might expect. With the bonus DVD of arias filmed in 1965 with the Orchestre National de l'ORTF under Prêtre, this is one of the most tempting Callas collections about, though no texts are included.

Arias from: Aida; Ernani; La forza del destino; Otello; Il trovatore; I vespri siciliani

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110728. Ponselle (with various partners & accompanists including Martinelli, Pinza & Stracciari)

This splendid disc celebrating the glories of Rosa Ponselle's unique voice and interpretative powers brings excellent CD transfers of her most celebrated electrical recordings made for RCA in 1928, including the heroine's big aria from Ernani, spectacularly well done, and the sequence of Forza recordings with Martinelli and Pinza – as well as Columbia recordings from the pre-electric period, made between 1918 and 1924 – all chosen by Ward Marston as being the finest Ponselle versions of each item. The result is a wonderful gallery of perfection, beautifully transferred with the voice vividly caught.

Arias from: Aida: Ritorna vincitor!; Qui Radamès verrà! O patria mia. Il trovatore: Che più t'arresti; Tacea la notte; (i) Di tale amor. Timor di me?; D'amor sull'ali rosee

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 61395-2. L. Price, Rome Op. O, De Fabritiis or Basile; (i) with Londi – PUCCINI: Arias **(*)

This 1959 recital, known as the 'blue album' (the colour of the original LP is reproduced on the CD), has justly become a collectors' item – the glorious flow of tone makes one understand why, even if tension is lower than in Price's performances of the complete operas. The SACD brings added bloom to the excellent recording.

Arias from: (i) Alzira; (ii) Aroldo; Attila; I corsaro; I due Foscari; Un giorno di regno; I Lombardi

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 62309-2 (2). Caballé, RCA Italian Op. Ch. & O, with (i) Sunara; (ii) Kozma – ROSSINI; DONIZETTI: Arias ***

As in the Rossini and Donizetti arias, recorded around the same time (1967), these Verdi items (originally called 'Verdi Rarities') find Caballé at her finest. Re-listening to these performances, one can understand why Caballé's career really took off, when around this time she also had enormous stage success in America. Her bel canto has a fine-spun purity, and in these excerpts of Verdi's early genius she conveys the melodic freshness, against the conventional rum-ti-tum accompaniments: there is both brilliance and beauty in plenty here. Good accompaniments from the Italian orchestra, and vivid sound. Texts and translations – not to be taken for granted these days – are included.

Arias: Don Carlos: Tu che la vanità. La traviata: Ah fors è lui. Il trovatore: Timor di me

Ⓜ  Sony SMK 60975. Te Kanawa, LPO, Pritchard, or LSO, Maazel – PUCCINI: Arias  (with MOZART: Don Giovanni: Ah! Fuggi il traditor; In quali eccessi ... Mi tradì; HUMPERDINCK: Der kleine Sandmann bin ich; DURUFLÉ: Requiem: Pie Jesu ***)

The Verdi part of Kiri Te Kanawa's Verdi–Puccini recital brings three substantial items, less obviously apt for the singer, but in each the singing is felt as well as beautiful. The coloratura of the Traviata and Trovatore items is admirably clean, and it is a special joy to hear Elisabetta's big aria from Don Carlos sung with such truth and precision. Good recording, enhanced on CD.

Choruses: Requiem excerpts: Dies irae; Tuba mirum; Sanctus. Choruses from: Aida; Un ballo in maschera; Don Carlo; Ernani; I Lombardi; Macbeth; Nabucco; Otello; Simon Boccanegra; Il trovatore

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (IMS) (ADD) 463 655-2. Ch. & O of La Scala Milan, Abbado

The basic collection here, of nine opera choruses, was welcomed by us with enthusiasm when it was first issued in 1975. The combination of precision and tension is riveting and the analogue recording is of DG's highest standard, offering a wide dynamic range, fine detail in the pianissimos, and splendid weight in the moments of spectacle. The diminuendo at the end of the Anvil Chorus is most subtly managed, while the fine rhythmic bounce of Si, redesti (from Ernani) is matched by the expansive brilliance of the excerpts from Aida (lovely fruity trumpets) and Don Carlo, and by the atmospheric power of Patria oppressa from Macbeth.

For the reissue, as one of their 'Originals', DG have expanded the contents to a more realistic 68 minutes, by adding some more items from Abbado's complete recordings, including Un ballo in maschera and Simon Boccanegra. The snag is that the collection ends with three excerpts from Abbado's 1980 set of the Requiem, where, compared with what has gone before, there is a degree of slackness and lack of bite. In the Dies irae the chorus sounds too small and there is little excitement. However, the recording is excellent and the rest of the programme remains highly desirable.

Choruses from: Aida; La battaglia di Legnano; Don Carlo; Ernani; La forza del destino; Macbeth; Nabucco; Otello; La traviata; Il trovatore

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550241. Slovak Philharmonic Ch. & RSO, Dohnányi

Under Oliver Dohnányi's lively direction the chorus sings with fervour. The collection ends resplendently with the triumphal scene from Aida, omitting the ballet but with the fanfare trumpets blazing out on either side most tellingly. With a playing time of 56 minutes this is an excellent bargain, with naturally balanced recording from the Bratislava Radio Concert Hall.

Choruses from: (i) Aida; (ii) I due foscari; Ernani; I Lombardi; Luisa Miller; Macbeth; Nabucco; Il trovatore; I vespri siciliani. (iii) Overtures: La forza del destino; Nabucco; I vespri siciliani

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 5 87035-2. (i) ROHCG Ch. & O, Muti; (ii) Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Armstrong; (iii) New Philh. O, Muti

The Welsh National Opera made its reputation by the strength of its chorus work, and these performances are for the most part vivid and lusty, with plenty of character and rhythmic feeling, even if Va, pensiero from Nabucco, though effective, is not as memorable as one might have expected. The witches in Macbeth, however, are rather quaintly characterized to make a moment of light relief, and the recording is full and clear. Muti, at Covent Garden, gives us the closing Triumphal March scene from Aida and also directs the three Overtures, which are played with great spirit and character. A good bargain collection overall.

VICTORIA, Tomás Luis de (c. 1548–1611)

Ascendens Christus (motet); Missa Ascendis Christus in altum; O Magnum mysterium (motet); Missa O Magnum mysterium

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66190. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

Missa Ave maris stella; O quam gloriosum est regnum (motet); Missa O quam gloriosum

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66114. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

The Latin fervour of the singing is very involving; some listeners may initially be surprised at the volatile way David Hill moves the music on, with the trebles eloquently soaring aloft on the line of the music. The spontaneous ebb and flow of the pacing is at the heart of David Hill's understanding of this superb music. Ave maris stella is particularly fine. Hill's mastery of the overall structure produces a cumulative effect as the choir moves towards the magnificent closing Agnus Dei.

On the companion disc, the spirited presentation of the motet, Missa Ascendis Christus in altum prepares the way for a performance of the Mass that is similarly invigorating. The recording balance is perfectly judged, with the Westminster acoustic adding resonance (in both senses of the word) to singing of the highest calibre, combining a sense of timelessness and mystery with real expressive power.

Ave Maria; Ave Maris stella (hymn); Missa Vidi speciosam; Ne timeas, Maria; Sancta Maria, succurre miseris; Vidi speciosam (motets)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66129. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

An outstanding collection of some of Victoria's most beautiful music celebrating the Virgin Mary. The four-part Ave Maria may not be authentic, but the composer would surely not be reluctant to own it. The Westminster Choir again show their flexibly volatile response to this music with that special amalgam of fervour and serenity that Victoria's writing demands. This CD is withdrawn but is available to special order on Hyperion's Archive Service.

Missa Ave Regina caelorum (with motet: Ave Regina caelorum for 8 voices); Ave Maria (for 4 voices); Ave Maria (for 8 voices); Dixit Dominus; Laetatus sum; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes; Laudate pueri Dominum; Magnificat septimi toni; Nisi Dominus

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67479. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Martin Baker

Although it does not have the advantage of 'surround sound' like the account of the Officium defunctorum by The Sixteen (see below), this Hyperion collection also stands out among recordings of Victoria's music. Under the direction of Martin Baker the Westminster style is volatile and strikingly passionate (their account of the Dixit Dominus arrestingly so), yet there is serenity too in the lovely Missa Ave Regina caelorum, a parody Mass based on Victoria's two motet settings of which the eight-part version is used here to introduce the Mass. But it is the shorter works that stand out even more strikingly, especially the joyous Laetatus sum for 12 voices and the richly blended eight-part setting of Ave Maria, which closes the concert. The recording, made in the Cathedral, is not crystal clear, but otherwise is in every way first class.

Canta Beata Virginis: Ave Maria a 4; Ave Regina caelorum; Gaude, Maria virgo a 5; Magnificat primi toni; Ne timeas, O magnum mysterium a 4; Maria a 4; Sancta Maria, succurre miseris a 4; Trahe me post te; Salve Regina a 8; Vidi speciosam sicut columbam; (Instrumental) Senex, Puerum portabat a 4

🔑  Astrée Naive ES 9975. La Capella Reial de Catalunya, Hespèrion XX, Savall

This admirable collection of some of Victoria's most beautiful, and often celestially serene, Marian motets has as its highlights two eight-part works for double choir – the memorable antiphon, Salve Regina, and the glorious Magnificat primi toni, the Canticle of the Blessed Virgin, sung at the end of Vespers. But the four-part settings are hardly less memorable in these spontaneous, deeply felt and impressively blended performances, where the brass of Hespèrion XX are well integrated into the vocal textures, and indeed have the sombre Senex, Puerum portabat to themselves. The resonance casts a lovely aura over the sound, but it does blur inner definition and the words. However, full texts and translations are included.

Missa Gaudeamus; Missa Pro Victoria. Motets: Cum beatus Ignatius; Descendit Angelus Domini; Doctor bonus, amicus Dei Andreas; Ecce sacerdos magnus; Estote fortes in bello; Hic vir despiciens mundum; O decus apostolicum; Tu es Petrus; Vieni sponsa Christis

🔑 ✿ * ASV CDGAU 198. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Happily the name of the opening Missa Gaudeamus, for six voices, celebrates the label on which it is issued. It is a relatively serene 'backward-looking' work, yet with the closing Sanctus and Agnus Dei richly memorable. The shorter Missa Pro Victoria is even finer, indeed one of Victoria's most powerful and expressive utterances, and unique in being based on a secular chanson, La guerre, escoutez lous gentilz by Janequin. Andrew Carwood's performance moves forward with true Latin passion and grips the listener from first to last. Among the nine very varied additional motets, Tu es Petrus and O decus apostolicum and the remarkable Descendit Angelus Domini stand out. The recording is of the very highest quality.

Mass and motet: O magnum mysterium. Mass and motet: O quam gloriosum; Ardens est cor meum; Ave Maria

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550575. Oxford Camerata, Summerly – A. LOBO: Versa est in luctum ***

Like David Hill, Jeremy Summerly moves the music of each Mass on fairly briskly until the Sanctus and Agnus Dei, when the spacious espressivo of the singing makes a poignant contrast. The two motets on which the Masses are based are sung as postludes, and very beautiful they are, especially the idyllic O magnum mysterium. Finally, the short Versa est in luctum (a setting of a section of the Requiem Mass) by Alonso Lôbo, a Spanish contemporary, ends the concert serenely. The recording is excellent and this is a fine bargain.

Officium defunctorum (Requiem, 1605)

 Hyp. CDA 66250. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

Officium defunctorum (Requiem, 1605); Motet: Versa est in luctum

🔑 Ⓑ  Gimell CDGIM 205 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – CARDOSO: Requiem; D. LÔBO: Requiem; A. LÔBO: Motets ***

The Officium defunctorum is a work of great serenity and beauty. Honours are fairly evenly divided between the Westminster Cathedral Choir on Hyperion and the Tallis Scholars under Peter Phillips. The Westminster Choir has the advantage of boys' voices and larger forces; they are recorded in a warmer, more spacious acoustic. By comparison with the Gimell recording, the sound seems a little less well focused, but on its own terms it is thoroughly convincing. They permit themselves greater expressiveness, too. Moreover the Requiem is set in the wider liturgical context by the use of some chants.

The Tallis Scholars achieve great clarity of texture in this masterly work; they are 12 in number and, as a result, the polyphony is clearer and so are the words. They embrace also the motet, Versa est in luctum, which Victoria included as an appendix to his score. This outstanding performance of the Requiem is also available on a single disc with Alonso Lôbo's setting of the same motet text, but the present two-CD set includes Duarte Lôbo's Requiem as well as more motets by Alonso.

Officium defunctorum (Requiem), including Taedet animam meam vitae meae. Ave Regina caelorum a 8; Nigra sum; Quam pulchri sunt; Salve Regina; Trahe me post te

🔑 ✿ * Coro Surround Sound SACD CORSACD 16033. The Sixteen. Christophers

Harry Christophers and his Sixteen give a gloriously expressive performance of Victoria's Requiem, his supreme masterpiece, written in 1605 for the Dowager Empress Maria of Austria, and they have every advantage over their competitors above in the superb recording made in the Church of St Silas the Martyr, London, engineered in 'surround sound' by Mike Hatch. This compatible SACD is pretty impressive heard in the normal CD format, but when the rear speakers are brought into use and carefully balanced, the effect is of sitting in the Church itself; moreover not only is the sound more expansive but the range of dynamic is increased. The performance is prefaced by Taedet animam meam vitae, a Lesson from Matins setting a bleak text from the Book of Job, and the performance closes with the funeral motet Versa est in luctum and the responsory Libera me. The music of the Mass is supplemented by the proper plainsong intonations and verses (monody, beautifully sung by the sopranos). Before the Mass we are offered six other shorter works in which the eight-voice Ave Regina and Salve Regina both stand out. Altogether this is the most impressive of recent issues in the Victoria discography and it is strongly recommended.

Responsories for Tenebrae

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66304. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

Ⓜ  Virgin 5 61221-2. The Sixteen, Christophers

The Tenebrae responsories are so called because of the tradition of performing them in the evening in increasing darkness as the candles are extinguished one by one. The Westminster Cathedral Choir under David Hill on Hyperion find atmosphere in this music and bring a sense of spontaneous feeling to their performance. Of recent versions, this can be welcomed without reservation.

Harry Christophers and The Sixteen too are fully in sympathy with Victoria's Tenebrae responsories, combining serenity, beautiful blending of timbres and a willingness to be volatile when the music demands it. Excellent recording in a suitably warm acoustic.

VIERNE, Louis (1870–1937)

Piano Quintet in C minor

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67258. Coombs, Chilingirian Qt. – HAHN: Piano Quintet in F sharp minor ***

Vierne composed his Piano Quintet in 1917 after the death of his second son, killed in action at only 17 during the Great War. It is finely structured and its slow movement is particularly searching and thoughtful. The sleeve note draws a parallel with Frank Bridge, and its dark chromaticism is bleak and its world altogether harsher than the more familiar organ. Its centrepiece is the haunting and powerful Andante, the emotional core of the work. Stephen Coombs and the Chilingirians play with conviction and character, and are given the benefit of excellently vivid recorded sound. If you enjoy the Franck F minor Piano Quintet or the Chausson Concert, you will feel very much at home here.

Suite 3, Op. 54: Carillon de Westminster

🔑  DG 413 438-2. Preston (organ of Westminster Abbey) – WIDOR: Symphony 5 ***

The Vierne Carillon de Westminster is splendidly played by Simon Preston and sounds appropriately atmospheric in this spacious acoustic and well-judged recording. It makes an attractive makeweight to the Widor Fifth Symphony.

ORGAN SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1 in D min., Op. 14; 2 in E min., Op. 20; 3 in F sharp min., Op. 28; 4 in G min., Op. 32; 5 in A min., Op. 47; 6 in B min., Op. 59

🔑 ✿ * MDG 316 0732-2 (3). van Oosten (Cavaillé-Coll organs in Saint-François-de-Sales, Lyons (Symphonies 1 & 4); Saint-Ouen, Rouen (Symphonies 2 & 6); Basilica Saint-Sernin, Toulouse (Symphonies 3 & 5))

Symphonies 1 in D min., Op. 14; 2 in E min., Op. 20; 3 in F sharp min., Op. 28; 4 in G min., Op. 32; 5 in A min., Op. 47; 6 in B min., Op. 59

 Signum SIGCD 063 (3). Filsell (Cavaillé-Coll organ of Saint-Ouen de Rouen)

Symphonies 3 & 6

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553524. Mathieu (Dalstein-Haerpfer organ of Eglise Saint-Sébastien de Nancy)

Widor's Symphonies certainly have their impressive moments, but Vierne's are far more consistent in quality, and if you have not already explored them, this new survey from Ben van Oosten, superbly recorded on three different Cavaillé-Coll organs, provides an admirable opportunity to do so.

Ben van Oosten's performances cannot be too highly praised. He is deeply committed, has a wonderful ear for sonority and detail (witness his uniquely grotesque playing in the Scherzo of 6), and every performance creates the thrill and spontaneity of live music-making, while the recording of all three organs is magnificent.

Jeremy Filsell also plays these works splendidly and he has a fine organ in Rouen. Listen to the finale of the First Symphony to discover how thrilling it can be. But its sound, as recorded, spreads more than the MDG recording of van Osten's performances and detail is sometimes blurred. However, this is still a fine set which gives much satisfaction.

The Naxos pairing is also more than worth its modest price. Bruno Mathieu chooses the 'historic' organ at Nancy, which still has mechanical traction, and provides a very characterful baroque palette of its own, richly displayed in the Cantilène of 3. But the pedals are very telling, too, and the finale of 6 is powerfully spectacular; yet overall, inner detail is remarkably clear. The only small disappointment is the Scherzo of 6, where the diabolic rhythmic figure is not as ironically piquant as with van Oosten.

On Priory, both Colin Walsh at Lincoln Cathedral, and Ian Simcocks at Westminster (the more suitable organ of the two) show their mettle and understanding of this repertoire, and Vierne's music is projected powerfully and colourfully. But the Vierne Symphonies gain much from being recorded on Cavaillé-Coll instruments, so these discs must take second place to the others.

Messe solennelle

🔑  Priory PRDC 597. Mark Lee (organ), Gloucester Cathedral Ch., David Briggs – LANGLAIS: Organ Pieces & Messe solennelle ***

Vierne's setting of the Messe solennelle is less dependent on dramatically turbulent organ contrasts with the choir than the coupled work of Langlais, with the organ's role here more fully integrated. But it is still a Mass setting which is both thrilling and full of cantabile melody, and the Sanctus builds richly and climactically to the closing Hosanna. The Benedictus is full of gentle radiance, while the Agnus Dei brings a moving tranquillity, the Dona nobis pacem quite magical. The performance here could not be more sympathetic and is not in the least Anglican-sounding. It is remarkable that an English cathedral choir and organist should be able to capture the music's essence so movingly.

Congratulations to all concerned, including the recording producer, Caroline Paschalides.

VIEUXTEMPS, Henri

(1820–81)

(i) Violin Concertos 1 in E, Op. 10; (ii) 4 in D min., Op. 31

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554506. Keylin; (i) Janáček PO, Burkh; (ii) Arnhem PO, Yuasa

Misha Keylin couples the unfamiliar First with the much better-known D minor Concerto, which we are told he plays on a famous Stradivarius violin. Certainly its Andante religioso brings a generous-toned romanticism. But the solo timbre in the E major work is sweet and full, and he plays the dazzling lightweight finale with charm as well as sparkle. This is an excellent coupling, very well recorded, and both accompanying groups, Czech and Dutch respectively, are very supportive indeed.

Violin Concertos 2 in F sharp min., Op. 19; 3 in A, Op. 25

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554114. Keylin, Janáček PO, Burkh

2 and 3 are by no means inferior to the better known 4 and 5. They are full of good tunes, both slow movements are warmly touching, and the finales have lyrical as well as histrionic appeal. Misha Keylin gives highly persuasive performances that constantly tickle the ear in their subtlety of bowing and colour, easy rubato and imaginative dynamic shading. Dennis Burkh provides the strongest backing: his spirited introductions for both works (and especially the Third, with its throbbing drama) are arresting, and the orchestral playing, somewhat leonine in timbre, is excellent. So too is the recording, made in the Janáček Concert Hall, Ostrava.

Violin Concertos 4, Op.31; 5 in A min., Op. 37

🔑  Australian Philips Eloquence (ADD) 442 8561. Grumiaux, LOP, Rosenthal – SAINT-SAËNS: Violin Concerto 3 ***

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110943. Heifetz; (i) LPO, Barbirolli; (ii) LSO, Sargent – SAINT-SAËNS: Introduction & Rondo capriccioso; Havanaise; SARASATE: Zigeunerweisen (with LPO or LSO, Barbirolli); WAXMAN: 'Carmen' Fantasy (with RCA Victor SO, Voorhees) ()

Violin Concerto 4 in D min., Op. 31

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 7 64251-2. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise etc.; SARASATE: Zigeunerweisen; WIENIAWSKI: Concerto 2 ()

Heifetz was the first leading violinist to revive the long-neglected concertos of the 19th-century Belgian violinist-composer, Henri Vieuxtemps, recording 4 in 1935 and 5 in 1947. Both are compact works, rhapsodic in structure, which brilliantly exploit violin technique, making an attractive centrepiece for this disc of showpieces. The two Saint-Saëns pieces inspire Heifetz to much witty pointing and seductive phrasing, as do the Sarasate firework piece and the Fantasy on Themes from Bizet's Carmen, written for the film Intermezzo by the Hollywood composer, Franz Waxman. Each has remarkably good recorded sound for the period, well transferred, if with some surface hiss.

However, Viextemps's Fourth and Fifth Concertos are worthy of modern stereo, and the Fourth in particular is well worth hearing in as eloquent and persuasive reading as Grumiaux gives. The long introduction operatically builds up very effectively to the soloist's entry, the theatrical effect heightened by the distinctive sound of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The melodic invention of both Concertos is most beguiling and their brilliance exciting (the finale of 4 especially so) and it is good to welcome these distinctive performances back to the catalogue.

Violin Concerto 5 in A min., Op. 37

🔑 * EMI 5 55292-2. Chang, Philh. O, Dutoit – LALO: Symphonie espagnole ***

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (IMS) 457 896-2. Mintz, Israel PO, Mehta – LALO: Symphonie espagnole; SAINT-SAËNS: Introduction & Rondo capriccioso ***

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61745-2. Heifetz, New SO of L, Sargent – BRUCH: Violin Concerto, 1 etc ***

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 48274. Zukerman, LSO, Mackerras – BRUCH: Concerto 1; LALO: Symphonie espagnole **(*)

Sarah Chang's recording, coupling a scintillating account of the Lalo Symphonie espagnole, goes readily to the top of the list. It is beautifully recorded, with a perfect balance, in an agreeably warm acoustic. Chang's vitality is matched by Dutoit and her playing has a magically gentle tenderness in presenting the engaging lyrical themes of the first movement and the Adagio. The brief finale has splendid élan.

Mintz's performance has enormous dash and also real lyrical magic. Mehta, obviously caught up in the inspiration of the solo playing, provides an excellent accompaniment. This is another example of a memorable live performance 'recorded on the wing' and, if the acoustic is not very flattering, the sound is truthful and well balanced.

The quicksilver of Heifetz is well suited to the modest but attractive Fifth Concerto of Vieuxtemps, and Sir Malcolm again provides a musical and well-recorded accompaniment. The balance of the soloist is rather close, but the digital remastering is successful, and the couplings are both attractive and generous.

Zukerman provides here an enjoyable bonus to his dazzling accounts of the Bruch and Lalo works. There is comparable dash for Vieuxtemps, yet he coaxes the Adagio tenderly. Again a very forward balance, but the ear adjusts.

Violin Concertos (i) 5, Op. 37; 6 in G, Op. 47; (ii) 7 in A min., Op. 49

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557016. Keylin, (i) Slovak RSO, Mogrelia; (ii) Arnhem PO, Yuasa

Misha Keylin here completes his valuable set of the Vieuxtemps Concertos with a fine, fully competitive version of the popular 5, and he also gives première recordings of 6 and 7. They belong to the last year of the composer's life and show no diminution of his melodic facility. The G major is in four movements and, in addition to the lovely Pastoral slow movement, has a charming Intermezzo siciliano before the sparkling Allegretto Rondo finale. Keylin is a very persuasive advocate, equally at home and accomplished in the A minor Concerto, with its Mélancholie central movement and dashing closing Allegro vivo. He plays a 1715 Stradivarius, and his elegantly warm lyricism shows its timbre off to seductive effect. The recording is very good, too.

Violin Concertos 6–7; Salut à l'Amérique, Op. 56

 Audivis Valois V 4797. Poulet, Liège R. PO, Bartholomée

Gérard Poulet has a small tone, but his playing is polished and warmly cultivated, and it suits these charmingly elegant works admirably. He is well accompanied, and is recorded in a pleasing acoustic. The novelty here is the engaging concertante fantasy, Greeting to America, written by Vieuxtemps for his first tour of the USA in 1844. It opens genially, featuring the American National Anthem intimately rather than flamboyantly. Poulet has its full measure, as he has the variations on 'Yankee doodle dandy' which follow.

Viola Sonata in B flat, Op. 36; Elégie, Op. 30; Morceaux, Op. 61.

 Chan. 8873. Imai, Vignoles – FRANCK: Viola Sonata in A ***

 Simax PSC 1126. Tomter, Gimse – FRANCK: Viola Sonata in A ***

The Vieuxtemps Sonata is expertly crafted and well laid out for the instruments but it is no masterpiece. Nobuko Imai and Roger Vignoles give an exemplary account of it and are given expert recording from the Chandos engineers.

The Norwegian, Lars Anders Tomter, is hardly less accomplished and every bit as eloquent a player as his celebrated rival and countryman, Håvard Gimse, is a first-rate pianist. There is absolutely nothing to choose between them, and both couple the Vieuxtemps with the Franck Sonata arranged for viola.

VILLA-LOBOS, Heitor
(1887–1959)

Amazonas; Dawn in a Tropical Forest; Erosão; Gênesis

🔑  Marco Polo 8.223357. Czecho-Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Duarte

These are imaginative scores with tropical colouring and exotic textures, all sounding rather similar in their luxuriance – but who cares! Amazonas is the earliest and most astonishing score, dating from the First World War, and in its vivid sonorities affirms Villa-Lobos's contention that his first harmony book was the map of Brazil. The Bratislava strings could be more opulent, but the performances under a Brazilian conductor are very good indeed, as is the recording.

Bachianas brasileiras (i) 1; 2; (ii) 3–4; (iii) 5; (iv) 6–9

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557460/2 (3). (ii) Feghali, (iii) Lamosa, (iv) Gratton; Nashville SO; (i) Mogrelia; (ii–iv) Schermerhorn

The present issue makes an excellent introduction to the composer, and its three CDs assemble the nine Bachianas brasileiras he composed between 1930 and 1945. They were conceived as homage to Bach and range from instrumental and chamber pieces (like the First for an orchestra of cellos, the Fifth for voice and eight cellos, and the Sixth for flute and bassoon) to larger orchestral forces (the Ninth for strings and the Third for piano and orchestra and 7 and 8 for orchestra). They are all highly original and mostly colourful, and they are very well played. José Feghali is an excellent soloist in the Third, as is Rosana Lamosa in the well-known Fifth. The Nashville Orchestra respond with enthusiasm to Kenneth Schermerhorn who, alas, died before he could complete all nine pieces, and the First, which had been left to last, was conducted by Andrew Mogrelia.

(i) Bachianas brasileiras 1–9; (ii) Guitar Concerto; (iii) Mômoprecóce (fantasy for piano & orchestra)

Ⓑ  EMI 5 00843-2 (3). (i) Hendricks, Osorio, RPO, Bátiz; (ii) Romero, LPO, López-Cobos; (iii) Ortiz, New Philh. O, Ashkenazy

The Bátiz set of Bachianas dates from 1985/7. There is abundant spirit here and the performances are thoroughly persuasive; the popular last movement of 2, The little train of the Caipira, moves on its track with evident zest. Jorge Federico Osorio is an excellent piano soloist in 3, Lisa Hansen (flute) and Susan Bell (bassoon) contribute expertly to 6 – and it goes without saying that Barbara Hendricks is her appealing self in 5. The Guitar Concerto, written for Segovia, is not Villa-Lobos at his best: an amiable but inconsequential work, but Angel Romero makes the most of it, bringing out its Latin feeling. The Mômoprecóce began life in 1920 as a solo piano piece and was reworked in its concertante form later. The score is rowdy and colourful. Cristina Ortiz, herself Brazilian, is a natural choice for this repertoire, and she plays with appropriate vigour, reflective feeling and colour, and Ashkenazy gives splendid support. The late 1970s recording is excellent, although there is a degree of edge on high violins. Otherwise the sound is very good.

Bachianas brasileiras (iii) 1; (i; iii) 5; (i; ii) Suite for Voice & Violin. (iii) Arr. of BACH: The Well-Tempered Clavier: Prelude in D min., BWV 583; Fugue in B flat, BWV 846; Prelude in G min., BWV 867; Fugue in D, BWV 874

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55316. (i) Gomez; (ii) Manning; (iii) Pleeth Cello Octet

Jill Gomez is outstanding in the popular Bachianas brasileiras 5 and with the violinist, Peter Manning, in the Suite (1923). Villa-Lobos's favourite 'orchestra of cellos' produce sumptuous sounds in both the Bachianas brasileiras, and an added point of interest is the effective transcriptions for cellos of unrelated Bach preludes and fugues.

Bachianas brasileiras 5 for Soprano & Cellos

Ⓑ  Double Decca 444 995-2 (2). Te Kanawa, Harrell and instrumental ens. – CANTELOUBE: Songs of the Auvergne ***

The Villa-Lobos piece makes an apt fill-up for the Canteloube songs, completing Kiri Te Kanawa's recording of all five books. It is, if anything, even more sensuously done, well sustained at a speed far slower than one would normally expect. Rich recording to match.

(i) Chôros 1; (ii) Chôros 4 for 3 horns and trombone; (iii) Choros 6, 8 & 9

Ⓝ * BIS CD1450 (i) Zanon; (ii) Venque, Arantes, Hamzem, Coleman Milling; (iii) São Paulo SO, John Neschling

The series of Chôros on which Villa-Lobos embarked in the 1920s, employ various instrumental combinations. The First (1920) is for solo guitar, and the Fourth (1926) for three horns and bass trombone. The Sixth (also 1926) is the first for orchestra, and both the Eighth (1925) and Ninth (1929) employ Brazilian percussion instruments and the resulting sonorities, such as the caracaxa (children's rattle) have great exotic appeal. Villa-Lobos absorbed into his system much of the contemporary music of the day, Debussy, The Rite of Spring, Le boeuf sur le toit and other works of Les Six. Yet it is the richly textured exoticism evoking the sounds of the Brazilian forest, the boundless vitality of the dance, which resonates in the memory. Villa-Lobos creates his own sound world and there is an infectious life and atmosphere here. John Neschling, born in Rio de Janeiro, and a pupil of Swarowsky and Bernstein, gets an enthusiastic response from his fine São Paolo players and the BIS recording team does them proud. A good entry point into this composer's world.

Chôros 5, 'Alma Brasileira', for piano; 7, 'Settimino', for winds, violin & cello; 11 for piano & orchestra

 BIS CD 1440. Ortiz, São Paulo SO, Neschling

When he discussed the Chôros towards the end of his life, Villa-Lobos spoke of it as 'a genre, even if an ill-defined one'. The Fifth (1925) is a five-minute pieces for solo piano (perhaps the nearest word to approximate to Chôros is 'serenade') and the Seventh, for winds, violin and cello, is a strikingly original piece and the last of the Chôros composed for chamber forces. The Eleventh (1928) was written for Rubinstein and is a work of exceptional size and grandeur. The Finnish scholar Eero Tarasti called it the most remarkable of all his works. It is an inflated concerto grosso, turned into a truly romantic concerto for piano and a large orchestra, and it runs to over an hour (its last movement alone is 26 minutes long). Cristina Ortiz plays all this music with relish and the São Paulo Symphony Orchestra and John Neschling provide excellent support. A valuable addition to the Villa-Lobos discography.

Chôros 8; 9

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555241. Hong Kong PO, Schermerhorn

The Chôros 8 (1925) is what we think of as quintessential Villa-Lobos, exotic, full of colour and superbly evocative insect, bird and forest sounds, all effectively conveyed by the Hong Kong orchestra under Kenneth Schermerhorn. Villa-Lobos himself spoke of the Chôros as 'representing a new form of musical composition synthesizing different kinds of Brazilian Indian and folk-music, having as their principal elements rhythm and all kinds of typical folk melody that appear accidentally from time to time, always transformed by the personality of the composer'. Like 8, the Chôros 9 (1929) calls for a huge orchestra, including Brazilian percussion instruments. There is an exuberance, exoticism and an abundance of musical ideas clamouring for attention. The recordings were made in the 1980s and are very good indeed.

Guitar Concerto

🔑  Warner 2564 60296-2. Isbin, NYPO, Serebrier – PONCE: Concierto del sur; RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550729. Kraft, N. CO, Ward – CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO: Concerto; RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez ***

 Guild GMCD 7176. Jiménez, Bournemouth Sinf., Frazor – ANGULO: Guitar Concerto 2 (El Alevín); RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez ***

(i) Guitar Concerto; 12 Etudes; 5 Preludes

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61604-2. Bream; (i) LSO, Previn

From the very opening, Serebrier spins a web of vividly colourful sounds from the orchestra, which Sharon Isbin gently dominates. The lyrical secondary theme floats enticingly by, but the effect in the opening movment is of a free fantasia in which guitar and orchestra find true serendipity. The Andantino is charmingly romantic, the finale with its playful touches from the bassoon is zestful but rhythmically graceful. The recording is first class and beautifully balanced.

A highly distinguished account of the Guitar Concerto from Bream, magnetic and full of atmosphere in the slow movement and finale. Previn accompanies sympathetically and with spirit. The rest of the programme also shows Bream in inspirational form. He engages the listener's attention from the opening of the first study and holds it to the last. The recording has a nice intimacy in the Concerto and the solo items have fine presence against an attractive ambience.

An excellent account from Norbert Kraft, spontaneous and catching well the music's colour and atmosphere. If it is not quite as individual as Bream's version, it has the advantage of vivid, well-balanced, modern, digital recording and excellent couplings. Another genuine Naxos bargain.

Rafael Jiménez also proves a natural soloist for Villa-Lobos's intimate Concerto, and Terence Frazor and the Bournemouth Sinfonietta make the very most of the orchestral colouring, which sounds more vivid than usual. Yet the balance integrates the soloist appealingly within the orchestral texture.

Piano Concertos 1–5

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca 452 617-2 (2). Ortiz, RPO, Gómez-Martínez

What emerges from the series of Concertos, as played here by Cristina Ortiz, is that the first two are the most immediately identifiable as Brazilian in their warm colouring and sense of atmosphere, even though the eclectic borrowings are often more unashamed than later, with many passages suggesting Rachmaninov with a Brazilian accent. 3, the work Villa-Lobos found it hard to complete, tends to sound bitty in its changes of direction. 4, more crisply conceived, has one or two splendid tunes, but it is in 5 that Villa-Lobos becomes most warmly convincing again, returning unashamedly to more echoes of Rachmaninov. With Ortiz articulating crisply, there is much to enjoy from such colourful, undemanding music, brilliantly recorded and sympathetically performed.

Symphony 2 (Ascenção); New York Skyline Melody

 CPO 999 785. Stuttgart RSO, St Clair

The Second Symphony comes from 1917, at a time when the composer was much influenced by Vincent d'Indy. There are five Symphonies from the period 1916–20, the Sixth appearing in 1944. 2 was probably left in an incomplete state, since it did not receive a performance until 1944, when Villa-Lobos conducted it in Rio and then in Los Angeles. It is a long piece of 50 minutes' duration, with an opening allegro of nearly 18 minutes! By contrast, the New York Skyline Melody takes less than three. The Symphony is for 'completists' and, for all its abundant vitality, is wanting in symphonic concentration. Carl St Clair and his Stuttgart Orchestra play very persuasively and the studio recording is first class.

Symphony 10 (Amerindia)

 HM 987041. Tenerife SO & Ch., Victor Pablo Perez

Amerindia was written in 1952 for the 400th anniversary of the city of São Paulo; it celebrates the example of St José de Anchieta, who called the cabin which served him as church, school, home and hospital, São Paulo. Anchieta was sent to Brazil by the Jesuits, and here he created small village communities which protected the local tribes from the savage Portuguese colonizers and slave traders. It is Father Anchieta's story and his poem in praise of the Virgin Mary that inspire the Tenth Symphony. It is a huge work some 70 minutes in length and is full of the sprawling invention and lush vegetation characteristic of the composer. Each of the movements has lots of character and each rather outstays its welcome. The fourth movement is the longest at 27 minutes. There are simple melodies in the native Indian style, syncopated rhythms of the Afro-Brazilian people, plus birdsong, and traditional percussion instruments mixed with the huge orchestra. The canvas may be too large and overcrowded with detail but there is a vitality here that makes it worth investigating.

GUITAR MUSIC

Chôros 1 (Typico); 12 Etudes; 5 Préludes; Suite populaire brésilienne

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553987. Kraft

Norbert Kraft show his absolute mastery of his instrument in his dazzling account of the Twelve Etudes, which have contrasting moments of reflection. He plays the Five Préludes beautifully, too, with a fine control of atmosphere and rubato. The Chôros and Suite populaire brésilienne are marginally less spontaneous-sounding, and the latter is not as colourfully idiomatic as in the hands of Julian Bream. But this inexpensive disc gathers together all the composer's important music for solo guitar, and by any standards this is fine playing. The recording is naturally balanced and has a vivid but not exaggerated presence.

5 Preludes for Guitar

🔑 (BB) * Sony (ADD) SBK 62425. Williams (guitar) – GIULIANI: Variations on a Theme by Handel; PAGANINI: Caprice 24; Grand Sonata; D. SCARLATTI: Sonatas ***

Although John Williams is balanced a shade too closely, he is very well recorded; his playing, improvisationally spontaneous and full of magical evocation, is of the highest level of mastery. A lower-level setting compensates for the balance and enables this artist's playing to register effectively. These are as perfect and as finely turned as any performances in the catalogue.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Assobio a jato (for flute & cello); Bachianas brasileiras 6 (for flute & bassoon); Canço do amor (for flute & guitar); Chôros 2 (for flute & clarinet); Modinha; Distribuição do flores (both for flute & guitar); Quinteto en forma e chôros (for wind); Trio for Oboe, Clarinet & Bassoon

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55057. Bennett, Tunnell, O'Neill, Wynberg, King, Black, Knight

There are few more inviting introductions to the exotic colours and indelible invention that this Brazilian composer has made his own. With the superb flautist William Bennett at the centre of the group, the performances could hardly be more enticing, or indeed more polished. For the engaging Parisian Quinteto en forma de chôros of 1928, with its wild mood changes, there is equally expert playing from Thea King (clarinet), Neil Black (oboe), Robin O'Neill (bassoon) and Janice Knight (cor anglais). Among the various duos in the improvisatory duet style of Rio's street musicians (to which Charles Tunnell, guitar, also contributes) the romantic Modinha, the lovely Distribution of Flowers, the Song of Love and the chirping flute and fluid cello lines of the Jet Whistle, with its touching centrepiece, contrast with the witty Chôros 2. The most ambitious Brazilian piece is the unpredictable Trio with its raw jungle voicings, dextrous rhythms and syncopations and lyrical Languisamente. This slow central section and the Vivo finale are faintly Stravinskyan, but with an added touch of witty geniality. First-class recording, present but not too close. Not to be missed.

PIANO MUSIC

Alma brasileira, Bachianas brasileiras 4; Ciclo brasileiro; Chôros 5; Valsa da dor (Waltz of Sorrows)

 ASV CDDCA 607. Petchersky

Alma Petchersky's style is romantic, and some might find her thoughtful deliberation in the Preludio of the Bachianas brasileiras 4 overdone. Her very free rubato is immediately apparent in the Valsa da dor, which opens the recital. Yet she clearly feels all this music deeply, and the playing is strong in personality and her timbre is often richly coloured. She is at her finest in the Brazilian Cycle. The recording is excellent.

As três Marias; Bachianas brasileiras 4: Preludio. Prole do bèbe (The Child's Doll): Suite; Rudepoema

(BB) (*) Warner Apex (ADD 0927 40837-2). Freire

Excellent playing and eminently satisfactory recording of some delightfully colourful piano music. But at 40 minutes the measure is short, even at Apex price.

Cirandas; Rudepoema

🔑  ASV CDDCA 957. Petchersky

Not only is the playing here first class, but the music itself is of much interest. Rudepoema (1921–6) is a musical portrait of Artur Rubinstein and is full of temperament and virtuosity. Alma Petchersky rises to its innumerable challenges with great spirit and panache. The Cirandas (1926), which make formidable technical demands on the pianist, are despatched with great brilliance and poetic feeling. Alma Petchersky is very well recorded and, if the standards of this series are maintained, future issues will be self-recommending.

VINTER, Gilbert (1909–69)

Hunter's Moon

 Lyrita SRCD 316. Pyatt, LPO, Braithwaite – ARNOLD; BOWEN; GIPPS; JACOBS: Horn Concertos ***

Gilbert Vinter's Hunter's Moon is all but a mini-concerto for the horn, engagingly combining lyricism with bravura. A favourite encore with Dennis Brain, it is superbly played here by the estimable David Pyatt, part of the most enjoyable collection of British horn concertos in the catalogue.

VIOTTI, Giovanni Battista
(1755–1824)

3 Nocturnes for Flute & Piano; 6 Serenades for Flute & Piano

Ⓝ  Dynamic CDS 620/1-2 (2) Carbotta, Balzaretti

Viotti was primarily – both as composer and performer – devoted to the violin, but he also transcribed a good deal of his own music for the flute (or delegated arrangements to others). His three Nocturnes, published in 1820 (arranged by the French flautist Berbiguier) derive from his Trois divertissements for cello and piano, the Six Serenades, Op. 23 originate as works for two violins, and were apparently adapted by other composers too, as works for various combinations of instruments. This was obviously because Viotti was a natural melodist. So while the three Nocturnes are comparatively simple, the Serenades each have five or seven diverse, very inventive movements and, eight sections in the case of the last of the set. The tunes are catchy (some of them obvious 'hits' in the manner of their time), and varying from meditative feeling, in the case of the Nocturnes, to cantabile Andantes (sometimes with 'tricky technical passages'), Pastorales or Variations. The Allegrettos are usually bright and lively, but occasionally make a surprise move into the minor key. The piano reinforces the music's character, but also at times plays alone. Altogether these are most rewarding pieces and they are played with skill and spontaneity by Mario Carbotta (flute) and Carlo Balzaretti (piano).

VISÉE, Robert de
(c.1660–before 1732)

Pièces de théorbe in D min.; G; A min.; Suite of arrangements for theorbo of music by Lully

Ⓝ * Metronome METCD 1072. Fred Jacobs (French theorbo)

We usually hear the theorbo as part of a continuo, but here are three suites of original music for this divertingly intimate instrument, plus some attractive arrangements of theatre music by Lully. There are seven or eight Pièces in each collection, in the usual dance forms, although the D minor collection ends with a Passacaille and the G major a Musette. The penultimate movement of the A minor set is the famous Les Folies d'Espagne, and its finale is a sombre elegiac lament for the death of his wife and daughters. But most of this music is cheerful. It is splendidly played, but with appropriate delicacy by Fred Jacobs on a large French theorbo built in the second half of the seventeenth century, and truthfully recorded in a pleasing acoustic.

VIVALDI, Antonio (1678–1741)

'Masterworks': Sonatas for 2 Violins, Op. 1/1–12; Violin Sonatas, Op. 2/1–12; L'estro armonico (12 Concertos), Op. 3; La Stravaganza (12 Concertos), Op. 4; 6 Sonatas for 1 or 2 Violins, Op. 5; 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 6; 12 Concertos for Oboe or Violin, Op. 7; Il Cimento dell'Armonia e dell'invenzione (12 Violin Concertos), Op. 8 (including The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4); La Cetra (12 Concertos), Op. 9; 6 Flute Concertos, Op. 10; 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 11; 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 12 (Artists include Accardo (Opp. 1, 2, 5, 7, 8, 11 & 12); Michelucci (Op. 3); I Musici (Op. 3, 4, 6 & 12); Carmirelli (Op. 6); Holliger (Op. 7); Gazzeloni (Op. 10) & others.) 7

Trio Sonatas (for flute, violin & continuo) (_Musique des Lumières_). _Concertos: for Guitar_ (after _Trio Sonata, Op. 14/3); Lute, RV 93; Mandolin, RV 425; 2 Mandolins, RV 532_ (Lagoya, Presti, Munich Pro Arte O, Redel); _Double Trumpet Concerto in C, RV 537_ (with André, Lagorce); _Concertos à quatre for Flute, Oboe, Cello & Harpsichord, RV 100 & 106; Concertos for 2 Horns, RV 538 & 539; Cello Sonata, Op. 15/5; Oboe Sonata, RV 53_ (all with Paris Coll. Mus.). _Concertos: for Bassoon, RV 484; 2 Cellos, RV 130; Oboe & Violin, RV 548; Strings, RV 158; Viola d'amore, RV 540. Concertos: for flautino (Piccolo), RV 444 & 445; for Violin, RV 326; for 2 Violins, RV 514; for 3 Violins, RV 551_ (all with soloists, Sarre CO, Ristenpart). _Concerto (La Pastorella) RV 95. Concertos for 2 Oboes, RV 536; for Violin & Cello, RV 544; for Violin & Organ, RV 542; for Viola d'amore, RV 397; Cello Sonata, RV 41; Trio Sonata for Recorder, Bassoon & Continuo, RV 86_ (I Musici). _Concertos: for Flute, Oboe, Violin, Bassoon & Harpsichord (La Pastorella), RV 95; for Flute, Oboe & Bassoon, RV 103_ (Paris Baroque Ens. including Rampal, Pierlot, Gendre, Hongne). J. S. BACH: _Transcriptions of Concertos for Harpsichord, BWV 972/3; 975/6; 978; 980_ (Luciano Sgrizzi); _for Organ, BWV 593/4; 595; 596_ (Jean Guillou). Choral Music: _Beatus vir_ (2 settings), _RV 597 & 598; Canto in prato, RV 623; Confitebor, RV 696; Crediti propter quod, RV 605; Credos, RV 591 & 592; Deus tuorum militum, RV 612; Introduction al Dixit, RV 636 & 635; Dixit Dominus_ (2 settings), _RV 594 & 595; Domine ad adiuvandum me, RV 593; In exitu Israel, RV 604; Introductions al Gloria, RV 639 & 642; Gaude Mater Ecclesia, RV 613; Glorias, RV 588 & 589; In fuore, RV 626; Kyrie, RV 587; Laetatus sum, RV 607; Laudate Dominum, RV 606; Laudate Pueri_ (3 settings), _RV 600, 601 & 602; Magnificats, RV 610 & 611; Nisi Dominus, RV 608; Nulla in mundo pax, RV 630; O qui coeli, RV 631; Regina coeli, RV 615; Sacrum, RV 686; Salve Reginas, RV 616, 617 & 618; Sanctorum meritis, RV 620; Stabat Mater, RV 621_ (Soloists, John Alldis Ch., ECO or Concg. CO, Negri). _Cantatas for alto, RV 674, 677, 683 & 684_ (Lesne, Il Seminario Musicale) _Juditha Triumphans (Oratorio), RV 644_ (soloists, Ch. & Berlin CO, Negri). _La Senna Festeggiante_ (complete) (soloists, La Parlement de Musique, Gester)

(BB) (*) Decca/ Ph. (ADD/DDD) 442 9337 (40)

Although this super-bargain box has a Decca logo, these recordings (made between 1959 – one of the first stereo recordings of The Four Seasons – and 1991) almost all derive from the Philips catalogue, although a few come from the French branch of Universal Classics – who provide the only period-instrument recordings from Musique des Lumières. Everything else is recorded on modern instruments and, with artists of the calibre of Accardo, Carmirelli, Holliger and Gazzeloni, their excellence can be taken for granted. Most of the performances have been praised by us over the years (especially Vittorio Negri's pioneering series of the major choral works). Among the novelties are the Cantatas for alto, (admirably sung by Gérard Lesne with Il Seminario Musicale), the oratorio Juditha Triumphans and the virtually unknown La Senna Festeggiante. The recordings cannot be faulted; however, although music and performers are listed in detail in the booklet, there is no other documentation. Nevertheless this is a supreme Vivaldi bargain set.

Concertos & Sonatas, Opp. 1–12: _Sonatas for 2 Violins, Op. 1/1–12; Violin Sonatas, Op. 2/1–12; L'estro armonico, Op. 3; La Stravaganza, Op. 4; 6 Sonatas for 1 or 2 Violins, Op. 5; 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 6; 12 Concertos for Violin or Oboe, Op. 7; Il Cimento dell'armonia e dell'invenzione, Op. 8_ (including _The Four Seasons_); _La Cetra, Op. 9_ (with Toso, Rybin, Pierlot & soloists); _6 Concertos for Flute, Op. 10_ (with Rampal); _6 Concertos for Violin or Oboe, Op. 11_ (with Toso, Rybin & Pierlot); _6 Violin Concertos, Op. 12_ (with Toso, Rybin & Carmignola; all with Sol. Ven., Scimone). NICOLAS CHÉDEVILLE (attrib. Vivaldi): _Il Pastor Fido_ (6 Sonatas for Flute & Harpsichord) (Rampal & Veyron-Lacroix); _6 Cello Sonatas, RV 40/46_ (Tortelier & Veyron-Lacroix)

Ⓑ (*) Warner (ADD/DDD) 2564 64320-2 (18)

These Erato recordings were made between 1965 and 1988, with I Solisti Veneti under Scimone. They now come more handsomely boxed than the Decca set; moreover, they include proper documentation (and also Il Pastor Fido, which is worth having, even if only a Vivaldian pastiche by Nicolas Chédeville).

It has to be said that, side by side with the finest analogue versions of the time, the Erato sets of Opp. 3, 4 and 8, for all the intelligence and sensitivity of Scimone's readings, are lacking something in individuality. They are energetic and enjoyable in their way, with Toso an excellent soloist, positively mercurial in his eccentric but imaginative account of the Four Seasons. The recording is nicely balanced, but the backward placing of the continuo and sparseness of ornamentation do not help. However, La Cetra stands out as the finest of these sets of the Concertos, intimate and stylish, with the excellent Juan Carlos Rybin joining Toso as soloist. Many too will welcome the appearance of Rampal and Tortelier in the Cello and Flute Sonatas, particularly as they are partnered by Veyron-Lacroix on the harpsichord. All the recordings still sound well, and undoubtedly offer much enjoyment.

L'estro armonico (12 Concertos), Op. 3

🔑 * Analekta AN 2 9835 (2). Wallfisch, Tafelmusik Bar. O, Lamon (with bonus DVD: 'Four Seasons Mosaic', including Spring & Autumn) (Dir: Ann Shin, V/D: Chris Romeike)

🔑 * Chan. 0689 (2). Guglielmo & soloists, L'Arte dell'Arco, Hogwood

🔑 Ⓜ  Virgin 5 45315-2 (2). Biondi, Longo, Casazza, Negri, Naddeo, Europa Galante

L'estro armonico, Op. 3; (i) Bassoon Concerto in A min., RV 498; (ii) Flute Concerto in C min., RV 441; (iii) Oboe Concerto in F, RV 456; (i; iii; iv) Concerto in F for 2 Oboes, Bassoon, 2 Horns & Violin, RV 574

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 443 476-2 (2). ASMF, Marriner; with (i) Gatt; (ii) Bennett; (iii) Black; (iv) Nicklin, T. Brown, Davis, I. Brown

(i) L'estro armonico, Op. 3; (ii) 6 Flute Concertos, Op. 10

🔑 Ⓑ  DG 477 5421 (2). (i) Standage & soloists, E. Concert, Pinnock; (ii) with Beznosiuk

Wallfisch is an ideal soloist, fresh and appealing, and the transparent textures of Tafelmusik are most engaging. There is much subtlety of light and shade; vitality is balanced by expressive warmth and there is also a rare sense of fantasy. The recording is in the demonstration bracket. The set comes with a bonus DVD, 'The Four Seasons Mosaic', a 'cross-cultural performing arts documentary including musical traditions from around the world'. Filmed in India, China, the Canadian Arctic and Toronto, it features, besides Jeanne Lamon and Tafelmusik, sarangi player Aruna Narayan, pipa player Wen Zhao, and a duo of throat singers, Aqsamiit. Fascinating! But it comes free with the set anyway.

Using a new edition, based on the earliest printed manuscripts, Christopher Hogwood has returned to L'estro armonico, using a group of Italian musicians and, in particular, their maestro al violino, Federico Guglielmo. The fruitful results are borne out here in a glowing performance, with one instrument to a part, combining (unexaggerated) vitality with gleaming Italian expressive warmth. The quality of sonority is nearer to the ASMF style than some of the abrasive sounds we hear from some 'authentic' performances.

Pinnock's l'Estro armonico (with one instrument to a part) brings together the best features from past versions: there is as much sparkle and liveliness as with Hogwood, for rhythms are consistently resilient, the ensemble crisp and vigorous. In the Flute Concertos Lisa Beznosiuk is a superb soloist and the sound is first class throughout.

Fabio Biondi and Europa Galante start with 2, whose arresting opening Adagio e spiccato is very dramatic. Indeed, these performances are tremendously alert, crisply rhythmic and marvellously played, with the lyrical writing always winningly expressive. Biondi and Isabella Longo make a captivating partnership in the Double Violin Concerto, RV 519 (7). Period-instrument playing of Vivaldi has clearly matured and, with first-class modern recording, this offers a strong challenge to both Pinnock and Hogwood.

Marriner directs the Academy in radiant and imaginative performances of baroque music and yet observes scholarly good manners. The delightful use of continuo – lute and organ as well as harpsichord – the sharing of solo honours and the consistently resilient string playing of the ensemble make for compelling listening. The 1972 recording, made in St John's, Smith Square, is immaculately transferred, and as a bonus come four of Vivaldi's most inventive Concertos, each with its own special effects.

(i) L'estro armonico, Op. 3 (complete); (ii) 6 Flute Concertos, Op. 10. Miscellaneous concertos:

CD 1: Double Mandolin Concerto, RG 532; Oboe Concertos, RV 548 & 461; Concerto for Strings (alla rustica), RV 151; Con molti stromenti, RV 558; Double Violin Concerto, RV 516

CD 2: Concertos for Bassoon, RV 484; for Flute, RV 436; for Oboe & Bassoon, RV 545; for Strings, RV 159; for Viola d'amore & Lute, RV 540; for Violin (L'amoroso), RV 271

Ⓑ  DG 471 317-2 (5). (i) Standage, Wilcock, Golding, Comberti, Jaap ter Linden; (ii) Beznosiuk; soloists, E. Concert, Pinnock

Pinnock's performances of L'estro armonico and the Op. 10 Flute Concertos with Lisa Beznosiuk are among our top recommendations. The two separate single-CD collections, one entitled Alla rustica the other L'amoroso, offer lively, communicative performances, using period instruments in the most enticing way. The sheer variety of Vivaldi is constantly established, totally contradicting the old idea that he wrote one concerto hundreds of times over. The documentation is excellent.

L'estro armonico, Op. 3/1, 2, 4, 7, 8 & 10–11

(BB)  Naxos 8.550160. Capella Istropolitana, Kopelman

Jozef Kopelman and the Capella Istropolitana are robustly competitive with their bargain disc. The performances are lively, and the recording has warmth and presence. Good value for money.

L'estro armonico: Violin Concertos in B min. & D min., Op. 3/10 & 11

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 8414. Barshai, Moscow CO, Barshai – HINDEMITH: 5 Pieces; PROKOFIEV: Visions Fugitives ***

The playing of Barshai and the Moscow Chamber Orchestra is fresh and brilliant (technically it is impeccable), and if the original review thought that 'the lift is sometimes achieved at the expense of limpidity and warmth of phrasing', it sounds large-scale and warm by the 'authentic' styles of today. The bright (1962) recording is admirably warm and clear and lets the harpsichord continuo through adequately.

La stravaganza (12 concertos), Op. 4 (complete)

🔑 * Channel Classics SACD CCS SA 19503 (2). Podger, Arte Dei Suonatori

🔑 ❁ Ⓑ * Double Decca 444 821-2 (2). Soloists, ASMF, Marriner

Podger's solo playing is full of vitality and imaginative, expressive feeling, and the orchestra and continuo players all combine to give her a richly persuasive and detailed backcloth. Whether played using only the front speakers or also the third channel at the back (the fourth is silent) the recording has a spacious realism. While Rachel Podger's gleaming timbre dominates, the other soloists, drawn from the orchestra, are all excellent, as is the ensemble, apparently achieved without a conductor. The continuo too – archlute, guitar, theorbo, harpsichord and organ – comes through believably.

Marriner's performances make the music irresistible. The solo playing of Carmel Kaine and Alan Loveday is superb and, when the Academy's rhythms have such splendid buoyancy and lift, it is easy enough to accept Marriner's preference for a relatively sweet style in the often heavenly slow movements. The contribution of an imaginatively varied continuo (which includes cello and bassoon, in addition to harpsichord, theorbo and organ) adds much to the colour of Vivaldi's score.

The Trial between Harmony and Invention (12 Concertos), Op. 8; (i) 1–4: The Four Seasons; (ii) 5–12 (complete); (ii; iii) Double Violin Concerto in D, RV 513.

🔑 ✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110297/8. Kaufman; (i) Concert Hall CO, Swoboda; (ii) Winterthur SO, Dahinden; (iii) with Rybar

This is a very special Four Seasons. Recorded in Carnegie Hall in December 1947 by Louis Kaufman, a soloist of distinction, very famous in America in his day, and the Concert Hall Chamber Orchestra directed by Henry Swoboda, it was the work's recording première. Some 3,000 sets were pressed – and so too was re-established the reputation of Antonio Vivaldi. Kaufman went on to record the other eight Concertos of Op. 8 on Zürich in 1950 with the Winterthur Symphony Orchestra conducted by Clemens Dahinden, who was a natural Vivaldian and supported him well.

Kaufman was thus a key pioneer in promoting the Vivaldi revival, which came with the long-playing record. What is astonishing is how like modern-day performances these are, with apt tempi and a style which is athletic and expressive by turns. Indeed, all this music sounds as fresh as ever and, with excellent transfers, the sound too is astonishingly good, the Four Seasons limited in range but well balanced (with even a hint of the continuo now and then) and aurally pleasing.

The Trial between Harmony and Invention (12 Concertos), Op. 8

🔑 Ⓜ * Virgin 5 61980-2 (2) Biondi, Europa Galante

The Trial between Harmony and Invention (12 Concertos), Op. 8; (i) Double Concertos: for Violin, Cello & Strings in A, RV 546; for 2 Violins in G, RV 516

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61668-2 (2). Huggett, Raglan Bar. Players, Kraemer; (i) with E. Wallfisch & Mason (cello)

Fabio Biondi and Europa Galante have already recorded the Four Seasons and their period-instrument performance is highly praised below. The new version, within the complete Op. 8, is just as fresh and certainly as vibrant, with some dazzling solo playing full of dynamic subtlety.

Kraemer's complete Op. 8 Concertos with Monica Huggett make a fine alternative bargain recommendation in its new Virgin 2x1 format. In the Four Seasons, a lovely spontaneous feeling emerges: the light textures and dancing tempo of the finale of Spring are matched by the sense of fantasy in the central movement of Summer, while the rumbustious energy of the latter's last movement is gloriously invigorating. With two other enjoyable concertos thrown in for good measure, this is very highly recommendable.

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4 (DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4415. Kremer, ECO (Dir: Christopher Nupen)

🔑 * BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0818D. Fischer, ASMF, Sillito. (Producer: Gethin Scourfield, V/D: Ferenc van Damme.)

Ⓝ *() Warner NVC Arts DVD 50-51442-7865-2-1 Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini

Recorded against the attractive backcloth of the Abbey Library near Munich in 1981, Kremer's performance finds an almost ideal balance between virtuosity in outer movements and sensitivity in slow ones – where the orchestral group matches the soloist with textures of striking delicacy, and Philip Ledger's harpsichord contribution comes through gently. The direction by Christopher Nupen is quite imaginative and those who want no visuals except the musicians themselves playing will find this admirably satisfying. The modern-instrument sound from the ECO strings is pleasingly full and the balance excellent.

It seems rather appropriate that, as with LP and CD, one of the first really outstanding DVDs of The Four Seasons should come from the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields, this time directed and led vivaciously by Kenneth Sillito, and with a brilliant young soloist in Julia Fischer. She plays with remarkable freshness, obviously inspiring the Academy players also to give of their very best. The result is remarkably spontaneous, and one feels one is hearing this baroque masterpiece anew. The recording was made in the dome of the National Botanic Gardens of Wales, which has surprisingly good acoustics. All four of the Seasons were recorded separately. So the viewer watches the musicians in close-up or enjoys the pictorial splendour of the changing Welsh countryside, lakeland and glowing sunsets. There are 'director's cut' and 'performance edit' options and the bonuses include a series of brief interviews with the soloist.

This is a visualisation of Vivaldi's Four Seasons, taking the viewer on a tour of Venice during the four seasons of the year. The pictorialisation every so often fits with the music, as when a host of pigeons dramatically fly away, but at other times it is contrived. Mostly it is a series of vignettes of the thriving city, with its regular inhabitants, tourist visitors and craftsmen. It is certainly beautifully and vividly photographed, although at the very beginning there is no attempt to picture the shepherd's dog barking, so explicitly described in Vivaldi's music. However the package also includes a digital CD audio version, so you can listen to that alone, and the performance by Il Giardino Armonico is full of vitality, and delicate evocation, although the tempi of allegros are very brisk indeed: the Allegro non molto of 'Winter', for instance, is much too fast. The recording is first class.

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4 (CD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * Sony/BMG 88697 11013-2 Joshua Bell, ASMF

(i) The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4; (ii) Bassoon Concerto in A min., RV 498; (iii) Double Concerto for 2 Oboes in D min., RV 535; (iv) Piccolo Concerto in C, RV 443

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7531. ASMF, Marriner; with (i) Loveday; (ii) Gatt; (iii) Black, Nicklin; (iv) Bennett

The Four Seasons; Cello Concerto in B min., RV 424; Double Oboe Concerto in D min., RV 535; Concerto for Strings in G (Alla Rustica), RV 151; (i) Double Trumpet Concerto in C, RV 337

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony SMK 89987. Lamon, Tafelmusik; (i) with Steele-Perkins, Thiessen

(i) The Four Seasons; (ii) Oboe Concertos: in D min., Op. 8/9 (RV 454); in A min., RV 461.

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 0927 46726-2. (i) Manze; (ii) Ponselle; Amsterdam Bar. O, Koopman

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4; Double Violin Concerto in G, RV 516; Double Concerto for Violin & Oboe in F, RV 548

Ⓜ  DG 474 616-2. Standage, E. Concert, Pinnock

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4; Triple Violin Concerto in F, RV 551; Quadruple Violin Concerto in B min., RV 580

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Ph. 422 065-2. Accardo & I Solisti di Napoli

The Four Seasons; Violin Concerto in D, RV 171; Concerto for Strings in B flat (Concha), RV 163

🔑 * Naïve 111 OPS 569120. Biondi, Europa Galante

The Four Seasons; Violin Concertos: in E flat (La tempesta di mare), RV 253; in C (Il piacere), RV 108, Op. 8/5–6

🔑  DHM/BMG 82876 60158-2. von der Goltz, Freiburg Bar. O & Harp Consort (with Vivaldi's Four Descriptive Sonnets in Italian and English)

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89097-2. Blankestijn, COE

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4; Violin Concertos: in D, RV 211; in E flat, RV 257; in B flat, RV 276

 Sony SK 51352. Carmignola, Venice Bar. O, Marcon

It seems that The Four Seasons is inevitably linked on record with the Academy of St Martin-in-the Fields. They participated in the first outstanding LP/CD version (still a top choice), and in one of the finest DVDs with Julia Fischer, see above. Now they offer a truly outstanding new performance and recording in an inspired partnership with Joshua Bell directing from the bow. The solo playing is matchless, lithe and beautiful, full of expressive vitality, evocative of Vivaldi's descriptive intentions and ideally paced to catch the score's vivid detail. Moreover the bonus is an equally electrifying account of Tartini's 'Devil's Trill' Sonata. The recording is in the demonstration bracket.

Marriner's 1969 recording of The Four Seasons with Alan Loveday has been our top recommendation for nearly four decades and is still unsurpassed. Its stylish success on modern instruments makes one wonder what all the fuss about period performance is all about. It now comes back into the catalogue with three bonus Concertos which are hardly less enjoyable.

Salvatore Accardo's is a version with a difference. Recorded in live performances at the 1987 Cremona Festival, it is of particular interest in that Accardo uses a different Stradivarius for each of the four Concertos – period instruments with a difference! Thanks to this aristocrat of violinists, the sounds are of exceptional beauty, both here and also in the two multiple Concertos which are added as a bonus.

Tafelmusik offers another superbly imaginative version, but on period instruments. The playing is at once full of fantasy and yet has a robust gusto that is irresistible. The Sony recording is first class, with most refined detail.

Not surprisingly, Andrew Manze's bravura performance is hugely dramatic, fiercely energetic and full of individuality. In Spring, the shepherd's dog really means to be heard; in Summer the storms must be the worst for more than a decade, yet Autumn, while opening boldly, has a lusciously sensuous Adagio, followed by a very boisterous hunting party. The slow movement of Winter is similarly seductive, with very gentle raindrops, and the finale opens in a temperate, improvisatory mood, before dashing away impetuously to its riotous conclusion. Koopman matches Manze's virtuosity and feeling for atmosphere throughout and provides many subtle touches in the continuo (on harpsichord and organ). The bonus of two of Vivaldi's finest Oboe Concertos is the more winning for the sunny geniality of Marcel Ponselle's playing on a baroque oboe with a particularly attractive timbre. First-class recording.

Fabio Biondi and his similarly excellent period-instrument group, Europa Galante, have already given us an outstanding set of L'estro armonico, and their account of The Four Seasons is equally fresh. There is not a hint of routine anywhere, the solo playing is often exquisite; and even if the soloist nearly gets blown away by the gusto of the summer winds, the central reverie in Autumn is hauntingly gentle and serene. The bonuses are imaginative and include another of Vivaldi's most individual Violin Concertos and the Concerto for Strings given the nickname Concha because it is supposed to simulate a primitive instrument made from a seashell, notably in the central Andante with its echoing fifth (B flat and F).

Gottfried von der Golz is a highly sensitive soloist on DHM, but it is the sheer personality of the justly renowned Freiburg Baroque Orchestra that dominates this music-making. It is a performance of contrasts – indeed of extremes, with great energy in Allegros and very measured tempi in slow movements. In Spring the continuo at times suggests a hurdy-gurdy, while the shepherd's dog barks to a crisp abrasive staccato, and there is a similar sharpness of attack in the orchestral Presto at the centre of the slow movement of Summer, and again in the impetuoso finale. In the Adagio of Autumn the violin soloist floats delicately and languorously over an ethereal accompaniment with a delicate continuo; and Winter has similar evocative contrasts. The two additional Concertos are equally vibrant, their central Largos again ravishing in gentle espressivo. At the close we hear the four sonnets Vivaldi appended to his score, delightfully read in fluid yet theatrical Italian, but with a translation provided.

Trevor Pinnock directs his 1981 Archiv version from the keyboard, with Simon Standage leading the English Concert. Although a relatively intimate sound is produced, their approach is certainly not without drama, while the solo contributions have impressive flair and bravura.

The Sony version, with Giuliano Carmignola the breathtakingly brilliant soloist, is another period performance with no holds barred. Incredibly fast tempi for Allegros contrast with gently lyrical, highly atmospheric slow movements in which one is given the feeling almost of ruminative improvisation. Certainly the performances are full of imagination and there are many new touches (witness the sotto voce opening of Winter). Carmignola offers as his bonus similarly dazzling accounts of what are described as première recordings of three more Violin Concertos, all very attractive. The brilliant yet transparent recording matches the performances admirably. The CD offers texts and translations of the poems with which the works are associated.

For those still preferring the fuller texture of modern instruments, the Apex version with the COE provides the perfect alternative and at super-bargain price too. The chimerical solo playing of Marieke Blankestijn is a delight and her clean style shows that she has learned from authentic manners.

'Ultimate Vivaldi': Disc 1: The Four Seasons; Triple Violin Concrto in F, RV 551; Quadruple Violin Concerto in B min., RV 580 (Accardo & soloists, I Solisti di Napoli). Disc 2: Concertos for Bassoon, RV 498 (Gatt); Flute, RV 441 (Bennett); Oboe, RV 456 (Black); 2 Oboes, RV 535 (with Nicklin); 2 Oboes, Bassoon, 2 Horns & Violin, RV 574 (as above, with T. & I. Brown; Davis); Piccolo Concerto in C, RV 443 (Bennett). Disc 3: Cello Concertos, RV 401; 411; 412; 413; 418; 424 (Schiff, ASMF, Marriner). Disc 4: Concertos for Guitar, RV 93; 356; 425; for 2 Guitars, RV 532; for 4 Guitars, RV 356 (Los Romeros (members), ASMF, I. Brown). Disc 5: Double Concerto for Guitar & Viola d'amore, arr. Malipiero (Fernández, Blume, ECO, Malcolm). 2 Glorias in D, RV 588 & 589 (soloists, St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Wren O, Guest)

ⒷⒷ  Decca (ADD) 475 8536 (5)

This is undoubtedly the highlight of Decca's super-budget 'Ultimate' composer series. There is no better Vivaldi collection in the catalogue, led by Salvatore Accardo's outstanding version of The Four Seasons and including a superb collection of miscellaneous Concertos with outstanding wind soloists from Marriner's Academy (plus the excellent Heinrich Schiff in the Cello Concertos), and members of Los Romeros (originally by Philips) in the works for guitar (originally for mandolin, lute or violins). The selection is capped by splendid accounts from St John's of the two Glorias, including the more famous – RV 589. But it is a pity there are no accompanying liner notes.

The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4 (arr. for flute and strings)

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) GD 60748. Galway, Zagreb Soloists

James Galway's sensitive transcription is so convincing that at times one is tempted to believe that the work was conceived in this form. The playing is marvellous, full of detail and imagination, and the recording is excellent, even if the flute is given a forward balance, the more striking on CD.

(i) The Four Seasons, Op. 8/1–4 (arr. for recorder and strings); Recorder Concertos in G & C min., RV 437 and 441; Concerto for Strings in D, RV 124

(*) BIS SACD 1605. (i) Laurin; Arte Dei Suonatori

Dan Laurin plays the Four Seasons with an almost whimsical virtuosity, so that one is tempted to smile at times at his piquancy. However, it is the pair of Recorder Concertos that show him at his best, as Vivaldi knew just what he was about when he wrote them so freshly and wittily. The Concerto in D for Strings is also in some ways playful, and especially so in the finale, when Vivaldi creates a winning fugato out of a descending scale. The recording is very realistic, especially when the back speakers are used to add ambience.

La cetra (12 Violin Concertos), Op. 9

🔑 ⒷⒷ * Virgin 2x1 5 61594-2 (2). Huggett, Raglan Bar. Players, Kraemer

(i) La cetra; (ii) Double Oboe Concerto in D min., RV 535; (iii) Piccolo Concerto in C, RV 443

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Double Decca 448 110-2 (2). (i) I. Brown, ASMF; (ii) Black; (iii) Nicklin; both with ASMF, Marriner

Iona Brown here acts as director in the place of Sir Neville Marriner. So resilient and imaginative are the results that one detects no difference from the immaculate and stylish Vivaldi playing in earlier Academy Vivaldi sets. There is some wonderful music here; the later Concertos are every bit the equal of anything in The Trial between Harmony and Invention, and they are played gloriously. The recording too is outstandingly rich and vivid, even by earlier Argo standards with this group. For the Double Decca reissue, two of Vivaldi's most engaging Wind Concertos have been added, winningly played by two fine Academy soloists.

Monica Huggett and the Raglan Baroque Players offer performances so accomplished and in such good style that they are unlikely to be surpassed in authentic-instrument versions of La cetra. The Raglan Baroque Players are of the same size as the Academy of Ancient Music and some players are common to both groups. First-class recording.

Bassoon Concertos: in C, RV 466; in C, RV 467; in C, RV 469; in C, RV 470; in C, RV 471; in C, RV 472; in C, RV 473; in C, RV 474; in C, RV 475; in C,

RV 476; in C, RV 477; in C, RV 478; in C, RV 479; in C min., RV 480; in D min., RV 481; in E flat, RV 483; in E min., RV 484; in F, RV 485; in F, RV 486; in F, RV 487; in F, RV 488; in F, RV 489; in F, RV 490; in F, RV 491; in G, RV 492; in G, RV 493; in G, RV 494; in G min., RV 495; in G min., RV 496; in A min., RV 497; in A min., RV 498; in A min., RV 499; in A min., RV 500; in B flat (La notte), RV 501; in B flat, RV 502; in B flat, RV 503; in B flat, RV 504

Ⓜ  ASV CDDCS 552 (5). Smith; ECO, Ledger; or Zagreb Soloists, Ninić

The bassoon brought out a generous fund of inspiration in Vivaldi, for few of his 37 Concertos for that instrument are in any way routine. Daniel Smith plays with constant freshness and enthusiasm. His woody tone is very attractive and he is very well caught by the engineers. This set can be welcomed almost without reservation and, dipped into, the various recordings will always give pleasure. Even if some of the more complicated roulades are not executed with exact precision, Smith's playing has undoubted flair. For the last three CDs of the series the Zagreb Soloists take over the accompaniments and offer alert, vivacious playing that adds to the pleasure of these warm, affectionate performances. Daniel Smith, too, responds with vigour and polish.

Bassoon Concertos: in C, RV 469–70, 472 & 474; in D min., RV 481; in F, RV 486 & 488 (from above complete set)

(BB)  Regis RRC 1277. Smith, ECO, Ledger

This collection is taken from the earlier of Daniel Smith's recordings in which he is freshly accompanied by the ECO under Philip Ledger. Although the playing here is not quite as refined as that of Thunemann on Pentatone, it is always spirited and full of life. Moreover, the Regis disc offers seven Concertos at budget price against only four on Pentatone.

Bassoon Concertos, RV 471/473; 481/2; 484; 491/497; 499/500; 503/4

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo 475 233-2 (2). Thunemann, I Musici

Apart from the complete cycle by Daniel Smith on ASV, which has some rough edges, this is the most impressive survey of Vivaldi's bassoon concertos on CD. Moreover, Klaus Thunemann makes every work seem a masterpiece. I Musici are on their finest form, and all the slow movements here are touchingly expressive, with Thunemann's ease of execution adding to the enjoyment. With the Philips recording in the demonstration bracket, this reissue demonstrates just how well Vivaldi's music can sound on modern instruments.

Bassoon Concertos: in E min., RV 484; in F, RV 489; in A min., RV 498; in B flat, RV 502

 Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186. Thunemann, I Musici – TARTINI: Flute Concerto in G – Gazzelloni

These recordings were originally made quadraphonically and the surround sound on SACD is very impressive. However, compared with the original Duo above, this Pentatone CD, offering only four Concertos, is very short measure, and the Tartini bonus, although attractive, does not compensate, even though the surround sound is first class.

Complete Bassoon Concertos, Vol. 1: RV 471; 476; 480; 487; 493; 498; 503

(BB)  Naxos 8.555937. Benkócs, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinf., Drahos

Complete Bassoon Concertos, Vol. 2: RV 467; 475; 486; 488 (La notte); 501; 504

(BB)  Naxos 8.555938. Benkócs, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinf., Drahos

Complete Bassoon Concertos, Vol. 3: RV 472; 474; 483; 495; 500; 502

(BB)  Naxos 8.557556. Benkócs, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

Complete Bassoon Concertos, Vol. 4: RV 470; 477; 481; 485; 494; 499

(BB)  Naxos 8.557829. Benkócs, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

This excellent new Naxos survey seems set eventually to upstage Daniel Smith on ASV, and certainly to match the excellent recordings of Klaus Thunemann on Philips. Tamás Benkócs is a splendid, personable bassoonist, his expressive colouring matching his easy but sometimes remarkable bravura. Moreover, Béla Drahos supports him with accompaniments that are warmly phrased in slow movements and full of vitality in Allegros. If anything, the second collection (which includes the solo version of La notte) is more stimulating and lively than the first, and both make a good case for playing Vivaldi on modern instruments. The recording too is resonantly full without clouding detail; the balance, with the bassoon given a real presence, is very satisfactory.

Bassoon Concertos in A min., RV 497; D min., RV 481

Ⓝ () Australian Decca Eloquence stereo/mono 480 0833. Helaerts, SRO, Ansermet – MARCELLO: Oboe Concerto in C min. (); HANDEL: Organ Concertos ***

These two Vivaldi concertos start one of Ansermet's most unlikely recordings, comprising five baroque concertos. The first, in A minor, RV 497, was recorded in rich (1968) stereo sound, the second, in D minor, RV 481, in rather bright, upfront (1952) mono sound (almost 'authentic' sounding) – both offer surprisingly warmly stylish playing from both the orchestra (of a fair size) and the soloist, Henri Helaerts.

6 Flute Concertos, Op. 10; Flute Concertos: in A min., RV 108; in D, RV 429; in G, RV 438; in A min., RV 440; in C min., RV 441; (i) Double Flute Concerto in C, RV 533; Piccolo Concerto in A min., RV 445

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 454 256-2 (2). Gazzelloni, I Musici; (i) with Steinberg

A Duo collection entirely made up of concertante works for flute might be thought a rather daunting prospect, but Gazzelloni is an artist of such quality and poetry that such doubts are banished. And it must be added that these Concertos all show Vivaldi in the best light, not only in the best known, La tempesta di mare and Il gardellino, from Op. 10, but in many of the miscellaneous Concertos, too: witness the delicate slow movement of the A minor, RV 440, the touching Largo of the C minor, RV 441, or the lively opening movements of the D major, RV 429, and A minor, RV 108. In these modern-instrument performances Gazzelloni's tone is admirably fresh and clean, with I Musici giving him splendid support. The analogue recordings (from the 1960s and 1970s) are first rate.

6 Flute Concertos, Op. 10

Ⓝ  MDG 311 0640-2 Konrad Hünteler, 18th Century Camerata

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553101. Drahos, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinf.

Konrad Hünteler plays an 18th century wooden flute and gives admirable period performances of this fine set of concertos, persuasively accompanied by the appropriately named Camerata of the 18th Century. Il Gardellino and La Notte are among the highlights of the collection, most naturally recorded. But, this disc is short measure at 47 minutes, and Emmanuel Pahud is even finer – see below – and he offers two extra concertos.

Béla Drahos is an excellent soloist, and he phrases very musically: the Siciliana slow movement of Il gardellino is beautifully played. He gets lively support from the Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, who are also suitably gentle and evocative in the dream world of La notte. The C minor Concerto makes a welcome bonus, for in the finale the Goldfinch of Il gardellino appears to have flown back in through the window.

(i) Flute Concertos, Op. 10/1–6; (ii) L'estro armonico: Triple Violin Concerto in D min., RV 565; Quadruple Violin Concerto in B min., RV 58, Op. 3/10–11

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1243. (i) Hall, Divertimenti of L., Barritt; (ii) Laredo & soloists, SCO

Judith Hall's set of the Op. 10 Flute Concertos is fresh and brightly recorded. She plays with considerable virtuosity and a great deal of taste. The Divertimento of London is a modern-instrument group and the players are both sensitive and alert, and this is most enjoyable on all counts. The two accompanying Violin Concertos from L'estro armonico, for three and four violins respectively (although this is not made clear on the disc's packaging), are among Vivaldi's finest; they receive vigorous, spontaneous performances from the Scottish Chamber Orchestra, led from the bow by Jaime Laredo. At Regis price, a fair bargain.

Flute Concertos: Op. 10/1-6; in G, RV 414; in D, RV 427.

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 60373-2. Rampal, Sol. Ven., Scimone

Jean-Pierre Rampal was an aristocrat among flautists and it is surprising that his set of Op. 10, dating from 1966, has not resurfaced until now. His performances of the enigmatic Fantasmi of La notte, the delightful Cantabile siciliana of Il gardellino, the charmingly elegant opening movement of the F major Concerto (5), and the rollicking and echoing finale of the last Concerto of the set show him at his masterly best. His playing in the two additional Concertos offered as a bonus is no less delectable. Scimone and I Solisti Veneti provide more than acceptable accompaniments, and the sound is good, if not as transparent as we would expect today.

Flute Concertos, Op. 10/1–6; Flute Concertos in D, RV 429; A min., RV 440

🔑 * EMI 3 47212-2. Pahud, Australian CO, Tognetti

Needless to say, the virtuosity of Emmanuel Pahud is dazzling in the first Concerto of Opus 10, La tempesta di mare, while the two Largo movements of La notte show his legato tone at its most beguiling. The Australian Chamber Orchestra accompany spiritedly, and they come into their own in the bustle of the finale, and Pahud chirrups with the best in the finale of Il gardellino, after a delicious Siciliano Cantabile central movement. Strangely, the sleeve-note mentions another track, a slow movement from RV 226, which does not appear to be on the disc at all. Truthful recording.

(i; ii) Flute Concertos; Op. 10: 1 in F (La tempesta di mare), RV 433; 2 in G min. (La notte), RV 439; 3 in D (Il gardellino), RV 428; (i; iii) 5 in F, RV 434. Flute Concerto in A min., RV 108s; Sopranino Recorder (Piccolo) Concertos: in C, RV 553.

(BB)  Naxos 8.554053. Soloists; (i) Capella Istropolitana; (ii) Krechek; (iii) Dohnányi; (iv) City of L. Sinfonia, Kraemer

An attractive regrouping of recordings (78 minutes) brings a particularly generous clutch of modern-instrument performances that will especially suit those who want only the most famous named Concertos from Op. 10. They are most persuasively played and the recording is excellent throughout.

Complete cello concertos

Cello Concertos: in C, RV 398 & 399; in C, RV 400; in C min., RV 401/402; in D, RV 403/404; in D min., RV 405/406/407; in E flat, RV 408; in F, RV 410/411/412; in G, RV 413/414; in G min., RV 416/417; in A min., RV 418/419/420/421/422; in B flat, RV 423; in B min., RV 424; Concerto Movement in D min., RV 438; Double Cello Concerto in G min., RV 531; (i) Double Concerto in E min., for Cello & Bassoon, RV 409; (ii) Double Concertos: in B flat for Violin & Cello (Il Proteo o sia il mondo al rovesco), RV 544; RV 547

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550907 (RV 398–9; 404; 406; 410; 412; 419); 8.550908 (RV 400–1; 408; 413; 422; 531, with Keith Harvey); 8.550909 (RV 402–3; 407; 409, with Joanna Graham); 418; 423–4); 8.550910 (RV 405; 411; 414; 416–17; 420–21) (available separately). Wallfisch, City of L. Sinfonia, Kraemer (without RV 544; 547)

🔑 Ⓑ  RCA 82876 67886-2 (4) (without RV 398, 400, 421, 531). Harnoy, Toronto CO, Robinson; with (i) MacKay; (ii) Oistrakh

Vivaldi liked to write for instruments playing in the middle and lower register, favouring both the bassoon and cello (the latter a relatively new instrument in his time, having taken the place of the viola da gamba as a favoured solo instrument). Here are two highly recommendable recordings of Vivaldi's 'complete' Cello Concertos; neither is quite complete, but if it is the 27 solo Concertos you are most concerned with, then Raphael Wallfisch offers them all, including the sole Double Cello Concerto, RV 531 (which Ofra Harnoy omits), and the Concerto for Cello and Bassoon, RV 409. Harnoy, however, includes the pair of Double Concertos with Violin (which the Naxos set omits). Here she achieves an excellent partnership with Igor Oistrakh, and in the work with the subtitle 'Il Proteo' the Adagio is particularly touching. Hers are traditional performances with modern instruments; she plays with style, impeccable technique and eloquence. In short, she is a first-rate artist with a good lyrical sense. Her strength lies not so much in her tone, which is not big, but in her selfless approach to this repertoire. She is given good support from the Toronto Chamber Orchestra and is very well recorded.

The Naxos series is part of a planned overall survey, and in the solo Concertos the choice of Raphael Wallfisch could hardly have been bettered. He forms an admirable partnership with the City of London Sinfonia, directed from the harpsichord or chamber organ by Nicholas Kraemer, so that, although not using period instruments, the effect is as authentic as you could want. Kraemer's use of the organ continuo, both in tutti and to underpin the solo cello line (in RV 419, for instance), is most effective, while in Allegros the alert, resilient orchestral strings are a pleasure in themselves. Wallfisch plays with a restrained use of vibrato and a nicely judged expressive feeling, and in the Double Concerto (which he shares with Keith Harvey), there is much bustling interchange in the outer novements, with the soloists answering each other eloquently in the Largo.

Volume 3 (8.550909) is a particularly fine collection, including the E minor Double Concerto, RV 409, where the cello is joined by a subservient and somewhat doleful solo bassoon; but Volume 4 brings a further batch of Concertos notable for their vitality and the vigorous bravura demanded from the soloist. Throughout these four Naxos discs there is never a hint of routine; the recording is vividly realistic and the balance very well judged indeed.

Cello Concertos: in C min., RV 401; in F, RV 410; in G, RV 413; in A min., RV 418; in B min., RV 424; in A min. (trans. from Violin Concerto, RV 356); The Four Seasons: Winter

 RCA 88697 131692. Gabetta, Sonatori De la Gioiosa Marca

Sol Gabetta gives comparatively intimate performances with the small baroque group, just as Vivaldi planned. They are stylish and pleasing, their moments of gentle melancholy are touching, and if her solo personality is less strong than that of Rafael Wallfisch, she is still a fine, sensitive player who understands the repertoire. But why transcribe two works for violin when there are so many Vivaldi Concertos for cello?

Cello Concerto in D min., RV 406.

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49839-2. Rostropovich, St Paul CO, Wolff – C. P. E. BACH; TARTINI: Concertos ***

Who says that modern chamber orchestras cannot achieve the same transparency as period ensembles? Admittedly the St Paul Chamber Orchestra have had the advantage of Christopher Hogwood's presence, but the sound they produce blends transparency of texture with warmth and subtlety of colouring. Rostropovich is as masterly and eloquent as one could imagine, and he is accorded excellently balanced sound.

Flute concertos, Vol. 1: Chamber Concertos: in C, for Flute, Oboe, Violin, Bassoon & Continuo, RV 88; in D, for Flute & 2 Violins, RV 89; in D, for Flute, Violin, Bassoon & Continuo (Il gardellino), RV 90; in D, RV 91; in D min., RV 96 (both for Flute, Violin, Bassoon & Continuo); in F, RV 99; in G min., RV 107 (both for Flute, Oboe, Violin, Bassoon & Continuo)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553365. Drahos and soloists, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinf.

This Naxos disc collects multiple Concertos, but with a continuo instead of an orchestra. Although not to be played at a single sitting, these works offer a great deal of pleasure, stemming from their rich textural interplay with plenty of imitation among the soloists. The quality of invention is astonishingly high. Il gardellino (which opens the programme) is justly famous, but the G minor work, RV 107, is also remarkable, with a touching Siciliano slow movement; it ends with a chaconne which maintains the minor key. RV 88 has a strikingly cheerful opening movement, then gives prominence to the flute both in its central Largo cantabile and in another chirping finale. RV 89 effectively brings a change of colour in the use of a pair of violins in juxtaposition to the flute. The performances here are admirable and the recording is most effectively balanced.

Flute Concertos: in A min., RV 108; in F, RV 434; Double Flute Concerto in C, RV 533; Sopranino Recorder Concertos: in C, RV 443 & RV 444; in A min., RV 445

(BB)  Naxos 8.550385. Jálek, Novotny, Stivin, Capella Istropolitana, Dohnányi

The Capella Istropolitana, who are drawn from the excellent Slovak Philharmonic, play with vitality and sensitivity for Oliver Dohnányi and the soloists show appropriate virtuosity and flair. As always, there are rewards and surprises in this music. The sound is very good indeed, and so is the balance.

Flute Concertos: in D, RV 427 & RV 429; in E min., RV 431 & RV 432; in G, RV 436; RV 438 & RV 438 bis; in A min., RV 440; in C, RV 533.

🔑  Naïve OP 30298. Kuijken, Academia Montis Regale

If Jean-Pierre Rampal was the patrician among flautists of the 1950s and 1960s, it was Barthold Kuijken who took his place in the 1960s and 1970s, after discovering and mastering an original baroque instrument. For the present recordings he plays a copy of a Belgian transverse flute of 1735, while the Academia Montis Regale accompany him smoothly, proficiently and spiritedly on comparable period instruments. For the programme here he turned to a collection of manuscripts in the Turin Library, from which the A minor Concerto, RV 440, stands out, while Vivaldi's sole Concerto for Two Flutes, RV 533, is made doubly charming by the use of a bassoon continuo throughout. The Concerto in G major, K. 438, also features the bassoon in duet with the flute in the Andante, and the Largo of RV 436 proves to be rather similar, but with a cello in place of a bassoon. The other Concertos here are all elegant and attractive works. None is as spectacular as the Op. 10 set, but their simplicity is also their virtue. The performances could hardly be more authentic, and the recording is excellent.

Lute Concerto in D, RV 93; Mandolin Concerto in C, RV 425; (i) Double Mandolin Concerto, RV 432; (ii) Double Concerto in D min. for Viola d'amore and Lute, RV 540; (i) Sonata in G min., RV 42; Trio Sonata in C, RV 82

Ⓝ * Nimbus NI 2515 Eliot Fisk, O of St Lukes; (i) F. Hand; (ii) L. Schulman (with BACH: Concerto in D, RV 972 (arr. for 2 Mandolins) ***)

Among various collections featuring the lute and mandolin this Nimbus collection stands out. The modern instrument performances are full of character. The Lute Concerto, D.93 stands out for its strength of personality, but both Double Concertos are very successful too and the inclusion of the Bach transcription is a real bonus – a most attractive little work. Outstanding playing from everyone concerned, and excellent recording.

Mandolin Concertos in D, RV 93; C, RV 425; (i) Double Mandolin Concerto in G, RV 332; Concerto for 2 Flutes, 2 Chalumeaux, 2 Violins ('In tromba marina'), 2 Mandolins, 2 Theorbos & Cello in C, RV 558

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61264-2. Orlandi; (i) Frati; soloists, Sol. Ven., Scimone

It is good to have a budget CD with excellent performances of the two solo Mandolin Concertos and the Double Mandolin Concerto, presented with style and delicacy and with the colourful Concerto con molti istromenti thrown in for good measure. The recording is very good indeed.

Mandolin Concerto, RV 435; (i) Double Mandolin Concert, RV 533; Double Concerto for Viola d'amore & Lute, RV 540; Concerto for Lute & 2 Violins; Trio Sonatas for Violin, Lute & Continuo, RV82 & 85

🔑 (*) Naïve OP 30429. Rolf Lislevand; (i) Murphy; Kapsberger Ens.

A superb disc, gathering Vivaldi's mandolin and lute music neatly together with dazzling bravura from the key soloist, Rolf Lislevand, with Stephen Murphy joining him in a sparkling account of the Double Concerto. Some might find that the continuo (with extra plucking) is a bit over the top, and it can't be what Vivaldi had in mind. But the rest of the programme is delightfully planned, and it is good to hear the softer lute timbre in contrast. Apart from that continuo, this is highly recommendable.

Mandolin Concerto in C, RV 425; Double Mandolin Concerto in G, RV 532; (Soprano) Lute Concerto in D, RV 93; Double Concerto in D min. for Viola d'amore & Lute, RV 540. Trios: in C, RV 82; in G min., RV 85

 Hyp. CDA 66160. Jeffrey, O'Dette, Parley of Instruments, Goodman & Holman

These are chamber performances, with one instrument to each part, providing an ideal balance for the Mandolin Concertos. An organ continuo replaces the usual harpsichord, and very effective it is; in the Trios and the Lute Concerto (but not in the Double Concerto, RV 540) Paul O'Dette uses a gut-strung soprano lute. The delightful sounds here, with all players using period instruments, are very convincing. The recording is realistically balanced within an attractively spacious acoustic.

(i) Mandolin Concerto in C, RV 425; (i, ii) Double Concerto for 2 Mandolins in G, RV 532; Concerti con molti strumenti: Concerto for Violin & 2 Flutes diritti; 3 Oboes & Bassoon (dedicated to a Sua Altezza Reale di Sassonia), RV 576; Concerto for 2 Violins in tromba marina, 2 Flutes diritti, 2 Mandolins, 2 Salmoe, 2 Theorbos & Cello, RV 558; Concerto for Violin solo, 2 Oboes & Bassoon (dedicated to S. Pisandel) (Dresden version), RV 319; Concerto for 2 Violins & 2 Cellos in D, RV 564; Concerto in C for 3 Violins, Oboe & 2 Flutes diritti; 2 Viole all'inglese, Salmoe, 2 Cellos, 2 Harpsichords & 2 Violins in tromba marina, RV 555

🔑 * Virgin 5 45527-2. (i) Scaramuzzino; (ii) Maurer; soloists, Europa Galante, Biondi

Another excellent disc from Fabio Biondi and his outstanding period instrument group. The two simple Mandolin Concerti are played intimately and are perfectly balanced. The Concertos con molti strumenti offer an extraordinary range of tone colour, especially the extravagantly scored C major Concerto, RV 555. In the Largo of this work the violin plays an obbligato line to the two solo harpsichords, which are given alternating arpeggios in a pendulum style, embroidering them a piacimento ('as they please'). Toussaint Loviko, who provides the excellent notes, tells us that Vivaldi's girl musicians were hidden by grilles curtained with black gauze, so they were able to exchange instruments at will and were thus able to surprise their listeners.

Oboe Concertos in C, RV 447 & RV 451; in F, RV 455 & RV 457; in A min., RV 461 & RV 463

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550860. Schilli, Budapest Failoni CO, Nagy

Oboe Concertos in C, RV 450 & RV 452; in D, RV 453; in D min., RV 454; (i) Double Oboe Concertos in C, RV 534; D min., RV 535; A min., RV 536

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550859. Schilli; (i) with Jonas; Budapest Failoni CO, Nagy

Excellent playing from these Budapest musicians. The second of these two discs offers the three Double Concertos, and the two CDs between them include half the solo works. They are often surprisingly florid, requiring considerable bravura from the soloist. A good example is the Minuet finale of RV 447, which is a cross between a Rondo and a theme and variations. Vivaldi is never entirely predictable, except that his invention never seems to flag, and many of the simple Grave, Larghetto and Largo slow movements are very pleasing indeed.

Oboe Concertos in C, RV 178 & RV 450; in D, RV 453; in D min ., RV 454; in F, RV 456; in A min., RV 461; in B flat, RV 465

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50905-2 (2). de Vries, I Solisti di Zagreb – BACH; TELEMANN: Oboe Concertos ***

Han de Vries, playing a modern instrument, here offers no fewer than seven of Vivaldi's Oboe Concertos, and their variety of invention completely contradicts Stravinsky's famous remark that Vivaldi 'wrote the same concerto six hundred times'. The central group here are particularly varied, even though many of the slow movements are played with a delicate organ continuo. The outer movements of the C major Concerto, RV 450, are strikingly prolix, demanding (and here receiving) considerable virtuosity from the soloist; the D major and D minor works are more robust, but with pensive central Largos. All the performances are first class, spirited and expressive by turns, freshly accompanied by the Zagreb players, and the recording is excellent, with the soloist dominating the sound-picture.

Recorder Concertos: for Treble Recorder, RV 441 & 442; for Sopranino Recorder, RV 443, 444 & 445; Chamber Concerto for Recorder, Bassoon, Oboe, Cello, & Violin Continuo (La pastorella), RV 95

(BB)  Naxos 8.553829. Kecskeméti, Czidra & Soloists, Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Zalay.

The performances from László Kecskeméti of the three works for the sopranino instrument are dazzling (though not to be played in a row); then follow the two fine works for treble recorder, the first of which is played by László Czidra with equal skill. Kecskeméti then takes over for the rest of the programme, which ends with the chamber concerto, La Pastorella. This is the highlight of the Collection, one of the composer's masterpieces, delightful in its range of colour and imitative echo effects, and indeed its Siciliano slow movement and ingenious fugal finale. Splendid contributions from the players of the Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia throughout, and excellent recording.

Concertos for Strings, Vol. 1: Paris Concertos 1 in G min. (with woodwind), RV 157; 2 in E min., RV 133; 3 in C min., RV 119; 4 in F, RV 136; 5 in C (with woodwind), RV 114; 6 in G min., RV 154; 7 in A, RV 160; 8 in D min., RV 127; 9 in B flat, RV 164; 10 in D, RV 121; 11 in G (with woodwind), RV 150; 12 in A, RV 159

🔑 * Chan. 0647. Col. Mus. 90, Standage

Concertos for Strings, Vol. 2: in C, RV 109; in C (with flutes), RV 112; in C (with flutes), RV 117; in C min., RV 120; in D, RV 124; in D min., RV 128; in F min., RV 143; in G min. (Concerto ripieno; with woodwind), RV 152; in G min., RV 153; in B flat (with woodwind), RV 162; Conca, RV 163; in B min., RV 168.

* Chan. 0668. Col. Mus. 90, Standage

Concertos for Strings, Vol. 3: in C, RV 110; in C (Concerto ripieno; with woodwind), RV 115; in C min. (with woodwind), RV 118; in D min. (Concerto madrigalesco), RV 129; in E min., RV 134; in F, RV 142; in G, RV 145; in G(Concerto alla rustica), RV 151; in G min., RV 156; in C (Concerto ripieno), RV 158; in A min., RV 161; in B flat, RV 166; in B flat, RV 167.

 Chan. 0687. Col. Mus. 90, Standage

Vivaldi wrote over forty concerti a quattro for strings alone, without a soloist, and the present group were gathered together in a single manuscript, written in the hand of Vivaldi's father, and have been preserved in the Paris Conservatoire Library ever since. They are all freshly inventive and played here with springing rhythms and plenty of vitality. In three Concertos, though not specified by the composer, woodwind have been added to give extra colour. The touch of abrasiveness on the string sound is aurally bracing, and slow movements have a nicely ruminative improvisatory feel. The recording is first class.

Volumes 2 and 3 continue to demonstrate the amazing variety of invention in these Concertos for strings, some of which have added woodwind, with the pair using additional flutes. In Volume 2, RV 112 and RV 117 are particularly attractive.

The performances from Standage and his Collegium Musicum 90 are full of life and expressively penetrating throughout both discs; the recording is as fine as ever.

Concertos for Strings, RV 111a; 114; 119; 121; 127; 146; 152; 156; 157; 163; 167 & 168

🔑 * DG 474 5092. Venice Bar. O, Marcon

The Venice Baroque Orchestra now join the Concerto Italiano in offering competition to Standage's ongoing Chandos series. The performances are full of lyrical intensity, with slow movements seductively expressive, the continuo coming through nicely. Really excellent sound, too. Distinctly recommendable.

Concertos for Strings, RV 156; 413; 522; 531; 553; 565; 580

 Avie 8553060. Berlin Bar. Soloists, Kussmaul

The Berlin Baroque Soloists are admirably stylish and vital but more robust than the Italians. Enjoyable performances, but less distinctive.

Concertos for Strings in C, RV 115; in C min., RV 120; in D, RV 121 & 123; in D min., RV 129; in F, RV 141; in F min., RV 143; in G min., RV 153, 154 & 156; in A, RV 158 & 159

🔑 * Naïve OP 30377. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Rinaldo Alessandrini and his Concerto Italiano offer 12 Concertos played with great brio and expressive sensibility, and you have only to sample the first or the last of the Concertos here, RV 159 and RV 123 respectively, to hear how deeply expressive are the brief slow movements, and how infections are the Allegros. First-class recording ensures that this new series gets the strongest recommendation.

Concertos for Strings in D, Op. 12/3, RV 124; in D min. (Madrigalesco), RV 129; Sinfonia and Sonata al Santo Sepolcro, RV 130; (i) In furore iustissimae irae, RV 626; Laudate pueri Dominum, RV 601.

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 0714X. (i) Bott; Augmented Purcell Qt

Framed by the Sonata a quattro and Sinfonia al Santo Sepolcro, which are among Vivaldi's most dramatically intense and poignant string works, this collection includes also two of his most original Concertos, including the 'Madrigalesco' (which draws its material from his sacred vocal works) and the harmonically abrasive Concerto a quattro, which closes with a passionate fugue. The playing here is fully worthy of this remarkable music, uniting rigour with expressive fervour. But this is Catherine Bott's record, and she gives a superb performance of the motet, In furore iustissimae irae, moving from fiery vocal bravura in expressing heaven's righteous anger to the limpid beauty of the lament, Tunc meus fletus. Her performance of Laudate pueri Dominum, Vivaldi's third setting of the Vesper Psalm (112) is equally memorable, dramatic and ravishing by turns, especially in her touching duet with the solo flute (Stephen Preston) in the Gloria Patri.

Concertos for Strings in D min. (Concerto madrigalesco), RV 129; in G (Alla rustica), RV 151; in G min., RV 157. (i) Motet: In turbato mare irato, RV 627; Cantata: Lungi dal vago volto, RV 680. Magnificat, RV 610

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55190. (i) Kirkby; Leblanc, Forget, Cunningham, Ingram, Tafelmusik Ch. & Bar. O, Lamon

Mingling vocal and instrumental items, and works both well-known and unfamiliar, Jean Lamon provides a delightful collection, with Emma Kirkby a sparkling, pure-toned soloist in two items never recorded before: the motet, In turbato mare irato, and the chamber cantata, Lungi dal vago volto. The performance is lively, with fresh choral sound. The Tafelmusik performers come from Canada, and though the use of period instruments has some roughness, their vigour and alertness amply make up for that. Good, clear recorded sound.

Viola d'amore Concertos in D, RV 392; in D min., RV 393, RV 394 & RV 395; in A, RV 396; in D min., RV 397

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55178. Mackintosh, OAE.

The viola d'amore was greatly admired in Vivaldi's time for its tone, apparently sweeter than that of the contemporary violin. Yet to today's ears its character is more plangent, and that especially applies to performance style on a baroque instrument. As can be seen, Vivaldi favoured the key of D minor above others for his Concertos for that instrument, which are generally less striking than most of his violin concertos. Catherine Mackintosh gives expert performances with the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, using rather astringent tone.

Violin concertos

(i) Violin Concertos: RV 171–2; 186; 199; 205; 208; 213; 228; 230; 232; 237; 249; 254; 260; 265; 271; 302; 310; 319; 328; 340; 356; 370; 582. String Symphonies: 1, RV 159; 12, RV 164; 13, RV 134; 14, RV 136; 19, RV 127; 20, RV 119; 22, RV 160; 30, RV 121; 36, RV 150; 43, RV 133; 44, RV 114

🔑 Ⓑ * Nim. NI 2500/4 (5). (i) Mintz (violin), Israel CO, Mintz

An extraordinary achievement from Shlomo Mintz, who plays all these Violin Concertos freshly, vitally and lyrically, without a suspicion of routine, and then goes on to discover 11 of Vivaldi's previously unknown String Symphonies (essentially Italian Overtures). Each is an engaging, individual three-movement work, with plenty of variety of lively invention, from imitation to a fugato, and each with a gentle, expressive slow movement, often quite haunting. The polished playing of the modern-instrument Israel Chamber Orchestra, directed by Mintz, is warm and elegant, and everything has an appealing lightness of touch. The recording too is truthful and in perfect scale.

Volume II: 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 6/1-6; Coucou, RV 325; 6 Violin Concertos, Op. 11/1-5; Riposo, RV 275; 6 Concertos, RV 189; 197; 215; 241; 321; 329 (1729); 12 Violin Concertos for Anna Maria

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Nimbus NI 2523/7 (5). Mintz (Violin), Israel CO

Vivaldi composed almost countless violin concertos (we know of 220!), and during his service as Maestro di violino at the Pio Ospidale dalla Pietà, many of these works were intended for use by students to perform at the public concerts. One of the foremost was a brilliantly talented young violinist called Anna Maria, and Vivaldi composed twelve concertos allotted with her name. The remaining 12 Concertos of Opp. 6 and 11 cannot be dated exactly, but were published during the 1720s, along with the six separately listed concertos among the mature works. Yet, taken individually, they are all attractive 3-movement concertos, a few have sobriquets, and their quality of invention is usually especially high. Shlomo Mintz follows up his first Vivaldi volume by retaining his freshness of approach in the further collection: his silvery timbre seems just right for the music and the Israel

Chamber Orchestra continues to provide very persuasive accompaniments. The recording remains truthful and in perfect scale.

'Dresden Violin Concertos', Vol. 1: Violin Concertos: in C, RV 170; in G, RV 314a; in G min., RV 319; in A, RV 341; in B flat (Il carbonelli), RV 366; in B flat, RV 383

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553792. Martini, with Accademia I Filarmonici

This series concentrates on Concertos which survive in manuscript in the Dresden Saxony Landesbibliothek, and which may be connected with Vivaldi's association with an influential group of Dresden musicians, most notably the violinist, Johanne Pisendel. The quality of these works is often remarkably high, reflecting the calibre of the orchestra and indeed Pisendel's virtuosity and musicianship. They sound extremely well in these excellent modern-instrument performances. Alberto Martini directs bright, resilient performances, aptly paced, and he also proves a splendid soloist. There is nothing routine about any of these six works, as is demonstrated by the haunting Largo of the A major, RV 341, where the soloist plays over a gentle quasi-tremolando; the result is exquisite.

'Dresden Violin Concertos', Vol. 2: Violin Concertos: in C, RV 184; in D min., RV 241; in E, RV 267; in F, RV 292; in G min., RV 329; in B flat (Posthorn), RV 363

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553793. Baraldi, Accademia I Filarmonici, Martini

The concertos on the second disc are full of surprises, and Roberto Baraldi gives them the strongest profile. He is a very positive soloist, with a bolder sound image than Martini, which is not to say he is in the least insensitive. His strength of purpose is especially telling in the Posthorn Concerto, which features octave rhythmic figures on B flat, and also just right for the D minor Concerto, RV 241. Again excellent sound.

'Dresden Violin Concertos', Vol. 3: Violin Concertos in D, RV 228; in D min., RV 245; in E flat, RV 262; in F, RV 285; in G min., RV 323; in B min., RV 384

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8. 553860. Fornaciari, Accademia I Filarmonici, Martini

One is struck by the vigour of the Allegros in Volume 3, emphasized by Marco Fornaciari's extrovert style and very open timbre. Yet in slow movements he fines down his tone most beautifully.

'Dresden Violin Concertos', Vol. 4: Violin Concertos in D, RV 213; in D, RV 219; in D, RV 224; in D min., RV 240; in E flat, RV 260; in A, RV 344; in B min., RV 388

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8. 554310. Rossi, Accademia I Filarmonici, Martini

The use of a different soloist for each of these Naxos Dresden collections adds to their variety and interest. Cristiano Rossi's style is more intimate than that of Marco Fornaciari, yet his playing is by no means without personality and rhythmic flair. Allegros bustle with life in the orchestra, and Vivaldi's slow movements never fail to bring textural interest, apart from their melodic appeal.

Violin Concertos in C, RV 177 & RV 191; D, RV 222; E min., RV 273; F, RV 295; B flat, RV 375

🔑  Sony SK 89362. Carmignola, Venice Bar. O, Marcon

Violin Concertos in D min., RV 235; E flat, RV. 251 & RV 256; F, RV 296; B min., RV 386; B min., RV 389

🔑  Sony SK 87733. Carmignola, Venice Bar. O, Marcon

New Italian string groups choose to play on period instruments not in a thin, colourless manner, but creating full, gleaming timbres, which still retain an overall transparency. The excellent Venice Baroque Orchestra, directed by Andrea Marcon, demonstrate this new stylistic development in these two very enjoyable compilations of 'late' Violin Concertos by Vivaldi. The playing combines resilience and unashamed beauty of line with lyrical finesse and the widest range of dynamic. Slow movements can often be exquisitely gentle, so that the continuo, often using lute or theorbo, comes through engagingly. Giuliano Carmignola is a superbly assured and imaginative soloist throughout, and the recording is first class.

Violin Concertos: in C, RV 187; in D (Grosso Mogul), RV 208; in D (L'inquietudine), RV 234; (Il favorito), RV 277. L'estro armonico: (i) Concerto for 4 Violins & cello in B min., Op. 3/10, RV 580

 Onyx 4001. Mullova, Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini; (i) with Barneschi, Bianchi, Minasi

First-rate playing from Viktoria Mullova throughout, at her finest in the slow movement of Il favorito. The accompaniments from Il Giardino Armonico attack Allegros turbulently, especially in the fiery opening movement of Grosso Mogul and the furious Allegro molto of L'inquietudine ('Restlessness'). Indeed, the period-instrument style here is far removed from the mellow I Musici manners, emphasized by the vividly forward recording. It cannot really be faulted, yet charm isn't the strong point of these performances.

Violin Concertos in C, RV 187; in D, RV 209

(BB)  RCA 74321 68002-2. Zukerman, ECO – BACH: Violin Concertos, BWV 1041–2, BWV 1056; Double Violin Concerto ***

Two of Vivaldi's most attractive Concertos played with great vitality and warmth, make a splendid coupling for Bach, particularly as the finale of the C major recalls the Third Brandenburg Concerto. Excellently vivid sound too.

'Violin Concertos for the Emperor': 2 in C, RV 189; 3 in C min., RV 202; 4 in F, RV 286; 7 in C, RV 183; 10 (L'amoroso) in E, RV 271; 11 (Il favorito) in E min., RV 277

🔑 ✿ * HM HMU 907332. Manze, E. Concert

This CD brings together (in some cases reconstructed from the original manuscript) six of the Violin Concertos which Vivaldi presented to the Holy Roman Emperor, Charles VI, in 1728. One assumes they were among the composer's most valued works (because he was hoping for a position at court) and several are otherwise well known. Il favorito has a memorable central Andante, but the other works are generally more robust, though their central movements are played with comparable sensitivity. In the Largo of the F major, RV 286 (also known as the Concerto per la Solennità di San Lorenzo), and in the finale of the opening C major work, RV 189, Andrew Manze improvises his own cadenzas. His playing throughout is of the very highest quality, with memorably characterful accompaniments from the English Concert, of which Manze was musical director. The recording is very truthful, and this is a very distinguished CD indeed.

'Music for the Chapel of the Pietà': (i) Violin Concerto fatto per la Solennità della S. Antonio in Padova, RV 212; Violin Concerto in F, RV 292; (i; ii; iii) Concerto for Violin, Cello, Organ & Continuo, RV 554a; (i; iii) Concerto for Violin & Organ in F, RV 542; (iv) Laudate pueri Dominum, RV 600; (iv; i) Salve Regina, RV 617.

🔑  Avie AV 2063. (i) Chandler; (ii) McMahon; (iii) Howarth; (iv) Lawson; La Serenissima

The most strikingly original work here is the Violin Concerto fatto per la Solennnità della S. Antonio in Padova, RV 212, which, like the F major Concerto, RV 292, with its multi-tempo opening movement, survives in Dresden. The former is a remarkable work, with a gutsy first movement and a dark, freely expressive Grave, where the soloist seems almost to be meditating; then the mood becomes buoyant for the virtuosic finale, including an extraordinary cadenza in which the soloist is taken up to the highest point of the normal violin register and then back down again. In the two Concertos featuring the organ, the violin dominates throughout, although the organ contibution (nicely played and balanced here) adds an extra palette of colour.

The Laudate pueri Dominum of 1713 is also a superior work and is eloquently and even dramatically sung by Mhairi Lawson, whose vocal line is clear and true. Yet she is even finer in the Salve Regina (which, unusually, has a violin obbligato), singing the lovely closing Et Jesum benedictum blissfully. Throughout, La Serenissima provide strongly characterized accompaniments under their excellent violinist/conductor, and the recording has splendid presence and detail.

Violin Concertos (for Anna Maria) in D, RV 229; in D min., RV 248; in A, RV 343 & RV 349; in B flat, RV 366 & RV 387

 CPO SACD 777 078-2. Guglielmo, L'Arte dell'Arco

Anna Maria was the most brilliant of all Vivaldi's pupils, and Vivaldi wrote a great deal of music especially for her to play. A volume still exists with her name on it, listing some of these works, but including only the violin solo parts. However, research has provided the orchestral accompaniments, which were found in libraries either in Turin or Dresden. They are all bravura works, attesting to her virtuosity, but expressive too, and they are played most impressively here.

(i) Violin Concertos in D, RV 230; in A min., RV 356. (i; ii) Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin in B flat, RV 548; (i; iii) Double Violin Concertos in A, RV 519; in C, RV 507. (i; iii; iv) Triple Concerto for 2 Violins & Cello in G min., RV 578. (iv; v) Violin Sonata 2 in D min., RV 12

 EMI 5 57859-2. Kennedy; (i) BPO (members); (ii) Mayer; (iii) Stabrawa; (iv) Maninger; (v) Mayerson, Takeuchi

Nigel Kennedy is back in the studio to play Vivaldi. As one immediately discovers from the opening Double Violin Concerto in A major, performances are rhythmically sharp-edged and full of zest, yet lyrically free, and his partnership with his colleague on the violin, Daniel Stabrawa, is beautifully matched, whereas the oboist, Albrecht Mayer, is more delicately balanced. There is a particularly lovely oboe solo in the central Largo of RV 548, which Kennedy decorates ethereally. When the cellist, Olaf Maninger, joins them in the Triple Concerto, which opens with commanding spiccato chords, they play most subtly as a group, and the dynamic contrast inherent in the playing is most sensitive throughout. Altogether a most stimulating collection.

Violin Concertos in D (L'inquietudine), RV 234; E min., RV 273; E flat (La tempesta di mare), Op. 8/5; Double Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 3/11; Double Violin Sonata in D min., (La Folia) RV 63 (i) Aria 'Sovvente il sole' from Andromeda liberate

Ⓝ  DG 477 7463. Hope, COE with (i) Otter

Some exhilarating playing here. This collection begins with a dynamic account of the 'L'inquietudine', where the brilliance of the virtuosic writing is tempered with a timbre of both warmth and beauty. The opening of the E minor Concerto sounds darkly imposing whilst La tempesta di mare is as exciting as it gets. Anne Sofie von Otter sings her aria with great beauty (and what a meltingly haunting aria it is too!). The CD ends with a vibrantly stylish account of the Double Concerto in D minor, from L'Estro armonico. Superb recording and top productions standards from DG.

Violin Concerto in D (per Pisandel), RV 242

Ⓜ  EuroArts Invitation DVD 2050746. Onofri, Il Giardino Armonica, Antonini (V/D: Karina Fibich) – C. P. E. BACH: Sinfonia in G ; J. S. BACH: Double Clavier Concerto 2; Triple Clavier Concerto **(*)

This Violin Concerto is a most agreeable work, if not one of Vivaldi's finest, and it is very well played by Enrico Onofri, being placed after the C. P. E. Bach Sinfonia and before the closing Bach Triple Keyboard Concerto, the highlight of this well-planned concert.

COLLECTIONS

Bassoon Concerto in E min., RV 484; Flute Concerto in G min. (La notte), Op. 10/2, RV 439; Double Mandolin Concerto in G, RV 532; Concerto con molti

strumenti in C, RV 558; Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin in B flat, RV 548; Concerto for Strings (Alla rustica), RV 151; Concerto for 2 Violins & 2 Cellos in G, RV 575; L'estro armonico: Concerto for 4 Violins in D, Op. 3/1, RV 549

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (IMS) 447 301-2. Soloists, E. Concert, Pinnock

This generous 72-minute collection of varied works is very enticing, showing Pinnock and the English Concert at their liveliest and most refreshing, although not always so strong on charm. The Concerto for Four Violins is very lithe, and throughout the concert the solo playing is most expert. The orchestral concerto, RV 558, involves an astonishing array of instruments.

Bassoon Concertos in A min., RV 497; in B flat (La notte), RV 501; Double Mandolin Concerto in G, RV 532; Piccolo Concerto in C, RV 443; Viola d'amore Concerto in D min., RV 394; Double Violin Concerto for Violin & Violin per eco lontano in A, RV 552

Ⓜ  Vernay PV 730052. Soloists, Paul Kuentz CO, Kuentz

Although described as 'six rare concertos', this most enjoyable, 71-minute collection is made up entirely of favourites, all played with much character. The two mandolinists, Takashi and Sylvia Ochi, are as personable as the sprightly bassoonist, Fernand Corbillon, with his woody French timbre, while the Echo Violin Concerto (the echoes feature in the ripieno as well as the solo writing) comes off to great effect. Fine accompaniments from Kuentz and first-rate digital sound, naturally balanced.

Bassoon Concerto in B flat, RV 502; Cello Concerto in C min., RV 501; Oboe Concerto in C, RV 447; Double Trumpet Concerto in C, RV 537; L'estro armonico: Double Violin Concerto in A min., RV 522; Quadruple Violin Concerto in B min., RV 580; Triple Violin Concerto in F, RV 551

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 4 82136-2. Soloists, LCO, Warren-Green

The opening Double Trumpet Concerto is brightly arresting, and in the works for oboe and bassoon both soloists (Gordon Hunt and Merrick Alexander, respectively) play with much character and elegance and, in the latter, also a touch of humour. The lovely slow movement of the C minor Cello Concerto is warmly sympathetic on André Schulman's bow. For some reason, a continuo is used only in the two woodwind Concertos. The excerpts from L'estro armonico are gleamingly strong and expressive, and one senses an added energy, possibly deriving from the musicians standing while they play. Excellent recording with the resonance never becoming oppressive.

Concerti 'con molti strumenti': Concerto funèbre in B flat for Oboe, Chalumeau, Violin, 3 Viole all'inglese, RV 579; Concerto in C for 2 Recorders, Oboe, Chalumeau, Violin, 2 Viole all'inglese, 2 Violins 'in tromba marina', 2 Harpsichords, RV 555; Concerto in D min. for 2 Oboes, Bassoon, 2 Violins, RV 566; Double Trumpet Concerto in D, RV 781; Concerto in F for Viola d'amore, 2 Horns, 2 Oboes & Bassoon, RV 97; Concerto in F for Violin, 2 Oboes, Bassoon, 2 Horns, RV 574; Concerto in D for Violin, 2 Oboes, 2 Horns, RV 562

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67073. Soloists, King's Consort, King

This is one of the most attractive of all the CD grouplings of Vivaldi's often extraordinarily scored multiple Concertos, in which the period-instrument playing is not only expert, but constantly tweaks the ear. The braying horns often dominate. The oboes are used to decorate the Grave of the latter, and elegantly open the finale of the former, before a bravura violin sends sparks flying. The Concerto funèbre, not surprisingly, opens with a Largo and combines the remarkable solo combination of muted oboe, tenor chalumeau, a trio of viole all'inglese accompanied by muted strings. Then (in RV 555) comes the most remarkable array of all. Vivaldi even throws in a pair of harpsichords for good measure, and they are given some most attractive solo passages and used to provide a gentle rocking background for a most engaging violin soliloquy in the central Largo. Throughout, the solo playing is wonderfully stylish and appealing, and Robert King maintains a fine vigour in Allegros and an often gentle espressivo in slow movements. The recording is first class. Very highly recommended.

Concerto funèbre con molti istromenti for muted Oboes, Chalumeaux (Salmoè), Violin & Viola da gamba; Double Concertos: for Violin & Cello in F (Il Proteo o sia il mondo al rovescio); for Violin & Viola da gamba in A, RV 546; Triple Concertos for 2 Violins & Viola da gamba: in D min., RV 565; in G min., RV 578; Concerto for 4 Violins & Cello in B Min. RV 580

🔑  Alia Vox AV 9835. Savall & soloists, Le Concert des Nations

This splendid collection centres on the vibrant presence of Jordi Savall, who contributes instrumentally to half the Concertos included here, and directs them all. The highly original Funeral Concerto (based on a Sinfonia from the opera Tito Manlio) creates most colourful sonorities by including muted oboes, tenor chalumeaux, and three viole' all'inglese. The 'Il Proteo' (upside-down) Concerto is written with the violin solos written in the bass clef while the cello reads from the treble clef. This is a joke aimed at the players, for it makes no difference to the resulting sound. These are all aurally fascinating works, and they are superbly played and recorded, with characteristic Savall gusto in Allegros and warmly lyrical slow movements.

'Concerti con molti istromenti': Concerto in G min. for Oboe solo, Violin solo, 2 Flutes & 2 Oboes, RV 576; Concerto in G min. for Oboe solo, Violin solo, 2 Flutes & 2 Oboes, RV 577; Concerto in F for Violin, 2 Oboes & 2 Horns, RV 574; Concerto in F for Violin, 2 Oboes & 2 Horns, RV 569; Sinfonia for Strings in C, RV 192

🔑 * Naïve OP 30283. Soloists, Freiburg Bar. O, von der Goltz

We know of the excellence of Gottfried von der Goltz's period instrument Freiburg Baroque Orchestra from their outstanding DVD of the Bach Brandenburg Concertos. They are no less stimulating in these Vivaldi Concertos, written for Dresden, to which they bring a remarkable range of instrumental colour and dynamic, much vitality and expressive finesse. Slow movements, usually played gently, are always memorable, as in the Grave of RV 569 or the Larghetto of RV 576, and the excellence of their horn players is demonstrated vigorously in RV 574. A splendid collection, vividly recorded.

Double Cello Concerto in G min., RV 531; Concerto for Flute, Oboe, Bassoon & Violin in F (La tempesta di mare), RV 570; Concerto funèbre in B flat for Violin, Oboe, Salmoé & 3 Viole all'inglese, RV 579; Flute Concerto in G min. (La notte), RV 439; Violin Concertos in D (L'inquietudine), RV 234; in E (Il riposo – per il Natale), RV 270; in A (Per eco in lontano), RV 552

🔑 * Virgin 5 45424-2. Europa Galante, Biondi

This collection of some of Vivaldi's most imaginative Concertos, played on period instruments, is just as attractive as its looks. All the special effects, from the ghost and sleep evocations in La notte to the echoing second violin in RV 552, are neatly managed, and the atmosphere of the Concerto funèbre is well sustained. This Concerto features a theme taken from Tito Manlio where it was used as part of a procession to execution, and the scoring is very telling (see above). Fabio Biondi leads an excellent team of soloists and directs sparkling accompaniments, with a touch of vintage dryness to the bouquet of string timbre. Excellent recording.

Double Cello Concerto in G min., RV 531; Lute (Guitar) Concerto in D, RV 93; Oboe Concerto in F, F.VII, 2 (RV 455); Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin; Trumpet Concerto in D (trans. Jean Thilde); Violin Concerto in G min., Op. 12/1, RV 317.

 Naxos 8.550384. Capella Istropolitana, Kreček

This is a recommendable disc from which to set out to explore Vivaldi Concertos, especially if you are beginning a collection. Gabriela Krcková makes a sensitive contribution to the delightful Oboe Concerto in F major F.VII, No. 2 (R. 455), and the other soloists are pretty good too.

Double Concertos for 2 Cellos in G min., RV 531; for Violin, Cello & Strings in F (Il Proteo ò sia il mondo rovescio), RV 544; for 2 Violins in A (per eco in lontano), RV 552. Triple Concertos for 3 Violins in F, RV 551; for Violin & 2 Cellos in C, RV 561. Quadruple Concerto for 2 Violins & 2 Cellos in C, RV 561; in D, RV 564.

🔑 * Teldec 4509 94552-2. Coin and soloists, Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini

An exceptionally rewarding collection of Concertos for multiple, stringed instruments. Christophe Coin leads an excellent team of soloists and the imaginative continuo (organ, harpsichord and archlute) adds to the colour of performances which are full of life, yet which also reveal the music's more subtle touches and are remarkably free from the exaggerated stylistic devices often associated with period instruments. The recording is excellent.

Double Concertos for 2 Cellos in G min., RV 531; for 2 Oboes in D min., RV 523; for 2 Violins in C, RV 505; in D, RV 511. Triple Concerto for Oboe & 2 Violins, RV 554

 Chan. 0528. Coe, Warkin, Robson, Latham, Standage, Comberti, Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

Period-instrument performances are increasingly identified with the style of their performing groups, and that of Simon Standage's Collegium Musicum 90 is most invigorating, stylish with no lack of expressive feeling. The rhythmic crispness and buoyancy and the plangent string-sound make for characterful performances. The ripe sound of the baroque oboes and the crunchy cello timbre are particularly attractive, although the tingling astringency characteristic of the accompanying group is even more strongly focused in the solo playing for the Concertos for two violins, and especially in the busy finale of RV 511. Outstanding Chandos sound.

Double Concertos for 2 Flutes in C, RV 533; for 2 Horns in F, RV 538 & RV 539; for 2 Trumpets in C, RV 537; for Oboe & Bassoon in G, RV 545. Concerto (Sinfonia in D) for Strings, RV 122; Quadruple Concerto for 2 Oboes & 2 Clarinets, RV 560

(BB)  Naxos 8.553204. Soloists, City of L. Sinfonia, Kraemer

The opening Double Concertos for two horns, RV 539, two flutes, RV 533, and two trumpets, RV 537, all go well enough and offer expert solo contributions, but then at the arrival of the Quadruple Concerto for Two Oboes and Two Clarinets the playing suddenly sparks into extra exuberance, and one senses the musicians' enjoyment of one of Vivaldi's most imaginatively scored multiple works. The Concerto for Two Horns which follows (RV 538) has a similar ebullience, and the concert is rounded off by a captivating account of RV 545, where both the oboe and bassoon clearly relish every bar of their engaging dialogue. Kraemer's accompaniments are polished and spirited.

Double Violin Concertos in C min., RV 509; D, RV 512; G, RV 516; D min., RV 514; A min., RV 523; B flat, RV 524

Ⓝ * DG 477 7466. Mullova, Carmignola, Venice Baroque O, Marcon

A fresh, bracing collection of Vivaldi's Double Violin Concertos. Vivaldi gives each soloist an equal share, and Viktoria Mullova and Giuliano Carmignola play in total rapport with one other. Apart from their stylish contribution, what makes this disc so appealing is the vibrant support they receive from the orchestra, sharply pointed and dramatic in the lively Allegros, but also beautifully relaxed in Vivaldi's often magical slow movements (the largo in RV 511 is especially delightful). The finales bounce along in a most infections manner – just sample the finale to C minor Concerto, RV 509, to see what we mean. The DG recording is both vivid and warm and this CD is strongly recommended.

Fourteen concertos: Disc 1: (i; ii) Lute Concerto in D, RV 93; Double Concerto for 2 Mandolins in G, RV 532; (i; iii) Recorder Concertos in A min., RV 108; in G min. (La notte); (iv) Violin Concerto in D (Grosso Mogull), RV 208. Disc 2: (v) Double Concertos for 2 Cellos in G min., RV 531; for 2 Flutes in C, RV 533; for 2 Trumpets in C, RV 443. Concertos for Strings in D min. (Madrigalesco), RV 129; in G (Alla rustica), RV 151; in G min., RV 153. Quadruple Concerto for 2 Violins & 2 Cellos in D, RV 564; L'estro armonico: Quadruple Violin Concerto in B min., Op. 3/10, RV 580

Ⓑ  O-L Double (DDD/ADD) 455 703-2 (2). (i) New L. Cons., Pickett; with (ii) Finucane; (iii) Pickett; (iv) Ritchie, Bach Ens., Rifkin; (v) Soloists, AAM, Hogwood

The 14 Concertos on this Oiseau-Lyre Double readily demonstrate the extraordinary diversity of Vivaldi's musical ideas, and in many cases his originality too. None more so than the remarkable Violin Concerto, RV 208 (written about 1710), nicknamed – probably not by the composer – 'Grosso Mogull'. The outer movements with their moto perpetuo arpeggios demand great virtuosity from the soloist, and the slow movement is a long recitativo, more like an improvisation. The remarkable seven-minute finale, perhaps the longest in any Vivaldi Concerto, has a central cadenza which demands and is given a performance of dazzling virtuosity by the soloist here, Stanley Ritchie. The concertos for lute, mandolins and recorder are also expertly and pleasingly played by Philip Pickett and his group, whose brand of authenticity is rather less abrasive than Hogwood's. The digital sound is first class. For the reissue, three extra works have been added, most notably the famous Quadruple Violin Concerto from L'estro armonico, taken from the Academy's splendid complete set, with John Holloway, Monica Huggett, Catherine Mackintosh and Elizabeth Wilcock the excellent soloists.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonatas 1–9, RV 39/47

Ⓑ  CRD CRD 34401 (2). L'Ecole d'Orphée

Cello Sonatas in E flat, RV 39; in E min., RV 40; in F, RV 41; in G min., RV 42; in A min., RV 43 & 44

🔑 Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 74321 93561-2. Bylsma, Suzuki, Ogg

Cello Sonatas in E flat, RV 39; in E min., RV 40; in F, RV 41; in G min., RV 42; in A min., RV 43 & 44; in B flat, RV 45, 46 & 47

(*) TDK DVD TDK-AD 012 (2). Suzuki, Zipperling, Palviainen

Vivaldi wrote ten Sonatas for cello and continuo, of which one is lost. These recordings use an edition published in Budapest in 1995. Their four-movement format probably derives from the sonate da chiese, but they were surely designed for concert performance for they afford the soloist both expressive and bravura opportunities, although they are not virtuoso works.

All nine Sonatas are given highly musical performances on CRD; they do not set out to impress by grand gestures but succeed in doing so by their dedication and sensitivity. Susan Sheppard is a thoughtful player and is well supported by her continuo team, Lucy Carolan and Jane Coe. The CRD recording is well focused with fine presence.

Hidemi Suzuki also offers them all, but Anner Bylsma and her companions content themselves with six of the best, and there is no question that the Deutsche Harmonia Mundi performances are preferable. Bylsma's tone is firm and full, with eloquent phrasing, and the continuo group is well balanced; although Suzuki plays very musically, his performances have a less strong profile and are rather less spontaneously enjoyable.

Chamber Concertos in D, RV 84; (Sonata) in A, RV 86; in D, RV 94; in D (La pastorella), RV 95; in F, RV 99; in G min., RV 103 & 105

Ⓑ  HM Classical Express HCX 3957046. Verbruggen, Goodwin, Holloway, Godburn, Toll, Comberti

Vivaldi was at his most imaginatively inventive in his Chamber Concertos. The spicy, chirping opening of La pastorella (RV 95) is scored for recorder, oboe and bassoon to depict a shepherd piping. RV 94 opens with a simulated hurdy-gurdy effect, and RV 99 depicts a hunt (without horns!) and has a very rustic central Largo, while the slow movement of RV 105 is an almost bucolic duet for recorder and bassoon, with oboe added spiritedly in the finale. RV 84 was written for performance by the Dresden Orchestra and includes the composer's chromatic 'Sleep' motif in its finale, though it is not in the least somnambulant. Most delectable.

Chamber Concertos: in D for Flute, Violin & Bassoon, RV 91; in D for Lute & 2 Violins RV 93; in D for Recorder, Oboe, Violin,& Bassoon, RV 94; for Recorder, Violin & Bassoon, RV 106; for Viola d'amore, 2 Oboes, 2 Corni di Caccia, RV 97. Sonatina in A min., for Recorder & Bassoon, RV 86

Ⓝ (*) Warner 2564 69260-8. Soloists, Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini

The concertos included here remained unpublished, after Vivaldi had decided that his works were too often being copied to make pirated editions. In his chamber concertos, curious mixtures of instruments occur, with 'intimate conversations' between them. The interplay did not always work smoothly. For instance the opening multi-instrument concerto, RV 97 is framed within robust movements for the two horns, with more astringent writing for the viola d'amore in between. Similarly the three works which try to combine recorder or flute, oboe, violin and bassoon are often at colouristic cross purposes. The Sonatina for recorder and bassoon and the more familiar Lute Concerto blend more readily, although the relatively plangent period instrument texture provided by Il Giardino Armonico is the opposite of mellow, even in the simple work for lute. Performances are virtuosic and vivid but this is not easy listening, but rather fascinating explorations of sounds possible.

Chamber Concertos for Recorder: in C, with Oboe, 2 Violins, Cello, with Harpsichord Continuo, RV 87; in D, with Violin & Cello Continuo, RV 92; in D, with Oboe, Violin & Bassoon, RV 94; in G, with Oboe, Violin & Bassoon, with Cello & Harpsichord Continuo, RV 101; in G min., with Oboe, Bassoon & Harpsichord, RV 103; in G, with Oboe, Violin & Bassoon, with Cello Continuo, RV 105; in A min., with 2 Violins, with Cello & Harpsichord Continuo, RV 108

(BB)  Naxos 8.557215. Kecskeméti, Hadady, Falvay, Párkányi, Olajos, Kertész, Dobosy

These excellent Hungarian soloists offer a group of chamber works for various instruments, all dominated by the recorder, here László Kecskeméti, a brilliant player, matched by an impressive number of his colleagues. They play with great freshness and rhythmic zest, with the Largo central movements pleasingly expressive. It is the range of contrasting woodwind colour that makes these works so ear-tickling, especially those featuring the bassoon. Excellently balanced recording.

Chamber Concertos in C for Recorder, Oboe, 2 Violins, Cello, Harpsichord & Lute, RV 87; in D for Flute, Violin, & Cello, RV 92; in G min. for Flute, Oboe, Bassoon, Cello, Organ & Lute, RV 107; in D min. for Solo Organ & Flute, 2 Violins, Viola, Cello, Violone & Lute, RV 541; in F for Organ & Violin solo, 2 Violins, Viola, Cello, Violone & Lute, RV 542. Trio Sonata in D min. (La folia), RV 65

🔑 * Channel Classics CCS 8495. Florilegium

These Concertos could hardly be played more persuasively (one instrument to each part) than they are by Florilegium, an outstanding period-instrument ensemble. The Concertos, which include a solo organ, are enchanting in their piquant colouring, and are full of splendid ideas. The finale of RV 107, for instance, is a kaleidoscopic chaconne, in effect a chimerical set of variations. But every work here is inspired and aurally stimulating, and they could hardly be better played. The programme ends with Vivaldi's extensive variations on La follia in the form of a Trio Sonata, which is presented with bravura, a wide range of dynamic and a sense of fantasy. The group, led by Ashley Solomon (flute/recorder), are all masters of their instruments and play infectiously together as a team. The recording is ideally balanced, within an acoustic with just the right feeling of ambient space.

Chamber Concertos for Treble Recorder in A min., RV 108; in C min., RV 441; in F, RV 442; for Sopranino Recorder in C, RV 443 & RV 444; in A min., RV 445

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55016. Holtslag, Parley of Instruments, Holman

These are all played with one instrument to each part, and by alternating treble and sopranino recorders. Peter Holtslag provides variety, although this is not a CD to undertake all at one session.

Excellent recording and good value.

Violin Sonatas in C, RV 754; in A, RV 758. Trio Sonatas in D min. (Variations on 'La follia'), Op. 1/12; in C, RV 50; in G min., RV 74

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55231. Purcell Qt

This Helios reissue is very welcome indeed. At its centre is the early set of variations on La follia, obviously drawing on Corelli, but none the worse for that. The other solo Sonatas (admirably featuring Catherine Mackintosh and Robert Woolley) and Trio Sonatas are characteristically inventive and entertaining, and they are superbly played and recorded here. This budget disc is very well worth having on all counts.

VOCAL MUSIC

Complete Sacred Music

Robert King's coverage of Vivaldi's key sacred choral works is now the most complete survey in the catalogue, and this admirable set now appears in a box (with a booklet including full texts and translations), at a very generous budget price, and as such receives the strongest recommendation.

Volumes 1–10

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. CDS 44171/81 (11). Soloists, King's Consort, King

Sacred music, Vol. 1: Credo in unum Deum, RV 591; Dixit Dominus, RV 594; Kyrie eleison, RV 587; Lauda, Jerusalem, RV 609; Magnificat, RV 610a

 Hyp. CDA 66769. Gritton, Milne, Denley, Atkinson, Wilson-Johnson, Choristers and Ch., King's Consort, King

Hyperion's series aims to cover all the key sacred choral works of Vivaldi. All the music here is for double choir except the simple Credo, which is without soloists but has great intensity of feeling expressed in the Et incarnatus est and Crucifixus. Apart from the splendidly grand and masterly Dixit Dominus, RV 594 (gloriously sung here), there are two fine, shorter works which also include double string orchestra: the Kyrie eleison and the Lauda Jerusalem. But most striking of all is Vivaldi's first setting of the Magnificat – in G minor, dating from around 1715, although revised in the 1720s – made memorable by its highly individual chromatic writing, but also adding to the poignancy of the Et misericordia.

Sacred music, Vol. 2: Motets: (i) Canta in prato, ride in monte, RV 623; (ii) Clarae stellae, scintillate, RV 625; Filiae maestae Jerusalem, RV 638 (i) In furore iustissimae irae, RV 626; (iii) Longe mala, umbrae, terrores, RV 629; (i) Nulla in mundo pax sincera, RV 630

 Hyp. CDA 66779. (i) York; (ii) Bowman; (iii) Denley; King's Consort, King

The opening of In furore iustissimae irae ('In wrath and most just anger') is delivered with dramatic venom, but then the Largo, Tunc meus fletus ('Then shall my weeping'), follows exquisitely. The other highlight of the collection is James Bowman's Filiae maestae Jerusalem, which brings a touching Larghetto, Silenti Zephyri ('Let the winds be hushed'). A first-class collection, excellently recorded.

Sacred music, Vol. 3: Beatus vir (two versions), RV 597 & RV 598; Credidi propter quod, RV 605; Dixit Dominus, RV 595; Domine ad adjuvandum, RV 593

 Hyp. CDA 66789. Gritton, Wyn-Davies, Denley, Daniels, N. Davies, George, Ch. & King's Consort, King

Vivaldi's two settings of the Beatus vir are quite different. RV 597 is for double choir and is on an ambitious scale, with a refrain that reappears in various sections of the work. RV 598 is in a single movement and is written for soloists and a single choir, rather in the manner of a concerto grosso. The present setting of Dixit Dominus is for single chorus (but with sopranos sometimes divided). Domine ad adjuvandum is a superbly concentrated short work for double choir, based on Psalm 69.

Sacred music, Vol. 4: Juditha triumphans (complete)

 Hyp. CDA 67281/2. Murray, Bickley, Kiehr, Connolly, Rigby, Ch. & King's Consort, King

Juditha triumphans, Vivaldi's only surviving oratorio, involves only women's voices in the solo roles and here is exceptionally well cast. Ann Murray, in one of her most beautiful performances on disc, is seductive as Judith rather than sharply dramatic, and it is left to Susan Bickley as the tyrannical general, Holofernes, to steal first honours, strong and incisive. Robert King relishes the rich instrumentation with its brilliant and original obbligato solos, beautifully caught in vivid, atmospheric recording.

Sacred music, Vol. 5: Confitebor tibi, Domine; Deus tuorum militum; In turbato mare, RV 627; Non in pratis aut in hortis, RV 641; O qui coeli terraeque serenitas, RV 631; Stabat mater, RV 621

 Hyp. CDA 66799. Gritton, Rigby, Blaze, Daniels, N. Davis, King's Consort, King

Volume 5 of this excellent Hyperion series offers two solo motets, a simple Vesper hymn (Deus tuorum militum) sung as a contralto/tenor duet, and ends with a very fine three-voice setting of Psalm 110, Confitebor tibi, Domine, which in its final movement draws on a sparkling terzet from Vivaldi's opera La fida ninfa. It makes a satisfying close to a programme which has as its centrepiece the glorious Stabat Mater (1712), very beautifully sung here by the male alto, Robin Blaze. To open the concert Susan Gritton despatches In turbato mare irato with biting bravura, but is later able to show her lovely lyrical style in O qui coeli terraeque serenitas.

Sacred music, Vol. 6: Beatus vir, RV 795; In exitu Israel, RV 604; Laudate Dominum, RV 606; Nisi Dominus, RV 608; Salve Regina, RV 617

(*) Hyp. CDA 66809. Gritton, Stutzmann, Summers, Gibson, Ch. & King's Consort, King

While the two motets In exitu Israel and Laudate Dominum are for choir alone, the ambitious setting of Beatus vir (only comparatively recently confirmed as authentic Vivaldi), which alternates extended solos with a brief repeated chorale, involves Susan Gritton immediately in spectacularly florid solo singing. Later she is joined by Hilary Summers and Alexandra Gibson in the seraphic trio In memoria aeterna, and both contraltos then make major solo contributions. Gritton is at her finest in the Salve Regina, where Simon Jones provides elaborate violin obbligatos.

Sacred music, Vol. 7: Gloria, RV 588; Laetatus sum, RV 607; Laudate pueri, RV 601; Jubilate, o amoeni chori, RV 639; Vestro Principi divino, RV 633

 Hyp. CDA 66819. Gritton, Sampson, Stutzmann, Daniels, Ch. & King's Consort

Laudate pueri (Psalm 112) is a true virtuoso piece for soprano (originally a castrato) able to reach D in alt. Carolyn Sampson sings it gloriously, radiant in A solis ortu usque ad occasum, and ethereally beautiful in the Gloria Patri which she sings in duet with an obbligato flute. This is followed by an outstanding performance by Nathalie Stutzmann of the motet Vespro Principi divino (a paraphrase of Psalm 23), sung with comparable virtuosity. She then leads the way into the lesser-kown Vivaldi setting of the Gloria by way of an introductory motet, Jubilate o amoeni chori, whose second and final aria leads straight into the opening chorus of the Gloria.

Sacred music, Vol. 8: Cur sagittas, cur tela, RV 637; Laudate pueri, RV 600; Salve Regina, RV 616; Sanctorum meritis, RV 620; Sum in medio tempestatum, RV 632

 Hyp. CDA 66829. Gritton, Semmingsen, Stutzmann, Ch. & King's Consort, King

Sacred music, Vol. 9: Ascende laeta, RV 635; Gaude mater Ecclesia, RV 613; Gloria Patri, RV 602a; Salve Regina, RV 618; Vos aurae per montes, RV 634; Laudate pueri, RV 602

 Hyp. CDA 66839. Sampson, Gritton, Lunn, DiDonato, Stutzmann, Ch. & King's Consort, King

Sacred music, Vol. 10: Gloria, RV 589; Nisi Dominus, RV 803; Ostro picta, RV 642

 Hyp. CDA 66849. Ch. & King's Consort, King – RUGGIERI: Gloria

Volume 8 opens with a thrilling virtuoso performance from the agile, light-voiced mezzo, Tuva Semmingsen, of Sum in medio tempestatum ('I am in the midst of stormy weather'), bringing tender melancholy to 'Semper maesta', and sparkling in the closing 'Alleluia'. Susan Gritton responds to the greater expressive range of Laudate pueri, while the darker-voiced Nathalie Stutzmann finds plenty of venomous character in Cur saggitas, cur tela ('Why oh terrible hobgoblins').

Carolyn Sampson frames the programme of Volume 9, a particularly rich collection. She opens with a gloriously sung Laudate pueri, in which she is joined in duet in several movements by the well-matched soprano voice of Joanne Lunn, with the chorus adding weight at the opening and close. A very nimble oboe obbligato from Alexandra Bellamy adds much to the interest of the Gloria Patri. She then ends the programme with an expressive Vox aurae per montes ('You breezes through the mountains') with its lively final Alleluia.

Volume 10 rounds off Robert King's magnificent survey by opening very appropriately with Vivaldi's most famous choral work, the Gloria, RV 589. It is a splendid performance on every count, with soloists, chorus and orchestra all shining. Then the following Nisi Dominus proves an ideal showcase for many of the soloists, all on top form, and often with accompanying instrumental obbligato. The range of vocal and instrumental colour shows Vivaldi at his most imaginatively inspired. After Carolyn Sampson has made her distinguished final solo contribution in the touching Ostro picta we are offered a Gloria setting by Giovanni Ruggieri (c. 1690–1720) a fine work, splendidly sung here.

Cantatas: (i) All'ombra di sospetto, RV 678; (ii; iii) Amor hai vinto, RV 651; (i) Lungi dal vago volto, RV 680; Vengo a voi, luci adorate, RV 682; (iv) Gloria in D, RV 589; (v; iii) Nisi Dominus (Psalm 127), RV 608; (ii; iii) Nulla in mundo pax sincera, RV 630. (vi) Trio Sonata (La folia), RV 63

Ⓑ  O-L Double (ADD/DDD) 455 727-2 (2). (i) Bott, New L. Cons., Pickett; (ii) Kirkby; (iii) AAM, Hogwood; (iv) Nelson, Kirkby, Watkinson, Christ Church Cathedral Ch., AAM, Preston; (v) Bowman; (vi) Standage, Mackintosh, Hogwood

Vivaldi's secular cantatas are lightweight but have much charm. Combining recitative and a pair of arias, they usually express the dolours of unrequited love in an Arcadian setting. In each case the words are written from the male point of view, yet here they are treated as soprano solos – delightfully so, for, after Emma Kirkby has opened the programme with a characteristically fresh-voiced Amor hai vento, Catherine Bott takes over with her softer focus and more plaintive style. As a central instrumental interlude we are offered a lively and stylish account of the Trio Sonata which Vivaldi based on La follia. The first CD opens with the familiar Gloria. The choristers of Christ Church Cathedral excel themselves and the recording is remarkably fine. The solo motet, Nulla in mundo pax sincera, brings back Emma Kirkby, who copes splendidly with the bravura writing for soprano. James Bowman is also a persuasive soloist in the more extended, operatic-styled setting of Psalm 127.

Cantatas: (i) Amor hai vinto, RV 683; Cesssate, omai cessate, RV 684. La stravaganza: (ii) Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 4/8, RV 429. (iii) Cello Concerto in A min., RV. 422; Concertos for Strings in C & E min., RV 117 & RV 134; in G (Alla rustica), RV 151

* Naïve OPS 30-181. (i) Mingardo; (ii) Vicari; (iii) Piovano; Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Rinaldo Alessandrini opens this concert with an exhilaratingly crisp account of the bouncing Allegro of Concerto for Strings in C major and sets the scene for Amor hai vinto, the first of the two pastoral cantatas sung with comparably bracing vocal virtuosity.

Motets: Canto in prato, ride in monte, RV 623; Invicti, bellate, RV 68; Longe mala, umbrae, terrore, RV 629; Nulla in mundo pax sincera, RV 630; O qui coeli terraeque serenitas, RV 631; Vestro principi divino, RV 633

 Naïve OP 30340. Herrman, Polverelli, Academia Montis Regalis, de Marchi

The four-section sacred motets here (Aria–Recitativo–Aria–Allegro) have non-liturgical texts alternating between the fresh and sweet-voiced soprano Anke Herrman and the nimble and well-focused contralto, who finds both bravura and drama for the opening Longe mala, umbrae, terrore ('Begone, evils, shadows and terrors') and sings with special eloquence in Invicti, bellate, which ends with a virtuoso Alleluia. The Academia Montis Regalis, directed by Alessandro de Marchi, accompany warmly and sympathetically, using modern instruments, and the recording is excellent.

Beatus vir, RV 597; Gloria in D, RV 589

Ⓑ︎Ⓑ︎ (*) Naxos 8.550767. Crookes, Quitaker, Lane, Trevor, Oxford Schola Cantorum, N. CO, Ward

This coupling of what are probably the two favourite Vivaldi choral works is beautifully recorded and well worth its modest cost. Although some listeners will want greater attack in the famous opening and closing sections of the Gloria and in the Potens in terra in the companion work, these spacious performances, directed by Nicholas Ward, are still warmly enjoyable, partly because of the freshness of the solo contributions, but also because the choral singing has considerable intensity, especially in the continual return of the haunting Beatus vir chorale in RV 589. Full translations are included.

(i) Motets: Clarae stellae, scintillate, RV 625; Nisi Dominus, RV 608; Salve Regina, RV 616; Vespro principa divino, RV 633. Concertos for Strings: in C, RV 109; in F, RV 141

🔑 * Decca 466 964-2. (i) Scholl; Australian Brandenburg O, Dyer

Scholl's account of the Vesper psalm Nisi Dominus catches to the full its lyrical beauty. Cum dederit delectis suis somnum opens very mysteriously (Vivaldi asks his strings to play with piombi – lead mutes – instead of the normal wooden sordini) and Scholl sings his slowly rising chromatic scale with seraphic, sensuous beauty, a moment of sheer magic. The work's expressive climax, Gloria patri, with its viola da gamba obbligato, is transcendent, followed by the bravura release of Sicut erat. The other highlight here is Vivaldi's highly imaginative setting of the Salve Regina, with its antiphonal accompaniment for double orchestra, especially striking in the Ad te clamamus. The period-instrument Australian Brandenburg Orchestra contribute much to the success of this record, providing (as interludes) vibrantly infectious accounts of two of Vivaldi's String Concertos. We shall surely hear more from this group and their impressive conductor, Paul Dyer.

Dixit Dominus, RV 807

 DG 477 6145. Invernizzi, Cirillo, Mingardo, Agnew, Cooley, Foresti, Zeppenfeld, Körnerscher Singverein, Dresden, Dresden Instrumental Concert, Kopp – GALUPPI: Motets ***

This third Dixit Dominus was identified in 2005 by the Australian scholar Janice Stockigt as the work of Vivaldi and this is its first recording. Originally attributed to Galuppi, its style is clearly that of Vivaldi – and top-notch Vivaldi at that. It is full of the composer's characteristic energy and melody, and with many beauties besides. The performance is fresh and invigorating, with the singers coping well with the often demanding florid lines, and this is a must for all Vivaldi addicts. The recording is superb.

(i) Gloria in D, RV 588; Gloria in D, RV 589; (ii; iii) Beatus vir in C, RV 597; Dixit Dominus in D, RV 594; (iv; iii) Magnificat in G min., RV 610

🔑 (B)  Double Decca (DDD/ADD) 443 455-2 (2). (i) Russell, Kwella, Wilkens, Bowen, St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Wren O, Guest; (ii) J. Smith, Buchanan, Watts, Partridge, Shirley-Quirk, ECO, Cleobury; (iii) King's College, Cambridge, Ch.; (iv) Castle, Cockerham, King, ASMF, Ledger

The two settings of the Gloria make an apt and illuminating pairing. Both in D major, they have many points in common, presenting fascinating comparisons, when RV 588 is as inspired as its better known companion. Guest directs strong and well-paced readings, with RV 588 the more lively. Good, warm recording to match the performances. Dixit Dominus cannot fail to attract those who have enjoyed the better known Gloria. What caps this outstanding Vivaldi compilation is the earlier King's account of the inspired Magnificat in G minor. Ledger uses the small-scale setting and opts for boys' voices in the solos such as the beautiful duet, Esurientes, which is most winning. The performance overall is very compelling and moving, and the singing has all the accustomed beauty of King's. The transfer of an outstanding (1976) analogue recording is admirable, even richer than its digital companions.

Gloria in D, RV 589

🔑  Telarc SACD 60651. T. Matthews, Deanne Meek, M. Phillips, Boston Bar., Pearlman – BACH: Magnificat ***

(N) (BB)  EMI Encore 2 08125-2 Hendricks, Murray, Rigby, Heilmann, Heinninen, Ch. & ASMF, Marriner – BACH: Magnificat ***

(M)  Decca (ADD) 458 623-2. Vaughan, Baker, Partridge, Keyte, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., ASMF, Willcocks – HANDEL: Coronation Anthem: Zadok the Priest; HAYDN: Nelson Mass ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.554056. Oxford Schola Cantorum, N.CO, Ward – BACH: Magnificat ***

Gloria in D, RV 589; Kyrie in G min., RV 587

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 48681-2. Smith, Staempfli, Rossier, Schaer, Lausanne Vocal & Instrumental Ens., Corboz – BACH: Magnificat in D, BWV 243 ***

(i) Gloria, RV 589; Magnificat, RV 611. Concerto for Strings in D min., RV 243; Double Concerto for Trumpet & Oboe, RV 563

🔑 * Naïve OP 3019 S. (i) York, Biccire, Mingardo, Champagne & Ardene Regional Vocal Ens.; Soloists, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Gloria, RV 589; Ostro picta, armata spina, RV 642

 Chan. 0518. Kirkby, Bonner, Chance, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox – BACH: Magnificat ***

Pearlman sets off energetically into the famous opening of Vivaldi's Gloria, and concludes the work equally spiritedly. The Domine Deus, with its sensitive oboe obbligato, is beautifully sung by Tamara Matthews; and the later sequence, by the fine alto, Mary Phillips, shared with the chorus (Domine Deus, Agnus Dei – Qui tollis peccata mundi – Qui sedes) is equally moving. In short, this performance is splendidly sung and sensitively paced, and the surround sound recording is in every way first class.

Rinaldo Alessandrini's dazzling speed for the opening of Vivaldi's Gloria must be just about the fastest on record, and it is just as exciting in the reprise for the Quoniam. Yet ensemble remains remarkably crisp, and later the pair of sopranos revel in their virtuosity in the Laudamus te and the closing Cum Sanctos Spiritu makes a fittingly joyous conclusion. The Magnificat, too, combines spaciousness with vitality. The mysteriously evocative Et misericordia contrasts dramatically with the dynamic Deposuit potentes; but, throughout, the essential Italianate warmth of Alessandrini's reading comes through, and the rich choral response is at its most embracing in the closing Gloria Patri. The bonuses include a Concerto for Strings (which acts as a spirited intermezzo between the main works) and a lively Double Trumpet Concerto as an end-piece, arranged from a work for trumpet and oboe, with the oboe retained for just the slow movement.

Both Alessandrini and Marriner (like their companions) couple the most popular of the two D major Glorias with the Bach Magnificat and offer a clear choice between period and modern instruments. Marriner's performance is more traditionally paced, as is the Bach Magnificat. His soloists are very good and the recording has warmth and immediacy. A fine budget coupling.

Willcocks's version authentically uses comparatively small forces and has an excellent team of soloists. It is very stylish and very well recorded. Some might feel that consonants are too exaggerated but, in consequence, words are admirably clear.

Corboz, a fine choral conductor, gives a lively performance of the famous Gloria, and his super-bargain version includes another richly rewarding liturgical work by Vivaldi alongside an equally spontaneous account of Bach's Magnificat. The Kyrie is magnificent, with its four soloists, double chorus and double string orchestra spread spaciously across the sound stage.

On Naxos it is most refreshing to have a performance of Vivaldi's most popular choral work that, with modern instruments and a relatively small choir, clarifies textures, revealing inner detail. With Jeremy Summerly directing the choir and Nicholas Ward conducting the orchestra, the rhythmic point of the writing is reinforced, helped by superb sound, fresh, clear and immediate.

Juditha triumphans (oratorio; complete)

 Naïve OP 30314 (3). Kožená, Trullu, Comparato, Herrman, Carraro, Santa Cecilia Academy, Chamber Ch., Academia Montis Regalis, De Marchi

Juditha triumphans, recorded in Mondovi in Italy in October 2000, offers a vigorous and scholarly account, meticulously prepared. With fair justification De Marchi has transposed the tenor and bass parts of the chorus up an octave, as Vivaldi is believed to have done with his female chorus at the Ospedale della Pieta in Venice. The result is fresh and brilliant, and the team of female soloists, two sopranos and three mezzos, adds to that impression, except that the recording balance sets them at a slight distance, seriously reducing their impact. Even so, the brilliant and rich-toned Slovakian soprano stands out in the title role, with the mezzo Maria Jose Trullo bringing variety to the role of her adversary, Holofernes.

Kyrie, RV 587; Magnificat; Motet, 'In furore iustissimae irae', RV 626; Nisi Dominus; Salve Regina; Concerto in D min. (Madrigalesco), RV 129

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570445. Huhtanen, McMurtry, McLeod, Modolo, Aradia Ens., Mallon

This CD is valuable for including the final and expanded version of Vivaldi's glorious Magnificat, which includes five extra numbers not included on the original. Vivaldi had in mind different singers for each of the arias but here, Lynne McMurtry sings them all. The Concerto in D minor, also offered on this CD, uses material from the Magnificat and the appealing Kyrie – both included on this disc. The Salve Regina – one of the composer's three settings – features some especially attractive music for the violins. The Nisi Dominus is a lively early work, of much lively invention and pleasing incidental delights. In furore iustissimae irae is a dramatic Motet, where Vivaldi superbly depicts the fury indicated in the text in the first movement. It has two very beautiful middle movements and ends in a virtuosic Alleluia. The performances are generally excellent, though the soloists, good though they are, are not always up to the considerable virtuosity this music demands.

Laudate pueri Dominum, RV 601; Nisi Dominus, RV 608

 Mer. CDE 84129. Dawson, Robson, King's Consort, King

The present setting of Psalm 113, RV 601, is a strong, consistently inspired work; Lynne Dawson sings with an excellent sense of style and is given splendid support. The coupling, the Nisi Dominus, a setting of Psalm 127, is much better known but makes an attractive makeweight. It is also given an excellent performance by Christopher Robson. Good recording.

(i) Stabat Mater in F min., RV 621; Concerto for Strings in A min., RV 158; Sinfonia for Strings in G, RV 149

* Analekta FL 2 3171. (i) Lemieux; Tafelmusik, Jeanne Lamon – AVISON: Concerto grosso after Scarlatti 7; D. SCARLATTI: Salve Regina ****

Marie-Nicole Lemieux's performance of the Stabat Mater is very moving, her rich contralto voice just right for this intensely expressive setting. Tafelmusik provide an imaginative accompaniment, and also lively performances of a Concerto and Sinfonia for strings which are most stimulating. The Andante of the Sinfonia is particularly diverting, its sharp principal rhythmic figure deliciously pointed.

(i) Stabat Mater in F min., RV 621; Cessate omai cessate, RV 684; Filiae mestae in C min., RV 638; Concerto for Strings in C, RV 114; Sonata al Santo Sepolcro in E flat, RV 130

🔑 * HM HMC 901571. (i) Scholl; Ens. 415, Banchini

Chiara Banchini and Ensemble 415 have given us some fine period-instrument performances, but none is finer than this, thanks to the superb contribution of counter-tenor Andreas Scholl. His tenderly expressive account of the Stabat Mater is infinitely touching, while the pastoral cantata, Cessate omai cessate, is, dramatically and lyrically, no less involving. Here Vivaldi's imaginative accompaniments are relished by the instrumental ensemble, and they are equally on their toes in the similarly contrasted string works. Strongly communicative music-making, very well recorded.

(i) Stabat Mater, RV 621; Clarae stella scintillate (Motet), RV 625; Concerto funèbre in B flat for Violin, Oboe, Salmoè & 3 Viole all'inglese; Concerto sacra in D for Violin & Cello, with Organ obbligato, RV 554a; Sonata 4 al Santo Sepolcro in E flat for Strings, RV 124

🔑 * Naïve OP 30367. (i) Mingardo; Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

The deep contralto timbre of Sara Mingardo is especially telling in Vivaldi's Stabat Mater, and she is very moving in the agonized closing section. This performance is appropriately framed by the Concerto funèbre and similarly solemn Santo Sepolcro Sonata. The other Concertos which frame the contrasting motet, 'O bright stars shine forth', match its very different mood, and Mingardo successfully lightens her voice and style. Fine performancs throughout.

Vespers for the Assumption of the Virgin Mary (arr. Alessandrini)

* Naïve OP 30383 (2). Bertagnolli, Invernizzi, Simboli, Mingardo, Ferrarini, Bellotto, De Secondi, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Taking Monteverdi's great 1610 set of Vespers as a model, Rinaldo Alessandrini, in collaboration with the scholar Frederic Delamea, has devised a sequence of Psalm settings and antiphons parallel to Monteverdi's, choosing works by Vivaldi such as might have been used for the Vespers service. Though Vivaldi never wrote music for the vast basilica of St Mark's in Venice, as Monteverdi had done a century earlier, he did write Psalm settings employing double choirs, works which cry out for spatial separation. Starting with a double concerto as overture with similarly divided forces, Alessandrini has included in the sequence such masterly examples of Vivaldi's church music as the Dixit Dominus (Psalm 109), Lauda Jerusalem (Psalm 147) and the superb Magnificat setting, RV 610a, rounded off with a cantata for solo contralto with two orchestras, Salve Regina. The challenge of over two and a half hours of music prompts Alessandrini to draw from his choir and period orchestra, Concerto Italiano, consistently fresh and incisive performances, brilliantly recorded.

OPERA

Opera Overtures: Armida al campo d'Egito; Arsilda, regina di Ponto; Bajazet (Tamerlano); Dorilla in Tempe; Farnace; Giustino; Griselda; L'incoronazione di Dario; L'Olimpiade; Ottone in villa; La verità in cimento

Ⓑ︎Ⓑ︎  Warner Apex 2564 60537-2. I Sol. Ven., Scimone

Vivaldi's 'opera overtures' were conceived as sinfonias, scarcely related to the character of each work. But these 11 make a lively and surprisingly varied collection, splendidly played and recorded.

Opera Overtures or Sinfonias: Bajazet; La Dorilla; Farnace; Il Giustino; L'Olimpiade; Ottone in villa; La verità in cimento. Chamber Concerto in D min., RV 128; Concerto in F, for Violin, 2 Oboes, Horn & Bassoon, RV 571; Sinfonia in G, RV 149

Ⓑ (*) DHM/BMG 74321 935602. L'Arte del Arco, Hogwood

Except for L'Olimpiade (which includes a tempesta di mare and is in four sections) and Ottone in villa (which is a concertante piece for violins and oboes and is in two), these are all typical three-movement Italian Overtures. Bajazet (because of the plot) features hunting horns in the outer sections, but they are used even more spectacularly in the Concerto in F (which is associated with a Venetian performance of the opera, Arsilda, regina di Ponto), while its finale is based on the storm from Ottone in villa. The finale of the Sinfonia for La Dorilla brings a surprise appearance of the introduction of Spring from The Four Seasons. The period performances here are highly energetic and certainly stylish, but a bit gruff.

Griselda (opera; complete)

 Naïve OP 30419 (3). Lemieux, Cangemi, Kermes, Jaroussky, Ferrari, I. Davies, Ens. Matheus, Spinosi

Ⓑ︎Ⓑ︎  Naxos 8.660211/3. Tomkins, Newman, Huhtanen, McMurtry, Nedecky, Ainsworth, Opera in Concert Ch., Aradia Ens., Mallon

By a strange turn of events two recordings of this little-known but colourful Vivaldi opera arrived fairly closely together and the choice between them is a clear-cut one. The Naxos version is certainly alive, but it involves the transposition of several roles down an octave, with the leading masculine role, Gualtiero (originally tenor) given to a bass. In any case the singing cannot match that on the Naïve set. This is strongly cast, with a star contralto, Marie-Nicole Lemieux, as Griselda, while Simone Kermes is an equally impressive Ottone and Philippe Jaroussky's Roberto is, if anything, even finer. The rest of the cast is hardly less impressive and, while the orchestral accompaniments lack something in body, Spinosi's tempi bring plenty of life to the performance overall.

Motezuma (opera; complete)

🔑  DG 477 5996 (3). Priante, Mijanović, Invernizzi, Beaumont, Basso, Katna, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Until recently, Motezuma was known only thanks to the survival of its libretto by Luigi Giusti, but in 2002 the German scholar Stefen Voss discovered the bulk of the score in the library of the Berliner Sing-Akademie. Although only 17 of the 28 numbers survive, including all of Act II and the important arias of Acts I and III, it proved possible for Alessandro Ciccolini to reconstruct the remainder of the work. It is a strong, virile piece, full of the freshness of invention we expect from the composer, and the excellent soloists and Alan Curtis's Il Complesso Barocco bring it to life in spectacular fashion.

Orlando furioso (opera; complete)

Ⓝ * CPO 777 095-2 (3) Desler, Kennedy, De Liso, Gregoire, Coro da Camera Italiano, Modo Antiquo, Sardelli

Orlando furioso has a complex plot tied up with Alcina and Orlando (which we know from Handel). Orlando is well named, of course, for he goes mad at the end of Act II but recovers at the end of the opera in time to bless the marriage of the real lovers, Angelica and Medoro. The opera takes a little while to get going, but soon produces some splendid music for Orlando (the brilliant mezzo, Anne Desler), the engaging soprano Angelica (Nicki Kennedy) and of course Alcina (Marina De Liso) while Medoro's Act I aria 'I break the chains' is particularly dramatic. But all the solo singing is of quality and the Camera Italiano Chorus and Modo Antiquo complete a fine supporting group directed with spirit by Federico Maria Sardelli. Excellent recording too, make this enjoyable listening.

Ottone in villa (complete)

 Chan. 0614 (2). Groop, Gritton, Argenta, Padmore, Daneman, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

Ottone in villa was Vivaldi's very first opera, produced in 1713. It follows the conventions of the day in a sequence of da capo arias linked by recitatives, with no ensemble up until the final number for the characters in unison. With only five singers required, the scale of the piece is modest in treating the subject of the Emperor Ottone and the way he is fooled by the flirtatious Cleonilla. Vivaldi is here at his most tuneful and inventive, and Richard Hickox with an excellent cast of soloists and his fine period-instrument group, Collegium Musicum 90, presents the opera with a freshness and vigour that make one forget the work's formal limitations. Susan Gritton sings charmingly as the provocative Cleonilla, and Nancy Argenta brings flawless control to the castrato role of Caio Sillo, with the mezzo, Monica Groop, strong and firm in the title role of the Emperor. Fine production and sound add to the compulsion of the performance.

La verita in cimento

(*) Naïve OP 30365 (3). Bertagnolli, Laurens, Mingardo, Stutzmann, Jaroussky, Rolfe Johnson, Ens. Matheus, Spinosi

La verita in cimento ('Truth on Trial'), Vivaldi's 13th opera, was first heard in Venice in 1720, but like almost all his other operas it has since been totally neglected. Then in 2002, using a score prepared from various scholarly sources, the enterprising French conductor Jean-Christophe Spinosi and his group, Ensemble Matheus, gave a very successful series of 25 performances of what emerges as an exceptionally lively piece. With six soloists and no chorus, it is a piece that defied the conventions of the Venetian establishment, led by Benedetto Marcello, and after it Vivaldi was prevented from writing more operas for some years. Yet, as recorded by Spinosi and his excellent team, this is a piece that sparkles with life.

'Viva Vivaldi': Arias: (i) Agitata da due venti La Griselda, RV 718; Gloria in D, RV 589: Domine Deus. Opera arias: Bajazet (Il Tamerlano): Anch'il mar par che sommerga; Farnace: Gelido in ogni vedo; La fida ninfa: Dite, Oimè; Giustino: Sventurata Navicelli. Juditha Triumphans: Armatae face et Angibus; L'Olimpiade: Tra la follie divers ... Siam navi all'onde algenti; Ottone in villa: Gelosia, tu già rendi l'alma mia; Teuzzone: Di due rai languir costante; Zeffiretti che sussurrate; Tito Manlio: Non ti lusinghi la crudelitade. Concertos in C for flautino, RV 443; in D for lute, RV 93 (DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 228. (i) Bartoli; Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini (V/D: Brian Large.)

For this programme Cecilia Bartoli has drawn on autograph material in the Turin Library. In the two Concertos, the Domine Deus and a couple of the arias, the score is available, though it must be said that its superimposition all but obliterates the visual image. As in her handsomely presented Decca Vivaldi Album (see below), Bartoli sings effortlessly and magnificently – and she duplicates one or two arias here. Il Giardino Armonico are full of virtuosity and delicacy, and the music is left to speak for itself, while the presence of Bartoli's Decca producer, Christopher Raeburn, ensures an excellent and musical balance. It is a tribute to Vivaldi's spectacular fund of invention that there is so much of quality yet to be discovered. Subtitles of the aria texts are in German, French, English and Spanish, and are also available in the original Italian.

Arias from L'Adelaide; Armida al campo d'Egitto; Farnace (with Sinfonia); L'Olimpiade; Orlando furioso; Semiramide; La Silvia; Tito Manlio

 Naïve OP 30415. Regazzo, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

It is not surprising that Rinaldo Alessandrini should choose a distinctive singer for this collection of Vivaldi arias, many from unfamiliar sources, and certainly Lorenzo Regazzo has an individual voice, both beautiful and vibrant, which is used with musicianship and perception. The result is a most rewarding mixture well worth trying.

'Heroes', Arias from: Andromeda liberata; Demofoonte; Farnace; Giustino; L'Olimpiade; Orlando finto pazzo; Orlando furioso; Ottone in villa; Tieteburga; Il Tigrane; Tito Manlio

🔑 * Virgin 3 63414-2. Jaroussky, Ens. Matheus, Spinosi

The French counter-tenor Philippe Jaroussky here gives an astonishing, virtuoso performance in 15 arias from Vivaldi operas, well chosen to represent the three main periods of his operatic output. Brilliant, florid arias alternate with warmly lyrical ones. His fast divisions are flawless, breathtaking in their daring, with no suspicion of any intrusive aspirate. Perhaps even more remarkable are the intense, expansive, lyrical arias, which offer a refreshing view of the composer in their warmth, notably a Larghetto aria from L'Olimpiade, a late work, and the even more extended E minor aria Vivaldi contributed to a Serenata jointly composed with others, Andromeda liberata. This is a thrilling disc of rarities, very well accompanied and clearly recorded.

Arias from: L'Atenaide; Catone in Utica; L'incoronazione di Dario; Griselda (with Sinfonia); Ottone in villa (with Sinfonia); Tito Manlio; Tamerlano (Sinfonia)

🔑 Ⓑ * Hyp. Helios CDH 55279. Kirkby, Brandenburg Consort, Goodman

This delightful collection was recorded in 1994 when Emma Kirkby was at the very peak of her form. Whether she is singing alone, or in duet with an oboe (as in Tito Manlio) or with herself, in the echo aria, L'ombre, l'aure, e ancora il rio (from Ottone in villa) she continually delights the ear and the senses. And how gently touching she is in Non mi lusinga vana speranza from L'incoronazione di Dario, and how stirringly regal in the closing Se in campo armato, with trumpet, from Catone in Utica. Roy Goodman's accompaniments with the Brandenburg Consort are a model of taste and maintain a nicely intimate atmosphere.

Opera arias and scenas: Bajazet (Il Tamerlano): Anch'il mar par che sommerga; Dorilla in Tempe: Dorilla'aura al sussurrar; Farnace: Gelido in ogni vena; La fida ninfa: Alma opressa; Dite, oimè; Griselda: Dopo un'orrida procella; Giustino: Sorte, che m'invitasti ... Ho nel petto un cor sì forte; L'Olimpiade: Tra le follie ... Siam navi all'onde algenti; L'Orlando finto pazzo: Qual favellar? ... Anderò volerò griderò; Teuzzone: Di trombe guerrier. Arias with unidentified sources: Di due rai languir costante; Zeffiretti, che sussurrate

🔑 * Decca 466 569-2. Bartoli, Il Giardino Armonico (with Arnold Schoenberg Ch.)

This remarkable collection is valuable as much for its exploration of rare Vivaldi operas as for coloratura singing of extraordinary bravura and technical security. It is a pity that the programme (understandably) opens with the excerpt from Dorilla in Tempe, with its echoes of Spring from The Four Seasons, as the chorus, although enthusiastic in praising those seasonal joys, is less than sharply focused. But the following aria from Griselda, with its stormy horns and fiendish leaps and runs, shows just how expertly Cecilia Bartoli can deliver the kind of thrilling virtuosity expected by Vivaldi's audiences of their famous castrato soloists. Farnace's tragic aria, Gelido in ogni vena (based on the Winter concerto) shows the other side of the coin with some exquisite lyrical singing of lovely descending chromatics. In short, this is dazzling singing of remarkable music, most stylishly and vividly accompanied. Indeed, the Storm aria from Bajazet brings a delivery of such speed and sharpness of articulation that the rapid fire of a musical machine-gun springs instantly to mind. Moreover, Decca have done their star mezzo proud with fine documentation, full translations and a presentation more like a handsomely bound hardback book than a CD.

VOGLER, Georg Joseph (1749–1814)

Ballet Suites 1 & 2; Overtures: Athalie; Erwin und Elmire; Hamlet. Symphonies in D min.; G

Ⓝ * Chan. 10504. LMP, Bamert

Vogler is hardly a well-known name today (Mozart disliked him) but on the strength of this CD, his music is worth exploring. It begins with a very lively and inventive Symphony in D minor, then comes the first of two Ballets Suites, edited in 1950s, made up from various ballets he wrote, and contain music of much piquancy and charm. Both the Overture and the Allegretto feature some particularly fetching woodwind writing, and the Gigue, Aire de chasse and Menuetto grazioso which comprise Suite 2 are all very appealing indeed. The overtures are all colourful, melodic and inventive and well-worth hearing. Superb and sound and performances as one would expect from this source.

VOLKMANN, Robert (1815–83)

Cello Concerto in A min., Op. 33

 Hyp. CDA 67583. Gerhardt, Berlin RSO, Lintu – DIETRICH; GERNSHEIM; SCHUMANN: Cello Concertos ***

In a single compact movement in well-contrasted sections, Volkmann's Concerto (like the other works on the disc) can be seen as a reflection of the music of Brahms. It opens with a lyrical episode and uses recitative to link different sections, with lively syncopations in the final section, which also includes a cadenza. An attractive rarity, very well played and recorded.

VOŘÍŠEK, Jan Václav (1791–1825)

Symphony in D, Op. 24

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66800. SCO, Mackerras – ARRIAGA: Symphony in D min. etc. ***

Voříšek is as close as the Czechs got to producing a Beethoven, and this remarkably powerful work has many fingerprints of the German master everywhere while displaying some individuality. The slow movement is impressive and, after an attractive Scherzo, the finale has something in common with that of Beethoven's Fourth. Mackerras offers the finest account this work has received on record so far. The Hyperion recording is warmly reverberant, but this serves to increase the feeling of Beethovenian weightiness, and the Scherzo is particularly imposing. The Arriaga coupling is indispensable.

Fantasia in C, Op. 12; Impromptus 1–6, Op. 7; Piano Sonata in B flat min., Op. 19; Variations in B flat, Op. 19

 Naïve OPS 30241. Tverskaya

The Russian-born but London-domiciled Olga Tverskaya is an eloquent advocate of this always interesting and often highly original music, and plays with great flair and conviction. She uses a period instrument, a copy of an 1823 Broadmann fortepiano by David Winston. The recording is altogether excellent and the disc in every respect, a success.

WAGNER, Richard (1813–83)

Symphony in C

Ⓑ  Warner Apex 2564 60619-2. Norwegian R.O, Rasilainen – WEBER: Symphonies 1 & 2 **

A useful and inexpensive way to explore Wagner's early Symphony, composed at the age of 19, and very much indebted to Beethoven and even Mendelssohn. It's no masterpiece, of course, but fascinating to hear and reasonably rewarding. The performance and recording are good, but not outstanding.

(i; iii) Symphony in C; (i; ii) Die Feen Overture; (i; iii) Faust Overture; (i; ii) Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; (iv; v) Lohengrin: Preludes to Acts I & III; Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg: Prelude to Act I; Parsifal: Prelude to Act I; (iv; vi) Rienzi Overture; (i; iii) Symphony in C; (i; ii) Tannhäuser: Overture and Venusberg Music; (v; vii) Tristan und Isolde; (viii) Kinderkatechismus

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 442 8283 (2). (i) de Waart; (ii) Concg O; (iii) San Francisco SO; (iv) Mehta; (v) VPO; (vi) LAPO; (vii) Solti; (viii) V. Boys' Ch., VPO (members)

Wagner's Symphony in C was written when he was still in his teens, and though the thrust of ambition, the sense of challenge, is clear enough, there are few fingerprints that one could positively identify as Wagnerian. De Waart's version makes this a confident exercise in symphonism, a spaciously paced, beautifully sprung reading, with melodies presented in a Schubertain glow. The rarely heard Die Feen Overture was written (when Wagner was 20) for his first completed opera. The performance, again on Philips with Edo de Waart, but with the Concertgebouw Orchestra, along with the Flying Dutchman Overture and Tannhäuser music, is warmly spacious but lacks something in electricity. The Flying Dutchman – which uses the original ending – sounds too cultured. The Zubin Mehta Decca recordings offer superb sound, but the performances do not possess any personal magic. Solti's well-known performance of the Tristan Prelude (1960) is superb. The Kinderkatechismus is a real curiosity. Its full English title is 'A Children's Catechism for Kosel's Birthday' – 'Kosel' being one of the nicknames Wagner gave to his wife Cosima. Originally performed in 1873 by the Wagner children with piano accompaniment, Wagner orchestrated it a year later and added an instrumental postlude taken from the end of his newly completed Götterdämmerung.

(i) Symphony in E (incomplete); (ii) Marches: Grosser Festmarsch; Huldigungsmarsch; Kaisermarsch. Overtures: (iii) Columbus; (ii) Die Feen; (i) Faust; Das Liebesverbot; Rienzi; (iv) Siegfied idyll; (i; v) 5 Wesendonck Lieder (arr. Henze)

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 17619 (2). (i) Phd. O, Sawallisch; (ii) LSO, Janowski; (iii) Bav. RSO, Tate; (iv) ASMF, Marriner; (v) with Lipovšek

This a more interesting compilation than the Decca one above, even though its content is rather more uneven. The Symphony in E, written in 1834, was left unfinished (29 bars of an Adagio exist – not recorded here). However, the opening movement exists complete, somewhat Schumannesque. It is agreeable enough. The similarly unknown Columbus Overture is all that survives of incidental music Wagner wrote to a play about the explorer in the same year as the symphony movement. This is a highlight of the set: Tate's performance is magnificent, opening atmospherically and building to a superb climax. Janowski's account of Die Feen is also excitingly vivid, making this much more memorable than usual. Sawallisch is equally impressive in Rienzi but less successful with a rather overblown account of Das Liebesverbot, which needs lighter textures. The Wesendonck Lieder are delicately scored by Hans Werner Henze, and Sawallisch uses a group of about 30 instrumentalists, who play with much refinement. However, the choice of Marjana Lipovšek as soloist was unfortunate as her over-opulent singing hardly suits the effect Henze must have had in mind. The three Marches are expansively Wagnerian, the Huldigungsmarsch the most compact and individual, the Kaisermarsch, richly lyrical, quotes Ein' feste Burg rather effectively. But the Grosser Festmarsch is even more inflated at 13 minutes. It was commissioned for the centenary commemoration of the American Declaration of Independence. Fortunately, the concert closes with Marriner's fine (1980) ASMF account of the inspired Siegfried Idyll in which he uses solo strings for the gentler passages and a fuller ensemble for the climaxes, here passionately convincing and beautifully recorded.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC FROM THE OPERAS (with Siegfried Idyll)

Siegfried Idyll

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 460 311-2. VPO, Solti – SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 *** ✿

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 4 82112-2 (2). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin – MOZART: Divertimento 1, etc.; SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht; WOLF: Italian Serenade ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62815-2. Philh. O, Klemperer – BRUCKNER: Symphony 4 ***

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4076-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 7; MOZART: Symphony 35 ***

So rich is the sound that Decca provided for Solti (in 1965) that one can hardly believe that this is a chamber performance. The playing is similarly warm and committed and this coupling with Schubert's Great C major Symphony, is one of Solti's finest recordings.

The members of the Sinfonia Varsovia play beautifully. Menuhin opens in a warmly relaxed manner but the performance gathers impetus and is most sensitively shaped. Fine recording, too.

Klemperer also favours the original chamber-orchestra scoring and the Philharmonia players are very persuasive, especially in the score's gentler moments. The balance is forward and, although the sound is warm, some ears may crave a greater breadth of string tone at the climax.

Barbirolli's account of the Siegfried Idyll, recorded in the BBC's Manchester studios, comes in mono sound only, with obvious limitations. The use of reduced strings means that the woodwind solos come over very clearly, with a glorious horn outburst at the climax (track 9, 11′30″), and though the tempo for the central episode is on the slow side, with Barbirolli letting it get slower still in ecstasy, the magic of this birthday gift to Cosima Wagner comes over superbly, with thrilling climaxes.

Siegfried Idyll; Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Rhine Journey & Funeral March; Lohengrin: Preludes to Acts I & III; Die Meistersinger: Overture; Dance of the Apprentices; Entry of the Masters; Parsifal: Prelude; Das Rheingold: Entry of the Gods into Valhalla; Siegfried: Forest Murmurs; Tannhäuser: Overture; Prelude to Act III; Tristan und Isolde: Prelude & Liebestod; Die Walküre: Ride of the Valkyries

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67893-2 [567896] (2). Philh. O, Klemperer

Two of the LPs from which this Klemperer programme is compiled were recorded and released in 1960 to celebrate Klemperer's 75th birthday. All these performances have the kind of incandescent glow one associates with really great conductors, and the Philharmonia play immaculately. The remastered recording is very impressive indeed.

Siegfried Idyll; Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; Rienzi: Overture; Tannhäuser: Overture & Bacchanale

Ⓜ  Decca 475 8502. VPO, Solti

Solti's way with Wagner is certainly exciting: some may find the early 1960s performances of the Rienzi and The Flying Dutchman Overtures a little hard-driven. But the Siegfried Idyll, played in its chamber version by members of the VPO, is most beautifully done. Elsewhere one is easily caught up in the sheer force of Solti's music-making. The VPO play splendidly, of course, and Decca has supplied brilliant sound to match.

Siegfried Idyll; Tannhäuser: Overture; (i) Tristan: Prelude & Liebestod

🔑  DG 423 613-2. (i) Norman; VPO, Karajan

The Tannhäuser Overture has never sounded so noble, and the Siegfried Idyll has rarely seemed so intense and dedicated behind its sweet lyricism; while the Prelude and Liebestod, with Jessye Norman as soloist, bring the richest culmination, sensuous and passionate, remarkable as much for the hushed, inward moments as for the massive building of climaxes.

ORCHESTRAL EXCERPTS AND PRELUDES FROM THE OPERAS

Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; Gotterdämmerung: Funeral Music; Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Lohengrin: Act I Prelude; Die Meistersinger: Overture; Dance of the Apprentices; Entry of the Masters; Parsifal: Good Friday Music

Ⓜ () Sony mono SMK 89889. RPO, Beecham

The 1954 recordings here – Der fliegende Holländer, the Meistersinger excerpts (the three items linked together) and Siegfried's Rhine Journey – come in fuller and weightier sound than Beecham generally enjoyed at that final period of mono recording with CBS, with splendid brass but an occasional edge on strings. The swagger and panache of Beecham in Wagner comes out superbly, and though the other recordings are not quite so full, with edginess more obtrusive, they are most enjoyable. In the manner of the time concert endings are provided where necessary.

Der fliegender Holländer: Overture; Lohengrin: Prelude to Act I; Parsifal: Prelude to Act I; Act III (Good Friday music); Siegfried idyll

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111283. Boston SO, Koussevitzky – BRAHMS: Academic Festival Overture ()

One associates Koussevitzky with Debussy, Sibelius, Ravel and Prokofiev rather than with Wagner. These records, made between 1946 and 1949, show him as no less masterly and authoritative an interpreter of the Master of Bayreuth. Under him the Boston Symphony was peerless and these performances are in every respect a joy.

Overture Der fliegende Holländer; Lohengrin: Preludes to Acts I & III; Die Meistersinger: Overture; (i) Tannhäuser: Overture and Venusberg Music; Tristan und Isolde: Prelude & Liebestod

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 4 76896-2. BPO, Karajan; (i) with Deutsche Oper Ch.

All in all, Karajan's 1974 collection is perhaps the finest single disc of miscellaneous Wagnerian overtures and preludes in the catalogue, recommendable alongside Szell's Cleveland collection of orchestral music from the Ring. The body of tone produced by the Berlin Philharmonic gives a breathtaking amplitude at climaxes and the electricity the conductor generates throughout the programme is unforgettable. The results are spectacular with greater depth, a wider dyamic range and a remarkable sense of the ambience of the Berlin Philharmonie.

Overtures: Der fliegende Holländer; Die Meistersinger; Tannhäuser; Tristan: Prelude to Act I

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 3469-2 011. Czech PO, Konwitschny (with RICHARD STRAUSS: Till Eulenspiegel (mono) ***)

Konwitschny's collection was highly regarded in its day (1960) for the excitement and spontaneity of the readings, with Die Meistersinger particularly well shaped and Tannhäuser bringing thrilling cascades from the Czech Philharmonic strings as well as fine brass playing. Der fliegende Holländer creates a vivid image of the storm-tossed ship. The transfer is bright and full, if not in the demonstration bracket. What makes the disc especially attractive is the 1952 mono coupling, a great credit to the sound engineer, František Burda. Konwitschny's performance takes off racily from the very opening bars. It has great zest, warmth and humour, plus spontaneous bursts of excitement. The closing section ends with a spectacular execution, before the touching little epilogue on the strings. (However, be warned: there are some curious ticking noises on the tape at the very opening of Till.)

Götterdämmerung: Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Siegfried's Death and Funeral Music; Lohengrin: Preludes to Acts I & III; Die Meistersinger: Overture; Das Rheingold: Entry of the Gods into Valhalla; Rienzi: Overture; Siegfried: Forest Murmurs; Tannhäuser: Overture; Die Walküre: Ride of the Valkyries; Wotan's Farewell & Magic Fire Music

(BB)  EMI Gemini 5 86248-2 (2). BPO, Tennstedt

This bargain Gemini two-CD set comprises two early digital recordings of Wagner's orchestral music which were quite a revelation in the early days of compact disc. In the music from the Ring, notably the Entry of the Gods into Valhalla, the sense of spectacle is in no doubt, and Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music are also very impressive. The sound could ideally have greater amplitude (the brass is a bit dry), but the climax of Siegfried's Funeral March has massive penetration – and there is fine detail too, especially in the atmospheric Forest Murmurs. The playing throughout is of the finest quality, always maintaining a high level of tension.

Götterdämmerung: Dawn; Siegfried's Rhine Journey & Funeral March; Die Meistersinger: Prelude to Act I; Rienzi: Overture; Tannhäuser: Overture and Venusberg Music; Die Walküre: Ride of the Valkyries

Ⓜ  LPO LPO 003. LPO, Tennstedt

This 1988 recording of a live concert makes a fascinating comparison with Tennstedt's EMI discs above. As before, his readings are characteristically broad, with the Meistersinger Prelude warmly and weightily expansive and the Götterdämmerung excerpts spaciously powerful. However, the live occasion also makes its mark, and the thundering chords of the Funeral Music are sinisterly overwhelming, while Rienzi is more volatile here than in the Berlin studio. The LPO are on their toes and play splendidly thoughout; they are gorgeously sensuous in the Venusberg Music, helped by the rich amplitude of the recording. Because this almost certainly came from a broadcast the dynamic range is narrower than the Berlin Philharmonic studio recording. But the only real minus point is that the programme ends unexpectedly at the end of the Venusberg Music, when the exciting Ride of the Valkryries, with its enthusiastic applause, would have made a much more upbeat conclusion.

Götterdämmerung: Dawn & Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Siegfried's Death & Funeral Music; Die Meistersinger: Prelude; Das Rheingold: Entry of the Gods into Valhalla; Siegfried: Forest Murmurs; Tristan und Isolde: Prelude & Liebestod; Die Walküre: Wotan's Farewell & Magic Fire Music

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 48175. Cleveland O, Szell

The orchestral playing here is breathtaking in its virtuosity. Szell generates the greatest tension, particularly in the two scenes from Götterdämmerung, while the Liebestod from Tristan has never been played on record with more passion and fire. This is well worthy of Szell's extraordinary achievement in Cleveland in the 1960s, even if the forward balance of the recording places a limit on the dynamic range.

Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Funeral March; Lohengrin: Act 1 Prelude; Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg: Prelude; Parsifal: Good Friday Music; Prelude

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence 480 0567. SRO, Ansermet

Wagner is unlikely repertoire for Ansermet but, partly thanks to the 1963 Decca sound and the conductor's ear for detail, you'll hear more of the textures in these scores than you will on virtually any other recording. These are fascinatingly untraditional performances and show that the German tradition is not the only way (Munch's Wagner is similarly different). Ansermet moulds the Lohengrin Prelude beautifully and the great cymbal clash at the climax is one of the disc's surprise highlights. Even if the intonation of the brass in Siegfried's Funeral Music is not spot on, the performance sounds uniquely theatrical, with an astonishing depth of sound. The Mastersingers Overture comes off splendidly and the music from Parsifal is sensitively done too. This CD will not appeal to all Wagner traditionalists but it is fascinating just the same.

Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Tristan: Prelude and Liebestod (DVD version)

 EMI DVD 3 8846093. O Nat. de l'ORTF, Schmidt-Isserstedt – BRAHMS: German Requiem ***

An impressive visual reminder of one of the greatest Wagnerians of our time. The French Radio Orchestra is not the Berlin Philharmonic, but under the clear direction of Schmidt-Isserstedt they play vividly and create considerable tension in the Tristan Liebestod.

Lohengrin: Preludes to Acts I & III

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 235-2. VPO, Mehta – MAHLER: Symphony 4 **

These beautifully and excitingly played and recorded preludes make a good bonus for Mehta's fresh account of Mahler's Fourth Symphony. There is something of an explosive thrill about the Act III Prelude which is really quite memorable.

Die Meistersinger: Overture

Ⓜ () Beulah mono 3PD12. BBCSO, Boult – MENDELSSOHN: Hebrides Overture (); SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 in C (Great) **(*)

In this recording of 1933, constricted by the length of short-playing 78 r.p.m. discs, Boult takes an urgent and biting view of the Meistersinger Overture, fresh and dramatic. Surface hiss is high but even, with full-bodied sound set in a dry acoustic with no added reverberation. A good supplement to the Schubert.

Parsifal: Act I, Prelude; Good Friday Music

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110879. BPO, Furtwängler – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 5; FURTWÄNGLER: Symphonic Concerto – Adagio solemne ((*))

Even those who did not respond to Furtwängler (like the composer Robert Simpson) admired the sheer power and eloquence of his Wagner. These excerpts have wonderful breadth and eloquence. They provide a valuable component of this great conductor's discography.

Parsifal, Act III: Good Friday Spell: Symphonic Synthesis (arr. Stokowski)

🔑 Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0535. SO, Stokowski – MUSSORGSKY: Boris Godunov: Scenes ()

In 1952, the same year as he recorded scenes from Boris Godunov in San Francisco, Stokowski recorded these selections from Act III of Wagner's Parsifal with a hand-picked orchestra of leading players in New York. The result has a similar incandescence, and the RCA engineers matched Stokowski's brilliance with sound of astonishing warmth and breadth.

Parsifal, Act III: Symphonic Synthesis; Tristan und Isolde: Symphonic Synthesis; Die Walküre: Wotan's Farewell & Magic Fire Music (all arr. Stokowski)

 Chan. 9686. BBC PO, Bamert

Stokowski's recordings of Wagner excerpts always treated the voices as a kind of adjunct to the orchestra, and he loved best to play the orchestral music without them. So he made a series of symphonic syntheses, joining scenes together in a continuous sensuous and dramatic melodic flow, leaving the orchestra to convey the full narrative. Parsifal includes tolling bells and rich mysticism, and in Tristan Stokowski frames the Liebesnacht (including the distant hunting horns heralding the return of Tristan) with the passionate Prelude and Liebestod. Best of all he creates a symphonic poem out of Wotan's sad, loving farewell to his beloved Brünnhilde, making a great climax out of the Fire Music. Bamert is passionate and tender by turns and the BBC Philharmonic readily respond to the luscious orchestration. Perhaps the last degree of Stokowskian intensity is missing here, but with superbly spacious Chandos sound this is easy to enjoy.

VOCAL MUSIC

Wesendonck Lieder

Ⓜ (*) Ph. (ADD) 464 742-2. Norman, LSO, C. Davis – R. STRAUSS: Four Last Songs ***

The poised phrases of the Wesendonck Lieder drew from Jessye Norman in this 1976 recording a glorious range of tone colour, though in detailed imagination this falls short of some of the finest rivals on record. Good, refined recording, made vivid on CD with an excellent transfer.

(i) Wesendonck Lieder; Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; Lohengrin: Prelude to Act 1; (i) Tristan und Isolde: Prelude & Liebestod; Documentary: 'Flagstad on Singing Wagner'

() SOMM-BEECHAM mono 020. (i) Flagstad; RPO or BBC SO, Beecham

Inspired as Beecham's conducting is in all these items, it is the glorious contribution of Kirsten Flagstad in the Tristan Liebestod and Wesendonck Lieder for which the disc is chiefly valuable. The latter were recorded in EMI's Maida Vale Studio in 1952, as are the Tristan Prelude and Liebestod. The Flying Dutchman and Lohengrin items by contrast were recorded live in the Royal Festival Hall in 1954 and 1953 respectively. The sound is obviously limited, but with ample bass the impact of these performances is still impressive. Well worth hearing by devotees both of Flagstad and of Beecham. Flagstad's talk on singing Wagner makes a delightful supplement.

OPERA

Solti Wagner Edition:

Der fliegende Holländer

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 470 792-2 (2). Bailey, Martin, Talvela, Kollo, Krenn, Isola Jones, Chicago Ch. & O, Solti

Lohengrin

Ⓜ  Decca 470 795-2 (4). Domingo, Norman, Nimsgern, Randová, Sotin, Fischer-Dieskau, V. State Op. Concerto Ch., VPO, Solti

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 470 800-2 (4). van Dam, Heppner, Mattila, Opie, Lippert, Vermillion, Pape, Chicago SO Ch. & O, Solti

Parsifal

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 805-2 (4). Kollo, Ludwig, Fischer-Dieskau, Hotter, Kelemen, Frick, V. Boys' Ch., V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

Tannhäuser (Paris version)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 810-2 (3). Kollo, Dernesch, Ludwig, Sotin, Braun, Hollweg, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

Tristan und Isolde

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 814-2 (4). Uhl, Nilsson, Resnik, Van Mill, Krause, VPO, Solti

Solti Wagner Edition (complete)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 470 600-2 (21)

Following on after the box containing Solti's unsurpassed Ring cycle (455 555-2), Decca have handsomely repackaged his other Wagner recordings, which are now available separately at mid-price, or together, in a slip case, at a further reduced price. Those who invest in the Complete Edition receive a free bonus CD of rehearsal sequences from the Tristan recording. Many of these recordings remain among the top recommendations, and have the advantage of Decca's finest vintage opera sound. With the exception of the digital recordings they have been remastered for this release.

Among the highlights must be the 1972 Parsifal which is, by any standards, a magnificent recording, with universally excellent singing and Solti sustaining the right sort of tension throughout the performance. Hardly less impressive is Tannhäuser, with superlative playing from the VPO, and Christa Ludwig as Venus outshining all rivals.

The 1971 sound remains impressive. Solti is less flexible in the 1960 Tristan, but he does relax in the more expansive passages, and he generates superb thrust in the exciting moments, such as the end of Act I, and the opening of the Love Duet, which has knife-edged dramatic tension.

The digital 1986 Lohengrin finds Domingo on magnificent form, and if Jessye Norman is not ideally suited to the role of Elsa, she is always commandingly intense, full of character. The rest of the cast and the VPO is superb. Throughout these recordings, Decca employ, almost always successfully, plenty of Culshaw-like production effects, but curiously, in the 1976 Der fliegende Holländer, there are none, so that characters 'halloo' at one another when they are obviously standing elbow to elbow. However, the cast on this recording is generally impressive, and though Kollo is a little coarse as Erik, it is an illuminating portrayal.

Decca rightly chose Solti's later (digital) recording of Die Meistersinger where the conductor's characteristic urgency is counterbalanced by a great warmth, and the cast is generally outstanding – a fine conclusion to an impressive achievement. This is now a clear first recommendation.

Der fliegende Holländer (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) DG DVD 073 4433. Rundgren, Ligendza, McIntyre, Bavarian State Opera Ch. & O, Sawallisch

The Bavarian State Opera production has taken some time to reach us. It was recorded in May 1974 and the production filmed the following autumn. The adaptation by the Czech director Václav Kašlík is the second to appear on film (there was a monochrome and highly individual version in 1964 by Joachim Herz) and succeeds in gripping the viewer visually as successfully as does Wolfgang Sawallisch musically. Indeed Sawallisch is the reason to investigate this set for he gets gloriously eloquent playing from his wonderful Bavarian forces. No complaints about the soloists either: Catarina Ligendza makes an excellent Senta and Donald McIntyre is an effective Dutchman. The colour is as good as can be expected for a performance now thirty-five years old.

Der fliegende Holländer (original, Paris CD version)

Ⓜ (*) DHM/BMG 82876 64071-2 (2). Stensvold, Weber, Selig, Durmüller, WDR R. Ch., Prague Chamber Ch., Cappella Coloniensis, Weil

Using an orchestra of period instruments, Bruno Weil on DHM offers the first ever recording of Wagner's original score, the Paris version of 1841. Wagner prepared it for a performance that never took place, and the actual première had to wait until January 1843 in Dresden, for which Wagner made his first set of alterations. He made at least three sets of revisions in his lifetime, and he planned more, but this first version firmly presents the piece (as latter-day productions have tended to do) as a big, one-act work in three sections, joined by brief interludes. There are also different endings for the Overture and the final scene. Dramatically, the big difference is that the opera is set in Scotland, not Norway, with Donald (not Daland) and Georg (not Erik) as the huntsman who loves the heroine, Senta. Musically, one notes instantly the extra clarity of textures and the fact that the orchestra does not so easily overwhelm the singers, who are lighter than those usually cast in these roles. The role of Senta is taken by Astrid Weber with her bright, fresh voice, biting at times but shading down to a beautiful thread of sound for the pianissimo top notes of Senta's Ballad, set in A, a full tone higher than usual. Terje Stensvold is a comparably clean-cut Dutchman, precisely focused, though Franz-Josef Selig has his woolly moments as Donald. Jorg Durmüller is excellent as Georg, Germanic in tone yet free from strain. Lively conducting and first-rate sound.

Der fliegende Holländer (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 437 778-2 (2). Weikl, Studer, Sotin, Domingo, Seiffert, Ch. & O of German Op., Berlin, Sinopoli

🔑  Ph. (ADD) 475 8289 (2). Estes, Balslev, Salminen, Schunk, Bayreuth Festival (1985) Ch. & O, Nelsson

(BB)  Naxos 8.660025/6. Muff, Haubold, Knodt, Seiffert, Budapest R. Ch., Vienna ORF SO, Steinberg

Ⓜ (*) EMI 7 64650-2 (2). van Dam, Vejzovic, Moll, Hofmann, Moser, Borris, V. State Op. Ch., BPO, Karajan

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110189/90 (2). Hotter, Varnay, Svanholm, Nilsson, Metropolitan Ch. & O, Reiner

Sinopoli's is an intensely involving performance, volatile in the choice of often extreme speeds. The choral singing too is electrifying, and the line-up of principals is arguably finer than any. Cheryl Studer is a deeply moving Senta, not just immaculate vocally but conveying the intense vulnerability of the character in finely detailed singing. Bernd Weikl is a dark-toned, firmly focused Dutchman, strong and incisive. Hans Sotin is similarly firm and dark, nicely contrasted as Daland, and the luxury casting may be judged from the choice of Plácido Domingo as an impressive, forthright Erik and Peter Seiffert (the fine Lohengrin in Barenboim's Teldec set) as a ringing Steersman. Full, vivid sound. A clear first choice.

Woldemar Nelsson conducts the Philips performance glowingly and responsively. The cast is more consistent than almost any other, with Lisbeth Balslev as Senta firm, sweet and secure, raw only occasionally, and Simon Estes a strong, ringing Dutchman, clear and noble of tone. Matti Salminen is a dark and equally secure Daland and Robert Schunk an ardent, idiomatic Erik. The veteran Anny Schlemm as Mary, though vocally overstressed, adds pointful character, and the chorus is superb, wonderfully drilled and passionate with it. Though, inevitably, stage noises are obtrusive at times, the recording is exceptionally vivid and atmospheric. On a pair of mid-priced discs, fully documented, this make an admirable alternative choice to Sinopoli.

Pinchas Steinberg proves a warmly sympathetic Wagnerian. More than most rivals, he brings out the light and shade of this earliest of the regular Wagner canon, helped by the refined, well-balanced recording, and by brilliant, sharply dramatic playing from the orchestra. The chorus too sings with a bite and precision to match any rival. Alfred Muff as the Dutchman attacks the notes cleanly, with vibrato only occasionally intrusive. The vibrato of Ingrid Haubold is more of a problem but, except under pressure, it is well controlled, and she begins Senta's Ballad with a meditative pianissimo. Both tenors are excellent, Peter Seiffert as Erik and Joerg Hering as the Steersman, and though Erich Knodt, rather gritty in tone, is an uncharacterful Daland, his Act II aria is light and refreshing, thanks to Steinberg's fine rhythmic pointing. The recording is both atmospheric and clear, and the set comes with libretto, translation, notes and detailed synopsis, an outstanding bargain.

The extreme range of dynamics in EMI's recording for Karajan, not ideally clear but rich, matches the larger-than-life quality of the conductor's reading. His choice of José van Dam as the Dutchman, thoughtful, finely detailed and lyrical, strong but not at all blustering, goes well with this. Van Dam is superbly matched and contrasted with the finest Daland on record, Kurt Moll, gloriously biting and dark in tone, yet detailed in his characterization. Neither the Erik of Peter Hofmann, nor – more seriously – the Senta of Dunja Vejzovic matches this standard; nevertheless, for all her variability, Vejzovic is wonderfully intense in Senta's Ballad and she matches even van Dam's fine legato in the Act II duet. The CD transfer underlines the heavyweight quality of the recording, with the Sailors' Chorus made massive, but effectively so, when Karajan conducts it with such fine spring.

Dating from December 1950, the Naxos historical version offers a radio recording of a searingly dramatic performance under Fritz Reiner with a cast as starry as one could imagine. Reiner's conducting is urgent and intense from start to finish, with Hans Hotter in his prime as the Dutchman, uniquely characterful and fresher and more cleanly focused vocally than he became later. His towering performance is matched by the masterly singing of Astrid Varnay as Senta, with the great ballad bringing pinging attack and precision over the widest intervals. Svanholm with his clear heroic tenor makes a powerful, warmly expressive Erik, and Sven Nilsson is a strong, firm Daland. Although the solo voices are balanced close, the chorus and orchestra add to the power of the performance, despite the limitations of the original recording taken off the air.

The Flying Dutchman (sung in English)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 3119 (2). Tomlinson, Stemme, Begley, Halfvarson, LPO, Parry

John Tomlinson, a favourite in the title-role at Bayreuth, now a veteran, is masterful as the Dutchman, exploiting his wide tonal and expressive range, with few signs of wear on the voice. Opposite him as the self-sacrificing heroine, Senta, is Nina Stemme, who in 2002 had such a resounding success as Isolde at Glyndebourne, fresh and true, to outshine almost any rival on disc. The tenor, Kim Begley, is strongly cast as Erik, and though Eric Halfvarson as Senta's father, Daland, has his moments of roughness, it is a characterful performance. Most striking of all is the richness of the recorded sound, vividly capturing the fine playing of the LPO under David Parry.

Götterdämmerung (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Decca (ADD) 455 569-2 (4). Nilsson, Windgassen, Fischer-Dieskau, Frick, Neidlinger, Watson, Ludwig, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

🔑 ✿ * Testament (ADD) SBT 41393 (4). Varnay, Windgassen, Greindl, Uhde, Ilosvay, Neidlinger, 1955 Bayreuth Fest. Ch. & O, Keilberth

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 795-2 (4). Dernesch, Janowitz, Brilioth, Stewart, Kelemen, Ludwig, Ridderbusch, German Op. Ch., BPO, Karajan

Ⓝ  Testament (ADD) SBT4 1433 (4). Mödl, Windgassen, Hotter, Ilosvey, Neidlinger, Greindl, Brouwenstijn, Bayreuth Fest Ch & O, Keilberth

Ⓜ () Testament mono SBT 4175 (4). Varnay, Aldenhoff, Uhde, Mödl, Weber, Bayreuth Fest. Ch. & O, Knappertsbusch

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 80775-2 (4). Woodrow, Silberbauer, del Monte, Adami, Ottenthal, Wolak, Martin, Tyrol Fest Ch & O, Kuhn

Ⓜ (*) EMI 3 58724-2 (4). Marton, Jerusalem, Tomlinson, Hampson, Bundschuh, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Haitink

Solti's Götterdämmerung represented the peak of his achievement in recording the Ring cycle. There is not a single weak link in the cast. Nilsson surpasses herself in the magnificence of her singing: even Flagstad in her prime would not have been more masterful as Brünnhilde. As in Siegfried, Windgassen is in superb voice; Frick is a vivid Hagen, and Fischer-Dieskau achieves the near impossible in making Gunther an interesting and even sympathetic character. As for the recording quality, it surpasses even Decca's earlier achievement, and the current remastering has further improved the sound.

Recorded in 1955 during the second cycle of the Ring at Bayreuth under Keilberth, this second Götterdämmerung SBT4 1433 is an important supplement to the complete Keilberth cycle that Testament issued earlier, with arguably two important cast-changes making it even more attractive: Martha Mödl instead of Astrid Varnay, more powerful if less girlish, and Hans Hotter as Gunther certainly finer than Hermann Uhde who was rested in order to sing in the Bayreuth Fliegende Hollander. Wolfgang Windgassen as Siegfried is again remarkable not just for his unstrained power but for the moments of tenderness.

Keilberth's conducting on SBT41393 is incandescent, more urgent than Hans Knappertsbusch or Furtwängler, making the big dramatic moments totally thrilling, surging with excitement, with the fulfilment of the final scene movingly caught. The impact is all the greater thanks to the excellent stereo sound obtained by the Decca engineers, even if string sound can be a little fizzy. As before words are astonishingly clear. Well worth investigating by serious Wagnerians. (The first version with the original cast, and magnificent orchestral playing also remains available (SBT 4175).)

Karajan's singing cast is marginally even finer than Solti's, and his performance conveys the steady flow of recording sessions prepared in relation to live performances. Ultimately he falls short of Solti's achievement in the thrusting, orgasmic quality of the music. Dernesch's Brünnhilde is warmer than Nilsson's, with a glorious range of tone. Brilioth as Siegfried is fresh and young-sounding, while the Gutrune of Gundula Janowitz is far preferable to that of Claire Watson on Decca. The matching is otherwise very even.

The legendary Hans Knappertsbusch recording (SBT 4175) made in 1951 during the first Bayreuth Festival after the war, reissued on the Testament label a set astonishing in its vividness. This live recording was supervised by the Decca producer John Culshaw (later to mastermind Solti's complete Ring cycle) and the mono sound is even fuller and weightier than on the recording of Parsifal he also made at Bayreuth in 1951. Both operas were conducted by Knappertsbusch, who in Götterdämmerung is even more electrifying than in Parsifal, defying his reputation as a relaxed, expansive Wagnerian. Vocally the star is Astrid Varnay, shiningly firm and incisive as Brünnhilde, rising magnificently to the final challenge of the immolation scene. Siegfried is sung by the short-lived Bernd Aldenhoff, strained at times like most Heldentenoren, but generally lyrical and boyish. Hermann Uhde as Gunther and Ludwig Weber as Hagen are both outstanding too, with the immediacy and sense of presence carrying one on from first to last.

Recorded live at the 2000 Tyrol Festival in Erl, this Arte Nova set is the finest of the four Ring recordings made by Gustav Kuhn over successive years, with a more consistent cast than Rheingold and Die Walküre. Alan Woodrow, excellent in the title-role of Siegfried, here excels himself – his death scene is most moving – while in the role of Brünnhilde Eva Silberbauer sings with warmth and absence of strain, unlike her two rivals in Die Walküre and Siegfried. Duccio del Monte, overparted as Wotan in Die Walküre, here makes a strong, firm Hagen, while the roles of Gunther and Gutrune are well-taken by Herbert Adami and Gertrud Ottenthal, and Andrea Martin is excellent as Alberich, as he is in both Rheingold and Siegfried. It is a pity that the other three sections of Kuhn's Ring cycle do not measure up to this, which can be strongly recommended in the budget range.

Haitink's reading is magnificent. In its strength, nobility and thrustfulness it crowns all his previous Wagner, culminating in a forceful and warmly expressive account of the final Immolation scene. Siegfried Jerusalem clearly establishes himself as the finest latter-day Siegfried, both heroic and sweet of tone. Thomas Hampson is a sensitive and virile Gunther, John Tomlinson a sinister but human Hagen, Marjana Lipovšek a warmly intense Waltraute and Eva-Martin Bundschuh a rich, rather fruity Gutrune. The obvious reservation to make is with the singing of Eva Marton as Brünnhilde, when the unevenness of the vocal production is exaggerated by the microphone in a way that at times come close to pitchless yelping. However, that drawback is clearly outweighed by the set's positive qualities, and the scale of her singing is in no doubt, an archetypal Brünnhilde voice in timbre if not in firmness. The reissue comes with a cued synopsis and list of tracks.

The Twilight of the Gods (Götterdämmerung) (complete; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 3060 (5). Hunter, Remedios, Welsby, Haugland, Hammond-Stroud, Curphey, Pring, ENO Ch. & O, Goodall

Goodall's account of the culminating opera in Wagner's tetralogy may not be the most powerful ever recorded, and certainly it is not the most polished, but it is one that, paradoxically, by intensifying human as opposed to superhuman emotions, heightens the epic scale. The few slight imprecisions and the occasional rawness of wind-tone actually seem to enhance the earthiness of Goodall's view, with more of the primeval saga about it than the studio-made Ring cycles.

Both Rita Hunter and Alberto Remedios were more considerately recorded on the earlier Unicorn version (now Chandos – see below) of the final scenes, with more bloom on their voices, but their performances here are magnificent in every way, while Aage Haugland's Hagen is giant-sounding to focus the evil, with Gunther and Gutrune mere pawns. As for Goodall, with his consistently expansive tempi he carries total conviction – except, curiously, in the scene with the Rhinemaidens, whose music (as in Goodall's Rheingold) lumbers along heavily.

The Twilight of the Gods (Götterdämmerung): Act III (excerpts; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6593. Hunter, Remedios, Bailey, Grant, Curphey, Sadler's Wells Opera Ch. & O, Goodall

Originally recorded by Unicorn in the early 1970s, this single Chandos CD brings an invaluable reminder of Reginald Goodall's performance of the Ring cycle when it was in its first flush of success, covering the closing two scenes. It is good too to have this sample, however brief, of Clifford Grant's Hagen and Norman Bailey's Gunther, fine performances both. Fresh, clear recording, not as full as it might be.

Lohengrin (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 956 (2). Domingo, Studer, Vejzovic, Welker, Lloyd, Vienna State Op. Ch. VPO, Abbado. (Dir: Wolfgang Weber, V/D: Brian Large.)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4176 (2). Hofmann, Marton, Rysanek, Roar, Macurdy, Met. Ch. & O, Levine (Dir: August Everding, V/D: Brian Large)

 DG DVD 00440 073 4404 (2). Frey, Studer, Schnaut, Wlaschiha, Schenk, Bayreuth Festival Ch & O, Schneider (Dir: Herzog, V/D: Brian Large)

EuroArts DVD 2056008 (2). Treleaven, Hagen, Magee, Ketelsen, DeVol, Ch. & O of Gran Teatre de Liceu, Weigle (Stage Dir: Peter Konwitschny)

The Arthaus DVD offers the grandly traditional Vienna State Opera production of Lohengrin with Plácido Domingo at his peak in the title role, at once masterfully heroic and lyrical to a degree rare among Wagner tenors. His big solos inspire him to a glorious range of tone and dynamic. Cheryl Studer is an affecting Elsa, innocent and wide-eyed in contrast to the superbly sinister Ortrud of Dunja Vejzovic, exuding evil from every pore and with a wonderfully revealing glare. Her singing is masterful too, making the Telramund of Hartmut Welker seem relatively bland. Robert Lloyd is a powerful King Heinrich. Claudio Abbado and the Vienna Philharmonic are in glowing form, with dedicated singing from the chorus enhancing the ceremonial splendour of Wolfgang Weber's production. Such a traditional production brings obvious advantages in a DVD designed for repeated watching.

James Levine, with his forces from the Met. in New York, in 1986 conducts a powerful reading of Lohengrin in a traditional production by August Everding with typically lavish sets and costumes, including a vast bridal tent in Act III. The cast is first rate, with Peter Hofmann handsome of voice and appearance in the title-role, if with rather a heavy vibrato, which he stills for his big solos. Eva Marton's fruity soprano in the role of Elsa is kept under control more than on audio discs, with Elsa's Dream raptly done. Leonie Rysanek gives a classic performance as the evil Ortrud, matched by the fine, dark baritone of Leif Roar as Telramund, and by John Macurdy's powerful bass as King Heinrich. The radiance of the playing of the Met. Orchestra and the fine ensemble of the Chorus crown an excellent version.

Recorded at Bayreuth in 1990, the alternative DVD from DG gives maximum effect to the many great choral passages, sustaining the impact of the whole performance. The sets are of the simplest, relying on evocative lighting effects, with the arrival of the swan in Act II inspiring the most beautiful results. Casting is strong, led by the heroic Paul Frey in the title-role – a Heldentenor with an exceptionally sweet and true tone, down to a honeyed half-tone in Mein lieber Schwann – and the tenderly beautiful Elsa of Cheryl Studer, then at her peak. Elsa's dream could not be more ravishing. The Telramund of Ekkehard Wlaschiha is aptly strong and sinister, and the only snag in the casting is the Ortrud of Gabriele Schnaut, distressingly squally under pressure. Nevertheless an enjoyable set, well recorded.

The EuroArts Lohengrin, conducted by Sebastian Weigle, is what we believe is given the euphemism of a 'modern concept' production. It is in every way utterly crass and would surely have made Wagner despair that in 2006 his musical and dramatic intentions would be so ignored by a stage director only interested in his own realization, which has little or nothing to do with the composer's own. The opera opens in a secondary school classroom (the main set), where the boys are throwing pellets, with Ortrud (Luana DeVol) egging on the debacle and the complete lack of discipline. Koenig Heinrich (Reinhard Hagen) is the senior prefect, with a mock crown, and Lohengrin (John Treleaven) enters to schoolgirl rapture from schoolgirls with teddy bears. It gets even worse at the close of the opera, but we left the proceedings long before then. What a waste of generally good singing, time, and money.

Lohengrin (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 437 808-2 (3). Jerusalem, Studer, Meier, Welker, Moll, Schmidt, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Abbado

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 470 795-2 (4). Domingo, Norman, Nimsgern, Randová, Sotin, Fischer-Dieskau, V. State Op. Concert Ch., VPO, Solti

 Teldec 3984 21484-2 (3). Seiffert, Magee, Struckmann, Polaski, Pape, Ch. & O of German Op., Berlin, Barenboim

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67415-2 [5 67411-2] (3). J. Thomas, Grümmer, Fischer-Dieskau, Ludwig, Frick, Wiener, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Kempe

That Abbado's speeds are generally faster than Solti's (with the Act III Prelude a notable exception) means that the complete opera is squeezed on to three instead of four discs, giving it the clearest advantage. As Elsa, matching her earlier, Bayreuth performance on Philips, Cheryl Studer is at her sweetest and purest, bringing out the heroine's naivety more touchingly than Jessye Norman, whose weighty, mezzo-ish tone is thrillingly rich but is more suited to portraying other Wagner heroines than this. Though there are signs that Siegfried Jerusalem's voice is not as fresh as it once was, he sings commandingly, conveying both beauty and a true Heldentenor quality. Where Plácido Domingo for Solti, producing even more beautiful tone, tends to use a full voice for such intimate solos as In fernem Land and Mein lieber Schwann, Jerusalem sings there with tender restraint and gentler tone. Among the others, Waltraud Meier as Ortrud and Kurt Moll as King Heinrich are both superb, as fine as any predecessor, and though in the role of Telramund Hartmut Welker's baritone is not ideally steady, that tends to underline the weakness of the character next to the positive Ortrud.

It is Plácido Domingo's achievement singing Lohengrin that the lyrical element blossoms so consistently, with no hint of Heldentenor barking; at whatever dynamic level, Domingo's voice is firm and unstrained. Jessye Norman, not naturally suited to the role of Elsa, yet gives a warm, commanding performance, always intense, full of detailed insights into words and character. Eva Randová's grainy mezzo does not take so readily to recording, but as Ortrud she provides a pointful contrast, even if she never matches the firm, biting malevolence of Christa Ludwig on the Kempe set. Siegmund Nimsgern, Telramund for Solti, equally falls short of his rival on the Kempe set; but it is still a strong, cleanly focused performance. Fischer-Dieskau here sings the small but vital role of the Herald, while Hans Sotin makes a comparably distinctive King Henry. Radiant playing from the Vienna Philharmonic, and committed chorus work too. This is one of the crowning glories of Solti's long recording career.

The first glory of Barenboim's set is the sound, full and upfront, with the voices clearly focused and with plenty of bloom, set against a rich, incandescent orchestra. Having voices relatively close adds immediacy to the drama, and Barenboim's pacing adds warmth and often urgency, even if Elsa's dream sounds a little sluggish. Emily Magee's full, rich tone makes the heroine sound rather too mature, and the voice is not well contrasted with the Ortrud of Deborah Polaski, a soprano rather lacking the sinister chest-tones apt for this evil character, hardly conveying her full villainy. Peter Seiffert makes an outstanding Lohengrin, lyrical as well as heroic, with no hint of strain. One merit of the set is that the text is absolutely complete, including the extended solo after that Act III aria. The Telramund of Falk Strickmann is rather gritty, lacking weight, and Roman Trekel is a strained Herald, but René Pape is magnificent as the King, a fine successor to Kurt Moll.

Kempe directs a rapt account of Lohengrin, a fine monument to a great Wagnerian. The singers seem uplifted, Jess Thomas singing more clearly and richly than usual, Elisabeth Grümmer unrivalled as Elsa in her delicacy and sweetness, Gottlob Frick gloriously resonant as the king. But it is the partnership of Christa Ludwig and Fischer-Dieskau as Ortrud and Telramund that sets the seal on this superb performance, giving the darkest intensity to their machinations in Act II, their evil heightening the beauty and serenity of so much in this opera. The new CD transfer has greatly improved the sound; ensembles are still rather close and airless, but not congested. Solo voices are naturally caught, and the glow and intensity of Kempe's reading come out all the more involvingly in the new format.

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4160 (2). Jerusalem, Weikl, Prey, Haggender, Clark, Schiml, Schenk, Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O, Stein (Dir.: Wolfgang Wagner, V/D: Brian Large)

🔑 * DG DVD 0730949-2 (2). Morris, Heppner, Mattila, Pape, Allen, Polenzani, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  ROH Heritage DVD ROH 5008 (4) Tomlinson, Beckmesser, Winberg, Gustafson, Wyn-Rogers, Lippert, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Haitink

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 273 (2). Cassilly, Tozzi, Blankenheim, Saunders, Wiemann, Unger, Boese, Hamburg State Op. Ch., Hamburg Philh. State O, Ludwig (Dir: Rolf Liebermann, V/D: Joachim Hess)

🔑  EMI DVD 599736-9 (2). van Dam, Salminen, Volle, Seiffert, Strehl, Schnitzer, Pinter, Zürich Op. Ch. & O, Welser-Möst (V/D: Andy Sommer)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 122. Doese, McIntyre, Frey, Pringle, Doig, Shanks, Gunn, Allman, Australian Op. Ch., Elizabethan PO, Mackerras (Producer/Director: Peter Butler & Virginia Lumsden; V/D: Michael Hampe)

It is extraordinary largesse that we are so spoilt for choice with DVDs of Die Meistersinger, and any of the first three listed sets will give great satisfaction. Wolfgang Wagner's production of 1984 assembled an exceptionally starry cast, with not a single weak link and with many strengths. This DVD offers a recording made live, but without an audience. The exception is the great Quintet in Act III, which appears to have been recorded separately with the singers miming their roles, a small flaw in what is otherwise an immaculate and revelatory film, directed by Brian Large. Wolfgang Wagner's sets and costumes are grandly traditional and add greatly to the impact of the piece. Siegfried Jerusalem as Walther is one of the most heady-timbred of Heldentenoren and he sings with heroic tone in the Prize Song, making a magnificent climax. Bernd Weikl is a characterful, strong-toned Sachs and Mari Anne Haggender is a vivacious Eva, singing very sweetly, shading her tone down beautifully for the Quintet. Hermann Prey as Beckmesser is both characterful and unusually mellifluous of tone, not guying the character too much, and Manfred Schenk as Pogner, Graham Clark as David and Marga Schiml are all first rate. An outstanding version, with Horst Stein pacing the massive work splendidly.

James Levine has already given us an outstanding traditional Ring cycle, and here he matches it with an expansive and warm-hearted Meistersinger. The production is again traditional, which is what his New York audience wants. Thank goodness for no quirky ideas. The singers are all outstanding, led by James Morris's warmly genial Sachs, matched vocally by René Pape's Pogner, and by Ben Heppner, who is an equally convincing Walther. Karita Mattila not only looks gorgeous but sings ravishingly as Eva, while Sir Thomas Allen's characterization of Beckmesser is all his own. Matthew Polenzani's David too is quite agreeable, but not charismatic. Levine's conducting holds the performance together richly, and the chorus is superb, vividly recorded (like the orchestra); and Brian Large comes up trumps with the video direction. Choice between this DG set and the fine EMI version below will not be easy to determine.

Apart from the obvious fact that of all the Wagner operas Die Meistersinger is suited by nature to the mellow temperament of Bernard Haitink, the 1968 Covent Garden production includes a few other favourite names in the cast, not least the ever-versatile John Tomlinson as Hans Sachs, and Thomas Allen's naturally characterised Beckmesser, both of them in splendid voice. And one really can't go wrong with Nancy Gustavson's engaging Eva, Gwynne Howell's Pogner, and the equally secure portrayal of Magdalene from Catherine Wyn-Rogers. The production too is visually pleasing, the chorus first class and, like the orchestra, well caught by the recording. This may not go quite to the top of the list, and it may not be as fine as the Goodall set (nor as heightened by comedy), but is still a set to treasure if you admire the artists.

The Arthaus DVD offers a film, made in Hamburg, of the Meistersinger production of the great Rolf Liebermann, with Joachim Hess exploiting the medium most effectively. Costumes are traditional, with minimal sets never intruding. The cast is exceptionally fine, with no weak link, and Richard Cassilly as Walther singing with totally unstrained power. Giorgio Tozzi is a noble, moving Sachs, and Arlene Saunders the sweetest, most charming of Evas, shading her solo in the Quintet of Act III exquisitely. Toni Blankenheim characterizes well as Beckmesser, not caricaturing the role, and, as in the Bayreuth version, the other principals are excellent too: Ernst Wiemann a dark, firm Pogner, Gerhard Unger a light, clear David, and Ursula Boese as Lene. A classic film version, in which the conductor Leopold Ludwig is masterly at building up the great 'gulp' moments in each Act.

Though the performance lacks a little in weight, Franz Welser-Möst conducts a fresh and incisive reading, with another excellent cast. José van Dam gives a noble account of the role of Hans Sachs, his voice firm and unstrained as it always has been. Beardless, he cuts a less elderly figure than usual, but that goes with the freshness of the voice. The other masters are first rate too, with Matti Salminen a superb Pogner and Michael Volle a Beckmesser who with his firm, resonant voice refuses to guy the role, making the character more convincing than if he emerges as simply a comic figure. Petra-Maria Schnitzer sings with golden tones as Eva, and Peter Seiffert makes a lusty Walther, more mellifluous than most Heldentenors, while Christoph Strehl is clear and youthful as David. Nikolaus Lehnhoff's production for the Zürich Opera opens with an ultra-realistic court-room set, and goes on to an impressionistic, shadowy set for Act II, with barely any stage furniture, while the first scene of Act III is similarly economical, with a pile of books representing Sachs's dwelling. That leads on to a direct setting for the second scene of Act III, with the chorus in rows as if in choir stalls. Inconsistently, they wear modern dress, while the main characters have Victorian costumes, with the Masters emerging in black robes and tall, stovepipe hats.

Recorded in 1990 in the relatively small opera-theatre of the Sydney Opera House, this Australian Opera production brilliantly overcomes the limitations of a theatre and the electricity and vitality of Sir Charles Mackerras's conducting makes one readily forget any shortcomings. The production by Michael Hampe is very traditional, with sets by John Gunter which exploit the depth of the stage rather than its width, and ethnic German costumes by Reinhard Heinrich. Donald McIntyre is magnificent as Sachs, both vocally and dramatically, and the Swedish soprano Helena Doese is radiant as Eva, with her creamy soprano flawlessly even, most moving in the great quintet of Act III. After a rather rough start, Paul Frey emerges as an engaging Walther, rising to the challenge of the Prize Song with little strain, and the other principal tenor, Christopher Doig, effortlessly sails through the lighter role of David. Rosemary Gunn projects firmly and strongly as Magdalena, and John Pringle is a splendidly prim Beckmesser, singing and acting most convincingly. The test of any Meistersinger comes in the emotional impact of the big moments, and here, thanks to excellent singing and masterly conducting, the impact of Wagner's great score catches you as it would in the theatre.

A booklet is included with ample information and a good essay, with copious index points on the two DVDs.

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 470 800-2 (4). van Dam, Heppner, Mattila, Opie, Lippert, Vermillion, Pape, Chicago SO Ch. & O, Solti

🔑 * Calig (ADD) CAL 50971-74 (4). Stewart, Crass, Hemsley, Konya, Unger, Janowitz, Fassbaender, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Kubelik

🔑 * EMI (ADD) 509195-2 (4). Weikl, Heppner, Studer, Moll, Lorenz, van der Walt, Kallisch, Bav. State Op. Ch., Bav. State O, Sawallisch

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110872-2 (4). Schwarzkopf, Edelmann, Kunz, Hopf, Unger, Bayreuth Fest. Ch. & O, Karajan

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 6680 (4). Bailey, Bode, Moll, Weikl, Kollo, Dallapozza, Hamari, Gumpoldskirchner Spätzen, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111128/31 (4). Schoeffler, Edelmann, Treptow, Dermota, Gueden, Donch, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Knappertsbusch

Ⓜ ((*)) Andante mono AND-3040 (4). Nissen, Reining, Wiedemann, Noort, Thorborg, Ch. & VPO, Toscanini

This is the only Wagner opera that Sir Georg Solti has recorded a second time. Central to the success of the later performance is the singing of Ben Heppner as Walther, not just heroic but clear and unstrained, ardently following Solti's urgency in the Prize Song, a performance more beautiful than any of recent years except his own for Sawallisch. Karita Mattila sings with comparable beauty as Eva. Though she is still young, her firm, clear voice is more mature, almost mezzo-ish at times, than one expects of an Eva, and she too naturally surges forward in the great solo of the Quintet. For some the controversial element will be the Sachs of José van Dam, clean and sharply focused rather than weighty, not quite the wise, old, genial Sachs in his duet with Eva in Act II. This is again unconventional casting, which yet brings new beauty and new revelation, as in the hushed pianissimo at the end of the Fliedermonolog when he tells of the bird singing. With René Pape a powerful Pogner, Alan Opie a clean-cut, unexaggerated Beckmesser with plenty of projection, and Herbert Lippert and Iris Vermillion excellent as David and Magdalene, it is a cast to rival any on disc, making this a clear recommendation if you want a digital recording.

The Calig issue, belatedly issued on commercial disc, is a radio recording, made in Munich in October 1967, and the vividness of the sound is astonishing, with more realism and presence than in almost any digital recording. This is also one of Kubelik's most inspired recordings, incandescent in the way it builds up to the big emotional climaxes, just as in a live performance. When it comes to the casting, every single voice has been chosen not only for its firmness and clarity, with no wobbling or straining, but also for the central aptness of voice to character. It would be hard to think of a more radiant and girlish Eva than Gundula Janowitz, and the Hungarian tenor, Sandor Konya, too little heard on record, is a glowing Walther, beautiful in every register if not quite as subtle as the leading Walther today, Ben Heppner. Thomas Stewart as Hans Sachs is similarly unstrained, using his firm, dark baritone with warm expressiveness, while Thomas Hemsley has rarely been so impressive on disc, a sharp-focused Beckmesser who conveys the ironic humour but who never guys the role. Franz Crass is a fine, dark Pogner, and it would be hard to find a match for Gerhard Unger as David or Brigitte Fassbaender as Magdalene, with the upfront sound heightening their subplot. A Wagner production as consistent as this is rare, the more surprising to find in a radio recording.

Sawallisch also paces the work in reflection of his long experience of performing it in the opera house with the same musicians. Add to that the most radiant and free-toned Walther on disc, the Canadian, Ben Heppner, and you have a superb set. In tonal beauty Heppner matches Plácido Domingo on Jochum's DG set, as he does in variety of expression and feeling. Cheryl Studer's contribution is hardly less remarkable than Heppner's, at once powerful and girlishly tender, with the voice kept pure. If she is less affecting than she might be in the poignant duet with Sachs in Act II and in the great Quintet of Act III, that has something to do with a limitation in Sawallisch's reading, fine as it is. It rarely finds the poetic magic that this of all Wagner's operas can convey. Bernd Weikl makes a splendid Sachs, firm and true of voice, but something of the nobility of the master-shoemaker is missing. Deon van der Walt is a strong David, clear-cut and fresh, with Cornelia Kallisch making a traditionally fruity yet firm Magdalene. Siegfried Lorenz is a well-focused Beckmesser who refuses to caricature the much-mocked Town Clerk, and Kurt Moll is a magnificent Pogner. The chorus (balanced a little backwardly) and orchestra play with the warmth and radiance associated with recordings made in the Herkulessaal in Munich.

The Naxos set of Karajan's classic 1951 recording of Meistersinger provides a useful alternative to EMI's own issue (5 67086-2). Mark Obert-Thorn has opted to transfer this live recording, made over five performances and a rehearsal, at a higher level than the EMI engineers, and this has tended to bring out the inevitable inconsistencies and flaws, with voices not always well-focused, particularly in the big ensembles. Yet the electric atmosphere of a historic occasion is thrillingly caught. Where EMI provides a complete libretto in German but no translation, Naxos relies on a detailed synopsis with references to the numbered tracks.

The great glory of Solti's first (1975) set of Die Meistersinger is not the searing brilliance of the conductor, but rather the mature and involving portrayal of Sachs by Norman Bailey. For his superb singing the set is well worth investigating. But there is much else to enjoy, not least the bright and detailed sound which the Decca engineers have obtained with the Vienna Philharmonic, recording Wagner in the Sofiensaal. Kurt Moll as Pogner, Bernd Weikl as Beckmesser (really singing the part) and Julia Hamari as Magdalene (refreshingly young-sounding) are all excellent, but the shortcomings are comparably serious. Both Hannelore Bode and René Kollo fall short of their far-from-perfect contributions to earlier sets and Solti, for all his energy, gives a surprisingly routine reading of this most appealing of Wagner scores. The Decca sound comes up very vividly on the curent CD transfer. A full libretto is enclosed, although, as with the rest of this series, the print is very small.

On Naxos the cast from the Vienna State Opera centres round the noble Hans Sachs of Paul Schoeffler in one of his very finest recordings, opposite the totally enchanting Eva of Hilde Gueden, with her golden tone. Otto Edelmann is a superb Pogner, and Karl Donch as Beckmesser has the right, mean-sounding voice, which he uses intelligently without guying the role. Gunther Treptow, with his clean-cut, baritonal Heldentenor, is a fine, unstrained Walther and Anton Dermota a glowing David, with Else Schurhoff a strong but mature-sounding Magdalene. Knappertsbusch's direction is spacious and intense, and the transfer of the original mono recording is first rate, with ample body.

Dating from 1937, this Meistersinger demonstrates very clearly how at that period Toscanini was far from rigid in his conducting, with the high-voltage electricity of the moment leading him forward in urgency, while equally letting him and his performers expand in warmth. Hans Hermann Nissen makes a noble Sachs and Maria Reining is a touching Eva, far fresher than in her later recordings. The others make a fine team. The radio sound is very limited, with the orchestra thin and dry. For most of the time the voices come over well, but they periodically fade into the distance, with the balances of voices on stage variable. Happily, the long first scene of Act III comes over best, no doubt the result of forwardly placed scenery. The wonder is that the CD transfer by Ward Marston does so much to make the sound acceptable, with Andante offering its typically luxurious packaging.

The Mastersingers of Nuremberg (CD version in English)

Ⓝ ✿  Chan. (ADD) 3148 (4). Remedios, Curphey, Hammond-Stroud, Bailey, Dempsey, Mangin, Sadler's Wells Ch & Orch, Goodall

This recording of The Mastersingers in English, made by the BBC at Sadler's Wells in February 1968, marks an iconic moment in the history of opera in England. That is so not just because Goodall here demonstrates how strong the team of Sadler's Wells singers was in Wagner, but the whole project pointed the way forward to the emergence in due course of English National Opera at the Coliseum, a genuine 'Volksoper' rival to the grand international company at Covent Garden.

It was then an inspired choice to have him conduct Wagner at Sadler's Wells, and he seized it eagerly, as this glowing performance amply demonstrates in every bar. Goodall himself patiently helped to train the singers of the 1960s Sadler's Wells company in singing Wagner as he wanted it. His speeds are almost always very slow, but the singers respond superbly, revelling in the expansiveness instead of finding it a trial.

Alberto Remedios was then at his peak as a Wagner tenor, pure and unstrained throughout, rising magnificently to the challenge of the Prize Song in Act 3, an exhilarating moment, which sends you away joyfully, as the audience here plainly felt. Norman Bailey too was an outstanding Sachs, firm and focused, the wise philosopher, Noel Mangin is a clear-toned Pogner, and Gregory Dempsey is a bright, lively David, well-contrasted with Remedios, while Derek Hammond-Stroud is delightfully characterful Beckmesser, pointing the humour infectiously, though maybe the voice is too firm and strong for this character.

The women in the cast are not quite on this level, but Margaret Curphey as Eva sings with winning firmness and purity, and Ann Robson is a lively Magdalene. It is striking that not one of the singers has even the suspicion of a wobble, and the excellent casting equally involves the other Masters and the Nightwatchman sung by Stafford Dean. Consistently adding to the glow of the performance is the singing of the chorus, and the playing of the orchestra. It is astonishing remembering the variable quality of latter-day companies that the team at Sadler's Wells in the sixties was so fine. Quite a revelation. The radio recording captures the atmosphere thrillingly, a credit to the 1968 engineers, as well as to those making this transfer.

Parsifal Documentary: 'The Search for the Grail'

 Arthaus DVD 100 610. Domingo, Urmana, Salminen, Putilin, Mojhaey, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev (Dir: Tony Palmer)

Tony Palmer's 1998 film is much more documentary than musical performance, but it does bring the great benefit of letting us hear Plácido Domingo as Parsifal in several key passages from the opera. He also provides a commentary on the opera and its plot, as well as on the Grail legend. There are interviews with, among others, the biblical scholar Karen Armstrong (in English) on the background and Wolfgang Wagner (in German) on the traditions of Bayreuth with special reference to the influence on Hitler and the Nazis. There are also clips from various Grail-inspired films, even including those involving Monty Python and 'Crocodile' Dundee. The musical performances were recorded, not only at the Mariinsky theatre in St Petersburg with Gergiev conducting, but also in Ravello, where Wagner first conceived the idea of writing the opera. As always with Palmer, it is a film both thoughtful and provocative.

Parsifal (complete; DVD version)

🔑  DG DVD 00440 073 4328. Jerusalem, Randova, Weikl, Sotin, Roar, Salminen, Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O, Stein (Dir: Wolfgang Wagner, V/D: Ott)

The DG disc presents the first production of Parsifal directed by Wolfgang Wagner, in July 1981. In the simple stylizing of the sets – notably in the bare concentric circles of the Grail Scenes in Acts I and III – he follows the example of his brother, Wieland, and effectively so. Act II presents Klingsor's castle with comparable simplicity, a simple cube on which Klingsor stands menacingly. Leif Roar makes a wonderfully sinister Klingsor, singing powerfully. The rest of the cast is comparably strong, with Siegfried Jerusalem the sweetest-toned Heldentenor of his generation, perfectly cast, and with Hans Sotin a most sympathetic Gurnemanz, Matti Salminen an incisive Titurel and Bernd Weikl an

A booklet is included with ample information and a good essay, with copious index points on the two DVDs.

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 470 800-2 (4). van Dam, Heppner, Mattila, Opie, Lippert, Vermillion, Pape, Chicago SO Ch. & O, Solti

🔑 * Calig (ADD) CAL 50971-74 (4). Stewart, Crass, Hemsley, Konya, Unger, Janowitz, Fassbaender, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Kubelik

🔑 * EMI (ADD) 509195-2 (4). Weikl, Heppner, Studer, Moll, Lorenz, van der Walt, Kallisch, Bav. State Op. Ch., Bav. State O, Sawallisch

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110872-2 (4). Schwarzkopf, Edelmann, Kunz, Hopf, Unger, Bayreuth Fest. Ch. & O, Karajan

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 6680 (4). Bailey, Bode, Moll, Weikl, Kollo, Dallapozza, Hamari, Gumpoldskirchner Spätzen, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111128/31 (4). Schoeffler, Edelmann, Treptow, Dermota, Gueden, Donch, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Knappertsbusch

Ⓜ ((*)) Andante mono AND-3040 (4). Nissen, Reining, Wiedemann, Noort, Thorborg, Ch. & VPO, Toscanini

This is the only Wagner opera that Sir Georg Solti has recorded a second time. Central to the success of the later performance is the singing of Ben Heppner as Walther, not just heroic but clear and unstrained, ardently following Solti's urgency in the Prize Song, a performance more beautiful than any of recent years except his own for Sawallisch. Karita Mattila sings with comparable beauty as Eva. Though she is still young, her firm, clear voice is more mature, almost mezzo-ish at times, than one expects of an Eva, and she too naturally surges forward in the great solo of the Quintet. For some the controversial element will be the Sachs of José van Dam, clean and sharply focused rather than weighty, not quite the wise, old, genial Sachs in his duet with Eva in Act II. This is again unconventional casting, which yet brings new beauty and new revelation, as in the hushed pianissimo at the end of the Fliedermonolog when he tells of the bird singing. With René Pape a powerful Pogner, Alan Opie a clean-cut, unexaggerated Beckmesser with plenty of projection, and Herbert Lippert and Iris Vermillion excellent as David and Magdalene, it is a cast to rival any on disc, making this a clear recommendation if you want a digital recording.

The Calig issue, belatedly issued on commercial disc, is a radio recording, made in Munich in October 1967, and the vividness of the sound is astonishing, with more realism and presence than in almost any digital recording. This is also one of Kubelik's most inspired recordings, incandescent in the way it builds up to the big emotional climaxes, just as in a live performance. When it comes to the casting, every single voice has been chosen not only for its firmness and clarity, with no wobbling or straining, but also for the central aptness of voice to character. It would be hard to think of a more radiant and girlish Eva than Gundula Janowitz, and the Hungarian tenor, Sandor Konya, too little heard on record, is a glowing Walther, beautiful in every register if not quite as subtle as the leading Walther today, Ben Heppner. Thomas Stewart as Hans Sachs is similarly unstrained, using his firm, dark baritone with warm expressiveness, while Thomas Hemsley has rarely been so impressive on disc, a sharp-focused Beckmesser who conveys the ironic humour but who never guys the role. Franz Crass is a fine, dark Pogner, and it would be hard to find a match for Gerhard Unger as David or Brigitte Fassbaender as Magdalene, with the upfront sound heightening their subplot. A Wagner production as consistent as this is rare, the more surprising to find in a radio recording.

Sawallisch also paces the work in reflection of his long experience of performing it in the opera house with the same musicians. Add to that the most radiant and free-toned Walther on disc, the Canadian, Ben Heppner, and you have a superb set. In tonal beauty Heppner matches Plácido Domingo on Jochum's DG set, as he does in variety of expression and feeling. Cheryl Studer's contribution is hardly less remarkable than Heppner's, at once powerful and girlishly tender, with the voice kept pure. If she is less affecting than she might be in the poignant duet with Sachs in Act II and in the great Quintet of Act III, that has something to do with a limitation in Sawallisch's reading, fine as it is. It rarely finds the poetic magic that this of all Wagner's operas can convey. Bernd Weikl makes a splendid Sachs, firm and true of voice, but something of the nobility of the master-shoemaker is missing. Deon van der Walt is a strong David, clear-cut and fresh, with Cornelia Kallisch making a traditionally fruity yet firm Magdalene. Siegfried Lorenz is a well-focused Beckmesser who refuses to caricature the much-mocked Town Clerk, and Kurt Moll is a magnificent Pogner. The chorus (balanced a little backwardly) and orchestra play with the warmth and radiance associated with recordings made in the Herkulessaal in Munich.

The Naxos set of Karajan's classic 1951 recording of Meistersinger provides a useful alternative to EMI's own issue (5 67086-2). Mark Obert-Thorn has opted to transfer this live recording, made over five performances and a rehearsal, at a higher level than the EMI engineers, and this has tended to bring out the inevitable inconsistencies and flaws, with voices not always well-focused, particularly in the big ensembles. Yet the electric atmosphere of a historic occasion is thrillingly caught. Where EMI provides a complete libretto in German but no translation, Naxos relies on a detailed synopsis with references to the numbered tracks.

The great glory of Solti's first (1975) set of Die Meistersinger is not the searing brilliance of the conductor, but rather the mature and involving portrayal of Sachs by Norman Bailey. For his superb singing the set is well worth investigating. But there is much else to enjoy, not least the bright and detailed sound which the Decca engineers have obtained with the Vienna Philharmonic, recording Wagner in the Sofiensaal. Kurt Moll as Pogner, Bernd Weikl as Beckmesser (really singing the part) and Julia Hamari as Magdalene (refreshingly young-sounding) are all excellent, but the shortcomings are comparably serious. Both Hannelore Bode and René Kollo fall short of their far-from-perfect contributions to earlier sets and Solti, for all his energy, gives a surprisingly routine reading of this most appealing of Wagner scores. The Decca sound comes up very vividly on the current CD transfer. A full libretto is enclosed, although, as with the rest of this series, the print is very small.

On Naxos the cast from the Vienna State Opera centres round the noble Hans Sachs of Paul Schoeffler in one of his very finest recordings, opposite the totally enchanting Eva of Hilde Gueden, with her golden tone. Otto Edelmann is a superb Pogner, and Karl Donch as Beckmesser has the right, mean-sounding voice, which he uses intelligently without guying the role. Gunther Treptow, with his clean-cut, baritonal Heldentenor, is a fine, unstrained Walther and Anton Dermota a glowing David, with Else Schurhoff a strong but mature-sounding Magdalene. Knappertsbusch's direction is spacious and intense, and the transfer of the original mono recording is first rate, with ample body.

Dating from 1937, this Meistersinger demonstrates very clearly how at that period Toscanini was far from rigid in his conducting, with the high-voltage electricity of the moment leading him forward in urgency, while equally letting him and his performers expand in warmth. Hans Hermann Nissen makes a noble Sachs and Maria Reining is a touching Eva, far fresher than in her later recordings. The others make a fine team. The radio sound is very limited, with the orchestra thin and dry. For most of the time the voices come over well, but they periodically fade into the distance, with the balances of voices on stage variable. Happily, the long first scene of Act III comes over best, no doubt the result of forwardly placed scenery. The wonder is that the CD transfer by Ward Marston does so much to make the sound acceptable, with Andante offering its typically luxurious packaging.

The Mastersingers of Nuremberg (CD version in English)

Ⓝ ✿  Chan. (ADD) 3148 (4). Remedios, Curphey, Hammond-Stroud, Bailey, Dempsey, Mangin, Sadler's Wells Ch & Orch, Goodall

This recording of The Mastersingers in English, made by the BBC at Sadler's Wells in February 1968, marks an iconic moment in the history of opera in England. That is so not just because Goodall here demonstrates how strong the team of Sadler's Wells singers was in Wagner, but the whole project pointed the way forward to the emergence in due course of English National Opera at the Coliseum, a genuine 'Volksoper' rival to the grand international company at Covent Garden.

It was then an inspired choice to have him conduct Wagner at Sadler's Wells, and he seized it eagerly, as this glowing performance amply demonstrates in every bar. Goodall himself patiently helped to train the singers of the 1960s Sadler's Wells company in singing Wagner as he wanted it. His speeds are almost always very slow, but the singers respond superbly, revelling in the expansiveness instead of finding it a trial.

Alberto Remedios was then at his peak as a Wagner tenor, pure and unstrained throughout, rising magnificently to the challenge of the Prize Song in Act 3, an exhilarating moment, which sends you away joyfully, as the audience here plainly felt. Norman Bailey too was an outstanding Sachs, firm and focused, the wise philosopher, Noel Mangin is a clear-toned Pogner, and Gregory Dempsey is a bright, lively David, well-contrasted with Remedios, while Derek Hammond-Stroud is delightfully characterful Beckmesser, pointing the humour infectiously, though maybe the voice is too firm and strong for this character.

The women in the cast are not quite on this level, but Margaret Curphey as Eva sings with winning firmness and purity, and Ann Robson is a lively Magdalene. It is striking that not one of the singers has even the suspicion of a wobble, and the excellent casting equally involves the other Masters and the Nightwatchman sung by Stafford Dean. Consistently adding to the glow of the performance is the singing of the chorus, and the playing of the orchestra. It is astonishing remembering the variable quality of latter-day companies that the team at Sadler's Wells in the sixties was so fine. Quite a revelation. The radio recording captures the atmosphere thrillingly, a credit to the 1968 engineers, as well as to those making this transfer.

Parsifal Documentary: 'The Search for the Grail'

 Arthaus DVD 100 610. Domingo, Urmana, Salminen, Putilin, Mojhaey, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev (Dir: Tony Palmer)

Tony Palmer's 1998 film is much more documentary than musical performance, but it does bring the great benefit of letting us hear Plácido Domingo as Parsifal in several key passages from the opera. He also provides a commentary on the opera and its plot, as well as on the Grail legend. There are interviews with, among others, the biblical scholar Karen Armstrong (in English) on the background and Wolfgang Wagner (in German) on the traditions of Bayreuth with special reference to the influence on Hitler and the Nazis. There are also clips from various Grail-inspired films, even including those involving Monty Python and 'Crocodile' Dundee. The musical performances were recorded, not only at the Mariinsky theatre in St Petersburg with Gergiev conducting, but also in Ravello, where Wagner first conceived the idea of writing the opera. As always with Palmer, it is a film both thoughtful and provocative.

Parsifal (complete; DVD version)

🔑  DG DVD 00440 073 4328. Jerusalem, Randova, Weikl, Sotin, Roar, Salminen, Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O, Stein (Dir: Wolfgang Wagner, V/D: Ott)

The DG disc presents the first production of Parsifal directed by Wolfgang Wagner, in July 1981. In the simple stylizing of the sets – notably in the bare concentric circles of the Grail Scenes in Acts I and III – he follows the example of his brother, Wieland, and effectively so. Act II presents Klingsor's castle with comparable simplicity, a simple cube on which Klingsor stands menacingly. Leif Roar makes a wonderfully sinister Klingsor, singing powerfully. The rest of the cast is comparably strong, with Siegfried Jerusalem the sweetest-toned Heldentenor of his generation, perfectly cast, and with Hans Sotin a most sympathetic Gurnemanz, Matti Salminen an incisive Titurel and Bernd Weikl an passing by without one's pulse quickening as it should. On the credit side however, the singing cast has hardly any flaw at all, and Fischer-Dieskau's Wotan is a brilliant and memorable creation, virile and expressive. Among the others, Veasey is excellent, though obviously she cannot efface memories of Flagstad; Gerhard Stolze with his flickering almost Sprechstimme as Loge gives an immensely vivid, if (for some) controversial interpretation. The 1968 sound has been clarified and further opened up in the new transfer.

The briskness of Artur Bodanzky as a Wagnerian, often disturbing in other operas, works well in the narrative of Rheingold, with the dramatic bite of each scene strongly conveyed. The recording was made in April 1937 not at the Met. itself but at the Boston Opera House, with sound still limited but capturing the voices well. It is specially valuable to have the great Friedrich Schorr as Wotan, firm as a rock, strong and purposeful throughout, up to the magnificent final solo. Karin Branzell is a warm, clear Fricka, Eduard Habich an incisive Alberich and Emanuel List a magnificent Fafner, with the whole cast firm and clear if not always subtle. Even the neighing tone of Rene Maison as Loge can be regarded as characterful.

The Rhinegold (Das Rheingold) (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. (ADD) 3054 (3). Bailey, Hammond-Stroud, Pring, Belcourt, Attfield, Collins, McDonnall, Lloyd, Grant, ENO O, Goodall

Goodall's slow tempi in Rheingold bring an opening section where the temperature is low, reflecting hardly at all the tensions of a live performance, even though this was taken from a series of Coliseum presentations. Nevertheless, the momentum of Wagner gradually builds up so that, by the final scenes, both the overall teamwork and the individual contributions of such singers as Norman Bailey, Derek Hammond-Stroud and Clifford Grant come together impressively. Hammond-Stroud's powerful representation of Alberich culminates in a superb account of the curse. The spectacular orchestral effects (with the horns sounding glorious) are vividly caught by the engineers and impressively transferred to CD, even if balances (inevitably) are sometimes less than ideal.

Rienzi (complete)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67131-2 (3). Kollo, Wennberg, Martin, Adam, Hillebrand, Vogel, Schreier, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State Op. Ch., Dresden State O, Hollreiser

It is sad that the flaws in this ambitious opera prevent the unwieldy piece from having its full dramatic impact. This recording is not quite complete, but the cuts are unimportant and most of the set numbers make plain the youthful exuberance of the ambitious composer. Except in the recitative, Heinrich Hollreiser's direction is strong and purposeful, but much of the singing is disappointing. René Kollo sounds heroic, but the two women principals are poor. Janis Martin in the breeches role of Adriano produces tone that does not record very sweetly, while Siv Wennberg as the heroine, Rienzi's sister, slides unpleasantly between notes in the florid passages. Despite good recording, this is only a stop-gap.

Der Ring des Nibelungen: an introduction to The Ring by Deryck Cooke, with 193 music examples

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 443 581-2 (2). VPO, Solti

The reissue of Deryck Cooke's fascinating and scholarly lecture is most welcome. The principal musical motives are all printed out in the accompanying booklet and they demonstrate just how the many leading ideas in The Ring develop from one another, springing from an original germ. The discourse is riveting; the music examples, many of them specially prepared, are clumsily inserted, but this is still a thoroughly worthwhile acquisition for those who already have recordings of the operas.

Der Ring des Nibelungen (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Warner DVD 2564 62317-2 (7). Jerusalem, Kang, von Kannen, Evans, Brinkmann, Clark, Tomlinson, Finnie, Holle, Elming, Secunde, Svenden, Bayreuth Fest. O, Barenboim (Dir: Harry Kupfer, V/D: Horant H. Hohlfeld)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 043-9 (7). Behrens, Jerusalem, Lakes, Ludwig, Morris, Norman, Rootering, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine. (Dir: Otto Schenk, V/D: Brian Large.)

(*) Ph. DVD 073 4057 (8). Jones, McIntyre, Becht, Schwarz, Zednik, Bayreuth Fest. O, Boulez (Producer: Patrice Chéreau, V/D: Brian Large.)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca DVD 074 3264 (7) Anderson, Byriel, Johnson, Klaveness, Morgny, Reuter, Sjöberg, Stene, Theorin, Royal Danish Opera Ch. & O, Schonwandt

Das Rheingold

🔑 * Warner DVD 2564 62318-2. Tomlinson, Clark, Finnie, von Kannen, Holle, Svenden, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim (Dir: Harry Kupfer, V/D: Horant H. Hohlfeld)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 036-9. Morris, Held, Baker, Jerusalem, Wlaschina, Zednik, Rootering, Salminen, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

(*) Ph. DVD 070 4058. McIntyre, Zednik, Becht, Schwarz, Altmeyer, Salminen, Hübner, Bayreuth Fest. O, Boulez

Die Walküre

🔑 * Warner DVD 2564 62319-2 (2). Elming, Secunde, Tomlinson, Finnie, Evans, Holle, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim (Dir: Harry Kupfer, V/D: Horant H. Hohlfeld)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 049-2 (2). Norman, Lakes, Moll, Morris, Behrens, Luwig, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine. (V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Ph. DVD 070 4059 (2). Jones, Altmeyer, Schwarz, Hormann, Salminen, McIntyre, Bayreuth Fest. O, Boulez

Siegfried

🔑 * Warner DVD 2564 62320-2 (2). Jerusalem, Clark, Tomlinson, von Kannen, Evans, Kang, Svenden, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim (Dir: Harry Kupfer; V/D: Horant H. Hohlfeld)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 037-9 (2). Jerusalem, Behrens, Morris, Zednik, Wlaschina, Salminen, Svenden, Upshaw, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

(*) Ph. DVD 070 4062 (2). Jung, McIntyre, Jones, Zednik, Becht, Hübner, Bayreuth Fest. O, Boulez. (V/D: Brian Large)

Götterdämmerung

🔑 * Warner DVD 2564 62321-2 (2). Jerusalem, Evans, Brinkmann, Kang, von Kannen, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim (Dir: Harry Kupfer, V/D: Horant H. Hohlfeld)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 040-9 (2). Behrend, Jerusalem, Raffell, Salminen, Wlaschina, Lisowka, Ludwig, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

 Ph. DVD 070 4065 (2). Jones, Jung, Hübner, Altmeyer, Becht, Mazura, Killebrew, Bayreuth Fest. O, Boulez

A choice between the Barenboim and Levine Ring cycles will be a personal one, depending very much on one's reaction to the different production values. Both are vocally and orchestrally magnificent performances and, for EG, Barenboim's superb account is the finer of the two. But for your Editor the very conception of the men wearing trilbies (among other of the producer's egocentric touches) tends to put the narrative into an area of disbelief. What would Wagner have thought of such headgear? So we must describe the two differing approaches to the visual element of these performances so that readers can make up their own minds. Otherwise, Harry Kupfer's Bayreuth production, recorded in 1991 and 1992, involves minimal, stylized sets, evocatively lit to convey the most atmospheric results. Generally conventional costumes, with occasional modern touches, result in a cycle which tells the complex story of each part of the tetralogy as clearly and graphically as possible.

Rheingold opens in a shimmering green light, with the Rhinemaidens dancing and the gold shining from a great cavity in the river bed. Alberich is characterfully sung by Gunter von Kannen with firm, clear tone, as he steals the gold. The Gods waiting to enter the newly built Valhalla are pictured in a simple, bare setting, with many of them wearing green fronds, and with John Tomlinson in dark glasses as Wotan their powerful leader. Linda Finnie sings with fresh, clear tone as Fricka and Graham Clark makes the ideal Loge, preening himself in a blond wig. The Giants, Fasolt and Fafner (Matthias Holle and Philip Kang, both excellent), are fortunately portrayed as genuinely gigantic figures with prosthetic arms and enormous bodies. Wotan's and Loge's coup in stealing the gold back from Alberich in Nibelheim is then portrayed atmospherically, and so is the handing of the gold to the Giants in payment for their work, including the Tarnhelm and the Ring. The Rainbow Bridge in the final scene is suggested by vertical strip-lighting in the relevant colours, with Daniel Barenboim's powerful conducting making a thrilling conclusion.

Die Walküre again benefits not just from an excellent cast with no weak links but from the thrustful conducting of Barenboim, giving full weight to the big moments, like the opening of Wotan's Farewell in Act III. Poul Elming as Siegmund, wearing fatigues, comes out with ringing top notes yet sings with the most tender emotions on greeting Sieglinde, beautifully sung by Nadine Secunde. Linda Finnie as Fricka makes the role seem nobler than usual opposite the compelling Wotan of John Tomlinson. Anne Evans sings magnificently as Brünnhilde: fresh and bright with clear, firm tone.

In Siegfried the Harry Kupfer production, as a plus point, ingeniously conveys such tricky effects as the arrival of the bear in Act I and the flying of the Woodbird in Act II very graphically without descending into unwanted comic effects. The light soprano, Hilde Leidland, sings that brief role brightly and clearly. The great steam boiler in Act I as Siegfried forges the sword Nothung also works well, with Graham Clark as the shifty Mime, splendidly contrasted with the strong Siegfried of Siegfried Jerusalem, the most mellifluous Heldentenor of his generation. As the Wanderer John Tomlinson remains a tower of strength, poignantly struck down by his defeat at the hands of the callous Siegfried. The climax of Act III, with Anne Evans at her peak as Brünnhilde, is exhilarating, aided by Daniel Barenboim's powerful conducting.

Götterdämmerung opens with the Norns literally weaving their thread, and with Anne Evans in radiant voice, singing superbly opposite the fine, clear Siegfried of Siegfried Jerusalem. The clarity of sound in the Rhine Journey is a delight, and in the Gibichung Hall scenes the Hagen of Philip Kang is genuinely sinister. Anna-Maria Bundschuh as Gutrune sings very sweetly, though Bodo Borkmann as Gunther is too wobbly. The Alberich of Gunter von Kannen is again excellent, and Barenboim brings out the darkness of the score most compellingly. In the calling of the Vassals in Act II the Bayreuth Chorus makes the most of its brief moment (all, like Siegfried himself, wearing boiler suits). The final Immolation Scene is vividly done, with Anne Evans rising superbly to the challenge, though Kupfer's device after the fall of Valhalla to have members of a modern audience watching TV sets is an odd intrusion (to say the least) for the final curtain. A brilliant version nevertheless.

With lavish sets and costumes by Gunther Schneider-Siemssen (who designed the Karajan production earlier seen at the Met.), Levine's is a full-bloodedly realistic production in the romantic tradition, defying fashionable trends towards Wieland Wagner spareness and abstraction on the one hand and towards updated concept productions on the other. For a video version designed for repeated watching there is everything to be said for this approach, when the complex story is told so lucidly, with splendid camerawork. The aim was to modify the traditional approach, using all the theatrical effects available in a modern theatre. Indeed, the illusion of the Rhinemaidens swimming in water is very vivid at the start of Rheingold, and in the final scene of Götterdämmerung, after the Gibichung Hall has collapsed (realistically portrayed) and Brünnhilde has flung herself into the fire, you are briefly shown the bottom of the Rhine again and finally Valhalla in flames, reflecting what the music tells you. Hildegard Behrens as Brünnhilde and James Morris as Wotan are both even more convincing when seen as well as heard, and Siegfried Jerusalem as Siegfried makes a handsome hero. There is a picture-gallery as a bonus, with each opera given its own trailer; but nothing else.

When it first appeared in 1976, the centenary year of the tetralogy, the Patrice Chéreau/Pierre Boulez Ring caused public outrage, with boos (and even fisticuffs) in the auditorium. Musically speaking, there is an objectivity to this reading that is at the other end of the spectrum to Furtwängler, Karajan, Levine and Barenboim, and Boulez's meticulous attention to detail and the fact that he does not linger unduly will, for many, be distinct advantages. On the musical side we have discussed the merits of the set in earlier editions, and the performances are identical. Chéreau's production divests The Ring of any tradition, whether it be to pre-war stagings or to the famous post-war Wieland Wagner productions, and forces the viewer to rethink afresh the meaning of the powerful mythology. His view is almost Shavian in seeing the characters as children of the Industrial Revolution, and the designs by Richard Poduzzi are arresting, even if they have little to do with Wagner's original intentions. In the Boulez version, Brian Large's handling of the cameras once again places the eye where the ear tells us it wants to be. This set now includes a documentary on the making of the recording which is also available separately on DG 073 4068.

This is a Scandinavian Ring cycle, centred on the new Copenhagen Opera House, but also drawing its singing cast from Sweden and Norway to make a team, with Johann Reuter playing Wotan in Rheingold and a guest artist, James Johnson drawn to that role in Walküre and Siegfried, Irene Theorin is an impressive Brünnhilde throughout and Stig Anderson is Siegmund in Walküre and becomes Siegfried in the two remaining operas. Sten Byriel appears as nasty Alberich in three out of the four operas and so on. Thus the narrative is consistent, and set in the mid-19th century, although we see Brünnhilde researching her past in the Valhalla Library! The production has many features of its own from the Rhinemaidens as flappers, to a naked golden boy, who represents the Rheingold and is murdered. Indeed there is a great deal of violence, and murder is part of the narrative, even a torture chamber where Alberich gets his comeuppance. This kind of killing – there is much more besides – is not for everyone, but the staging is impressively full of action. What about the singing? It's pretty good, especially Stig Andersen's Siegfried, both Wotan's and Irene Theorin's Brünnhilde. Throughout, the musical direction of Michael Schonwandt keeps the orchestral tension high, and whatever one thinks, this is certainly a landmark staging of the Ring which you may like or dislike as you please.

Der Ring des Nibelungen (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 455 555-2 (14). Nilsson, Windgassen, Flagstad, Fischer-Dieskau, Hotter, London, Ludwig, Neidlinger, Frick, Svanholm, Stolze, Böhme, Höffgen, Sutherland, Crespin, King, Watson, Ch. & VPO, Solti

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) 446 057-2 (14). Nilsson, Windgassen, Neidlinger, Adam, Rysanek, King, Nienstedt, Esser, Talvela, Böhme, Silja, Dernesch, Stewart, Höffgen, (1967) Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O, Boehm

Ⓜ  Testament SBT 141412 (14) Varnay, Hotter, Vinay, Greindl, Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O., Keilberth

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 72731-2 (14). Behrens, Varady, Lipovšek, Schwarz, Hale, Kollo, Wlaschiha, Schunk, Tear, Rootering, Bav. State Opera Ch. & O, Sawallisch

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 780-2 (14). Veasey, Fischer-Dieskau, Stolze, Kelemen, Dernesch, Dominguez, Jess Thomas, Stewart, Crespin, Janowitz, Vickers, Talvela, Brilioth, Ludwig, Ridderbusch, BPO, Karajan

The Ring (CD version; complete)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 5 19479-2 (14) Marton, Jerusalem, Adam, Bav. R Ch. & O, Haitink

Ⓜ () EMI mono 7 67123-2 (13). Suthaus, Mödl, Frantz, Patzak, Neidlinger, Windgassen, Konetzni, Streich, Jurinac, Frick, RAI Ch. & Rome SO, Furtwängler

Ⓑ (*) Ph. 475 7960 (12). Jones, McIntyre, Becht, Schwarz, Zednik, Bayreuth Festival Ch. & O, Boulez.

Solti's was the first recorded Ring cycle to be issued. Solti himself developed in the process of making the recording, and Götterdämmerung represents a peak of achievement for him, commanding and magnificent.

Recorded at the 1967 Bayreuth Festival, Boehm's fine set captures the unique atmosphere and acoustic of the Festspielhaus very vividly. Birgit Nilsson as Brünnhilde and Wolfgang Windgassen as Siegfried are both a degree more volatile and passionate than they were in the Solti cycle. Gustav Neidlinger as Alberich is also superb, as he was too in the Solti set; and the only major reservation concerns the Wotan of Theo Adam, in a performance searchingly intense and finely detailed but often unsteady of tone even at that period. The sound, only occasionally constricted, has been vividly transferred.

This pioneering Joseph Keilberth recording, taken live from the 1955 Ring cycle at Bayreuth, was the very first to be done in stereo, several years ahead of the great Solti cycle for Decca, which was recorded in the studio. This one has been languishing in the archives, and it was thanks to the enterprise of Stewart Brown of Testament that finally, after much negotiation, the cycle has appeared. When Wieland Wagner invited Keilberth to conduct The Ring at Bayreuth, he was consciously aiming to present a reading manifestly contrasted with that of Hans Knappertsbusch, spacious and contemplative. Keilberth, by contrast, is urgent and passionate, and the thrust of the performance makes the result intensely exciting, inspiring the great Wagnerian singers in the cast to give of their finest. Hans Hotter's interpretation of the role of Wotan is well known from a number of versions; but here he not only sings with urgency, his voice is in wonderfully fresh condition, perfectly focused. Wotan's Farewell has never been more powerfully presented, with his agony over having to punish his favourite daughter conveyed most movingly. Astrid Varnay as Brünnhilde is similarly moving, and so are Gre Brouwenstijn as Sieglinde and the darkly baritonal Ramon Vinay (Toscanini's choice as Otello) singing Siegmund, with Josef Greindl massive of voice as Hunding. The recording, originally made by Decca and now beautifully reprocessed, far outshines in quality the radio recordings of Bayreuth that have appeared on various labels. The separate issues are Das Rheingold (SBT 21390); Die Walküre (SBT 41391); Siegfried (SBT 41392) and Götterdämmerung (SBT 41393).

The Sawallisch version of the Ring makes an excellent recommendation. This is the soundtrack of the Bavarian State Opera production by Nikolaus Lehnhoff, as recorded in 1989 for television. The cast is as fine as any in rival versions of the digital age, the performances gain in dramatic momentum and expressive spontaneity from being recorded live, and – rather surprisingly – the sound is outstandingly rich, warm and spaciously atmospheric, in many ways outshining rival digital recordings. Sawallisch conducts with a thrust and energy not always present in his studio recordings, with speeds often faster than have become common. As to the casting, Robert Hale proves a noble Wotan, virile and strong. The voice may not be beautiful, but the range of expression is great, so that in Walküre the final moment of his kissing Brünnhilde's godhead away could hardly be more tender.

Karajan's DG recording originally followed close on the heels of Solti's for Decca, providing a good alternative studio version which equally stands the test of time, even if Siegfried has its disappointments. The manner is smoother, the speeds generally broader, yet the tension and concentration of the performances are maintained more consistently than in most modern studio recordings. Casting is not quite consistent between the operas, with Régine Crespin as Brünnhilde in Walküre, but Helga Dernesch at her very peak in the last two operas. The casting of Siegfried is changed between Siegfried and Götterdämmerung, from Jess Thomas to Helge Brilioth, just as strong but sweeter of tone.

Haitink recorded the Ring cycle in the years when he was emerging as an inspired Wagner conductor. Strong and purposeful, he takes a thoughtful view which in each music-drama nevertheless builds up unerringly in tension and power, with the beauty of Wagner's orchestration consistently brought out. The recordings are warm and full, if not as sharply defined as they might be, and the principal snags lie with some of the casting, notably with Eva Marton as Brünnhilde, too often gusty and ill-focused. Theo Adam too is a disappointing Alberich, dramatically intense, but unable any longer to sustain a steady line. James Morris as Wotan is here more sympathetic than in the Levine set, dating from the same period, but he yields to other singers in the role. For the rest a strong and compelling issue, one of the better studio recordings in digital sound.

In its digital transfer, the boxiness of the studio sound and the closeness of the voices still take away some of the unique Furtwängler glow in the Ring cycle, but the sound is acceptable and benefits in some ways from extra clarity.

The Boulez Ring is discussed above; this Philips set is identical with the DVD soundtrack. It comes with a synopsis, but the cues are listed separately, which makes it very difficult to combine the narrative with what one hears.

'The Best of The Ring', excerpts from: Das Rheingold; Die Walküre; Siegfried; Götterdämmerung

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 454 020-2 (2) (from (1967) Bayreuth Festival recordings; Boehm)

The Ring: 'Great Scenes': Das Rheingold: Prelude & Scene 1; Entry of the Gods into Valhalla; Die Walküre: Winterstürme; Ride of the Valkyries; Wotan's Farewell & Magic Fire Music; Siegfried: Forging Scene; Forest Murmurs; Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Siegfried's Funeral March; Brünnhilde's Immolation Scene

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 933-2 (2). Nilsson, Windgassen, Kotter, Stolz, King, Crespin, VPO, Solti

Although the Solti and Karajan selections have their appeal, as potted 'Rings' go, the Philips Duo is probably the best buy. Taken from Boehm's outstanding complete recording, it can be warmly enjoyed as a summary of Wagner's intentions, with most of the key scenes included. The only snag is that Bernard Jacobson's very brief synopsis of the narrative fails to relate each track to the story.

With 144 minutes of music included on this Decca Double, the excerpts from Solti's Ring are quite extended. Das Rheingold begins with the Prelude and the sequence continues for 24 minutes, the Entry of the Gods into Valhalla opens spectacularly and offers some 10 minutes of music, while the excerpts from Die Walküre include the Sieglinde/Siegmund Winterstürme duet (15 minutes) and the whole of Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music. Götterdämmerung leads with Siegfried's Rhine Journey and closes with the Immolation scene – some 20 minutes for each excerpt, with the tailoring expertly done in between. The only snag is the absence of any narrative cues within the sparse documentation; but the music itself is thrillingly projected.

'The Golden Ring' (BBC documentary film)

🔑 DVD 071 153-9. Produced, narrated and directed by Humphrey Burton. Film Cameraman: Peter Sargent. Decca Recording Team: John Culshaw, Gordon Parry, James Brown, Christopher Raeburn, Jack Law, Eric Smith

The legendary 1965 BBC film (made in Vienna in cooperation with the Austrian Television Service) of the making of Solti's unsurpassed recording of The Ring was filmed during the later stages of recording Götterdämmerung. It has unique documentary value, and for recording buffs it is fascinating to see vivid film of so many famous names, recording engineers and the recording production team, headed by John Culshaw, as well as the operatic stars of the great project, with Solti himself looking astonishingly young. Apart from the documentary interest, this remains one of the most fascinating and entertaining films of its kind ever made, and the audio bonus is the inclusion of famous key scenes from each of the four Ring operas, splendidly reproduced in surround-sound stereo.

Siegfried (complete)

🔑  Decca 455 564-2 (4). Windgassen, Nilsson, Hotter, Stolze, Neidlinger, Böhme, Hoffgen, Sutherland, VPO, Solti

🔑 ✿ * Testament (ADD) SBT4 1392 (4). Windgassen, Kuen, Hotter, Varnay, Neidlinger, Bayreuth Festival O, Keilberth

Ⓜ (*) EMI 3 58715-2 (4). Jerusalem, Marton, Morris, Adam, Haage, Rydl, Rappé, Te Kanawa, Bav. RSO, Haitink

(BB) *() Arte Nova 74321 72116-2 (4). Woodrow, Wachutka, Uusitalo, Harper, Singers of the Montegral Academy, Tyrol Fest. O, Kuhn

Ⓜ  DG 457 790-2 (4). Dernesch, Dominguez, J. Thomas, Stolze, Stewart, Kelemen, BPO, Karajan

Siegfried has too long been thought of as the grimmest of the Ring cycle, but a performance as buoyant as Solti's reveals that, more than in most Wagner, the message is one of optimism. Each of the three acts ends with a scene of triumphant joy. Solti's array of singers could hardly be bettered. Windgassen is at the very peak of his form, lyrical as well as heroic. Hotter has never been more impressive on record, his Wotan at last captured adequately. Stolze, Neidlinger and Böhme are all exemplary, and predictably Joan Sutherland makes the most seductive of Woodbirds. With singing finer than any opera house could normally provide, with masterly playing from the Vienna Philharmonic and with Decca's most vivid recording, this is still unsurpassed.

Fine as the recording of the 1955 Walküre is in the Testament processing, the Siegfried of that year is even more impressive, with even greater weight in the orchestral sound, with the brass and timpani astonishingly vivid. In this section of the Ring cycle, that is particularly important, when Wagner relies more than ever on darkened orchestration. The voices are vividly caught too, with a wonderful sense of presence, and Wolfgang Windgassen as Siegfried (also the Siegfried of the Solti cycle) is in gloriously fresh voice, superbly contrasted with the mean-sounding but comparably well-focused tenor of Paul Kuen as Mime. Gustav Neidlinger too is clear and incisive as Alberich, with Josef Greindl darkly majestic as Fafner. The duetting of Varnay and Windgassen as Siegfried and Brünnhilde then makes a thrillingly passionate conclusion in Keilberth's thrustful reading.

In Siegfried Haitink has the considerable advantage of Siegfried Jerusalem in the title-role. He sings the part with a beauty and clarity of focus that allow the lyrical strength as well as the detailed meaning of Wagner's words to come over. James Morris as the Wanderer is also sweet on the ear, but Eva Marton fails to sing steadily as Brünnhilde, and the weighty Theo Adam also makes an unsteady Alberich while still conveying much of the dramatic bite. But Haitink, whose speeds are generally on the brisk side, conveys the feeling of a live dramatic performance. The EMI digital recording has atmosphere and a keen sense of presence, but it is not as firmly focused as the pioneering Solti set on Decca. The reissue is provided with a keyed synopsis.

The super-budget issue from Arte Nova comes over well, with each act leading to a thrilling conclusion. Gustav Kuhn directs a clean-cut, well-structured performance, set in a relatively dry acoustic, with ample orchestral detail caught. The result may not be as weighty as usual, but is certainly compelling, with Alan Woodrow an outstanding, energetic Siegfried, fresh and clear, unstrained, characterizing vividly. By contrast, though Juha Uusitalo sings well as the Wanderer (Wotan), similarly firm and clear, he is not commanding as a character. Thomas Harper is an incisive Mime, and Elisabeth-Maria Wachutka is fresh and bright as Brünnhilde in Act III. If at first she seems rather lightweight, her clarity of attack is ample compensation with the closing duet rising a fine, warm climax. The booklet provides notes and synopsis, and the full libretto is in German only. But this remains a welcome bargain.

When Siegfried is outsung by Mime, it is time to complain, and though Karajan's DG set has many fine qualities – not least the Brünnhilde of Helga Dernesch – it hardly rivals the Solti or Boehm versions. Windgassen on Decca gave a classic performance, and any comparison highlights the serious shortcomings of Jess Thomas. Even when voices are balanced forward, the digital transfer helps little to make Thomas's singing as Siegfried any more acceptable. Otherwise, the vocal cast is strong, and Karajan provides the seamless playing which characterizes his cycle. Recommended only to those irrevocably committed to the Karajan cycle, even though the current remastering is very successful.

Siegfried (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 3045 (4). Remedios, Hunter, Bailey, Dempsey, Hammond-Stroud, Grant, Collins, London, Sadler's Wells Op. O, Goodall

Goodall's spacious direction here conveys the genuine dramatic crunch that gives the experience of hearing Wagner in the opera house its unique power, its overwhelming force; this is unmistakably a great interpretation caught on the wing. Remedios, more than any rival on record, conveys not only heroic strength but clear-ringing youthfulness, caressing the ear as well as exciting it. Norman Bailey makes a magnificently noble Wanderer, steady of tone, and Gregory Dempsey is a characterful Mime, even if his deliberate whining tone is not well caught on record. The sound is superbly realistic, even making no allowances for the conditions. Lovers of opera in English should grasp the opportunity of hearing this unique set.

Love duets: Siegfried, Act III, Scene 3; Tristan, Act II, Scene 2

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 57004-2. Voigt, Domingo, ROHCG O, Pappano

Before Tristan was ever staged, Wagner prepared this concert version of the love duet, but it was never performed. What is fascinating is that instead of the duet being cut off unceremoniously on the arrival of King Mark, the music merges seamlessly into the closing pages of the whole opera, the final minutes of the Liebestod, but with a part for Tristan included too. As performed by Plácido Domingo as Tristan and Deborah Voigt as Isolde, with Pappano an exceptionally warm Wagnerian, the result is sensuously beautiful, radiantly played and recorded. The closing scene from Siegfried too, with Voigt and Domingo strong and full-toned, makes one long to hear Pappano in complete Wagner performances.

Tannhäuser (complete; Dresden DVD version plus Paris Bacchanale)

Ⓝ  DG DVD 073 4446 (2). Wenkoff, G. Jones, Weikl, Sotin, Bayreuth Fest Ch. & O, Colin Davis (Stage Director: Götz Friedrich; V/D: Thomas Oloffson)

This 1978 Tannhäuser was the first time a production had been filmed complete at Bayreuth and, considering that, the visual balance and the sound are remarkably impressive. Obviously the artists were aware that history was being made, and the concentration and tension of the performance is unmistakeable. The sets are not opulent but are faithful to the composer's intentions and Sir Colin Davis's conducting is full of inspiration and vitality. The star performance is Gwyneth Jones's gloriously sung Elisabeth and Venus, but Spas Wenkoff is strong in the title role and Bernd Weikl is a superb Wolfram. The production offers the original Dresden version plus the Paris Bacchanale handled with effective eroticism. All-in-all a remarkable achievement.

There is also, on Arthaus (101351), a much more modern production from Baden-Baden, with fine singing but the producer, Nikolaus Lehnhoff, seems determined to overlay his essentially bare production with eccentric detail, including the featuring of a microphone for the Song contest!

Tannhäuser (Paris version; complete)

🔑 * DG 427 625-2 (3). Domingo, Studer, Baltsa, Salminen, Schmidt, Ch. & Philh. O, Sinopoli

Plácido Domingo as Tannhäuser for Sinopoli brings balm to the ears, producing sounds of much power as well as beauty. Sinopoli here makes one of his most passionately committed opera recordings, warmer and more flexible than Solti's Decca version, always individual, with fine detail brought out, always persuasively and never wilful. Agnes Baltsa is not ideally opulent of tone as Venus, but she is the complete seductress. Cheryl Studer – who sang the role of Elisabeth for Sinopoli at Bayreuth – gives a most sensitive performance, not always ideally even of tone but creating a movingly intense portrait of the heroine, vulnerable and very feminine. Matti Salminen in one of his last recordings makes a superb Landgrave and Andreas Schmidt a noble Wolfram, even though the legato could be smoother in O Star of Eve.

Tannhäuser (highlights)

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 61738-2. Kollo, Te Kanawa, Hagegård, Meier, Amb. S., Philh. O, Janowski

After a very fine account of the Overture (wonderful cascades from the Philharmonia violins at the close), Warner provide an enjoyable hour-long selection with the Ambrosian Singers, very well recorded, contributing impressively in the March scene and Pilgrims' Chorus. Kiri Te Kanawa's warm portrayal of Elisabeth is a little soft-centred, and René Kollo's Tannhäuser is also a romantic view. Wolfram's O du mein holder Abendstern ('O Star of Eve') is sung simply and affectingly by Håkan Hagegård. Throughout, the experienced Wagnerian, Marek Janowski, directs without too much pressure, but the closing scene comes off dramatically. The recording is vividly natural and well balanced and texts and a translation are included.

Tristan und Isolde (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ * DG DVD 073 4439 (2) Jerusalem, Meier, Hölle, Struckmann, Bayreuth Fest. Ch. & O, Barenboim

🔑 * DG DVD 0073 4321. Kollo, Meier, Salminen, Schwarz, Becht, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim PO (Dir: Ponnelle, V/D: Ott)

🔑  DG DVD 073 044-9. Heppner, Eaglen, Pape, Ketelsen, Dalayman, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (Producer: Dieter Dorn, Design: Jürgen Rosel, V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Hardy DVD (ADD) HCD4009 (2). Nilsson, Vickers, Hesse, Rundgren, Berry, New Philh. Ch., O Nat. de l'ORTF, Boehm

Barenboim's DVD is not of a live performance but made over a seven-day period, without an audience, in 1995. The result is very successful indeed, having the best of both worlds and offering an inherent spontaneity. The production is plain, the performance not voluptuous either, but with a splendid partnership of Siegfried Jerusalem at his finest and the rich-voiced Waltraud Meier, also at her freshest, and the casting topped by Matthias Hölle's resonant bass as King Mark. Barenboim is in his element and the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra provide a richly intense backing.

Recorded at the Bayreuth Festival in 1982, Daniel Barenboim's DVD, with evocatively beautiful sets by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, presents an essentially poetic vision of Tristan. Casting is consistently strong, with René Kollo, one of the more mellifluous Heldentenoren of his generation, opposite the powerful Isolde of Johanna Meier. Matti Salminen is a superb, imposing King Mark and Hermann Becht a heroic Kurwenal, with Hanna Schwarz also strongly cast as Brangaene. The video production is very well managed, using six cameras imaginatively, often in close-up, bringing out the beauty of the sets. Act I on board ship has a great awning over the whole stage, which is lifted right at the end to reveal the crew in the final ensemble of the act. Act II is set under a great oak tree with stylized leaves filling the scene, and with dawn gradually breaking to reveal more detail. Act III is also set under a tree, this time a blasted oak. Meier rises superbly to the challenge of the final Liebestod, rounding off an impressive performance.

Dieter Dorn's production for the Met. in New York, here filmed in 1999, uses stylized and geometric sets by Jürgen Rosel, each with decking for base and each with powerful diagonals. The lighting adds greatly to the atmospheric power of the production, with silhouettes used throughout. When both Ben Heppner as Tristan and Jane Eaglen as Isolde are bulkily unromantic figures, Dorn cleverly uses the lighting to minimize any problem, regularly creating striking stage pictures for their dueting. What matters is that both are vocally at their peak, singing like angels, totally unstrained and finely focused. The young René Pape as King Mark is formidably impressive too, with Katarina Dalayman a superb Brangäne, while Hans-Joachim Ketelsen is a powerful if at times less well-focused Kurvenal. James Levine brings out the power and concentration of this epic, drawing brilliant playing from the Met. Orchestra.

The DVD on the Hardy label offers a live recording made at the Orange Festival in France in July 1973, with the title-roles taken by the unchallenged leaders among Wagner singers of the day, Birgit Nilsson and Jon Vickers, with Karl Boehm conducting. That line-up alone makes this well worth investigating, and Nikolaus Lehnhoff's simple, stylized staging in the great amphitheatre at Orange is undistractingly effective. Nilsson and Vickers may not be the greatest actors, statuesque rather than dynamic, but their vocal command is irresistible, with not a hint of strain from either of them. Among the others Ruth Hesse is an uneven Brangäne, but both Walter Berry as Kurwenal and Bengt Rundgren as King Mark are superb, as commanding as Nilsson and Vickers. The chorus is the visiting New Philharmonia of London but, thanks to the staging, they are never visible. The big disappointment is that the video sound is so limited and thin, not nearly as full as one might have expected of a 1973 recording. The presentation, mostly in Italian, is also limited, with a simple leaflet giving an outline background to the opera and a simple synopsis.

Tristan und Isolde (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 3 52423-2 (3). Stemme, Domingo, Fujimora, Pape, Bär, ROHCG Ch. & O, Pappano

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 7 69319-2 (4). Vickers, Dernesch, Ludwig, Berry, Ridderbusch, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO, Karajan

 Teldec 4509 94568-2 (4). Meier, Jerusalem, Lipovšek, Salminen, Struckmann, Berlin State Op. Ch., BPO, Barenboim

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 772-2 (3). Windgassen, Nilsson, Ludwig, Talvela, Waechter, Bayreuth Festival (1966) Ch. & O, Boehm

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 814-2 (4). Uhl, Nilsson, Resnik, van Mill, Krause, VPO, Solti

Ⓜ (*) Ph. 475 7020 (4). Hofmann, Behrens, Minton, Weikl, Sotin, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Bernstein

Ⓜ  EMI mono 5 67621-2 (4). Flagstad, Suthaus, Fischer-Dieskau, Thebom, Philh., Furtwängler

🔑 (BB) () EMI mono 5 85873-2 (4). Flagstad, Suthaus, Thebom, Greindl, Fischer-Dieskau, Phil., Furtwängler

(BB) ((*)) Naxos 8.110321 (4) Flagstad, Suthaus, Thebom, Greindl, Fischer-Dieskau, Phil., Furtwängler

Ⓜ (*) DG 477 5355 (3). Kollo, M. Price, Fassbaender, Fischer-Dieskau, Moll, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State O, Carlos Kleiber

When Plácido Domingo suggested to EMI that as a culmination to his unique career he would like to record Tristan und Isolde, the record company boldly took up the challenge and with luxury casting produced what is instantly recognizable as a classic recording, worthy successor to the great Furtwängler version of 1952 with Flagstad as Isolde. The glory of the set is not only the radiant singing of Domingo, still in glorious, full-throated voice in his sixties, but the warmly understanding conducting of Antonio Pappano with the Covent Garden Orchestra, more volatile than that of Furtwängler but just as concentrated. Domingo, at once heroic and lyrical, not only offers the most beautiful assumption on disc since Windgassen for Boehm at Bayreuth in 1966, but he sings with a passion beyond that of most Heldentenors, and he is matched by the tenderly girlish Isolde of Nina Stemme. Hers may not be a big, noble soprano like those of Flagstad or Birgit Nilsson, and in Act II she comes to sound a little stressed, but with fine projection and subtle shading her portrait is the more passionate and more feminine. Mihoko Fujimora as Brangäne is clear and tender too – her warnings in the love duet creep exquisitely on the ear – and René Pape as King Mark is unmatched by any contemporary. Olaf Bär with his lieder-like command of detail is a fine Kurwenal, with such stars as Ian Bostridge as the Shepherd and Rolando Villazon as the Young Sailor filling smaller parts. The set includes as a bonus an audio DVD of the complete performance in surround sound, with an on-screen libretto in German, English and French.

Karajan's is a sensual performance of Wagner's masterpiece, caressingly beautiful and with superbly refined playing from the Berlin Philharmonic. Dernesch as Isolde is seductively feminine, not as noble as Flagstad, not as tough and unflinching as Nilsson; but the human quality makes this account if anything more moving still, helped by glorious tone-colour through every range. Jon Vickers matches her in what is arguably his finest performance on record, allowing himself true pianissimo shading. The rest of the cast is excellent too. The recording has been remastered again for the present reissue and the 1972 sound has plenty of body, making this an excellent first choice, with inspired conducting and the most satisfactory cast of all. The set has also been attractively repackaged.

Barenboim's cast is an exceptionally strong one, with Waltraud Meier as Isolde graduating from mezzo soprano to full soprano, breasting the top Cs easily, showing no sign of strain, and bringing a weight and intensity to the role that reflect her earlier experience. The vibrato sometimes grows obtrusive, and even in the final Liebestod there is a touch of rawness under pressure; but the feeling for line is masterly, always with words vividly expressed. Siegfried Jerusalem, with a more beautiful voice than most latterday Heldentenoren, makes a predictably fine Tristan, not quite as smooth of tone as he once was and conveying the poignancy of the hero's plight in Act III rather than his suffering. Marjana Lipovšek is among the most characterful of Brangänes, strong and vehement, while Matti Salminen is a resonant, moving King Mark. Only the gritty tones of Falk Struckmann as Kurwenal fall short. With weighty, full-ranging and well-balanced sound, this is a possible recommendation for a modern digital set. Highlights are also available (76 minutes) on a budget Apex CD (2564 61505-2).

Boehm's Bayreuth performance offers one great benefit in presenting this without any breaks at all, with each act uninterrupted. Boehm is on the urgent side in this opera and the orchestral ensemble is not always immaculate; but the performance glows with intensity from beginning to end, carried through in the longest spans. Birgit Nilsson sings the Liebestod at the end of the long evening as though she was starting out afresh, radiant and with not a hint of tiredness, rising to an orgasmic climax and bringing a heavenly pianissimo on the final rising octave to F sharp. Opposite Nilsson is Wolfgang Windgassen, the most mellifluous of Heldentenoren; though the microphone balance sometimes puts him at a disadvantage to his Isolde, the realism and sense of presence of the whole set bathes you in the authentic atmosphere of Bayreuth. Making up an almost unmatchable cast are Christa Ludwig as Brangaene, Eberhard Waechter as Kurwenal, and Martti Talvela as King Mark, with the young Peter Schreier as the Young Sailor.

Solti's performance is less flexible and sensuous than Karajan's, but he shows himself ready to relax in Wagner's more expansive periods. On the other hand the end of Act I and the opening of the love duet have a knife-edged dramatic tension. Nilsson is masterly in her conviction and she never attacks below the note, so that at the end of the love duet the impossibly difficult top Cs come out and hit the listener crisply and cleanly, dead on the note; and the Liebestod is all the more moving for clean attack at the climax. Fritz Uhl is a sensitive Heldentenor, rather lightweight, but his long solo passages in Act III are superb. The Kurwenal of Tom Krause and the King Mark of Arnold van Mill are both excellent, and it is only Regina Resnik as Brangäne who gives any disappointment. The production has the usual Decca/Culshaw imaginative touch, and the recording matches brilliance and clarity with satisfying coordination and richness.

The surprise is that Bernstein, over-emotional in some music, here excercises restraint to produce one of the most spacious readings ever put on disc, more expansive even than Furtwängler's. His rhythmic sharpness goes with warmly expressive but unexaggerated phrasing, to give unflagging concentration and deep commitment. The love duet has rarely if ever sounded so sensuous, with supremely powerful climaxes. Behrens makes a fine Isolde, less purely beautiful than her finest rivals, but with reserves of power giving dramatic bite. The contrast of tone with Yvonne Minton's Brangäne (good, except for flatness in the warning solo) is not as great as usual, and there is likeness too between Peter Hofmann's Tristan, often baritonal, and Bernd Weikl's Kurwenal, lighter than usual. The King Mark of Hans Sotin is superb.

Wilhelm Furtwängler's concept is spacious from the opening Prelude onwards, but equally the bite and colour of the drama are vividly conveyed, matching the nobility of Flagstad's portrait of Isolde. The richly commanding power of her singing and her always distinctive timbre make it a uniquely compelling performance. Suthaus is not of the same calibre as Heldentenor, but he avoids ugliness and strain. Among the others, the only remarkable performance comes from the young Fischer-Dieskau as Kurwenal, not ideally cast but keenly imaginative. One endearing oddity is that – on Flagstad's insistence – the top Cs at the opening of the love duet were sung by Elisabeth Schwarzkopf. The Kingsway Hall recording was admirably balanced, catching the beauty of the Philharmonia Orchestra at its peak. It stands among Fürtwangler's finest memorials, still unsurpassed by later versions in its spacious concentration and intensity.

To forestall the imminent transfer of the same recording by Naxos, an alternative super-budget version was issued, minus libretto but with a very detailed synopsis linked to copious index points on the discs. The mono sound is amazingly full and immediate, transferred from the original tapes with more presence than the Naxos version and with less background noise.

In default of the EMI super-budget version, the Naxos set in the same price-bracket, lovingly transferred from carefully chosen LPs, offers a good alternative, not quite so vivid, also without a libretto and with fewer index points linked to the synopsis.

Kleiber directs a compellingly impulsive reading, crowned by the glorious Isolde of Margaret Price, the most purely beautiful of any complete interpretation on record. Next to more spacious readings, Kleiber's at times sounds excitable, almost hysterical, with fast speeds tending to get faster, for all his hypnotic concentration. But the lyricism of Price's Isolde, feminine and vulnerable, is well contrasted against the heroic Tristan of Kollo, at his finest in Act III. Kurt Moll makes a dark, leonine King Mark, but Fischer-Dieskau is at times gritty as Kurwenal and Brigitte Fassbaender is a clear but rather cold Brangaene.

Die Walküre (complete; DVD version)

(*) Warner DVD 2564 6319-2. Emeling, Secunde, Evans, Tomlinson, Finnie, Hölle, Bayreuth Festival O, Barenboim (V/D: Horant Hohlfeld)

Recorded live at the Met. in New York in April 1989, two years after the DG audio recording with the same personnel, the DVD film offers an even more compelling experience, with James Levine more thrustfully dramatic and drawing more spontaneous-sounding performances from his team. To have the gloriously voiced Jessye Norman as Sieglinde is luxury casting. She is totally secure and consistently intense and so commanding you feel that, far from being afraid, this Sieglinde could eat any of the Valkyries alive, including the Brünnhilde of Hildegard Behrens. John Tomlinson's Wotan, singing magnificently, dominates Barenboim's Die Walküre against a stage as bare as Bayreuth has ever seen. However, colour is provided by the Wälsungs, who are all red-headed, while for contrast Brünnhilde (Ann Evans), also on fine vocal form, and Fricka (Linda Finnie) are in black. Vocally and musically this is strong, but, although the cameras are usually in the right place, visually we shall stick to Levine (see above).

Die Walküre (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 455 559-2 (4). Nilsson, Crespin, Ludwig, King, Hotter, Frick, VPO, Solti

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110058/60 (3). Traubel, Melchior, Schorr, Kipnis, Varnay, Thorborg, Met Op. O, Leinsdorf

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 457 785-2 (4). Crespin, Janowitz, Veasey, Vickers, Stewart, Talvela, BPO, Karajan

Solti sees Act II as the kernel of the work, with the conflict of wills between Wotan and Fricka making for one of Wagner's most deeply searching scenes. That is the more apparent when the greatest of latterday Wotans, Hans

Hotter, takes the role, and Christa Ludwig sings with searing dramatic sense as his wife. Before that, Act I seems a little underplayed. This is partly because of Solti's deliberate lyricism – apt enough when love and spring greetings are in the air – but also (on the debit side) because James King fails both to project the character of Siegmund and to delve into the word-meanings as all the other members of the cast consistently do. As Sieglinde Crespin has never sung more beautifully on record. As for Nilsson's Brünnhilde, it has grown mellower, the emotions are clearer. Newly remastered, the sound is more vivid than ever and the layout is admirable.

Recorded live at the Met. in New York in December 1941, the Naxos historical set offers an electrifying performance, starrily cast, with radio sound giving clear focus to the voices. With Astrid Varnay as Sieglinde making her début at the Met. and Helen Traubel as Brünnhilde also making her début in that role, it was a great occasion, with Lauritz Melchior plainly intent on not being outshone. He is in heroic voice, the master Wagner tenor of his generation, daring to hold on to his cries of 'Walse, Walse' for extraordinary lengths. Varnay is a warm Sieglinde, producing Flagstad-like overtones. Equally, Helen Traubel sings with a rock-like firmness that is all too rare in latter-day Wagner sopranos, clear and incisive, never fluffing a note. Kirsten Thorborg is a magnificent Fricka, and Alexander Kipnis a thrilling Hunding, with his dark, incisive attack. It is sad that next to these, the other great Wagnerian, Friedrich Schorr, as Wotan, reveals a sadly worn voice, strained and dry on top. It may be as well that his Act II monologue is severely cut. Yet the nobility of his portrayal still comes over powerfully, as in his final half-tone phrase, kissing away Brünnhilde's godhead. Leinsdorf draws incandescent playing from the Met. Orchestra in a performance wilder than his RCA studio account but just as compelling.

The great merits of Karajan's version are the refinement of the orchestral playing and the heroic strength of Jon Vickers as Siegmund. With that underlined, one cannot help but note that the vocal shortcomings here are generally more marked, and the total result does not add up to quite so compelling a dramatic experience: one is less involved. Thomas Stewart may have a younger, firmer voice than Hotter, but the character of Wotan emerges only partially; it is not just that he misses some of the word-meaning, but that on occasion – as in the kissing away of Brünnhilde's godhead – he underlines too crudely. Josephine Veasey as Fricka conveys the biting intensity of the part. Gundula Janowitz's Sieglinde has its beautiful moments, but it is not a dynamic performance. Crespin's Brünnhilde is impressive, but nothing like as satisfying as her study of Sieglinde on the Decca set. The DG recording is very good.

Die Walküre: Act I (complete)

Ⓜ ((*)) Orfeo mono C 019991 Z. Schech, Völker, Dalberg, Bav. State O, Solti

Die Walküre: Act I (complete); Act II, Scenes 3 & 5

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 45832-2. Lehmann, Melchior, List, VPO, Walter

(i) Die Walküre: Act I (complete). Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Funeral March

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 466 678-2. VPO, Knappertsbusch; (i) with Svanholm, Flagstad, van Mill

Though in the days of 78s the music had to be recorded in short takes of under five minutes, one is consistently gripped by the continuity and sustained lines of Walter's reading, and by the intensity and beauty of the playing of the Vienna Philharmonic. Lotte Lehmann's portrait of Sieglinde, arguably her finest role, has a depth and beauty never surpassed since, and Lauritz Melchior's heroic Siegmunde brings singing of a scale and variety – not to mention beauty – that no Heldentenor today begins to match. Emanuel List as Hunding is satisfactory enough, but his achievement at least has been surpassed.

All Solti devotees (and other Wagnerians) should hear his historic recording, made live at the Prinzregentem Theatre in Munich in 1947, when the young maestro was new to the post of principal conductor in Munich. Though at that time he had had remarkably little experience of conducting opera, this is already an electrifying example of his work as a Wagner conductor, culminating in a thrilling close to the act. The passionate build-up includes a cry of delight from Marianne Schech as Sieglinde when Siegmund retrieves the sword. The sound is close and unatmospheric, with stage noises obtrusive at times, but there is plenty of solid detail. Though the closeness does not help the singers, Schech is an impressive, vibrant Sieglinde, firmer than she later became, and Franz Völker as a veteran of the Vienna State Opera is a clear, heroic Siegmund, if strained at times at the top. Friedrich Dalberg makes an aptly sinister Hunding.

It was Kirsten Flagstad's wish that she should be able to record Sieglinde in Act I of Walküre, and she also wanted to work with the great Wagner conductor, Hans Knappertsbusch. If Flagstad is a bit too matronly for the role, it hardly matters, for there is an electric tension in this performance which makes it compellingly moving. The 1958 recording, though a bit tubby, is amazingly detailed, rich and full, and allows the inimitable Vienna glow to come through. With Siegfried's funeral march thrown in too, this Australian CD is well worth seeking out.

The Valkyrie (Die Walküre) (complete; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3038 (4). Hunter, Remedios, Curphey, Bailey, Grant, Howard, ENO Ch. & O, Goodall

Recorded by EMI at the London Coliseum in 1975 and now reissued by Chandos the glory of the ENO performance lies not just in Goodall's spacious direction but in the magnificent Wotan of Norman Bailey, noble in the broadest span but very human in his illumination of detail. Rita Hunter sings nobly too, and though she is not as commanding as Nilsson in the Solti cycle she is often more lyrically tender. Alberto Remedios as Siegmund is more taxed than he was as Siegfried in the later opera (lower tessituras are not quite so comfortable for him) but his sweetly ringing top register is superb. If others, such as Ann Howard as Fricka, are not always treated kindly by the microphone, the total dramatic compulsion is irresistible.

VOCAL COLLECTIONS

Arias from: Der fliegende Holländer; Lohengrin; Tannhäuser; Tristan und Isolde; Die Walküre: Act III, Scene iii

Ⓜ  EMI mono/stereo 5 09702-2. Nilsson, Hotter, Philh. O, Ludwig

An incredibly generous compilation of classic recordings from 1957, lasting a shade over 82 minutes. In the longest excerpt here, Die Walküre, the singing is outstanding and Brünnhilde's range of emotional expression is most impressively conveyed by Birgit Nilsson. Hans Hotter's Wotan is equally fine. Nilsson is no less impressive in The Flying Dutchman excerpts, where her tonal beauty is again matched by Hotter's. There is a pleasing lack of wobble, and real penetration into the depth of the music and character. Both singers are moving in the quieter moments and Nilsson shows that she is able to ride the orchestra in the climaxes without her voice deteriorating into the unmusical noises we sometimes hear in Wagner. The Liebestod from Tristan is beautifully and atmospherically done and the Tannhäuser excerpt is memorable too. Excellently balanced, warm stereo sound (except for one of the Flying Dutchmen excerpts, which is mono) and well conducted.

Der fliegende Holländer: Overture; Die Frist ist um; Die Meistersinger: Wahn! Wahn!; Fliedermonolog. Parsifal: Amfortas's Monologues; Tannhäuser: O du mein holder Abendstern; Die Walküre: Wotan's Farewell

 DG 471 348-2. Terfel, BPO, Abbado

The challenge of Wagner plainly suits Bryn Terfel to perfection both musically and dramatically, the impression of fully formed characterizations is irresistible. Abbado and the orchestra are plainly inspired by their soloist to give incandescent performances, full and intense. The Flying Dutchman Overture and the Dutchman's monologue were recorded live, and arguably the latter is on the slow side, but the illumination of words is as revelatory here as elsewhere on the disc. All of the items are vividly realized, notably the two Hans Sachs monologues from Meistersinger and the wonderfully expressive portrait of Wotan in the Walküre monologue. This final item brings the most daring half-tone phrases from Terfel as he kisses Brünnhilde's godhead away, the culminating moment of the whole opera, here with the agony intensified by the intimacy of expression. The sound is among the richest from this source, with brass gloriously full and rich.

Götterdämmerung: (i) Prelude: Dawn; Love Duet; Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Siegfried's Monologue & Funeral March; Siegfried: (ii) Forging Scene; Forest Murmurs; (iii) Closing Scene with Woodbird

🔑 * EMI 5 57242-2. Domingo, ROHCGO, Pappano; (i) with Urmana; (ii) Cangelosi; (iii) Dessay

Here Domingo amplifies his portrait of Siegfried in powerfully heroic singing in these substantial sections of Siegfried and Götterdämmerung. It is astonishing that a tenor now 60 should retain a voice at once so full and sharply focused. As on the earlier disc, Pappano proves a sympathetic partner, drawing from the orchestra playing at once rich and powerful, helped by the warm acoustic of the Colosseum, Watford. Urmana as Brünnhilde and David Cangelosi as Mime make excellent foils for the hero, though Natalie Dessay is less well cast as the Woodbird, not as fresh and bright as one really wants.

Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Rhine Journey & Immolation Scene; Tristan und Isolde: Prelude & Liebestod

(*()) Testament mono SBT 1510. Flagstad, Philh. O, Furtwängler – RICHARD STRAUSS: Four Last Songs (*())

The urgency and the purity of Flagstad's singing in these live recordings, made at the Royal Albert Hall in May 1950, bear witness to her extraordinary qualities, defying age – as indeed Wilhelm Furtwängler does in his radiant conducting of the then new Philharmonia Orchestra, already an outstanding band. The sound is poor, with a scrunching background, but the warmth and intensity of a great occasion are consistently apparent, making this an important offering along with the world première of Strauss's Four Last Songs.

WAGNER, Siegfried (1869–1930)

Die Heilige Linde (opera; complete)

 CPO 999 844-2 (2). Wegner, Schellenberger, Lukic, George, Scharnke, Kruzel, Horn, Heidbüchel, Halmai, West German RSO, Cologne Ch. & O, Albert

Die Heilige Linde ('The Holy Linden Tree') is the fourteenth of Siegfried Wagner's 16 operas, with a substantial Prelude generally counted one of his finest works. The easy tunefulness of the very opening instantly establishes that the musical idiom preferred by the son is more straightforwardly diatonic, not nearly so radical as the chromatic style his father developed, with a concern for German folksong. That is apt for this involved tale from the third century AD, telling of Arbogast, king of a German tribe, his wife Hildegard, and Fritigern, son of the king of a neighbouring tribe. The villain is Philo, described as a soldier instigator, in fee to the Roman Emperor, intent on getting Arbogast to forge an alliance with Rome. It makes agreeable listening, but the ends of the first two acts bring no sense of drama, and the end of the whole opera, when Arbogast has been killed in battle, is effective as a warmly patriotic ensemble rather than as a dramatic resolution.

Recorded in Cologne in collaboration with West German Radio, this CPO recording offers a warmly idiomatic performance under Werner Andreas Albert, very well sung. The booklet contains a complete libretto and translation, with various essays and background material, but no synopsis of the difficult plot.

Der Kobold (The Goblin)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 2 220003/04 (2). Broberg, Mauel, Hoffmann, Mitschke, PPP Music Th. Ens., Munich, Nuremberg SO, Frank Strobel (Stage Dir: Peter P. Pachl)

Sponsored by Bavarian Radio and recorded in the Stadttheater Furth, this account of Siegfried Wagner's favourite among his own operas gives a good idea musically of the merits of this fairy-tale opera. In idiom Siegfried's music is far closer to that of his teacher, Humperdinck, than to that of his father, though in Wagner fashion he favoured writing a work on a massive scale, too long for the subject matter, on his own libretto. Der Kobold, the goblin of the title, is a heavily symbolic figure, while the travelling actor, Friedrich is the symbol of Eros, which makes it even harder to fathom the plot in this updated production. The central character is the heroine, Verena, who receives a magic stone from Ekhart at the start, and becomes the symbol of good. In the tragic conclusion she saves the life of Friedrich, but at the cost of being stabbed herself. Visually, the production involves a hospital bed, which adds still more confusion, though happily the attractions of the music itself compensate with folk overtones based on some good tunes and dance rhythms.

Under Frank Strobel the performance is strongly presented, and most of the singing is good if not outstanding, notably the Verena of Rebecca Broberg, Friedrich sung by Volker Horn and Ekhart sung by Andreas Mitschke. Good television sound.

Rainulf and Adelasia

 CPO 777 017-2 (3). von Aken, Wachutka, Minutillo, Trekel, Stuttgart Ch., Rheinland-Pfalz State PO, Albert

Written between 1920 and 1922, when the German economy collapsed, and based on the history of the Normans in Italy, Rainulf and Adelasia reflects the gloom felt by the composer. It also reflects in its story of a strong heroine, Albriria (a mezzo role well taken by Elisabeth Wachutka), the composer's concern over his mother Cosima's perjury in the legal action against her daughter, Isolde. The role of the soprano heroine, Adelasia, is also well sung, and so is the role of the hero, Rainulf. A well-written work that, despite its excessive length, has many attractions.

WALKER, Ernest (1870–1949)

Cello Sonata

 British Music Soc. BMS 423CD. Cole, Talbot – BOWEN; FOULDS: Cello Sonatas ***

Ernest Walker was to centre his whole life and career on Oxford's Balliol College. He organized chamber music concerts at the college and in 1907 wrote a History of Music in England. His compositions were small-scale and his Cello Sonata dates from 1914. It is a profoundly lyrical work, the first movement passionate, followed by a deeply felt but calmer Adagio, marked serioso. The mood lightens in the finale – but not entirely, for it is marked con fuco. It is a personal work and a match for its companions on this disc by Bowen and Foulds, even if the composer's voice is less individual than theirs. It is very well played here by Jo Cole and John Tabot, as if they believe in evey note, as well they might.

WALLACE, William (1860–1940)

Symphonic Poems 1 (The Passing of Beatrice); 3 (Sister Helen); 5 (Sir William Wallace); 6 (Villon)

 Hyp. CDA 66848. BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Like Hamish McCunn, William Wallace was born in Greenock, near Glasgow. The music's Scottish character is immediately obvious at the brooding opening; the main theme, 'Scots wha' hae', emerges only slowly but is celebrated more openly towards the end. Villon, an irreverent medieval poet, was a hero of a different kind, and Wallace's programme draws on the thoughts of his philosophical ballads (which are named in the synopsis) in music that is both reflective and vividly colourful. The very romantic Passing of Beatrice is a sensuous vision of Paradise, lusciously Wagnerian with an unashamedly Tristanesque close, reflecting the heroine's final transformation. The scoring is sensuously rich, yet it retains also the spiritually ethereal quality of the narrative, rather as Wagner does in Parsifal. The final piece here is based on Rossetti. What is so remarkable is not only the quality of the musical material throughout these works, but also the composer's skill and confidence in handling it: they are musically every bit as well crafted as the symphonic poems of Liszt. Clearly the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra enjoy playing them. The result is remarkably satisfying.

WALLACE, William Vincent (1812–65)

Maritana (opera; complete)

(*) Marco 8.223406-7. Cullagh, Lee, Clarke, Caddy, RTE Philh. Ch. & Concert O, O Duinn

Along with Balfe's Bohemian Girl and Benedict's Lily of Killarney, Wallace's Maritana marked a breakthrough in opera in Britain, and it held the stage for over 50 years. This lively recording, with Irish artists celebrating this 19th-century Irish composer, helps to explain the work's attractions, regularly reminding the modern listener of Gilbert and Sullivan. The big difference is that where G & S present a parody of grand opera, with tongue firmly in cheek, Wallace is intensely serious, with the big melodramatic moments quickly becoming unintentionally comic. To compound the similarity with G & S, the story, like that of the Yeomen of the Guard, depends on the heroine, by contract, marrying a man condemned to death who then escapes his punishment. What matters is that there are many more good tunes than that of the still-remembered aria for the heroine, Scenes that are Brightest, and the ensembles in this winning performance are always fresh and lively. The soloists too all have voices which focus cleanly, even if they are not specially distinctive. The recording is bright and forwardly balanced, with words crystal clear. Worth investigating as a period piece.

WALTON, William (1902–83)

'At the Haunted End of the Day' (Television Profile directed by Tony Palmer)

 Decca DVD 074 150-9

Tony Palmer's Italia Prize-winning television profile of William Walton is both direct and evocative, starting with Walton himself nearing 80 and plainly rather frail, musing at the keyboard of the piano in his work room as he composes the solo cello Passacaglia for Rostropovich, one of his very last works. This moment brings several of his wrily humorous obiter dicta with which the film is delightfully dotted. He admits to composing at the piano, but being no pianist, he finds, 'has rather boogered the whole thing oop' (resorting to the Lancashire accent he promptly dropped when as a boy treble he joined the choir of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford).

The story of his career with its extraordinary sequence of lucky breaks, with one protector or helper after another coming along, is then told for the most part chronologically. We see the house where he was born, by Oldham standards relatively grand, and evocative shots follow of Oldham, Oxford and later London and Amalfi in Italy. The impact of Belshazzar's Feast is fully brought out, not least thanks to Simon Rattle's conducting.

Later, Rattle also directs the passages from the First Symphony, which comes into the story not in its proper place in the 1930s, but in a sequence on the loves of Walton's life, when he is safely married to Susana and living comfortably on the isle of Ischia. The film was made within a couple of years of the composer's death in 1983 and has a vein of melancholy running through it, explaining Palmer's title, 'At the Haunted End of the Day', taken from one of the most striking of the arias in the opera Troilus and Cressida. Even so, the impact of the film is anything but depressing, with the effervescent personality of Susana taking over towards the end. A unique career, vividly recreated.

Anniversary Fanfare; Crown Imperial; March for the History of the English-speaking Peoples; Orb and Sceptre; A Queen's Fanfare; (i) Antiphon; 4 Christmas Carols: All this time; King Herod and his cock; Make we now this feast; What cheer?; In honour of the City of London; Jubilate Deo; Where does the uttered music go?

🔑  Chan. 8998. (i) Bach Ch.; Philh. O, Willcocks

Sir David Willcocks conducts performances of the two Coronation Marches full of panache, with the brass superbly articulated and inner detail well caught. Also the March for the History of the English-speaking Peoples. The a cappella choral items are very well done too. With the original organ parts orchestrated, the Jubilate and Antiphon gain greatly from having full instrumental accompaniment. The brief fanfares, never previously recorded, are a welcome makeweight, with the Anniversary Fanfare, designed to lead directly into Orb and Sceptre, which is what it does here.

5 Bagatelles for Guitar & Chamber Orchestra

 Chan. 9963. Ogden, N. Sinf. Hickox – ARNOLD: Guitar Concerto; Serenade; L. BERKELEY: Guitar Concerto ***

It was the bright idea of Patrick Russ to mix together the set of Five Bagatelles for Solo Guitar which Walton wrote for Julian Bream and his very last work, Varii capricci, a brilliant orchestration of those same five pieces. The result is a Guitar Concerto which in many ways – rather surprisingly – transcends those two original sources, creating a work as effective as the fine Guitar Concertos of Sir Malcolm Arnold and Sir Lennox Berkeley. The composite work seems less lightweight than either the solo Bagatelles or Varii capricci, a genuine Concerto rather than a suite of miniatures. Craig Ogden is a brilliant, persuasive advocate, warmly supported by Hickox and the Northern Sinfonia.

(i) Capriccio burlesco; (ii; iii) Violin Concerto; (i) Johannesburg Festival Overture; (iv) Partita; Symphony 2; Variations on a Theme by Hindemith; (iii; v) Belshazzar's Feast

🔑 Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SB2K 89934 (2). (i) NYPO, Kostelanetz; (ii) Francescatti; (iii) Phd. O, Ormandy; (iv) Cleveland O, Szell; (v) with Cassel, Rutgers University Ch.

Sony's celebration for the Walton Centenary in 2002 brings together an outstanding batch of high-powered American performances such as no other British composer has ever received. The three performances with Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra of the Symphony 2, the Hindemith Variations and the Partita are all stunning in every way, not just brilliant and powerful but passionately intense too. Ormandy is a warmly persuasive conductor with the Philadelphia Orchestra in both Belshazzar's Feast (with the Rutgers University Choir and baritone soloist, Walter Cassel) and in the Violin Concerto, with Zino Francescatti the flamboyant soloist. Andre Kostalanetz conducts the New York Philharmonic in comparably brilliant performances both of the Johannesburg Festival Overture and the work he was the first to conduct, the Capriccio burlesco, a comedy overture in all but name.

Capriccio burlesco; The First Shoot (orch. Palmer); Granada (prelude for orchestra); Johannesburg Festival Overture; Music for Children Galop Finale (orch. Palmer); Portsmouth Point Overture; Prologo e fantasia; Scapino

 Chan. 8968. LPO, Thomson

The Capriccio burlesco is ravishingly orchestrated, with some apt echoes of Gershwin, and the Prologo e fantasia completes an American group. The Granada Prelude, written for the television company, taps Walton's patriotic march vein in a jaunty way. The First Shoot comes in Christopher Palmer's brilliant orchestration of the brass band suite. The opening Giocoso is a rerun of Old Sir Faulk, and the other movements bring more echoes of Façade. As for the other novelty, the ten brief movements of Music for Children are here supplemented by a Galop Final. Palmer has here orchestrated the piano score. Though the opulent Chandos recording tends to take some of the bite away from Walton's jazzily accented writing, the richness of the orchestral sound is consistently satisfying.

(i) Capriccio burlesco; (ii) Music for Children; Portsmouth Point Overture; (i) The Quest (ballet suite); Scapino Overture; (ii) Siesta; (i; iii) Sinfonia concertante

🔑  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 224. (i) LSO; (ii) LPO; (iii) with Katin; cond. composer

When Walton made these recordings, he was in his late sixties, and his speeds had grown a degree slower and safer. Portsmouth Point loses some of its fizz at so moderate a speed. By contrast, Scapino suffers hardly at all from the slower speed; rather the opposite, with the opening (if anything) even jauntier and the big cello melody drawn out more expressively. Siesta too brings out the piece's romantically lyrical side, rather than making it a relatively cool intermezzo. The Capriccio burlesco and the ten little pieces of the Music for Children are delightful too, with the subtleties of the instrumentation beautifully brought out. Much the biggest work here is the Sinfonia concertante, and in the outer movements the performance lacks the thrust that Walton himself gave it in his very first, wartime recording, in which Phyllis Sellick was a scintillating soloist. Yet Peter Katin is a very responsive soloist too, and the central slow movement is much warmer and more passionate, with orchestral detail rather clearer. It is good too to have the first stereo recording of the suite from Walton's wartime ballet based on Spenser's 'Faerie Queene', The Quest, only a fraction of the whole but bright and colourful.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Viola Concerto; (iii) Violin Concerto; Scapino; Coronation Marches: Crown Imperial; Orb and Sceptre; Façade Suites 1 & 2; Henry V: Suite; Symphonies 1 & 2; Variations on a Theme of Hindemith; (iv) Coronation Te Deum; Belshazzar's Feast

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 470 508-2 (4). (i) Cohen; (ii) Neubauer; (iii) Little, (iv) Terfel, L'inviti, Wayneflete Singers, Winchester Cathedral Ch.; Bournemouth Ch. & SO, Litton or Hill

Decca's four-disc Walton Edition offers consistently fine versions of all of the composer's most important orchestral works, some of them unsurpassed by rival versions, with Andrew Litton an idiomatic Waltonian with a natural feeling for the jazzy syncopations. This brings together the three Litton discs previously issued by Decca but with important additions. The third of the four discs, never originally issued with the others, contains outstanding versions of the Viola Concerto and Hindemith Variations, plus the two Façade Suites.

Where most latter-day interpreters of the Viola Concerto have taken a very expansive view of the lyrical first movement, Andante comodo, Paul Neubauer comes nearer than anyone to following the example of the original interpreters on disc, Frederick Riddle and William Primrose, in adopting a flowing tempo, encouraged by the composer. It makes Neubauer's and Litton's far more persuasive than other modern versions with no expressive self-indulgence, and with the brisker passages in this movement also taken faster than has become usual. Neubauer's tone is taut and firm to match, clean rather than fruity, with the central Scherzo taken excitingly fast. He then relaxes beautifully for the hauntingly lovely epilogue, ending on a whispered pianissimo. Litton also encourages wide dynamic contrasts, with the big tuttis bringing an element of wildness in brassy syncopations.

The Hindemith Variations also delivers a performance with contrasts heightened, not just of dynamic but of speed, extreme in both directions. This goes with an exceptional transparency in the orchestral textures, well-caught in the recording and bringing out the refinement of Walton's orchestration. Façade, predictably, is a fun performance, although the warm acoustic runs the danger of taking some edge off these witty parodies.

Two of the other discs are the same as before, with Tasmin Little's heartfelt reading of the Violin Concerto very well coupled with Litton's outstanding account of the Second Symphony and Scapino, and Robert Cohen's thoughtful reading of the Cello Concerto in coupling with the First Symphony. Litton's powerful account of Belshazzar's Feast with Bryn Terfel as the most dramatic of baritone soloists, brings fresh, cleanly focused choral sound that, with the help of keenly atmospheric recording, points up more clearly than usual the terracing between the different groupings of voices. This disc also includes the two coronation marches, the Coronation Te Deum and the Henry V Suite, with David Hill, chorus-master in Belshazzar, ably standing in for Litton in Orb and Sceptre and the Te Deum.

Cello Concerto (DVD version)

🔑  EMI DVD 492840-9. Piatigorsky, BBC SO, Sargent – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ; BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 4 **(*)

Walton's Cello Concerto was commissioned by Piatigorsky, who subsequently premièred and recorded it with the Boston Symphony and Charles Munch (see below). This was its British première, at the Royal Albert Hall in February 1957 with Sir Malcolm Sargent conducting the BBC Symphony Orchestra, whose chief conductor he still was. Those who remember hearing the broadcast or who were fortunate enough to have been there will find Piatigorsky's aristocratic account a particularly moving document; and those coming to it without any nostalgic baggage can hardly fail to respond to his blend of virtuosity and restraint. The camerawork is pleasingly restrained and totally free from the intrusive changes of perspective that are inescapable nowadays.

Cello Concerto (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA SACD 82876 66375-2. Piatigorsky, Boston SO, Munch – DVOŘÁK: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  Sony SMK 89712. Ma, LSO, Previn – ELGAR: Cello Concerto ***

(BB)  RCA Navigator (ADD) 74321 29248-2. Piatigorsky, Boston SO, Munch – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Sinfonia Antartica ***

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (ii) Improvisations on an Impromptu of Benjamin Britten; Partita for Orchestra; (i) Passacaglia for Solo Cello

 Chan. 8959. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) LPO, Thomson

On SACD Piatigorsky plays the Cello Concerto with a gripping combination of full-blooded eloquence and subtlety of feeling, readily capturing the bitter-sweet melancholy of its flowing lyrical lines. The closing pages of the final variations are particularly haunting. Munch provides a totally understanding accompaniment, with the strings of the Boston Symphony finding the lyrical ecstasy which is such a distinctive part of this concerto. The 1957 recording is close, but the improvement in sound on the new SACD is astonishing, the cello-tone full and the ambience of the Boston hall adding a warmth and resonance to the orchestra. This is an indispensable performance, and the Dvořák Concerto is also highly attractive. Those preferring other couplings will find the CD transfers also comparably improved, and they can choose between either the Vaughan Williams Sinfonia Antartica on RCA's budget label or, more suitably, the excellent complete collection of Walton's concertante music on the RCA Double below, which includes also Previn's outstanding account of the First Symphony.

Yo-Yo Ma and Previn give a sensuously beautiful performance. With speeds markedly slower than usual in the outer movements, the meditation is intensified to bring a mood of ecstasy, quite distinct from other Walton, with the central Allegro becoming the symphonic kernel of the work, far more than just a Scherzo. In the excellent CBS recording, the soloist is less forward and more faithfully balanced than is common.

With his rich, even tone, Wallfisch is just as warm and purposeful in the solo Passacaglia as in the Concerto, while Thomson relishes the vivid orchestral colours in both the Improvisations, here wider ranging in expression than usual, and the brilliant Partita. Excellent Chandos sound.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii; iii) Viola Concerto; (iv) Violin Concerto; (v) Sinfonia concertante; (iii) Symphony 1

🔑 ✿ (B) * RCA Double mono/stereo 74321 92575-2 (2). (i) Piatigorsky, Boston SO, Munch; (ii) Bashmet; (iii) LSO, Previn; (iv) Heifetz, Philh. O, composer; (v) Stott, RPO, Handley

The RCA two-disc collection includes the première recording of the Cello Concerto with Piatigorsky. Similarly, Heifetz as the virtuoso who commissioned the Violin Concerto remains in his way supreme as an interpreter, urgent beyond any rival, here with the composer conducting the Philharmonia Orchestra. The 1950 mono recording has been opened up to put more air round the sound.

The other two concertante works come in modern digital versions – Kathryn Stott, in a recording made for Conifer, performs the original, more elaborate version of the Sinfonia concertante, and Yuri Bashmet brings his yearningly Slavonic temperament and masterly virtuosity to the Viola Concerto – see under its alternative coupling below.

Bashmet's partners are the ideal combination of Previn and the LSO, and it is Previn's vintage version of the First Symphony with the LSO of an earlier generation that sets the seal on the whole package, a reading that has never been matched, let alone surpassed. What is also remarkable here is the clarity, definition and sense of presence of the 1966 recording, with the stereo spectrum even more sharply focused than in the later digital recordings.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto in B min.

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554325. (i) Hugh; (ii) Kang; E. N. Philh. O, Daniel

In many ways Tim Hugh's reading of the Cello Concerto is the most searching yet. He finds an intense thoughtfulness, a sense of mystery, of inner meditation in the great lyrical ideas of all three movements, daring to play with a more extreme pianissimo than any rival. The bravura writing finds him equally concentrated, always sounding strong and spontaneous in face of any technical challenge. As in their previous Walton recordings, Paul Daniel and the English Northern Philharmonia equally play with flair and sympathy, so that the all-important syncopations always sound idiomatic, even if the strings lack a little in weight. In the Violin Concerto Dong-Suk Kang here follows up the success of his Naxos recording of the Elgar Violin Concerto, playing immaculately with a fresh, clean-cut tone, pure and true above the stave.

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (iii) Façade Suites (excerpts): Old Sir Faulk; Popular Song; Tango-pasodoble; Tarantella Sevillana; (ii) Variations on a Theme on Hindemith; (iv) Coronation Te Deum; (iv; v) The Twelve

() BBC mono/stereo BBCL 4098-2. (i) Fournier, (ii) RPO; (iii) BBC SO; (iv) LPO Ch., LPO, (v) with Dowdall, Minty, Tear, Wakeham; composer

This BBC Legends disc is especially valuable in giving us the composer's recordings of live performances of works which Walton did not otherwise record in the studio, filling in important gaps. It is good too to have a mono recording of Pierre Fournier as soloist in a 1959 Edinburgh Festival performance of the Cello Concerto, a work he did not otherwise record. Though sadly in the opening section he has an uncharacteristic lapse in intonation, it is a fine reading, sensitive and brilliant, shaving over two minutes off the regular timing, making it a much tauter conclusion. The Hindemith Variations, also with the RPO, come from a Festival Hall performance of 1963, antedating George Szell's studio recording. Walton's own reading has a keener sense of fun in scherzando variations, and is a degree more warmly expressive in lyrical passages, even if the ensemble is not quite so polished. The four favourite movements from Façade come from a Prom at the Royal Albert Hall in 1968, and also surprisingly are mono recordings, but show Walton as a supreme master of witty pointing, bringing out the fun of these delectable parodies. The Coronation Te Deum was, of course, written for the Abbey, and is made all the more ripely dramatic with antiphonal brass. Yet best of all is The Twelve, which in its usual form with organ accompaniment can sound bitty, whereas here with massive forces this 'Anthem for the Feast of Any Apostle' to words by Auden relates directly to the major Walton choral works including Belshazzar, weighty and dramatic.

Viola Concerto (original version)

 Hyp. CDA 67587. Power, BBC Scottish SO, Volkov – RUBBRA: Viola Concerto ***

In 1961 Walton revised the Viola Concerto of 1928–9, reducing the triple wind to double wind, two trumpets and added a harp. It is this version that has gained wide currency both on CD and in the concert hall. Lawrence Power has made a name for himself as a distinguished soloist and as a member of the Nash Ensemble and the Leopold Trio. He gives a masterly account of the Concerto which in some ways is fresher and more characterful in its 1929 version.

Viola Concerto

🔑 * ASV CD DCA 1181. Callus, New Zealand SO, Taddei (with YORK BOWEN: Viola Concerto; HOWELLS: Elegy; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS; Suite for Viola ())

 RCA 09026 63292-2. Bashmet, LSO, Previn – BRUCH: Concerto for Violin & Viola; Kol Nidrei; Romance ***

Ⓜ  EMI 2-28525-2. Vengerov, LSO, Rostropovich – BRITTEN: Violin Concerto ***

Helen Callus, British-born but nowadays based in America, gives the most beautiful account of the Walton Viola Concerto on disc. With sumptuous viola tone and flawless intonation, she discovers a hushed beauty in those passages which find mystery in half-tones, as in the link leading to the reprise in the first movement and, above all, in the haunting epilogue, which she takes expansively, with the music fading to nothingness. Add to that the incisiveness of her playing – and that of the orchestra in excellent form – in Walton's characteristically syncopated writing, helped by a recording which allows the fullest dynamic range to be appreciated, with the soloist very well balanced, not too close. The result is an account to match and outshine any that have appeared in many years.

Yuri Bashmet with his opulent viola tone warmly relishes the ripe romanticism of the Walton Concerto as well as the high-voltage electricity of its jazz-based writing. Like other latterday interpreters he opts for a daringly spacious speed for the haunting opening melody, but avoids any hint of sluggishness, relishing the bravura of the contrasting sections. The central Scherzo brings a dazzling display, with the fun of the scherzando passages winningly brought out, as it is too in the finale. Bashmet ends with another daringly slow speed for the wistful epilogue, again superbly sustained, thanks also to the ideal accompaniment of Previn and the LSO. First-rate sound.

Playing the viola for the very first time, Vengerov shows himself the complete master technically, so that the very measured speed for the first movement has a purity and rapt intensity that removes any feeling of self-indulgence. After the dazzling Scherzo, Vengerov, with Rostropovich's encouragement, changes the whole character of the finale with his consistently slow speeds. Its jaunty opening theme on the bassoon is made to sound like a cakewalk from Façade, while the tender recollections of the epilogue are hypnotically dreamlike, with the timing for that movement alone no less than six minutes longer than in early recordings from Riddle and Primrose. Hardly a definitive reading but a magical one that demands to be heard, not just by devotees of the composer.

Viola Concerto; Violin Concerto

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 62813-2. Kennedy, RPO, Previn – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: The Lark Ascending ***

(i) Viola Concerto in A min.; (ii) Violin Concerto in B min.; (iii) Sinfonia concertante

Ⓜ ((*)) Avid mono AMSC 604. (i) Primrose; (ii) Heifetz; Cincinnati SO, Goosens; (iii) Sellick, CBSO, Composer

Kennedy's achievement in giving equally rich and expressive performances of both works makes for an ideal coupling, helped by the unique insight of André Previn as Waltonian. Kennedy on the viola produces tone as rich and firm as on his usual violin. The Scherzo has never been recorded with more panache than here, and the finale brings a magic moment in the return of the main theme from the opening, hushed and intense. In the Violin Concerto too, Kennedy gives a warmly relaxed reading, in which he dashes off the bravura passages with great flair. There are few Walton records as richly rewarding as this, helped by warm, atmospheric sound.

In many ways, Heifetz's pioneering wartime version of the Violin Concerto, recorded in Cincinnati in 1941 at speeds far faster than we are used to now, has never been surpassed – even finer than his later remake with Walton and the Philharmonia, more fiery, with even more flair and spontaneity. This account of the Viola Concerto was the first of two which Primrose recorded, markedly cooler than the première recording on Decca, with the young Frederick Riddle accompanied by Walton and the LSO. The central Scherzo is taken at an astonishingly fast speed, on the verge of sounding breathless. By contrast, the première recording of the Sinfonia concertante with Phyllis Sellick is exceptionally warm and expressive, an interpretation never quite matched since. Despite the rough Avid transfers, such historic performances offered in a coupling on a bargain disc are self-recommending.

(i) Viola Concerto; Johannesburg Festival Overture; Symphony 2

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553402. (i) Tomter; E. N. Philh. O, Daniel

Though Tomter's tight vibrato is at times prominent, he brings out the tender poetry of this most elusive of Walton's string Concertos, with its mixture of melancholy and wit. More than others, Tomter observes pianissimo markings, and rightly he adopts a flowing speed for the first movement while refusing to be rushed in the Scherzo and finale, which with delectable pointing acquire extra scherzando sparkle. The Overture is given the most exuberant performance, rivalling the composer's own, with the orchestra's soloists playing brilliantly. In Symphony 2 Paul Daniel gives extra transparency to the often heavy orchestration, making the work less weighty than usual but just as warmly expressive. A superb bargain.

Violin Concerto

🔑 ✿ * Onyx 4016. Ehnes, Vancouver SO, Tovey – BARBER; KORNGOLD: Violin Concertos *** ✿

Ⓜ  Decca 475 7710 – Bell, Baltmore SO, Zinman – BLOCH: Baal Shem; BARBER: Violin Concerto ***

() Biddulph mono WHL 016. Heifetz, Cincinnati SO, Goossens – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: A London Symphony (2) () (with Concert ())

(BB) () Naxos mono (ADD) 8.110939. Heifetz, Cincinnati SO, Goossens – ELGAR: Violin Concerto ()

(*) Classico CLASSCD 233. Azizjan, Copenhagen PO, Bellincamp – BRITTEN: Violin Concerto *

In this inspired and generous coupling, James Ehnes gives a superb account of the Walton Concerto. He sets his seal on his performance from the magical opening bars onwards, played exquisitely by soloist and orchestra alike, and all the way through the work brings out its full emotional thrust without vulgarity or exaggeration. Unlike most latter-day interpreters, Ehnes has taken note of the example of the work's commissioner and dedicatee, Jascha Heifetz. Where latterly the work has generally spread to well over half an hour, Ehnes takes exactly 30 minutes, and the result again is all the stronger. He is helped by the powerful playing of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra under its music-director, Bramwell Tovey. An outstanding disc in every way.

This prize-winning Decca disc has Bell giving a commanding account of the solo part of Walton's Concerto, even matching Heifetz himself in the ease of his virtuosity, and playing with rapt intensity. Rich and brilliant sound.

Jascha Heifetz made the very first recording in 1941 with Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Orchestra, and it has never quite been matched since for its passionate urgency as well as its brilliance. Speeds are much faster than has latterly become the norm, but the romantic warmth of the work has never been more richly conveyed. On Biddulph in an excellent CD transfer it is coupled with the early recording of the original score of Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, plus other British music.

The alternative Naxos transfer, less bright than RCA's original, is well balanced, making for comfortable listening. The generous Elgar coupling confirms this as in every way a winner.

Sergej Azizjan, the Leningrad-trained concertmaster of the Copenhagen Philharmonic, has a superb technique, marked by flawless intonation and a wide tonal range. His reading of the Walton is passionate in an aptly extrovert way, though the orchestra is a degree recessed, and such passages as the rhythmic opening of the Walton finale lack something in bite.

Coronation March: Orb and Sceptre; (i) Coronation Te Deum; Jubilate Deo; A Litany; Set me as a seal upon thine heart

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 467 613-2. Bournemouth SO, Hill; (i) with Winchester Cathedral Ch., Waynefleet Singers – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Benedicite, etc. **(*)

A swaggering vivacious Orb and Sceptre is marred by a rather over-reverberant acoustic, though the effect is certainly exciting. The choral items are sympathetically sung, and the Coronation Te Deum is gutsy, with the recording surprisingly well managed in the resonance.

Façade (an entertainment; complete)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67239. Bron, Stilgoe, Nash Ens., Lloyd-Jones – LAMBERT: Salome: suite ***

(i) Façade (complete); (ii) Film Music: Henry V; (iii) Orb & Sceptre (Coronation March)

(BB) ((*)) Regis Alto mono ALC 1026. (i) Sitwell, Pears, English Opera Group Ens., Collins; (ii) Olivier, Philh. Ch. & O, composer; (iii) LSO, Sargent

Façade (complete; including Façade 2)

(*) ASV CDDCA 679. Scales, West, L. Mozart Players (members), Glover

(*) Chan. 8869. Walton, Baker, City of L. Sinfonia (members), Hickox

Façade (complete; including Facade 2) & Other Edith Sitwell Poems

 Ara. Z 6699. Redgrave, Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, Shifrin

Regis/Alto have coupled the famous complete Façade (from Decca) with the Henry V music (from EMI) and added a rather straightforward account of the Orb and Sceptre March from Sargent. The transfers are good but not quite as vivid as the originals.

The Hyperion issue provides the printed texts of the poems for which the music is lost, leaving room for the newly discovered Lambert music for Salome as an attractive makeweight. Eleanor Bron and Richard Stilgoe make an excellent pair of reciters, and the recording in a natural acoustic balances them well – not too close – with no discrepancy between voices and instruments. They inflect the words more than Edith Sitwell and early interpreters did, but still keep a stylized manner, meticulously obeying the rhythms specified in the score, with Stilgoe phenomenally fluent, while Bron in slow poems adopts an effective trance-like manner. Under David Lloyd-Jones the brilliant sextet of players from the Nash Ensemble, including John Wallace on trumpet and Richard Hosford on clarinet, could not be more idiomatic, with rhythms delectably pointed.

With Lyn Redgrave an excellent reciter, characterful and sharply rhythmic, the ensemble from Lincoln Center under Joseph Silverstein give a virtuoso performance of the quirky score, both crisply disciplined and idiomatic. Some may feel that Redgrave overdoes the characterizations, but she gets a very acceptable balance between expressive word-pointing and formality, characterizing precisely in different, stylized accents, as in the Noël Coward accent she adopts for the Tango and Popular Song.

Scales and West as a husband-and-wife team are inventive in their shared roles, and generally it works well. Scotch Rhapsody is hilariously done as a duet, with West intervening at appropriate moments, and with sharply precise Scots accents. Regional accents may defy Edith Sitwell's original prescription – and her own example – but here, with one exception, they add an appropriate flavour. The exception is Popular Song, where Prunella Scales's cockney accent is quite alien to the allusive words, with their 'cupolas, gables in the lakes, Georgian stables'. For fill-up the reciters have recorded more Sitwell poems, but unaccompanied.

Susana Walton, widow of the composer, makes a bitingly characterful reciter, matching with her distinctive accent – she was born in Argentina – the exotic character of many numbers. Richard Baker, phenomenally precise and agile in enunciating the Sitwell poems, makes the perfect foil, and Hickox secures colourful and lively playing from members of the City of London Sinfonia, who relish in particular the jazzy inflexions. Façade 2 consists of a number of Sitwell settings beyond the definitive series of twenty-one. All of them are fun and make an apt if not very generous coupling for the regular sequence. Warm sound, a little too reverberant for so intimate a work.

Façade: Suites 1–3; Overture Portsmouth Point (arr. Lambert); Siesta; (i) Sinfonia concertante. WALTON/ARNOLD: Popular Birthday

 Chan. 9148. (i) Parkin; LPO, Latham-Koenig or Thomson

The Sinfonia concertante, with its sharply memorable ideas in each movement and characteristically high voltage, has never had the attention it deserves. Eric Parkin as soloist is perfectly attuned to the idiom, warmly melodic as well as jazzily syncopated, making this a most sympathetic account, even if the Maestoso introduction is hardly grand enough. The recording sets the piano a little more backwardly, no doubt to reflect the idea that this is not a full concerto. Jan Latham-Koenig gives the witty Façade movements just the degree of jazzy freedom they need. The third suite, devised and arranged by Christopher Palmer, draws on three apt movements from the Façade entertainment, ending riotously with the rag-music of Something Lies Beyond the Scene. That is a first recording, and so is Constant Lambert's arrangement for small orchestra of the Overture Portsmouth Point, clearer than the original. Siesta is given an aptly cool performance under Bryden Thomson, and the Popular Birthday is Malcolm Arnold's fragmentary linking of 'Happy birthday to you' with the Popular Song from Façade, originally written for Walton's twentieth birthday.

Façade: Suites 1 & 2

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55099. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones – BLISS: Checkmate ; LAMBERT: Horoscope ✿

Brilliantly witty and humorous performances of the two orchestral suites that Walton himself fashioned from his 'Entertainment'. This is music which, with its outrageous quotations, can make one chuckle out loud. Moreover it offers, to quote Constant Lambert, 'one good tune after another', all scored with wonderful felicity. The playing here could hardly be bettered, and the recording is in the demonstration bracket with its natural presence and bloom. A very real bargain.

FILM SCORES

As You Like It; Hamlet

Ⓜ  Chan. 10436X. Gielgud, Bott, ASMF, Marriner

Walton's score for Hamlet, thanks to the diligence of Christopher Palmer, offers some 40 minutes of music, a rich and colourful suite, superbly played and recorded, and much enhanced by the contribution of Sir John Gielgud in two of Shakespeare's sololiquies, 'O that this too, too solid flesh' and 'To be or not to be'. The selection of music from the pre-war film of As You Like It makes a valuable fill-up. It adds the splendid setting of Under the greenwood tree in a radiant performance by Catherine Bott. Marriner and the Academy draw out all the romantic warmth of both scores, and the sound is richly atmospheric to match.

As You Like It (poem for orchestra); Hamlet (Shakespeare scenario in 9 movements) (both arr. Palmer)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553344. Sheen, Dublin RTE Concert O, Penny

In adaptations of film music for concert performance by the late Christopher Palmer, both Penny and the RTE Concert Orchestra give warm, sympathetic performances. Michael Sheen recites the Hamlet soliloquies with the ardour of youth, and the unnamed soprano soloist in the As You Like It song, Under the greenwood tree, sings with fresh, girlish tone. With recording a little recessed, and with thinnish strings, this cannot match the Chandos issue of the same coupling at full-price, but it makes a good bargain.

The Battle of Britain: Suite; Escape Me Never: Suite; The First of the Few: Spitfire Prelude & Fugue; Three Sisters; A Wartime Sketchbook

🔑  Chan. 8870. ASMF, Marriner

The Spitfire Prelude and Fugue, from The First of the Few, was immediately turned into a highly successful concert-piece, but we owe it to Christopher Palmer that there is the 'Wartime Sketchbook', drawing material from three of the wartime films, plus scraps that Colin Matthews did not use in the suite from the much later Battle of Britain film music and not least in the stirring theme from the credits of the film, Went the Day Well. The brief suite from the music for Olivier's film of Chekhov's The Three Sisters, from much later, brings more than one setting of the Tsar's Hymn and a charming imitation of Swan Lake. Earliest on the disc is Escape Me Never, the first of Walton's film scores, written in 1935 in a more popular idiom; but the war-inspired music is what this delightful disc is really about. Marriner and the Academy give richly idiomatic performances, full of panache. Aptly opulent recording.

Henry V: Suite (arr. Mathieson) (i) Scenes from the Film; Richard III: Prelude & Suite; Spitfire Prelude & Fugue

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI stereo/mono 5 65007-2. (i) Olivier (speaker); Philh. O, composer

This reissue includes the 1963 recordings of the Henry V Suite, Richard III Prelude and Suite and the Spitfire Prelude and Fugue. The performances are vital and exciting, and with the sound vivid and full the result is hugely enjoyable. Also included is the complete 1946 Henry V sequence with Laurence Olivier, as recorded on four 78s, and originally issued on LP by RCA with seven minutes of cuts. This is the restored complete version, and it has been excellently transferred, though the mono sound lacks body. The recording has great atmosphere though, with Olivier at his magnificent best, and the orchestra responding with tremendous energy: the sound of the arrows at the climax of the Agincourt sequence has never seemed more chilling. A wonderful CD.

Henry V: A Shakespeare Scenario (arr. Palmer)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10437X. Plummer (nar.), Westminster Cathedral Ch., ASMF, Marriner

Few film scores can match Walton's for the Olivier film of Henry V in its range and imagination, the whole of the 'Scenario' devised by Christopher Palmer lasting just over an hour. The most controversial change is to 'borrow' the first section of the march that Walton wrote much later for a projected television series on Churchill's History of the English-Speaking Peoples; otherwise, the chorus's call to arms, Now all the youth of England is on fire, would have had no music to introduce it. As an appendix, three short pieces are included which Walton quoted in his score. Sir Neville Marriner caps even his previous recordings in this series, with the Academy and Westminster Choir producing heartfelt playing and singing in sumptuous sound. As narrator, Christopher Plummer makes an excellent substitute for Olivier, unselfconsciously adopting a comparably grand style.

Henry V (filmscore)

((*)) Carlton DVD 37115 00193. Olivier, Newton, Banks, Asherson, LSO, Mathieson (Director: Laurence Olivier)

Walton's music for Laurence Olivier's film of Henry V has never been surpassed in the way it adds so vividly both to the dramatic impact and to the atmospheric beauty. The very opening, with a play-bill fluttering to a flute figure and a panoramic view of Elizabethan London to a haunting offstage chorus, sets the pattern even before the drama starts. Although the sound from a mono soundtrack is necessarily limited, it has been beautifully cleaned up for DVD, so that such effects are vividly atmospheric, giving a satisfying sense of space.

Much of Walton's music is well known in concert form, but the film brings home just how much more there is than that and how it is even more effective in its original context. Even the Agincourt charge music, a uniquely effective setpiece, is more effective still when seen as well as heard.

Olivier's concept, with the film moving from the Globe Theatre at the start to an idealized setting in France, with medieval false perspectives, remains masterly. An extraordinarily starry line-up of leading British actors of the time brings a whole gallery of characterful portraits, not least from Olivier himself, unforgettable in the title-role.

Macbeth: Fanfare & March; Major Barbara (suite); Richard III (Shakespeare scenario)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10435X. Gielgud (nar.), ASMF, Marriner

Disappointingly, Sir John Gielgud underplays Richard III's great 'Now is the winter of our discontent' speech, but working to the underlying music – much of it eliminated in the film – may have cramped his style. The performance generally has all the panache one could wish for, leading up to the return of the grand Henry Tudor theme at the end. The six-minute piece based on Walton's music for Gielgud's wartime production of Macbeth is much rarer and very valuable too, anticipating in its Elizabethan dance-music the Henry V filmscore. Major Barbara also brings vintage Walton material. Marriner and the Academy give performances just as ripely committed as in their previous discs in the series, helped by sonorous Chandos sound.

The Quest (ballet; complete); The Wise Virgins (ballet; suite)

 Chan. 8871. LPO, Thomson

The Quest (ballet; complete; original score); The Wise Virgins (ballet; suite); Siesta

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555868. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones

In 1943, at the height of the war, Walton was commissioned to write a full-length ballet for the Sadler's Wells Company to the choreography of Frederick Ashton. The 40-minute score of The Quest had to be completed while Ashton was on five weeks' leave from the RAF, forcing Walton to abandon his usual meticulous mode of working. Despite a starry cast the ballet was a failure, largely because of the confusing allegorical plot derived from Spenser's Faerie Queene about St George fighting the forces of evil. What Lloyd-Jones has done with this fine Naxos version is to go back to Walton's original score with only a modest expansion of forces, and the result in his brilliant performance, helped by refined recording, is greater transparency. Far from seeming thin the impact is sharper than in the earlier, more opulent version. This is vintage Walton, consistently fresh, defying any unevenness of invention, culminating in a radiant Passacaglia. One hopes the success of the disc will encourage the revival of the original ballet with its Piper sets.

Like Thomson, Lloyd-Jones couples The Quest with the suite from a ballet that Walton wrote earlier in the war, The Wise Virgins, orchestrating movements from Bach cantatas, including Sheep may Safely Graze. Again Lloyd-Jones's performance, at faster speeds, more effectively brings out the sharpness of orchestration which, so far from being inflated, gives off electric sparks. The brief interlude for strings, Siesta, one of Walton's earliest orchestral pieces, makes an attractive supplement.

Quite apart from the dramatic power of Thomson's performance, the recording is superb, among the fullest and clearest from Chandos. The sound for The Wise Virgins is more reverberant and the performance has less electricity, though Walton's distinctive arrangements of Bach cantata movements – including Sheep may Safely Graze – remain as fresh as ever.

The Wise Virgins (ballet; complete)

 ASV CDDCA 1168. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth – LAMBERT: Horoscope ***

The Wise Virgins, using movements from Bach cantatas, was quickly dropped in the theatre, with the score of three of the movements lost or destroyed. Philip Lane has now re-orchestrated those three movements, using the original Bach scores, in a style near enough to Walton's sharply distinctive manner. Though the newly restored movements are not as striking as those we already know, Barry Wordsworth's warmly sympathetic readings make a strong case for the revival of the original ballets.

Sinfonia concertante for orchestra with piano (original version)

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Dutton CDLX 7223 Stott, RPO, Handley – BRIDGE: Phantasm; IRELAND: Piano Concerto ****

Kathryn Stott, warmly and strongly accompanied by Vernon Handley and the RPO, gives an outstanding reading of the Sinfonia concertante's original version, and the result seems to strengthen what is a consistently memorable work, built from vintage Walton material. First-rate recorded sound, (originally on Conifer) and couplings that are both generous and apt, particularly the splendid version of the Ireland Piano Concerto.

(i) Sinfonia concertante; Spitfire Prelude & Fugue; Variations on a Theme of Hindemith; March: The History of the English-Speaking Peoples

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553869. (i) Donohoe; E. N. Philh., Daniel

Paul Daniel conducts the English Northern Philharmonia in electrifying performances of this varied group of orchestral works. As before he is splendid at interpreting Walton's jazzy syncopations with the right degree of freedom. Following the composer's own suggestion, the original version of the Sinfonia concertante is preferred to the revision, fuller and more brilliant. The performance is excellent, despite the placing of the soloist, Peter Donohoe, too far forward. Daniel draws playing both warm and scintillating from the orchestra in the Hindemith Variations – no finer version exists – while the March and the Spitfire music hit home all the harder through Daniel's refusal to dawdle.

Sonata for Strings

 Channel Classics CCSSA 23005. Amsterdam Sinf. – BEETHOVEN: String Quartet 16 ***

The Walton Sonata for Strings, an arrangement of his A minor String Quartet of 1945–7, has become a favourite work with this superb Dutch ensemble and was an automatic choice for a recording by them. So the reading is more intimate than most, sharp and incisive in the fast movements, but warmly lyrical too, with the heart of the performance coming in the lovely slow movement, which here matches the Lento slow movement of the Beethoven in its dedication, with one yearning melody after another.

Symphony 1 – see also Cello Concerto above

🔑 * LSO Live SACD LSO 0576. LSO, C. Davis

(i) Symphony 1 in B flat min.; (ii) Belshazzar's Feast

() BBC mono/stereo BBCL 4097-2. (i) RPO; (ii) McIntyre, BBC Ch. & Choral Soc, Christchurch Harmonic Ch., BBC SO; composer

Symphony 1; Partita for Orchestra

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553180. E. N. PO, Daniel

Symphony 1; Overture Scapino; Siesta

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 39124-2. Gran Canaria PO, Leaper

Symphony 1; Varii capricci

 Chan. 8862. LPO, Thomson

When towards the end of 2005 Colin Davis conducted this performance of Walton's First Symphony at the Barbican, it was greeted with ecstatic notices in the press, and rightly so. It was as though the critics involved had suddenly rediscovered this iconic work, reflecting the mood of uncertainty and tension of the 1930s. The clarity of the textures and the sharpness of the attack add to the impact, with Colin Davis plainly at ease with the jazz element. The finale again brings clarity in the contrapuntal writing of successive fugatos, leading to a ripe conclusion. This first SACD version finds a welcome place, even though the 40-year-old benchmark performance from the same orchestra under the youthful André Previn (see above under Cello Concerto) has a sharpness and bite marginally even greater.

Though Walton recorded both these major works in the studio for EMI, these live radio recordings are invaluable in amplifying his interpretative ideas. Neither performance replaces the (deleted) studio version, when the sound in each is more limited, but the vitality of a live occasion in each case gives an extra dramatic thrust to the readings. The First Symphony was recorded in mono at the Usher Hall at the 1959 Edinburgh Festival, and inevitably suffers from the dryness of the acoustic, as well as from a restless audience. Speeds are a shade faster than in the studio, and the grinding dissonances at the climax of the slow movement bite even harder, while the elegiac trumpet solo just before the final coda in the finale is more tender as well as more spacious.

Belshazzar's Feast comes in a stereo recording of 1965 from the Royal Festival Hall, with the chorus more backwardly balanced and less clear than in the studio version. One clear gain is the choice of soloist, with Donald McIntyre bitingly dramatic, and the points where the live account scores over the studio version include the description of the writing on the wall, more sinister in its pausefulness, and the lovely passage for semi-chorus in the finale, The trumpeters and pipers are silent.

In the First Symphony Paul Daniel knows unerringly how to build up tension to breaking point before resolving it and then building again. He is also freer than many in his use of rubato, as well as in the degree of elbow-room he allows for jazzy syncopations, always idiomatic. The Scherzo is sparkily witty, not just full of malice. In the slow movement, after the poised opening, Daniel tends to press ahead slightly for the sections which follow, agonizingly intense. The finale with its brassy, more extrovert manner has plenty of panache, and the weight and bite of the sound are excellent. This is a version that vies with even the finest at whatever price, and it outshines most. Daniel's reading of the Partita brings out above all the work's joyfulness, with the outer movements relaxed in their brilliance and the central slow movement warmly expressive.

With finely disciplined playing, Leaper's reading is fresh and alert, idiomatic in its rhythmic pointing and with intense poetry in such key moments as the distant trumpet-call in the final coda. The slow movement brings inspired wind solos, and the Scherzo and finale are crisp and resilient, with busy ensembles made unusually clear, even transparent, a point that also marks Leaper's witty and sparkling account of the Scapino Overture, in which the cello solo is most beautifully done. Siesta is aptly dreamy, not literal or chilly, making this a disc to recommend to Waltonians and newcomers alike.

Thomson's is a warmly committed, understandingly idiomatic account of the work, weighty and rhythmically persuasive, if not as biting as some. The Chandos coupling brings the first recording of Varii capricci, the orchestral suite in five compact movements which Walton developed from his set of guitar Bagatelles, written for Julian Bream. With a brilliant performance and sumptuous sound, it makes a fine supplement.

Symphony 2

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 86595-2. LSO, Previn – LAMBERT: Piano Concerto, etc. ***

If Walton's Second Symphony prompted George Szell to direct the Cleveland Orchestra in one of its most spectacular performances on record (now deleted), André Previn and the LSO give another brilliant performance which in some ways gets closer to the heart of the music with its overtones of the composer's romantic opera, Troilus and Cressida. The 1973 Abbey Road recording is outstandingly fine and the coupling with Lambert could not be more imaginative.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) 5 Bagatelles for Solo Guitar; (ii; iii) Duets for Children; (iv; ii) 2 Pieces for Violin & Piano; Toccata for Violin & Piano; (ii) (Piano) Façade: Valse; (v; i) Anon in Love (for tenor & guitar); (v; ii) 2 Songs for Tenor: The Winds; The Tritons

 Chan. 9292. (i) Bonell; (ii) Milne; (iii) Dowdeswell; (iv) Sillito; (v) Mark Ainsley

The Toccata for Violin and Piano is a curious mixture of cadenza and rhapsody of 15 minutes in a disconcertingly un-Waltonian style. Two songs for tenor are fascinating too, with a rushing accompaniment for The Winds, while The Tritons is chaconne-like, with a melody quite untypical of Walton. Milne and Dowdeswell bring out what charming, sharply focused ideas are contained in the ten Duets for Children. The piano arrangement of the Valse from Façade is so thorny that even Hamish Milne has to go cautiously. The two violin pieces – using French troubadour songs – are spin-offs from the Henry V incidental music and, in the second, Scherzetto, reflect what their composer had learnt, writing for Heifetz. The two works with guitar are well known in Julian Bream's performances and recordings. Bonell is lighter and more delicate than Bream, both in the Bagatelles and in Anon in Love, but is no less persuasive. Similarly, John Mark Ainsley lacks some of the punch of Peter Pears, for whom the cycle was written, but in a gentler way taps the wit and point of these Elizabethan conceits. A delightful collection, full of revealing insights into the composer's complex character.

Passacaglia for Solo Cello

 Chan. 8499. Wallfisch – BAX: Rhapsodic Ballad; BRIDGE: Cello Sonata; DELIUS: Cello Sonata ***

William Walton's Passacaglia for solo cello was composed in the last year of his life. It has restraint and eloquence, and Raphael Wallfisch gives a thoroughly sympathetic account of it. Excellent recording.

Piano Quartet; Violin Sonata

 Chan. 8999. Milne, Sillito, Smissen, Orton

Piano Quartet; String Quartet in A min.

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554646. (i) Donohoe; Maggini Qt

This performance of the Piano Quartet with Hamish Milne as pianist is music that instantly grabs the ear, with striking ideas attractively and dramatically presented in each movement. The two principal performers from the Quartet make a warmly sympathetic rather than high-powered duo for the Violin Sonata of 1949. Yet the combination of Sillito's ripely persuasive style and Milne's incisive power, clarifying textures and giving magic to the phrasing, keeps tensions sharp. The satisfyingly full sound helps too.

The young players of the Maggini Quartet give performances both refined and powerful of both works. The opening of the 1947 String Quartet is presented in hushed intimacy, making the contrast all the greater when Walton's richly lyrical writing emerges in full power. There is a tender, wistful quality here, which culminates in a rapt, intense account of the slow movement. The poignancy of those two longer movements is then set against the clean bite of the second movement Scherzo and the brief hectic finale, with textures clear and transparent. With Peter Donohoe a powerful, incisive pianist, the early Piano Quartet is also given a performance of high contrasts. First-rate recording, even if the piano is a shade too forwardly balanced.

String Quartet in A min.

 Hyp. CDA 66718. Coull Qt – BRIDGE: 3 Idylls ; ELGAR: Quartet **(*)

(BB)  Regis RRC 1015. Britten Qt – ELGAR: Quartet

✿ () Testament mono SBT 1052. Hollywood Qt – HINDEMITH: Quartet 3; PROKOFIEV: Quartet 2 () ✿

String Quartet in A min; String Quartet 1

🔑  Chan. 8944. Gabrieli Qt

 Black Box BBM 1035. Emperor Qt

Coupled ideally on Chandos with the mature String Quartet in A minor, completed in 1946, is the atonal First Quartet, long thought to be lost, which Walton wrote when an undergraduate at Oxford. The result, edited by Christopher Palmer, is hardly recognizable as Walton at all but is full of fire and imagination, while the fugue of the finale seeks to emulate Beethoven's Grosse Fuge in its complexity and massive scale, alone lasting almost 16 minutes. The Gabrieli performance brings out all the latent power and lyrical warmth, often implying an underlying anger. It provides a fascinating contrast with the highly civilized A minor work of 25 years later. That comes in a red-blooded Gabrieli recording of 1986. Both recordings were made in the warm, rich acoustic of The Maltings, Snape, with little discrepancy between them.

The young members of the Emperor Quartet also give brilliant, incisive performances of both Walton's String Quartets. For the early work the Emperor Quartet have had access to extra material involving editing and cuts, observing those that plainly were the composer's own. In addition to those minor differences of text, the Emperor Quartet's speeds are consistently faster than those of the Gabrieli Quartet on the rival version in the Chandos Walton Edition, notably in the fugal finale of the 1922 work, which here more clearly echoes Beethoven's Grosse Fuge. Helped by drier recording, the attack is more biting too, the approach more direct, less warmly expressive.

The Elgar and Walton Quartets also makes an apt and attractive coupling, and here the Coulls, unlike their direct rivals, offer as bonus a fine example of Frank Bridge's quartet-writing. In the Walton, the reading captures movingly the spirit of Waltonian melancholy, bringing out the elegiac intensity of the extended Lento slow movement, taken at a very measured pace. The Coulls are splendid too in capturing the element of fun in Walton's scherzando ideas.

The Britten Quartet, bitingly powerful, bring out the emotional intensity of the A minor, playing with refinement and sharp focus, finding a repose and poise in the slow movement that bring it close to late Beethoven. The contrasts of wistful lyricism and scherzando bite in the first movement, and the incisiveness of Walton's jaggedly rhythmic writing is a delight.

In many ways the pioneering account by the Hollywood Quartet, made in 1950, has still not been surpassed. It first appeared on a Capitol LP in harness with the Villa-Lobos Sixth Quartet. The sound comes up very well, though it is not, of course, state of the art. Moreover, it comes with equally strong couplings and cannot be too strongly recommended.

Violin Sonata

🔑  Nim. NI 5666. Hope, Mulligan – ELGAR: Violin Sonata; FINZI: Elegy ***

(BB) (*) ASV Resonance CD RSN 3060. McAslan, Blakely – ELGAR: Violin Sonata **(*)

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1319. Rostal, Horsley – DELIUS: Violin Sonata 2; ELGAR: Violin Sonata in E min. ((*))

The warmth and thrust of Hope's performance brings out the purposefulness of the writing in a work that can seem wayward. So, with understanding support from his fellow Menuhin protégé, Simon Mulligan, Hope brings tautness to the wide-ranging variation movement that rounds off the two-movement structure. With Hope's sweet, finely focused violin tone beautifully caught in the Nimbus recording – full and warm but less reverberant than some – and well balanced against the piano, it makes an outstanding recommendation.

Lorraine McAslan gives a warmly committed performance of Walton's often wayward Sonata. The romantic melancholy of the piece suits her well and, though the recording does not make her tone as rounded as it should be, she produces some exquisite pianissimo playing. John Blakely is a most sympathetic partner, particularly impressive in crisply articulated passages. A disc that is worth its modest cost.

The Walton Violin Sonata was still only five years old when Max Rostal and Colin Horsley made their recording for the fledgling Argo company, with Rostal overcoming the problems of the dry acoustic, subtly shading his tone as in the haunting recollection of the main theme in the coda of the first movement. Rostal then holds the argument together tautly in the long set of variations that make up the second movement, playing with rapt concentration, not least in his warmly persuasive reading of the seventh and last variation, Andante tranquillo. The clarity of the clean, fresh Testament transfer quickly allows one to forget the sonic limitations.

CHORAL MUSIC

Antiphon; Cantico del sole; 4 Carols; Coronation Te Deum; Jubilate; A Litany (3 versions); Magnificat and Nunc dimittis; Missa brevis; A Queen's Fanfare; Set Me as a Seal; The Twelve; Where does the Uttered Music Go?

 Hyp. CDA 67330. Polyphony, Wallace Collection, Layton; Vivian (organ)

The inclusion of the Wallace Collection in the ensemble brings an immediate advantage in the first choral item, the Coronation Te Deum, when the extra bite of brass adds greatly to the power of a piece originally designed for far bigger forces in Westminster Abbey. That is preceded dramatically by the Fanfare for the Queen from 1959, and the use of brass also adds to the impact of the final item, Antiphon, one of Walton's very last works, setting George Herbert's hymn, Let All the World in Every Corner Sing. The other big advantage of this new disc is that it offers three contrasted versions of A Litany, the motet setting of Phineas Fletcher, which Walton wrote at Christ Church in his early teens. The original, conceived in 1916 when the boy was only 14, was for four treble voices and pitched a minor third higher than the definitive version, while the second version, made in 1917, introduced a full range of voices and was pitched slightly lower. Also included here are the Four Carols, making this as comprehensive a collection of Walton's shorter choral pieces as could be imagined. The fine professional group, Polyphony, with sopranos very boyish, sound very like a cathedral choir, set in an ecclesiastical atmosphere, though the acoustic of Hereford Cathedral is rather washy, with balance favouring the organ and brass.

Antiphon; Cantico del sole; Coronation Te Deum; Jubilate Deo; Magnificat & Nunc dimittis; A Litany; Missa brevis; Set Me as a Seal Upon thine Heart; The Twelve; Where Does the Uttered Music Go? Organ solos: Henry V: Touch her Soft Lips and Part; Passacaglia: Death of Falstaff

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555793. St John's College Ch., Robinson

This disc of Walton's church music and smaller choral pieces is another in Naxos's superb series of English choral music from St John's College, Cambridge. It gains over rival collections of these pieces not just in price, but in using boys' rather than women's voices. With Walton himself trained as a boy chorister at Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, his writing gains positively from that brighter, fresher sound, not just in the liturgical pieces. Even the Coronation Te Deum of 1953, designed for a big choir on the grandest of ceremonial occasions, benefits from the extra sharpness of focus, revealing not just a brilliant compression of a long text, but a taut musical structure. The pieces stretch over the widest span of Walton's career, from the setting of Phineas Fletcher in A Litany, the amazing inspiration of a 14-year-old but, anticipating the mature Walton, to Antiphon, one of his last works, a stirring setting of George Herbert's hymn, Let All the World in Every Corner Sing.

Belshazzar's Feast

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 0927 44 394-2. Terfel, BBC Singers, BBC Ch. & SO, A. Davis – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Job ***

Ⓑ  CfP 2-CD (ADD) 575 7642 (2). Rippon, Hallé Ch. & O, Loughran – ELGAR: Dream of Gerontius **

Ⓑ () CfP mono 585 9042. Milligan, Huddersfield Ch. Soc., RLPO, Sargent – ELGAR: The Dream of Gerontius ()

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80181. Stone, Atlanta SO & Ch., Shaw – BERNSTEIN: Chichester Psalms **

Belshazzar's Feast; Coronation Te Deum; Gloria

(*) Chan. 8760. Howell, Gunson, Mackie, Roberts, Bach Ch., Philh. O, Willcocks

In Andrew Davis's dramatically eloquent account of Belshazzar's Feast, taken from the last night of the 1994 Promenade Concerts, the glorious choral contribution demonstrates how perfectly suited Walton's masterly oratorio is to the Royal Albert Hall's famous and sometimes intractable acoustics. From the powerful trombone opening and the riveting 'Thus spake Isaiah' from the BBC Singers and Chorus, the listener is held under the music's spell, and Bryn Terfel's resonant 'If I forget thee' is as compelling as his cry 'Babylon is a great city', while the choral responses to 'Praise ye' are as thrilling as the 'writing hand' sequence is creepily sinister. The apt coupling with Job, another biblical work, makes this a most desirable reissue.

Willcocks scores over some rivals in his pacing. Speeds tend to be a degree faster, as in By the Waters of Babylon which flows evenly yet without haste. The soloist, Gwynne Howell, firm and dark of tone, is among the finest of all exponents but, with the Bach Choir placed rather more distantly than in most versions, this is not as incisive as its finest rivals. The Coronation Te Deum receives a richly idiomatic performance, and Willcocks also gives weight and thrust to the Gloria, with the tenor, Neil Mackie, outstanding among the soloists. The microphone unfortunately catches an unevenness in Ameral Gunson's mezzo. The recording is warmly reverberant, not ideally clear on choral detail but easy to listen to.

Loughran's version is forthright and dramatic, helped by brilliant analogue recording from 1973. The orchestra is particularly well caught, and so is the excellent soloist, Michael Rippon, firm and clear in attack. The snag is the work of the chorus, which is relatively small and placed rather close to the microphones, so that details of imperfect ensemble and intonation tend to be exaggerated.

Sargent was present at the gestation of Belshazzar's Feast and conducted the first performance at the Leeds Festival in 1931, thereafter making it his own for a considerable period. His interpretation was authoritative, but he does not seem to have taken care over detail for this 1958 recording. (Among other things, the anvil to represent the God of Iron is missing.) The rich acoustic of Huddersfield Town Hall adds weight to the sound but robs the choral words of any kind of clarity and bite. James Milligan is a strong soloist, the orchestra plays very well indeed, but overall this was not a jewel in Sargent's choral crown.

Robert Shaw and his superb chorus achieve a remarkable sharpness of choral ensemble. With a well-balanced recording which gives the chorus detailed clarity with no spotlighting, there is an attractive freshness in this account. Yet the result is not as electrifying as the opening promises, when – curiously in an American performance – Shaw's passion for precision prevents him from interpreting Walton's jazz rhythms with the necessary degree of rhythmic freedom to make them sound idiomatic. It all sounds too literal. The most damaging flaw is Shaw's inexplicable addition of full chorus singing Ah! on the final chord of the orchestral coda, totally unauthorized and not very effective.

Christopher Columbus (A Musical Journey); Hamlet and Ophelia (A Poem for Orchestra; arr. Mathieson)

 Chan. SACD CHSA 5034. Carragher, Rigby, Randle, Williams, Julian Glover, Jamie Glover, Ogden, Ch. & BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Commisioned by the BBC in 1942 to write the incidental music for a radio play by Louis MacNeice. In 2002 Carl Davis and Patrick Garland devised an hour-long entertainment, with the main musical items illustrating an abbreviated version of MacNeice's text. Not surprisingly, it does not work as well as the comparable sequence using the Henry V film music alongside Shakespeare, but many of these illustrative fragments have the true Waltonian ring. With Julian Glover taking the spoken role of Columbus opposite Jamie Glover as the Ironic Spirit, Richard Hickox conducts a warmly idiomatic reading with an excellent quartet of vocal principals – Caroline Carragher, Jean Rigby, Tom Randle and Roderick Williams – and the first-rate BBC National Chorus and Orchestra of Wales. Vivid sound in Hybrid SACD. Muir Mathieson's Poem for Orchestra – Hamlet and Ophelia is drawn directly from Walton's film music for Olivier's Hamlet, a sombre piece with fine string-writing and sinister fanfares in the middle.

(i) Christopher Columbus (suite of incidental music); (ii) Anon in Love; (iii) 4 Songs After Edith Sitwell: Daphne; Through gilded trellises; Long Steel Grass; Old Sir Faulk. A Song for the Lord Mayor's Table; The Twelve (an anthem for the Feast of any Apostle)

🔑  Chan. 8824. (i) Finnie, Davies; (ii) Hill; (iii) Gomez; Westminster Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

The composer's own orchestral versions of his song-cycles Anon in Love (for tenor) and A Song for the Lord Mayor's Table (for soprano) are so beautifully judged that they transcend the originals, and the strength and beauty of these strongly characterized songs is enormously enhanced, particularly in performances as positive as these by Martyn Hill and Jill Gomez. The anthem, The Twelve, also emerges far more powerfully with orchestral instead of organ accompaniment. The four Sitwell songs were orchestrated by Christopher Palmer, who also devised the suite from Walton's incidental music to Louis MacNeice's wartime radio play, Christopher Columbus, buried for half a century. It is a rich score which brings more happy anticipations of the Henry V film music in the choral writing, and even of the opera Troilus and Cressida, as well as overtones of Belshazzar's Feast. Warmly committed performances, opulently recorded.

OPERA

The Bear (complete)

🔑  Chan. 9245. Jones, Opie, Shirley-Quirk, N. Sinfonia, Hickox

The one-Acter The Bear is a masterly score, with the farcical element reflected in dozens of parodies and tongue-in-cheek musical references, starting cheekily with echoes of Britten's own Midsummer Night's Dream. Richard Hickox with members of the Northern Sinfonia paces the music superbly, flexibly heightening the moments of mock-melodrama that punctuate this tale of a mourning widow who faces the demands of one of her dead husband's creditors. The casting of the three characters is ideal, with Della Jones commanding as the affronted widow, all her words crystal clear, Alan Opie clean-cut and incisive as the creditor or 'Bear' of the title, and with John Shirley-Quirk as the old retainer. In many ways this is a piece – with its climactic duel scene leading to an amorous coup de foudre – which comes off even better on disc than on stage.

Troilus and Cressida (complete)

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9370/1 (2). A. Davies, Howarth, Howard, Robson, Opie, Bayley, Thornton, Owen-Lewis, Opera North Ch., E. N. Philh. O, Hickox

As Chandos's magnificent recording shows this red-bloodedly romantic opera on a big classical subject deserves to enter the regular repertory. Judith Howarth portrays the heroine as girlishly vulnerable, rising superbly to the big challenges of the love duets and final death scene. Arthur Davies is an aptly Italianate Troilus, an ardent lover, and there is not a weak link in the rest of the characterful cast, with Nigel Robson a finely pointed Pandarus, comic but not camp, avoiding any echoes of Peter Pears, the originator. As Evadne, Cressida's maid, Yvonne Howard produces firm, rich mezzo tone, and the role of Calkas, Cressida's father, is magnificently sung by Clive Bayley. The role of Diomede, Cressida's Greek suitor, can seem one-dimensional, but Alan Opie, in one of his finest performances on record, sharpens the focus, making him a genuine threat, a noble enemy. Richard Hickox draws magnetic performances from chorus and orchestra alike, bringing out the many parallels with the early Walton of Belshazzar's Feast and Symphony 1. As for the recorded sound, the bloom of the Leeds Town Hall acoustic allows the fullest detail from the orchestra, enhancing the Mediterranean warmth of the score, helped by the wide dynamic range. The many atmospheric effects, often offstage, are clearly and precisely focused, and the placing of voices on the stereo stage is also unusually precise.

WARD, John (1571–1638)

Aires; Fantasias for Viols; Fly not so fast, a 3; In Nomine, a 5; In Nomine, 1, a 6; 5, a 4; 2, a 6; Leggiadra sei, a 5; Non fu senza, a 5; O say, dear life, a 3; Sweet Philomel, a 5; Upon a bank with roses, a 5

🔑  CPO 999 928-2. Rose Consort of Viols

This survey impresses both in the quality of Ward's musical invention and resource and in the impressive advocacy it receives from the Rose Consort. The recordings, made in collaboration with Nord Deutsche Rundfunk, are also of excellent quality. Those who care about this rich period in English musical life should lose no time in acquiring this valuable addition to its representation on CD. Strongly recommended.

Madrigals: Come sable night; Cruel unkind; Die not, fond man; Hope of my heart; If heaven's just wrath; If the deep sighs; I have retreated; My breast I'll set; Oft have I tender'd; Out from the vale; Retire, my troubled soul; Sweet Philomel

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66256. Consort of Musicke, Rooley

Ward's music speaks with a distinctive voice. He chooses poetry of high quality, his music is always finely proportioned, and such is the quality of this music and the accomplishment with which it is presented, these settings represent the madrigal tradition at its finest.

WARLOCK, Peter (1894–1930)

Capriol Suite (for strings)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550823. Bournemouth Sinf., Richard Studt (with Concert: English String Music)

A first-class performance of Warlock's masterly Capriol Suite is included in this splendid collection which includes also Britten's Frank Bridge Variations, Holst's St Paul's Suite and Vaughan Williams's Dives and Lazarus. Demonstration sound.

Capriol Suite (orchestral version); Serenade for Strings (for the sixtieth birthday of Delius)

 Chan. 8808. Ulster O, Handley – MOERAN: Serenade, etc. ***

The effect of the present full orchestral score of the Capriol Suite is to rob the music of some of its astringency. A dryish wine is replaced with one with the fullest bouquet, for the wind instruments make the textures more rococo in feeling as well as increasing the colour. Handley's fine performance, is made to sound opulent by the acoustics of Ulster Hall, Belfast. The lovely Serenade, for strings alone, is also played and recorded very beautifully.

Serenade for Strings

 Lyrita SRCD 318. LPO, Braithwaite (with PIERSON: Macbeth; MORGAN: Contrasts ) – ARNOLD: Beckus the Dandipratt; CHAGRIN: Helter Skelter; RAWSTHORNE: Cortèges ***

The gentle melancholy of Warlock's String Serenade with its delicate Delian atmosphere is beautifully caught here, and the recording is warmly atmospheric to match. This is part of an unmissable anthology of mostly little-known English orchestral miniatures.

Adam lay ybounden; As dew in Aprylle; Benedicamus Domino; Bethlehem down; The Birds; Born is the babe; Balulalow; Carillon, Carilla; A Cornish Christmas carol; A Cornish carol; Corpus Christi; The first mercy; The 5 lesser joys of Mary; The frostbound wood; I saw a fair maiden; My little sweet darling; Out of the Orient crystal skies; The rich cavalcade; Song for Christmas Day; Sweet was the song the Virgin sang; The sycamore tree; Tyrley Tyrlow; What cheer? Good cheer!; Where riches is everlastingly

🔑  Somm SOMMCD 011. Allegri Singers, Halsey; with Cable, Empett, Rosamunde Qt, M. Barnes, R. Barnes

Most of these Christmas settings are little known, many are quite simple, but all are quite lovely. Among the more extended pieces the Cornish Christmas carol is strophic but the harmonic setting is constantly varied, while the ravishing Corpus Christie carol and simpler Born is the babe are set for solo voices and string quartet. Out of the Orient crystal skies and the gentle Bethlehem down are particularly haunting and the concert ends with the brief Sycamore tree, as joyful as an English carol can be. Fine, lively, dedicated performances throughout, with excellent accompaniments from all concerned.

Songs

 Chan. 8643. Luxon, Willison

(BB)  Naxos 8.557115. Thompson, Maltman, Constable, Davies, Pendrill, Duke Qt

Songs like Autumn twilight, the powerfully expressive Late summer and Captain Stratton's fancy are appealing in utterly different ways, and there is not a single number in this programme that does not show the composer either in full imaginative flow or simply enjoying himself, as in Yarmouth Fair. Luxon's performances are excellent and David Willison provides sensitive and sparkling accompaniments. The recording is first class.

First issued on the Collins Classics label, this Naxos issue offers a well-chosen selection, characterfully performed to bring out the contrasting flavours, vigorous on the one hand, evocative on the other. It is good to have his masterpiece, The Curlew, an extended setting of Yeats, as the main item, even if Adrian Thompson has moments of roughness, which are exaggerated by close recorded balance. Although the instrumental accompaniment is beautifully played, there, too, the closeness prevents the full atmospheric beauty of the writing from being appreciated. Thompson is more successful in songs that require less sustained lines, and similar reservations have to be made about the singing of Christopher Maltman in the baritone songs, though he is rousingly convincing in such characteristic items as Fancy, Mr Belloc's fancy and (best known of all) Captain Stratton's fancy.

WAXMAN, Franz (1906–67)

Carmen Fantasy

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60013-2. Vengerov, Israel PO, Mehta – PAGANINI: Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 6 (*); SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise; Intro & Rondo Capriccioso ***

Waxman's Carmen confection invites the flamboyance that the young Russian émigré Maxim Vengerov can readily provide. He dazzles and seduces the ear by turns, and even if he is forwardly balanced, the orchestral backing is well in the picture.

Film Suites: (i) The Bride of Frankenstein; (ii) The Invisible Ray; Prince Valiant; Rebecca; Suspicion; Taras Bulba

🔑  Silva Screen FILMCD 726. Westminster PO, Alwyn; (ii) City of Prague PO, Bateman

With a flamboyant introduction that sweeps you into 1930s Hollywood, The Bride of Frankenstein, still regarded as one of the finest horror films ever made, brings one of Waxman's most enjoyable scores. There is plenty of exciting, dramatic music here, very colourfully orchestrated, including the use of whole-tone scales and an ondes martenot, there's wit and parody too (Gounod's Faust crops up), and one especially enjoys the Minuet, most charmingly orchestrated by Clifford Vaughan, himself an organist, an instrument used effectively in this score, as in the delightfully quirky Danse Macabre – a number that should have a lease of life on its own. Kenneth Alwyn and his orchestra are fully at home in Waxman's musical world. The more famous suites of Prince Valiant, Taras Bulba and Suspicion are included, as well as Rebecca (his finest score), and the less well-known The Invisible Ray, another enjoyable horror score, dating from 1936, with the suite assembled by the composer's son, John Waxman, and with Stephen Bernstein having to orchestrate it completely by ear as none of the original survives. Very good recordings and performances, too.

Rebecca (filmscore; complete)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557549. Slovak RSO, Adriano

Rebecca (1940) is regarded as Waxman's finest score, and it is easy to see why: as soon as the splendid Selznick International trademark theme is played (composed by Newman), Waxman sweeps you into the world of Daphne du Maurier's bestseller, Rebecca. The score is an integral part of Hitchcock's film, with the Rebecca theme used to portray the ghostly presence of Max de Winter's dead first wife and, throughout, the music brilliantly portrays the often haunting and creepy atmosphere of this Gothic fantasy. It is not all gloomy though, with numbers such as the Lobby Waltz providing a haunting piece of nostalgia. Adriano (and others) has made a splendid job of assembling this score, some of which had to be reconstructed from the soundtrack while other music, not used in the final film, is restored here. Both the performance and recording are very good and, at bargain price, this is essential for all film music fans.

Joshua

✿  DG 477 5724. Schell (narr.), Gilfry, Hallenberg, Bucht, Poole, Prague Phil. Ch., Prague Philh., Sedares

Franz Waxman here tackles a major biblical subject in a full-scale oratorio. The First Part leads up to the impressive picture of Joshua's forces storming the walls of Jericho, blowing their trumpets. With a multiple array in fanfare that makes a superb climax, inevitably it leads to a slight feeling of anticlimax in the second half, when the stopping of the sun and the Battle of Gilead cannot match that earlier climax, and the piece ends gently with Joshua's death. Nevertheless, this is a fine work, characterfully introduced by the Narrator, Maximilian Schell, and with a good team of soloists backing the excellent choir and orchestra. Atmospheric recording.

WEBER, Carl Maria von
(1786–1826)

Andante & Hungarian Rondo in E flat, Op. 35; Bassoon Concerto in F, Op. 75

 Chan. 9656. Popov, Russian State SO, Polyansky – HUMMEL; MOZART: Bassoon Concertos ***

There is some astonishing spiccato bravura in the finale of the Hungarian Rondo, and both Valeri Popov and his accompanying orchestra under Polyansky capture the grand manner of the first movement of the Concerto and are quite touching in the romantic cantabile of the Andantino. The finale then brings both a genial wit and more solo fireworks. The recording is full-bodied and resonant, but clearly detailed in the Chandos manner.

Clarinet Concertino in E flat, Op. 26

🔑  ASV CDDCA 559. Johnson, ECO, Groves – CRUSELL: Concerto 2  ✿; BAERMANN: Adagio ; ROSSINI: Introduction, Theme & Variations ***

Emma Johnson is in her element here. Her phrasing is wonderfully beguiling and her use of light and shade agreeably subtle, while she finds a superb lilt in the final section, pacing the music to bring out its charm rather than achieve breathless bravura. Sir Charles Groves provides an admirable accompaniment, and the recording is eminently realistic and naturally balanced.

Clarinet Concertos 1 in F min., Op. 73; 2 in E flat, Op. 74; Clarinet Concertino

 DG 435 875-2. Neidlich, Orpheus CO – ROSSINI: Introduction, Theme & Variations in E flat ***

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57019-2. Lawson, Hanover Band, Goodman – SPOHR: Clarinet Concerto 1 ***

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61585-2 (2). Pay, OAE – CRUSELL: Clarinet Concertos 1–3 ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550378. Ottensamer, Slovak State PO (Košice), Wildner

If you want these Concertos on modern instruments, Charles Neidlich meets every need. His tone is beautiful, his phrasing warmly musical, he swings along most beguilingly in the Andante of the Concertino and the Romanze of the F minor Concerto is shaped with much delicacy. He lollops delightfully in the finales of all three works. He plays his own cadenzas and the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra, rather resonantly recorded, provide accompaniments of substance which are both polished and supportive. The Rossini Variations make a witty and elegantly appealing bonus. However, the performances on the super-bargain Warner Apex collection below are also first class in every way and every bit as well recorded, and this disc includes also the Grand duo concertant.

Stylish and imaginative period performances of all three works from Colin Lawson with the Hanover Band, vividly recorded, generously supplemented by the Spohr First Concerto. With his attractively reedy tone Lawson is a most persuasive soloist, moulding Weber's melodies seductively and pointing rhythms jauntily, with brilliant feats of tonguing in the light-hearted finales of each work.

Antony Pay uses a copy of a seven-keyed clarinet by Simiot of Lyons from 1800. The sonority is cleaner and less bland than can be the case in modern performances, and the solo playing is both expert and sensitive. A further gesture to authenticity is the absence of a conductor; however, the ensemble might have been even better and the texture more finely judged and balanced had there been one. The recordings are vivid and truthful and those attracted to the coupling with Crusell should be well satisfied.

Ernst Ottensamer is a highly sensitive clarinettist, who is a member of the Vienna Wind Ensemble. His account of the two Clarinet Concertos can hold its own against nearly all the competition, the Košice Orchestra also responds well to Johannes Wildner's direction, and the recorded sound is very natural and well balanced. A real bargain.

(i; ii) Clarinet Concertos 1 in F min.; 2 in E flat; Clarinet Concertino in E flat, Op. 26; (iii) Grand duo concertant for Clarinet & Piano, Op. 48

🔑 ✿  ASV (ADD) CDDCA 747. (i) Johnson; (ii) ECO, cond. Tortelier, Schwarz or Groves; (iii) with Black

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89246-2. (i) Boeykens; (ii) Rotterdam PO, Conlon; (iii) Meyer, Duchable

Emma Johnson's scintillating accounts of these three Weberian showpieces were made with different conductors, all of whom prove to be highly sympathetic to their young soloist. Her subtlety of expression is remarkable, with pianissimos more daringly extreme and with distinctly persuasive phrasing in slow movements treated warmly and spaciously. In the sparkling finales she is wittier than almost any, plainly enjoying herself to the full. The Concertino, in some ways the most delightful work of the three, especially its delicious finale, is hardly less beguiling; and as a bonus we are offered a brilliant and individually expressive account of the Grand duo concertant for clarinet and piano. Here she finds an admirable partner in Gordon Black, who accompanies with equal flair.

However, if you are looking for a bargain alternative, Walter Boeykens will be hard to beat. He is a most sensitive player and phrases the expressive music meltingly, with a lovely tone, as the slow movement of the F minor Concerto readily demonstrates; and there are some subtle touches of rubato in the Concertino. James Conlon and the Rotterdam Orchestra provide firm, yet flexible accompaniments. Weber's chortling Rondos in all three works are delightfully presented, with the Polacca finale of the E flat Concerto very neatly pointed. Paul Meyer takes over in the romantic Grand duo concertant, quite perfectly balanced with Duchable, and they make a fine partnership. An excellent disc, given first-class recording.

(i) Clarinet Concertos 1–2; Clarinet Concertino; (ii) Clarinet Quintet in B flat (version for string orchestra)

🔑 * BIS SACD 1523. Fröst, Tapiola Sinfonietta, Kantorow

🔑 (M) * EMI 5 67988-2. Meyer; (i) Dresden State O, Blomstedt; (ii) Württemberg CO, Heilbronn, Faerber

Clarinet Quintet, Op. 34 (arr. for clarinet & string orch)

 EMI 5 57359-2. Meyer, ASMF, Sillito – BAERMANN: Clarinet Quintet 3 in E flat, Op. 23; MENDELSSOHN: 2 Concert Pieces for Clarinet & Basset Horn ***

Weber, inspired by the playing of his friend, Heinrich Baermann, began writing his Clarinet Quintet while on holiday in Switzerland in 1811, completing it the following year, a labour of love following the two Concertos and Concertino he had earlier written for Baermann. It is just as inspired and just as demanding technically, which makes it an ideal candidate to be translated, as here, into a full concerto for clarinet and strings.

Martin Fröst plays these delectable works as seductively as any of his competitors (the Concertino is specially haunting) and he has the advantage of including a winning account of the Quintet in a new and highly effective arrangement for full strings by his conductor. With fine accompaniments and a full-bodied, wide-ranging recording, perfectly balanced, this sounds spectacularly real in its SACD format.

EMI have combined Sabine Meyer's fine recordings of the Concertos – notable for particularly eloquent accounts of the two slow movements – and her delectable, light-hearted version of the Concertino, with her inspired account of the orchestral arrangement of the Clarinet Quintet (see below). The orchestral accompaniments are on a larger scale than with Emma Johnson, but both Blomstedt and Faerber prove admirable accompanists, and the recording is excellent.

Clarinet Concerto 2 in E flat, Op. 74

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 7404. de Peyer, LSO, C. Davis – MOZART: Clarinet Concerto in A; SPOHR: Clarinet Concerto 1 ***

De Peyer is fully up to the bravura in Weber's splendidly tuneful Second Clarinet Concerto, especially in the infectious finale, packed with fireworks. The exceptionally warm, vivid Decca recording adds to the vibrant quality of the music-making.

Piano Concertos 1–2; Konzertstück; Polacca brillante (L'Hilarité), Op. 72 (orch. Liszt)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550959. Frith, Dublin R. & TV Sinf., O'Duinn

Benjamin Frith's accounts are first class and he receives splendid support from O'Duinn and the excellent Dublin Sinfonietta. In consequence, these performances all have real depth (the Konzertstück is particularly fine). Frith's playing has plenty of dash, yet its impetuosity is never inclined to run away with itself. The Naxos CD is not only very well recorded and inexpensive, it also includes the appropriately named L'Hilarité – Polacca brillante, which Frith plays with attractive panache.

Konzertstück in F min.

🔑 (M)  EMI (ADD) 5 62884-2. Arrau, Philh. O, Galliera – CHOPIN: Fantasy, etc. ***

Arrau is superb. He gives one of the freshest performances imaginable of the unusual piece with its programme of knights and ladies. The orchestra responds splendidly and the recording is excellent. The couplings are equally fine and there is a seductive bonus of Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo capriccioso.

Overtures: Abu Hassan; Der Beherrscher der Geister (Ruler of the Spirits); Euryanthe; Der Freischütz; Jubel; Oberon; Preziosa

🔑  Capriccio Surround Sound SACD 71 045. Dresden State O, Kuhn

This collection of Weber Overtures is marvellously played by the superb Dresden Staatskapelle, and if as performances they do not quite match Karajan for panache or Sawallisch for sheer orchestral excitement, they certainly do not lack style and vitality. Indeed, their breadth plus a certain dignity increases their stature. But what makes this disc so thrilling is the magnificent recording, far finer than with any of their competitors. It is very much in the demonstration bracket, wonderfully real and full-blooded, especially when using four speakers, which provide a superb concert-hall illusion in the sitting room. There is no better example than Jubel, splendidly grandiloquent, especially when God save the Queen arrives spectacularly and thrillingly at the close.

Overtures: Abu Hassan; Der Beherrscher der Geister (Ruler of the Spirits)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2745. VPO, Stein – BRUCKNER: Symphony 6 ***

Warm, lively and superbly played versions of two sparkling Weber overtures from Horst Stein, making an enjoyable bonus to a fine account of Bruckner's Sixth Symphony.

Symphonies 1 in C; 2 in C, J.50/51

(*) ASV CDDCA 515. ASMF, Marriner

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60619-2. Norwegian R.O, Rasilainen – WAGNER: Symphony in C **

Symphonies 1 in C; 2 in C; Die drei Pintos: Entr'acte; Silvana: Dance of the Young Nobles; Torch Dance; Turandot: Overture; Act II: March; Act V: Funeral March

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.550928. Queensland PO, Georgiadis

Weber wrote his two Symphonies in the same year (1807) and, though both are in C major, each has its own individuality. The witty orchestration and operatic character of the writing are splendidly caught in these sparkling Queensland performances, while in the slow movements the orchestral soloists relish their solos, for all the world like vocal cantilenas. The recording is in the demonstration class, and the disc is made the more attractive for the inclusion of orchestral excerpts from two little-known operas and incidental music from Turandot. The Entr'acte from the incomplete Die drei Pintos was put together by Mahler from Weber's sketches.

Sir Neville Marriner also has the full measure of Weber's two Symphonies; these performances combine vigour and high spirits with the right degree of gravitas (not too much) in the slow movements. The recording is clear and full in the bass, but the bright upper range brings a touch of digital edge to the upper strings.

On Apex, an inexpensive way of acquiring Weber's two very attractive Symphonies, with a Wagner curiosity. The performances are lively and committed, but the recording is not much above average.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Cello Sonata in A; Adagio & Rondo

() Testament mono SBT 2158. Piatigorsky, Newton – BEETHOVEN: Cello Sonatas (); BRAHMS: Sonata 1 ()

These records were made in 1934–5 and are arrangements by Piatigorsky of the Fifth of Weber's Violin Sonatas, Op. 10. The playing has an impressive eloquence.

Clarinet Quintet in B Flat, Op. 34

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1079. Johnson, Takacs-Nagy, Hirsch, Boulton, Shulman – MOZART: Clarinet Quintet; Allegro in B flat, K.516c **(*)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2447. de Peyer, Melos Ens. – HUMMEL: Piano Quintet; Piano Septet ***

(i) Clarinet Quintet; Introduction, Theme & Variations for Clarinet & String Quartet, Op. posth.; (ii) Grand duo concertant in E flat, Op. 48; 7 Variations on a Theme from Silvana in B flat, Op. 33 (both for clarinet and piano)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553122. Berkes (i) Auer Qt; (ii) Jandó

(i) Clarinet Quintet; Flute trio in G min., Op. 63 (for flute, cello & piano)

(M)  CRD (ADD) CRD 3398. Pay, Nash Ens.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Grand duo concertant, Op. 48; 7 Variations on a Theme from Silvana, Op. 33

🔑 * Praga PRD 250 164. Moraguès; (i) Pražák Qt; (ii) Izuha

This Praga disc is sheer delight, full of Bohemian spirit, with superbly elegant playing from everyone concerned. The Duo concertant is equally winning, with Moraguès' easy rubato given persuasive support by the pianist, Mari Izuha, the flowing Andante followed by a debonair, pointed finale. The Silvana Variations, based on another genially dotted theme, are again delightfully presented, with bravura flourishes and rollicking roulades from the clarinet and nimble accompanying pianism, and the recording could hardly be more truthful or better balanced.

Emma Johnson, always a characterful player with her distinctive reedy tone, gives a scintillating account of the Quintet, with brilliant support from her team of experienced chamber players. In this less well-known work she is more spontaneous-sounding than in the Mozart, full of sparkle and fun in the outer movements as well as the Scherzo, finding a rare depth of expression in the hushed writing of the second movement Fantasia, marked Adagio. The clarinet is forwardly balanced, but less obtrusively so than in the Mozart.

Gervase de Peyer, too, is in his element in the Quintet, immaculate and brilliant, and given superb support from the Melos Ensemble. The 1959 recording hardly sounds its age, remarkably warm and vivid, so if the Hummel couplings are wanted this is very recommendable.

On the CRD version, Antony Pay (playing a modern instrument) makes the very most of the work's bravura, catching the exuberance of the Capriccio third movement and the breezy gaiety of the finale. The Nash players provide an admirable partnership and then adapt themselves readily to the different mood of the Trio, another highly engaging work with a picturesque slow movement, described as a Shepherd's Lament. The recording is first class, vivid yet well balanced.

However, Naxos conveniently gather together expert and winning performances of all Weber's major chamber works featuring the clarinet, even if the amiable Introduction, Theme and Variations is now considered spurious. The Quintet is particularly successful with a lusciously appealing account af the Adagio and the finale chortles with great zest in its sparkling virtuosity. With Jandó an admirable partner, the Grand duo concertant is hardly less successful, and the two sets of variations are presented with both elegance and panache. The recording is realistic if too resonant, but the charisma and spontaneity of this Hungarian music-making carry the day in spite of this.

7 Variations on a Theme from Silvana in B flat, Op. 33

 Chan. 8506. de Peyer, Pryor – SCHUBERT: Arpeggione Sonata; SCHUMANN: Fantasiestücke, etc. ***

These engaging Weber Variations act as a kind of encore to Schubert's Arpeggione Sonata and with their innocent charm they follow on naturally. They are most winningly played by Gervase de Peyer; Gwenneth Pryor accompanies admirably. The recording is first class.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas 1–2; Rondo brillante in E flat (La Gaîté), Op. 52; Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3485. Milne

Piano Sonata 3 in D min., Op. 49; 4 in E min., Op. 70; Polacca brillante in E (L'Hilarité) (with LISZT: Introduzione (Adagio))

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3486. Milne

These Weber Sonatas are not easy to bring off, with their classical heritage and operatic freedom of line. Hamish Milne's performances have a lightness of touch that is most appealing, without ever being superficial, and his playing in the slow movements has attractive lyrical feeling. Moreover he also provides a sparkling account of the Rondo brillante and, as a final encore, a totally captivating account of the charming Invitation to the Dance. He makes a sterner approach to the opening Allegro feroce of 3 in D minor, cast in an almost Beethovenian mould, while the last Sonata is more introspective in its colouring and feeling, and concludes with a ruthless Tarantella, driven on by its own restless energy. The Polacca brillante returns to the world of dazzling articulation and sparkling display. Hamish Milne's playing is thoroughly inside Weber's world and technically equal to the composer's prodigious demands. He is very well recorded.

OPERA

(i) Abu Hassan (complete); Symphony 1 in C

🔑  DHM/BMG 054 72 77979-2. (i) Völz, Dürmüller, Stojkovic, Selig, Werk Ruhr Ch.; Cappella Coloniensis of West Deutsche TV & R., B. Weil

Abu Hassan is a delightful one-Act opera, an early work written in 1811, which, like Mozart's Entführung, exploits the fashion for 'Turkish' subjects. In a crisp series of brief numbers – two choruses, two arias, two duets and two trios – it lasts a mere 50 minutes, allowing it to be coupled in this sparkling performance on Deutsche Harmonia Mundi with Weber's equally delightful Symphony 1. Using period instruments, Bruno Weil gives the score all the lightness and transparency it needs, with a first-rate trio of soloists, all with clear, fresh voices, plus a Narrator who doubles in the role of the Caliph. The only snag for the non-German speaker is that the spoken dialogue separating the musical numbers may prove excessive, but there is generous indexing of tracks to allow it to be omitted, and the well-planned booklet gives German text and English translation. The Symphony too gains in point and transparency in this lively performance with period instruments.

Der Freischütz: Overture

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4140. New Philh. O, Giulini – BRITTEN: The Building of the House Overture; SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 ***

Recorded in mono at the Royal Festival Hall in December 1970, Giulini's reading of the Weber Overture brings a performance of extremes, at once dedicated and dramatic, a valuable addition to the conductor's discography on this disc issued to celebrate his ninetieth birthday.

Der Freischütz (complete; DVD version)

() Arthaus mono DVD 101 271. Kozub, Frick, Saunders, Mathis, Grundheber, Blankenheim, Minetti, Sotin, Krause, Hamburg State Op. Ch. & O, Ludwig (Dir: Rolf Liebermann, V/D: Joachim Hess)

A fascinating early example of filmed opera in remarkably vivid colour, dating from 1968. The cast pre-recorded the music in mono within an attractive acoustic, then acted and sang the opera on stage, miming very successfully to the prerecording. The production and sets are traditional, very much so. But the principals are excellent singers every one, with Gottlob Frick's melodramatic portrayal of Kaspar almost stealing the show. If, as Killian, Franz Grundheber's Act I aria is a bit too self-satisfied, the main problem is that Max, the hero (Ernst Kozub), although he sings ardently, looks so morose throughout the opera that one wonders what Agathe can see in him. However, both she (the sweet-voiced Arlene Saunders) and the delightful Ännchen (a young Edith Mathis) are charmers in their central scenes, which contain the heroine's two most famous arias, very well sung. The Wolf's Glen scene, dominated by a sinister Samiel (Bernhard Minetti) is staged quite spectacularly, with an impressive storm, even if it is not as rivetingly scary as the famous Keilberth audio recording. However, the opera's closing scene, with Hans Sotin magnificently commanding as the Hermit who intervenes to provide the happy ending, is very successful. In all – allowances being made for the dated production – this is most enjoyable and a considerable achievement when one realizes it is 40 years old! There is, for once, a good accompanying booklet, with synopsis and full documentation.

Der Freischütz (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Teldec 4509 97758-2 (2). Orgonasova, Schäfer, Wottrich, Salminen, Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Harnoncourt

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 2 08821-2 (2). Grümmer, Otto, Schock, Prey, Wiemann, Kohn, Frick, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO, Keilberth

Ⓑ  DG 477 5611 (2). Seefried, Streich, Holm, Waechter, Peter, Bohme, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Jochum

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 736-2 (2). Janowitz, Mathis, Schreier, Adam, Vogel, Crass, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State O, Kleiber

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Ph. 478 0152 (2). Mattila, Araiza, Wlaschicha, Lind, Moll, Dresden State O, Colin Davis

Harnoncourt's electrifying and refreshing version of this operatic warhorse was recorded live at concert performances in the Philharmonie in Berlin in 1995 and the engineers have done wonders in conveying the atmosphere of a stage performance rather than a concert one, not least in the Wolf's Glen scene, helped by recording of a very wide dynamic range. Harnoncourt clarifies textures and paces the drama well, making it sound fresh and new. The cast is first rate, with Orgonasova singing radiantly as Agathe, not just pure but sensuous of tone, floating high pianissimos ravishingly. Christine Schäfer, sweet and expressive, makes Ännchen into far more than just a soubrette character, and Erich Wottrich as Max is aptly heroic and unstrained, if hardly beautiful. The line-up of baritones and basses is impressive too, all firm and clear, contrasting sharply with one another, a team unlikely to be bettered today. A clear first choice among modern, digital recordings.

Keilberth's is a warm, exciting account of Weber's masterpiece, which makes all the dated conventions of the work seem fresh and new. In particular the Wolf's Glen scene acquires something of the genuine terror that must have struck the earliest audiences. The casting of the magic bullets with each one numbered in turn, at first in eerie quiet and then in crescendo amid the howling of demons, is superbly conveyed. Elisabeth Grümmer sings more sweetly and sensitively than one ever remembers before, with Agathe's prayer exquisitely done. Lisa Otto is really in character, with genuine coquettishness. Schock is not an ideal tenor, but he sings ably enough. The Kaspar of Karl Kohn is generally well focused, and the playing of the Berlin Philharmonic has plenty of polish. The overall effect is immensely atmospheric and enjoyable.

The warmth of Jochum's conducting and his understanding of how to pace this high romantic piece puts his among the finest versions with its outstanding cast, even if he cannot quite match Keilberth in recreating the horror of the Wolf's Glen scene. Irmgard Seefried may be on the light side for the role of Agathe, but the golden purity of her voice, her projection and her flawless control of legato make hers a memorable performance; and few can match Rita Streich in brilliance as Ännchen. Richard Holm sings with free, unstrained tone as Max, and Eberhard Waechter is outstanding as Otakar, with Kurt Bohme gruff but characterful as Kaspar. First-rate, well-balanced sound, remarkable for 1959.

Kleiber's fine, incisive account of Weber's atmospheric and adventurous score fulfilled most expectations. With the help of an outstanding cast, excellent work by the recording producer, Eberhard Geller, and transparently clear recording, this is a most compelling version of an opera which transfers well to the gramophone.

Sir Colin Davis paces this magic score very well indeed, and the Dresden forces respond with some fine playing and singing. To add to the drama there are plenty of production sounds, even including the barking of hounds, with shots that have you jumping out of your seat. Even so this is a set that fails to convey the full power of the Wolf's Glen scene where the casting of the magic bullets sounds tame, not frightening at all. The singing is flawed too. Karita Mattila's warm, vibrant soprano is apt enough for Agathe, and she controls the soaring lines of her two big arias very beautifully, but Und ob die Wolke brings under-the- note coloratura which may distress some ears. As Max, Francisco Araiza is seriously stressed with the basically beautiful voice sounding throaty, and Eva Lind is unpleasantly fluttery and shallow as Aennchen. Eberhard Wlaschila is darkly sinister as Kaspar and it is good too to have Kurt Moll as the Hermit.

Oberon (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 477 5644 (2). Grob, Nilsson, Domingo, Prey, Hamari, Schiml, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Kubelik

We owe it to Covent Garden's strange ideas in the mid-1820s as to what 'English opera' should be, that Weber's delicately conceived score is a sequence of illogical arias, scenas and ensembles, strung togther by an absurd pantomime plot, nearly as bad as the one for Euryanthe, but not quite! Though even on record the result is slacker because of the loose construction, one can appreciate, in a performance as stylish and refined as this, the contribution of Weber. The original issue included dialogue and a narrative spoken by one of Oberon's fairy characters. In the LP reissue this was cut, but the dialogue has now been restored (although it is separately cued, so it can be programmed out). With Birgit Nilsson commanding in Ocean thou mighty monster and excellent singing from the other principals, helped by Kubelik's ethereally light handling of the orchestra, the set can be recommended without reservation, for the 1970 recording, made in the Munich Herculessaal, is of excellent quality. The reissue comes with a cued synopsis of the story.

Oberon: Overture

Ⓜ (*) Dresden Staatskapelle Live VKJK 0414. Dresden Staatskapelle, Haitink – BRAHMS: Symphony 1 **(*)

Haitink's Dresden recording of the Brahms Symphony may be on the heavy side, but Weber's Overture is quite different, magically refined in the slow introduction and lithe and athletic in the main Allegro. A good coupling, if hardly a generous one on a mid-price disc.

Oberon (complete recording in the original English)

🔑 🏵 * Ph. 475 6563-2 (2). Davislim, Martinpelto, Kaufmann, Dazeley, Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner, Allam (nar.)

Weber's Oberon is one of the great problem works of opera. Written for Covent Garden in 1825, it is based not on Shakespeare but on the fairy epic of Wieland which, using an English translation, Robinson Planche turned into an ungainly libretto. Its oddities effectively prevented Weber from developing the piece consistently, but he was inspired to write some of his most magical music, full of what John Eliot Gardiner defines as 'fire, fantasy and finesse'. How to present Oberon effectively has long presented almost intractable problems, but here Gardiner on disc, pioneering a recording in the original English, opts for what might be counted an ideal answer, using a narrator to link numbers instead of Planche's dialogue. The result in a superb perfomance is magnetic, letting one appreciate to the full the uniqueness of Weber's inspiration, with period instruments helping to clarify the fairy-light orchestral textures, plainly a model for Mendelssohn.

The singing cast is excellent, with the two main tenor roles splendidly taken – Oberon lyrically by the Australian tenor, Steve Davislim, and Huon, with his big spectacular aria full of formidable florid writing, by Jonas Kaufmann. Hillevi Martinpelto is fresh and clear as Raiza, another challenging role, and Roger Allam is unobtrusively effective speaking the narration. The Monteverdi Choir too plays an important part in bringing out the magic of the music, with beautifully balanced recording.

WEBERN, Anton (1883–1945)

(i) Concerto for 9 Instruments, Op. 24; 5 Movements for String Quartet (orchestral version), Op. 5; Passacaglia, Op. 1; 6 Pieces for Large Orchestra, Op. 6; 5 Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 10; Symphony, Op. 21; Variations for Orchestra, Op. 30. Arrangements of: BACH: Musical Offering: Fugue (1935). (ii) SCHUBERT: German Dances (for small orchestra), Op. posth. Chamber Music: (iii) 6 Bagatelles for String Quartet, Op. 9; 5 Movements for String Quartet, Op. 5; (iv; v) 4 Pieces for Violin & Piano, Op. 7; (v; vi) 3 Small Pieces for Cello & Piano, Op. 11; (v; vii) Quartet, Op. 22 (for piano, violin, clarinet & saxophone); (iii) String Quartet, Op. 28; String Trio, Op. 20; (v) Variations for Piano, Op. 27. Vocal: (viii; i) Das Augenlicht, Op. 26; (ix; x) 5 Canons on Latin Texts, Op. 16; (viii; ix; i) Cantata 1, Op. 29; (viii; ix; xi; i) Cantata 2, Op. 31; (viii) Entflieht auf leichten Kähnen, Op. 2; (ix; x) 5 Sacred Songs, Op. 15; (xii; v) 5 Songs, Op. 3; 5 Songs, Op. 4; (xii; x) 2 Songs, Op. 8; (xii; v) 4 Songs, Op. 12; (xii; x) 4 Songs, Op. 13; 6 Songs, Op. 14; (ix; x; xiii) 3 Songs, Op. 18; (viii; i) 2 Songs, Op. 19; (xii; v) 3 Songs, Op. 23; (ix; v) 3 Songs, Op. 25; (ix; x) 3 Traditional Rhymes, Op. 17

Ⓜ  Sony SM3K 45845 (3). (i) LSO (or members), Boulez; (ii) Frankfurt R.O, composer (recorded December 1932); (iii) Juilliard Qt (or members); (iv) Stern; (v) Rosen; (vi) Piatigorsky; (vii) Majeske, Marcellus, Weinstein; (viii) John Alldis Ch.; (ix) Lukomska; (x) with Ens., Boulez; (xi) McDaniel; (xii) Harper; (xiii) with Williams. Overall musical direction: Boulez

What Pierre Boulez above all demonstrates in the orchestral works (including those with chorus) is that, for all his seeming asceticism, Webern was working on human emotions. The Juilliard Quartet and the John Alldis Choir convey comparable commitment; though neither Heather Harper nor Halina Lukomska is ideally cast in the solo vocal music, Boulez brings out the best in both of them in the works with orchestra. A rare recording of Webern himself conducting his arrangement of Schubert dances is also included. There are excellent notes, every item is cued, and perhaps it is carping to regret that the Passacaglia and Variations for Orchestra were not indexed.

(i) Concerto for 9 Instruments, Op. 24; (ii) 6 Orchestral Pieces, Op. 6; Symphony, Op. 21; (i) Quartet, Op. 22; Trio, Op. 20; 3 Pieces for Cello & Piano, Op. 11; 4 Pieces for Violin & Piano Op. 7; Variations for Piano, Op. 27; (iii) 5 Canons for Soprano & 2 Clarinets; 3 Songs, Op. 18; 3 Traditional Rhymes, Op. 17. (i) Orch. of Schubert: German Dances

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557330. (i) 20th Century Classics Ens. (members); (ii) Philh. O, Craft; (iii) Welch-Babidge

As an important issue in the 'Robert Craft Collection', Naxos here offers an exceptionally generous selection of Webern's mature works. Eight brief pieces for various forces frame the three central works, the Six Pieces, Op. 6, the most powerful example of his early atonal period, exploiting a very large orchestra, the Symphony, Op. 21, for chamber orchestra, one of the finest works of his later, fully serial period, and the Concerto for nine soloists, the most popular of his chamber works. The Philharmonia plays warmly in Opus 6, with the 20th Century Classics Ensemble from New York giving virtuoso performances of the other two, also supplying players for the smaller-scale piece. Jennifer Welch-Babidge's bright, clear soprano, precisely focused, is ideal for the craggy lines of the vocal pieces. Full texts and English translations are given. As a charming supplement, the Philharmonia also plays the set of six tiny German Dances by Schubert which, soon after they were discovered in 1929, Webern set sensitively for small orchestra. Excellent sound in recordings from both London and New York.

Collected works:

Disc 1: (i) Im Sommerwind; 5 Movements for String Quartet (orchestral version), Op. 5; Passacaglia, Op. 1; 6 Pieces for Large Orchestra, Op. 6. Arrangements of: Bach: Musical Offering: Fugue; Schubert: German Dances, D.820

Disc 2: (i) 5 Pieces for Orchestra (1913); Symphony, Op. 21; Variations for Orchestra, Op. 30; (iii; iv; v) Das Augenlicht, Op. 26; Cantatas 1, Op. 29; 2, Op. 31; 3 Orchesterlieder (1913–24)

Disc 3: (ii; vi) Concerto for 9 Instruments, Op. 24; (ii) 5 Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 10; (ii; vi) Piano Quintet; Quartet, Op. 22 (for piano, violin, clarinet & saxophone); (ii; iii; v; vii) 5 Canons on Latin

Texts, Op. 15; Entflieht auf Leichten Kähnen, Op. 2; 2 Lieder, Op. 8; 4 Lieder, Op. 13; 6 Lieder, Op. 14; 5 Geistliche Lieder, Op. 15; 3 Lieder, Op. 18; 2 Lieder, Op. 19; 3 Volkstexte, Op. 17

Disc 4: (iii; viii) 3 Gedichte (1899–1903); 8 frühe Lieder (1901–4); 3 Avenarius Lieder (1903–4); 5 Dehmel Lieder (1906–8); 5 St George Lieder; 5, Op. 4; 4 St George Lieder (1908–9); 4 Lieder, Op. 12; 3 Jone Gesänge, Op. 23; 3 Jone Lieder, Op. 25

Disc 5: (ix; x) 6 Bagatelles for String Quartet, Op. 5; (Langsamer) Slow Movement for String Quartet (1905); 5 Movements for String Quartet, Op. 5; 3 Pieces for String Quartet (1913); Rondo for String Quartet (1906); String Quartet (1905); String Quartet, Op. 28; String Trio, Op. 20; Movement for String Trio, Op. posth. (1925)

Disc 6: (xi; xii) Cello Sonata (1914); 2 Pieces for Cello & Piano (1899); 3 Small Pieces for Cello & Piano, Op. 11; (xiii; xiv) 4 Pieces for Violin & Piano, Op. 7. (xv) Piano: Kinderstück (1924 & 1925); Piece (1906); Sonata Movement (Rondo) (1906); (xiv) Variations, Op. 27

Ⓜ * DG 457 637-2 (6). (i) BPO, or (ii) Ens. Intercontemporain, Boulez; (iii) Oelze; (iv) Finley; (v) BBC Singers; (vi) Aimard; (vii) Pollet; (viii) Schneider; (ix) Emerson Qt; (x) McCormick; (xi) Hagen; (xii) Maisenberg; (xiii) Kremer; (xiv) Zimerman; (xv) Cascioli

This monumental DG set goes far further than the earlier Sony collection in its illumination of Webern as one of the great musical pioneers of the 20th century. The first point is that where the earlier set limited itself to the numbered works, this one covers so much more (on six discs instead of three) with a far fuller portrait presented in the early works. Both sets include such offerings as the arrangements of Bach (the Ricercar from the Musical Offering) and Schubert (a collection of waltzes). Boulez's interpretations of the numbered works have developed too, with the Berlin Philharmonic exceptionally responsive, bringing out often unsuspected warmth and beauty. The point and purposefulness of these performances is particularly helpful in making such thorny late inspirations as the two Cantatas so much more readily approachable. The vocal soloists have been ideally chosen, with the fresh-toned Christiane Oelze taking on the majority of songs, but with Françoise Pollet and Gerald Finley equally assured. The starry list of instrumental contributors could not be bettered either, including as it does such luminaries as the Emerson Quartet and Krystian Zimerman, and the recordings made over a period of years are uniformly excellent.

Concerto for 9 Instruments, Op. 24

Ⓜ * Chan. 6534. Nash Ens., Rattle – SCHOENBERG: Pierrot Lunaire ***

This late Webern piece, tough, spare and uncompromising, makes a valuable fill-up for Jane Manning's outstanding version of Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire, a 1977 recording originally made for the Open University. First-rate sound and a beautifully clean CD transfer.

Langsamer Satz* (arr. Schwarz)

 Delos DE 3121. Seattle SO, Schwarz – HONEGGER: Symphony 2; RICHARD STRAUSS: Metamorphosen ***

The slow movement Webern composed in 1905 for string quartet sounds even more Mahlerian in Gerard Schwarz's transcription for full strings, which is eloquently played and sumptuously recorded.

Passacaglia for Orchestra, Op. 1

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 457 760-2. BPO, Karajan – BERG: Lyric Suite, etc.; SCHOENBERG: Variations ***

This is a beautifully played and recorded version of Webern's Passacaglia, which will disappoint no one. It sounds especially haunting – even magical – in Karajan's hands, and has been superbly transferred.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) 6 Bagatelles, Op. 9; 5 Movements, Op. 5; 3 Little Pieces, Op. 11; 4 Pieces, Op. 7; Rondo, Op. posth.; Slow Movement, Op. posth.; String Quartet, Op. 28; String Quartet, Op. posth. (1905); String Trio, Op. 20; (ii) Piano Sonata, Op. posth.

🔑  Chan. 10083. (i) Schoenberg Qt; (ii) Grotenhuis (piano)

This outstanding collection, superbly performed, gives an excellent idea of the range of Webern's genius, from early works to such seminal masterpieces as the Five Movements, Op. 5, the late String Trio and String Quartet, Op. 28. Thanks to the warmth and expressive intensity of the playing of the Schoenberg Quartet, even the unprepared listener will find illumination here, with the early works providing a helpful introduction to the more daunting serial pieces.

6 Bagatelles for String Quartet, Op. 9; Langsamer Satz; 5 Movements for String Quartet, Op. 5; Rondo for String Quartet* (1906); String Quartet (1905); *String Quartet, Op. 28; Movement for String Trio, Op. posth.; String Trio, Op. 20.

 Nim. NI 5668. Vienna Artis Qt

With warm, purposeful performances recorded in full, close sound, the Artis Quartet present Webern's collected music for string quartet and string trio as a most persuasive survey of this problematic composer's creative career. The three works from 1905 and 1906 (those without opus number) represent his early post-romantic style at its ripest, while such works as the Five Movements, Op. 5, vividly illustrate the imaginative leap he made when adopting free atonality. Equally representative are the more astringent works of his later years, the String Trio, Op. 20 and the String Quartet, Op. 28, all presented with a purposefulness and commitment that readily helps to overcome any problems the listener may have.

Variations for Piano, Op. 27

🔑 * Ph. 468 033-2. Uchida – BERG: Piano Sonata; SCHOENBERG: Piano Concerto; Klavierstücke ****

(BB)  Naxos 8.553870. Hill – BERG: Piano Sonata; SCHOENBERG: Piano Pieces; Suite ***

The Variations, Op. 27, Webern's only mature piano piece, dates from the mid-1930s and calls for the most eloquent playing if it is to persuade the listener. Webern himself stressed that the music's structural intricacies must give rise to a 'profound expressiveness'. However, Peter Hill can hold his own against any of the competition.

Uchida gives a highly imaginative and refined account, recorded with great clarity and presence in the Herkulessaal, Munich, and this Gramophone Award-winning performance is as fine as this piece has ever received. Moreover, the Philips couplings, too, are very highly recommendable.

WEELKES, Thomas (1576–1623)

Alleluia, I heard a voice; Hosanna to the Son of David; Most mighty and all-knowing Lord; When David heard; (i) In nomine a 4

* EMI 3 94430-2. King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cleobury; (i) with Fretwork (with TOMKINS: Choral music) – GIBBONS: Choral collection ****

This splendidly sung collection (the opening Alleluia and the very original setting of When David heard stand out, the latter also included as set by Tomkins) juxtaposes the music of Thomas Weelkes with that of two other great Elizabethan composers of English choral music. Fretwork make a viol contribution to each selection. The performances are superbly eloquent and the recording very real.

WEILL, Kurt (1900–1950)

The Eternal Road (abridged)

(BB)  Naxos 8.559402. Hauman, Rearick, DeNolfo, Dent, Rideout, Christopher, Maddalena, Berlin R. Children's Ch., Ernst Senff Ch., Berlin RSO, Schwarz

Conceived as a biblical pageant, The Eternal Road is Kurt Weill's most ambitious work. In a massive sequence of words and music – lasting (if uncut) around five hours – the piece links the stories of biblical characters with the latter-day persecution of Jews in Europe. Originally presented in New York in 1937, it proved too cumbersome for its own good and was quickly forgotten. Yet it contains some of the most inspired music that Weill ever wrote, demonstrating that after he fled from Europe to America his genius remained as fertile and original as ever. This generous selection of musical items, gives an excellent idea of the piece, very well performed and recorded in Berlin with American soloists and conductor. The vigour of the writing brings a most attractive image of the Broadway style that Weill was developing. That includes such numbers as the fine chorus representing the Israelites' Dance around the Golden Calf, while the duet between Ruth and Naomi effectively avoids sentimentality in its gentle dance rhythms, and the duet between Ruth and Boaz, similarly popular in style, develops passionately. First-rate sound.

STAGE WORKS

The Ballad of Magna Carta; Der Lindberghflug

 Cap. 60012. Henschel, Tyl, Calaminus, Clemens, Cologne Pro Musica Ch. & RSO, Latham-König; Wirl, Schmidt, Feckler, Minth, Scheeben, Berlin R. Ch. & O, Scherchen

Der Lindberghflug ('The Lindbergh Flight') is a curiosity. Brecht wrote the text, but only later did Weill set the complete work, and that is how it is given in this excellent Cologne recording. A historic 1930 performance of the original Weill-Hindemith version, conducted by Hermann Scherchen, is given as an appendix, recorded with a heavy background roar but with astonishingly vivid voices. The fine, very German tenor who sang Lindbergh in 1930 was Erik Wirl and the tenor in the new recording is not nearly so sweet-toned, and the German narrator delivers his commentary in a casual, matter-of-fact way. Otherwise the performance under Jan Latham-König fully maintains the high standards of Capriccio's Weill series; and the other, shorter item, The Ballad of Magna Carta is most enjoyable too, a piece never recorded before. Clear, if rather dry, recording with voices vivid and immediate.

Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera); (complete)

🔑  Decca 430 075-2. Kollo, Lemper, Milva, Adorf, Dernesch, Berlin RIAS Chamber Ch. & Sinf., Mauceri

🔑  Sony (ADD) MK 42637. Lenya, Neuss, Trenk-Trebisch, Hesterberg, Schellow, Koczian, Grunert, Ch. & Dance O of Radio Free Berlin, Brückner-Rüggeberg

On Decca there are obvious discrepancies between the opera-singers, René Kollo and Helga Dernesch, and those in the cabaret tradition, notably the vibrant and provocative Ute Lemper (Polly Peachum) and the gloriously dark-voiced and characterful Milva (Jenny). That entails downward modulation in various numbers, as it did with Lotte Lenya, but the changes from the original are far less extreme. Kollo is good, but Dernesch is even more compelling. The coordination of music and presentation makes for a vividly enjoyable experience, even if committed Weill enthusiasts will inevitably disagree with some of the controversial textual and interpretative decisions.

The CBS alternative offers a vividly authentic abridged recording, darkly incisive and atmospheric, with Lotte Lenya giving an incomparable performance as Jenny. All the wrong associations, built up round the music from indifferent performances, melt away in the face of a reading as sharp and intense as this. Bright, immediate, real stereo recording.

(i) Happy End; (ii) The Seven Deady Sins

🔑 Ⓜ () stereo/mono Sony 82876 78754-2. Lenya; with (i) Ch. & O; (ii) Mal Qt & O, Brückner-Rüggeberg

Happy End, intended as a successor to The Threepenny Opera, yet more savagely cynical, took far longer to be appreciated. Lotte Lenya, Weill's widow, here turned the songs into a kind of cycle (following a hint from the composer) and transposing where necessary; and her renderings in her individual brand of vocalising are so compelling, they make the scalp tingle. Many of these numbers are among the finest Weill ever wrote, and the 1960 recording is bright and clear. Lenya's recording of Das Sieben Todsunden was made earlier, in 1950, and her singing again underlines the distinctive mixture of ballet and song-cycle as one of Weill's most concentrated inspirations. The rhythmic verve is irresistible, and though Lenya inevitably had to have the music transposed down, her understanding of the idiom is unique. However, the mono recording is harsh by modern standards. The original notes by Davis Drew are retained for this reissue, but there are now no texts or translations included.

(i; ii) Die Sieben Todsünden (The Seven Deadly Sins). (i) Songs: Berlin im Licht; Complainte de la Seine; Es regnet; Youkali; Nannas Lied; Wie lange noch?

Ⓑ (*) HM Musique d'Abord HMA 1951420. (i) Fassbaender; (ii) Brandt, Sojer, Komatsu, Urbas, Hanover R. PO, Garben

This Harmonia Mundi set stars Brigitte Fassbaender, who, using the original pitch, brings a Lieder-singer's feeling for word detail and a comparable sense of style. Her account is obviously less street-wise than Lemper's deleted version, but there is a plangent feeling that is highly appropriate. The songs are equally impressive, mainly connected in one way or another with the main piece. The vocal quartet makes an idiomatic team, but the conductor Cord Garben at times seems on the leisurely side in his choice of tempi. Excellent, vivid recording.

Der Silbersee (complete)

 Cap. 60011-2 (2). Heichele, Tamassy, Holdorf, Schmidt, Mayer, Korte, Thomas, Cologne Pro Musica Ch., Cologne RSO, Latham-König

Led by Hildegard Heichele, bright and full-toned as the central character, Fennimore, the Capriccio cast is an outstanding one, with each voice satisfyingly clean-focused, while the 1989 recording is rather better-balanced and kinder to the instrumental accompaniment than some from this source, with the voices exceptionally vivid.

Street Scene (opera; complete; CD version)

🔑  TER CDTER2 1185 (2). Ciesinski, Kelly, Bottone, van Allan, ENO Ch. & O, Davis

The TER set was made with the cast of the ENO production at the Coliseum, and the idiomatic feeling and sense of flow consistently reflect that. Some of the solo singing in the large cast is flawed, but never seriously, and the principals are all very well cast – Kristine Ciesinski as the much-put-upon Anna Maurrant, Richard van Allan as her sorehead husband, Janis Kelly sweet and tender as the vulnerable daughter, and Bonaventura Bottone as the diffident young Jewish neighbour who loves her. Those are only a few of the sharply drawn characters, and the performance on the discs, with dialogue briskly paced, reflects the speed of the original ENO production. Warm, slightly distanced sound.

Der Zar lässt sich Photographieren (complete)

(*) Cap. 60 007-1. McDaniel, Pohl, Napier, Cologne R.O, Latham-König

This curious one-Act opera buffa is a wry little parable about assassins planning to kill the Tsar when he has his photograph taken. Angèle, the photographer, is replaced by the False Angèle, but the Tsar proves to be a young man who simply wants friendship, and the would-be assassin, instead of killing him, plays a tango on the gramophone, before the Tsar's official duties summon him again. Jan Latham-König in this 1984 recording directs a strong performance, though the dryly recorded orchestra is consigned to the background. The voices fare better, though Barry McDaniel is not ideally steady as the Tsar.

The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny (DVD version)

 Warner DVD 2056258. McDonald, LuPone, Griffey, LA Op. Ch. & O, Conlon (Dir: Doyle, V/D: Muller)

Using an English translation of Bertolt Brecht's text, the Los Angeles Opera offers a colourful production which vividly evokes the seedy atmosphere of the original, set in the 1920s. Audra McDonald as Jenny appears as an over-painted film star, a splendid focus for the whole performance, which is linked by announcements over a very visible public-address system. Patti LuPone is equally effective as Leocadia, and Anthony Dean Griffey is the characterful leader of the male contingent, dressed as though for a Hollywood Western. That association is cemented by such effects as the honky-tonk piano in the bar. James Conlon proves an urgently dramatic conductor.

'Kurt Weill on Broadway', excerpts from: The Firebrand of Florence; Johnny Johnson (Johnny's Song); Knickerbocker Holiday; Love Life; One Touch of Venus (Westwind)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 58245-2. Hampson, Futral, Hadley, Lehman, L. Sinf. Ch., L. Sinf., McGlinn

Thomas Hampson's magical collection of Weill numbers reveals what richness there is even in the least-known of Weill's Broadway scores. So a full 40 minutes are devoted to Weill's biggest flop, The Firebrand of Florence, an offbeat biography of Benvenuto Cellini, and the selection here is delightful. At the beginning of the disc One Touch of Venus instantly establishes that poetry is the keynote of the American Weill. One of the numbers in the 20-minute selection from Love Life (lyrics by Alan J. Lerner) is a duet, I remember it well. Only later did Lerner adapt it for Gingold and Chevalier in Gigi, for here it is a dreamy slow waltz. The only well-known number is It never was you from Knickerbocker Holiday, and even that comes as a duet, not a solo. Hampson sings superbly, and McGlinn draws deeply sympathetic performances from the London Sinfonietta and the other soloists.

WEINBERG, Mieczyslav (See also under Vainberg, Moishei) (1919–96)

(i) Clarinet Concerto, Op. 104; (ii) Flute Concertos 1, Op. 75; 2, Op. 148; (iii) Fantasia for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 52

Ⓝ * Chan. SACD CHSA 5064 (i) Claesson, (ii) Johnhall; (iii) Gunnarson; Gothenburg SO, Svedland

These three concertos are superbly written for their respective instruments and their music is both stimulating and appealing. The Fantasia for cello and orchestra is in essence another three-movement concerto, yet together they form an arc, first slowly increasing in pace and tension and then decreasing. The music itself is both richly melodic and full of evocative atmosphere. The first of the two Flute Concertos is also haunting. After a brilliant scherzando opening the slow movement is an introspective Passacaglia, the finale a kind of waltz. The Second Concerto also has a melancholy slow movement but with a stark climax and the Allegretto finale playfully quotes flute themes by other composers. The Clarinet Concerto is much less predictable with rhapsodical Andante and a cheeky finale. All three works are superbly played here and the four-channel recording adds a rich three-dimensional effect to the sound.

Cello Sonatas 1, Op. 21; 2, Op. 63; Sonata 1 for Solo Cello, Op. 72

 BIS CD-1648. Chaushian, Sudbin

The First Cello Sonata comes from 1945, two years after the composer had settled in Moscow. The Second was written 14 years later, in 1959, the same year as Shostakovich's First Cello Concerto. It was given its first performance by Rostropovich the following year. As always in Weinberg's music, there are strong affinities with Shostakovich and, in the Second Sonata, also with Bartók. Weinberg also composed four solo Cello Sonatas, the first of which is recorded here. Alexander Chaushian is a magnificent player and he is excellently supported by Yevgeny Sudbin.

String Quartets 4, Op. 20; 16, Op. 130

 CPO CPO 777 313-2. Danel Qt

Weinberg is nothing if not prolific, and now CPO have embarked on the ambitious project of recording all 17 of his String Quartets. His Fourth comes from 1945, and the Sixteenth was composed in 1981. As in so much of his other music, the debt to Shostakovich is strong but the musical processes command attention and the melodic ideas are characterful. In the Sixteenth Weinberg is very much his own man, grave and pensive, and its severity is convincingly conveyed by the Danel Quartet.

WEINBERGER, Jaromir (1896–1967)

Schwanda the Bagpiper (complete; in Czech)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660146/7 (2). Robavs, Monogarova, Choupenitch, Kostyuk, Wexford Festival Op. Ch., Belarus Nat. PO, Reynolds

Recorded at the Wexford Festival in Ireland in 2003, this Naxos set offers a lively account of a colourful opera very much in the tradition of Smetana's Bartered Bride, with the Polka a hauntingly memorable centrepiece. It helps that forces from another Slavonic country, Belarus, are involved, with Julian Reynolds drawing idiomatic singing and playing from the whole company. The title-role is well taken by the baritone, Matjaz Robavs, and so is the role of his wife, Dorota, by the bright, clear, agile soprano, Tatiana Monogarova. The fruity mezzo, Larisa Kostyuk, is well cast as the Queen, even if the Slavonic beat in her voice is often obtrusive. Sadly, the other important role, that of the mysterious Babinsky, is given to a tenor, Ivan Choupenitch, whose voice is so ill-focused it is hard to tell which notes he is singing. The recording, made in the tiny Wexford Theatre Royal, is inevitably limited on orchestral sound, but voices come over well.

Schwanda the Bagpiper: Polka & Fugue

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 66376-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – SMETANA: Bartered Bride: Overture; DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 (New World); Overture Carnival ***

This infectious orchestral display-piece was better known in the days of 78s. Reiner and his fine orchestra give a bravura performance, building to a big climax. The Chicago recording is suitably brilliant, enhanced by its SACD format.

WEINER, Leó (1885–1960)

Hungarian Folkdance Suite, Op. 18

Ⓜ  Chan. 6625. Philh. O, Järvi – BARTÓK: Hungarian Pictures; ENESCU: Romanian Rhapsodies 1–2 ***

Weiner here remained orientated towards the German and French schools, and this lively and attractive suite represents a Hungarian folk style more Westernized than Bartók's; but with purposeful direction from Järvi, fine dramatic playing from the orchestra and ripely resonant recording, the full range of colour is brought out in these four movements, which last almost half an hour.

Violin Sonatas 1 in D, Op. 9; 2 in F sharp min. Op. 11

(*) Biddulph LAW 015. Shumsky, Lipkin – DOHNÁNYI: Violin Sonata in C sharp min., Op. 21; Andante **(*)

The two Violin Sonatas of Leó Weiner were composed in 1911 and 1919 respectively, and they are heard here in good performances by Oscar Shumsky and Seymour Lipkin. They were recorded in New York in 1993 and if Shumsky's playing does not have the effortless mastery it possessed in the early 1980s, he still performs a service in restoring these enjoyable works to the wider musical public. A most worthwhile issue.

WEINGARTNER, Felix
(1863–1942)

Symphony 1; King Lear (symphonic poem)

 CPO 999 981-2. Basel SO, Letonja

Felix Weingartner, noted Beethovenian, the first conductor to record a Beethoven symphony cycle complete, was also a prolific composer. This delightful symphony brims with one charming melody after another. So far from seeking to emulate Beethoven, this work comes closer to Dvořák, with a charmingly easy-going pastoral first movement, predominantly lyrical. Instead of a slow movement, Weingartner then has a flowing, march-like Allegretto with a surging violin melody in the middle. The third movement is a jolly folk-dance with oboe and flute piping away, leading to a swaggering finale. Weingartner had a special relationship with Switzerland and with Basel in particular, inspiring Marko Letonja and the orchestra to a superb performance, vividly recorded. The symphonic poem, King Lear, more Lisztian than the Symphony, makes an excellent coupling in this first issue of a projected Weingartner series.

WEISS, Silvius (1686–1750)

Lute Sonatas: 2 in D; 27 in C min.; 35 in D min. (Naxos 8.554350)

Lute Sonatas: 5 in G; 25 in G min.; 50 in B flat (Naxos 8.553988)

Lute Sonatas: 7 in C min.; 23 in B flat; 45 in A (Naxos 8.555722)

Lute Sonatas: 19 in F; 34 in D min.; 36 in D min. (Naxos 8.570109)

Lute Sonatas: 21 in F min.; 37 in C; 46 in A (Naxos 8.554557)

Lute Sonatas: 32 in F; 52 in C min.; 94 in G min. (Naxos 8. 570551)

Lute Sonatas: 36 in D min.; 42 in A min.; 49 in B flat (Naxos 8.553773)

Lute Sonatas: 38 in C; 43 in A min.; Tombeau sur la mort de M. Cajeran Baron d'Hartig (Naxos 8.554833)

Lute Sonatas 15 in B flat; 48 in F sharp min. (Naxos 8.557806)

⊶ (BB)  Barto (Baroque lute)

In layout Weiss's Lute Sonatas are very much like the suites and partitas of Bach, usually beginning with a Prelude, followed by a group of dance movements: Allemande, Courante, Bourrée, Sarabande, Menuet and Gigue. Sometimes Weiss closes with a Chaconne (Suite 6), Passacaglia (Suite 14) or an unusual movement, like the striking Paysane which ends Suite 25. The music is invariably through-composed, so that every movement is interrelated, and although each has an independent thematic existence one sometimes has a sense of a set of variations. Robert Barto, playing a baroque lute, shows us the breadth of Weiss's achievement and how naturally the music suits the lute, rather than the guitar. On almost all the discs offered so far he combines one early, one mid-period and one late Sonata. The quality of Weiss's invention seems inexhaustible throughout all these works, and he has a worthy exponent in Robert Barto, a virtuoso lutenist of a high order and a fine musician. He understands this repertory perfectly, never seeking to impose his personality over that of the composer, and the first-class recording gives him a natural presence.

WELLESZ, Egon (1885–1974)

Symphonies 1 – 9. Symphonischer Epilog

Ⓝ  CPO 777 183-2 (4). Vienna Radio SO, Rabl

CPO have deleted the individual discs of the Wellesz symphonies discussed at greater length in our 2005–06 Edition but made them available as a complete set. The First comes from 1945–6 when he was sixty and the last was finished in 1971, the year before a stroke put an end to his creative career. They are rewarding pieces and very well served by Gottfried Rabl and his Austrian Radio forces.

WHITE, Robert (c. 1538–74)

Motets: Christe qui lux es; Domine quis habitavit; Portio mea Domine; Regina coeli

⊶ ✿ Ⓜ  Cal. CAL 6623. Clerkes of Oxenford, Wulstan – TALLIS: Mass Puer natus est, etc. *** ✿

Robert White's style of writing has a basic restraint and often shows a gentle, Dowland-like melancholy, so striking at the opening of Domine quis habitavit. But this is often offset by the soaring trebles, especially in the ravishing Portio mea Domine, while Christe qui lux es, the last motet on this record, is very touching indeed. Glorious performances by Wulstan and the Clerkes of Oxenford, who have the full measure of this repertoire. The analogue recording could hardly be bettered. Not to be missed.

WHITLOCK, Percy (1903–46)

Ballet of the Wood Creatures; Balloon Ballet; Come Along, Marnie; Dignity and Impudence March; The Feast of St Benedict: Concert Overture; Holiday Suite; Music for Orchestra: Suite; Susan, Doggie and Me; Wessex Suite

(*) Marco 8.225162. Dublin RTE Concert O, Sutherland

Percy Whitlock's style is attractive and easy-going, with quite imaginative orchestration and nice touches everywhere. The marches are jolly and the waltzes nostalgic – The Ballet of the Wood Creatures is especially charming. Gavin Sutherland directs the RTE Orchestra with his usual understanding. The sound is good, but occasionally the strings sound a little scrawny (the opening of the Waltz in the Holiday Suite, for example).

WIDOR, Charles-Marie
(1844–1937)

Symphony 3 for Organ & Orchestra, Op. 69

🔑  Chan. 9785. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral), BBC PO, Tortelier – GUILMANT: Symphony 2 for Organ & Orchestra, Op. 91; FRANCK: Choral 2 ***

Widor's Third Symphony for organ and orchestra, although in two sections, moves in a series of episodes: Adagio – Andante (introducing a luscious string tune) – Allegro (end of first movement); Vivace – Tranquillamente – Allegro (which with its horn calls and galloping energy brings a curious reminder of Franck's Chasseur maudit); finally comes an overwhelmingly majestic Largo with the chorale melody shared by organ and orchestra, bursting at the seams in sheer amplitude. The decibels of the coda are worthy of the finest speakers. Ian Tracey makes the most of his opportunities, as does Tortelier. Certainly the huge Liverpool organ and the resonant cathedral acoustics seem custom made for such spectacle and the Chandos engineers capture it all with aplomb.

Cello Sonata in A, Op. 80

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67244. Lidström, Forsberg – KOECHLIN: Chansons Bretonnes; MAGNARD: Sonata ***

Mats Lidström and Bengt Forsberg have put us in their debt by disinterring this Sonata from the first decade of the last century. It is full of good ideas and its civilized discourse holds the listener throughout. Excellent recording and rewarding couplings.

Piano Quintet in D min., Op. 7; Piano Trio in B flat, Op. 19

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555416. Prunyi, New Budapest Qt

The Piano Trio is a charming, lightweight work, with a a romantic first movement with a pleasingly elegant secondary theme. There is a debt to Mendelssohn in the Andante, which is like a song without words. The Scherzo and Rondo finale have attractive ideas too, besides freshness and vitality.

The Piano Quintet, although shorter in length, is a bigger work, more concentrated in conception and style, with the piano dominating the bold opening movement. Once more the Andante brings elegance, but it is the Molto vivace Scherzo that looks back to Mendelssohn. The polyphonic development in the finale then brings added gravitas. Both works are played here with fluent spontaneity and plenty of spirit, and the recording is excellent. This is not great music, but admirers of Widor's organ music may find it a refreshing change.

SOLO ORGAN MUSIC

Organ Symphonies: 1 in C min.: Méditation (only). 2 in D; 3 in E min.: Prélude, Adagio & Final; 4 in F min., Op. 13/1–4; 5 in F min.; 6 in G min., Op. 42/1–2; 9 in C min. (Gothique), Op. 70

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 62297-2 (2). Marie-Claire Alain (Cavaillé-Coll organs, Saint-Etienne de Caen & Eglise de Saint-Germain-en-Laye)

For this Apex reissue Warner have combined two sets of recordings, from 1970 and 1977, which jointly offer an impressive overall coverage of this repertoire. Marie-Claire Alain contents herself with playing just the Méditation from the uneven First Symphony, and only three movements from the Third. Here the Saint Germain organ sounds very orchestral and the colouring of the gentle Adagio (a perpetual canon) is very effective. The later Symphonies are more impressive works than the earlier group of Op. 13. 5 is justly the most famous. These are classic, authoritative performances, given spacious analogue sound with just a touch of harshness to add a little edge in fortissimos.

Symphonies 1 in C min.; 2 in D, Op. 13/1–2

(*) ASV CDDCA 1165. Nolan (organ of Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral)

Widor's two early Symphonies have seven and six movements respectively and, as the composer tends to meander, one feels a single, more succinct work could have been created by using the best movements from each. It is only in the third-movement Intermezzo that the work really springs to life, dancing over a strong theme in the pedals. The following Adagio makes a typical calm interlude, before the bold Marche pontificale arrives, easily the most memorable movement in either work, and sounding splendid here. Then we have another Méditation before the robust fugal finale.

The Praeludium circulaire which opens the Second Symphony certainly goes round in circles, but the following Pastoral has genuine charm. The joyous, buoyant finale brings music which at last memorably blazes with vigour and has a catchy ostino for its main theme. Joseph Nolan obviously has none of our misgivings about Widor's meandering, and he plays both works with an appealing mixture of robust vigour and well-sustained calm. The fine Liverpool organ is very well recorded and obviously suits this repertoire in Nolan's hands.

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 13/2; 8 in B, Op. 42/4

🔑  BIS CD-1007. Fagius (organ of Kallio Church, Helsinki)

The Swedish organist Hans Fagius plays two Widor Symphonies, the Second in D major and the Eighth in B major, on a new instrument made by the Swedish makers Akerman and Lund. The instrument itself is five years old and is modelled on the symphonic organs of the Cavaillé-Coll tradition with which César Franck and Widor were so closely associated. Its disposition was the work of Kurt Lueders of Paris. Hans Fagius serves the music well and the engineers produce particularly impressive results. The opening Allegro of the Eighth Symphony gives a good idea of the impressive range this disc covers.

Symphonies 3 in E min., Op.13/2; 6 in G min., Op. 42/2; 3 Nouvelles pièces, Op. 87

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1106. Patrick (Coventry Cathedral organ)

For the second issue in their spectacular Widor series, ASV have turned to David Patrick and the organ of Coventry Cathedral, of which he is clearly a master. If less obviously suited to this repertoire than a French organ, it still sounds very impressive. Unlike Marie-Claire Alain he plays the Third Symphony complete, but he and the organ are at their finest in the Sixth, with its grand opening and equally bold Marcia finale. They frame a gentle Adagio and a hushed Cantabile, with the most characteristic movement, a brilliant scherzando-like Intermezzo, as the work's centrepiece. Patrick plays this superbly, effectively exploiting his organ's wide range of dynamic.

Symphony 5 in F min., Op. 42/1

🔑  Chan. 9271. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral), BBC PO, Tortelier – GUILMANT: Symphony 1 for Organ & Orchestra ; POULENC: Concerto **(*).

The long reverberation-period of Liverpool Cathedral gives a special character to Widor's Fifth Symphony, especially the mellow central movements. Ian Tracey makes the most of the colouristic possibilities of his fine instrument and also uses the widest possible range of dynamics, with the tone at times shaded down to a distant whisper. Yet the famous Toccata expands gloriously if without the plangent bite of a French instrument.

Symphonies 5; 6 in G min., Op. 42/1–2

 Discovery Cyprès CYP 1631. Sehnhave (organ of Katarina Church, Stockholm)

The new van den Heuvel organ in the Katarina Church, Stockholm, is admirably suited to Widor, having weighty pedals and a wide range of colourful registration, while the church acoustic provides an ambience which affords clarity of detail. Both of Kristiaan Sehnhave's performances are full of life and employ a wide dynamic range, and no one could complain that the famous finale of 5 and the tumultous closing movement of the Sixth Symphony are in any way lacking in energy or spectacle.

Symphonies 5 in F min.; 7 in A min., Op. 42/3

🔑  ASV CDDCA 958. Parker-Smith (van den Heuvel organ, St Eustache, Paris)

Jane Parker-Smith is a complete master of this repertoire (and she shows that it does not always have to be played on a traditional Cavaillé-Coll instrument). The organ at Saint-Eustache, Paris is new (1967), and is Netherlands-built. It is magnificent. Not only are the big tuttis, as in the finale of the Seventh Symphony, superbly expansive, but the organ has a ravishingly rich palette and a warm sonority to deal with Widor's gentler ideas, like the Andante cantabile and Adagio of the Fifth and the inner movements of 7, and particularly the Allegro ma non troppo, where the gently murmuring semiquavers flow along sensuously like a warm summer breeze. Because of this natural clarity of internal focus Jane Parker-Smith is able to use a very wide dynamic range and in the supreme test, the masterly Toccata which closes the Fifth, the calm at the centre of the storm does not lose contact with the listener, and the great reprise of the main theme, with thundering pedals, is unforgettable.

Symphonies 5; 10 (Romane), Op. 73

(BB) (*) Arte Nova 74321 79587-2. von Blohn (Späth organ of Hildegardskirche, St Gilbert)

Christian von Blohn has chosen to couple the Fifth Symphony with the Tenth, based on Gregorian plainchants and providing another spectacular finale, although after all the excitement there is a a closing relaxation. Both performances have plenty of rhythmic energy and the Hildegardskirche organ brings a reedy patina to the climax of the famous Toccata to sound more like a French organ than its competitors, even if it loses something in richness of sonority.

Symphony 8 in B, Op. 42/4

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1109. Filsell (organ of Liverpool Metropolitan Catholic Cathedral) – COCHEREAU: Variations sur un vieux Noël

It is good that the fine organ in Liverpool's Catholic Cathedral is at last receiving attention from the recording companies. Even if the circular building provides a very generous 8-second reverberation, even when the pedals get going, detail is not too muddied, and the reeds have a remarkably spicy French character. This is obvious at the powerful opening of the B flat Symphony, and even more so in the variations of the Andante. The pungent brilliance of the closing peroration is remarkable.

For his encore Jeremy Filsell has skilfully transcribed Pierre Cochereau's improvised variations on an old French carol, as played live by the composer and recorded on LP on Christmas Eve 1972. His own performance is thrillingly spontaneous, as if he were himself improvising. The animated first variation sets off exuberantly. Variation 4 is particularly ear-tickling, and the Toccata finale is a tour de force.

(i) Symphonies 9 in C min. (Gothique), Op. 70; (ii) 10 in D (Romane), Op. 73

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1172. Filsell (organs of (i) St George's Chapel, Windsor; (ii) Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral)

An outstanding and apt coupling (for both works are based on Gregorian chant), one of the best in the ASV series. Perhaps surprisingly, the St George's Chapel organ at Windsor suits the Gothique Symphony admirably. The warm acoustic and clarity of detail mean that the plainchant, Puer natus et nobis, which dominates the third and fourth movements (with the finale a quasi-passacaglia) always emerges from the texture, while the pedals in the closing toccata are as thunderous as the composer could possibly want.

The Symphonie romane is based on a single Easter gradual, Haec dies, and it is subject to both a series of variations and what the organist in the notes suggests is 'a Lisztian/Franckian thematic metamorphosis'. It needs just the wide range of colour, atmosphere and reedy bite that the Liverpool organ can provide, and the cathedral resonance adds spectacle to the thrilling cascades of the finale, with its long, sustained closing chord. Jeremy Filsell gives outstanding performances of both works, splendidly recorded; for once, one does not long for a Cavaillé-Coll; these two English organs suit the music admirably.

Symphony 10 in D (Romane), Op. 73; Suite latine, Op. 86

🔑  MDG. 316 0406-2. van Oosten (Cavaillé-Coll organ, at Sermin, Toulouse)

Ben van Oosten's gleaming registration at the opening of the Symphonie romane is quite dazzling, yet the central Choral and Cantilène (both based on plainchant from the Easter liturgy) are wonderfully serene. The cascading finale achieves a spectacular climax (still featuring the plainsong) then makes an extended diminuendo, culminating when the opening theme is reintroduced. The Suite latine, one of Widor's last works and written when he was 83, again uses plainsong, but more introspectively. In Van Oosten's hands the central Beatus vir, Lamento and Adagio are gently withdrawn in colour and feeling, so that the exuberant finale is the more telling. These are undoubtedly distinguished performances, very well recorded on an impressively sonorous Cavaillé-Coll organ.

WIENIAWSKI, Henryk

(1835–80)

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Caprice in A min. (arr. Kreisler); Obertass-Mazurka, Op. 19/1; Polonaise de concert 1 in D, Op. 4; Polonaise brillante 2, Op. 21; Scherzo-tarantelle, Op. 16

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66059-2. Perlman; (i) LPO, Ozawa; (ii) Sanders

Violin Concertos 1–2; Fantaisie brillante on Themes from Gounod's Faust, Op. 20

(BB)  Naxos 8.553517. Bisengaliev, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Violin Concertos 1–2; Légende, Op. 17

🔑 * DG 431 815-2. Shaham, LSO, Foster – SARASATE: Zigeunerweisen ***

The Paganinian pyrotechnics in the first movement of Wieniawski's First Violin Concerto, as Shaham readily demonstrates can be made to dazzle. Both soloist and orchestra are equally dashing, and lyrically persuasive in the better known D minor Concerto, while making an engaging encore out of the delightful Légende. With first-class DG recording this record is very recommendable.

Perlman also gives scintillating performances, full of flair, and is excellently accompanied. The recording, from 1973, is warm, vivid and well balanced. It is preferable to Perlman's digital remake of the Second Concerto. The mid-priced reissue includes a mini-recital of shorter pieces, often dazzling, but losing some of their appeal from Perlman's insistence on a microphone spotlight. Samuel Sanders comes more into the picture in the introductions for the two Polonaises, although the violin still remains far too near the microphone.

Antoni Wit handles the long opening ritornello of the F sharp minor Concerto most impressively, and Marat Bisengaliev proves a natural, understanding soloist in both concertos, playing slow movements with warmly romantic feeling and sparkling with brilliance in the display passages and especially in the finales. The Faust Variations make a substantial (19-minute) and attractively tuneful bonus. Marat Bisengaliev has a fairly small, but sweet and beautifully focused tone; he is balanced naturally in relation to the orchestra, and both are very well recorded in the Polish Radio Concert Hall, which has an attractively warm acoustic.

Violin Concerto 2 in D min., Op. 22

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 475 6703-2 (2). Bell, Cleveland O, Ashkenazy – BRAHMS; SCHUMANN; TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concertos ***

(*) CBC SMCD 5197. Kang, Vancouver SO, Comisiona – with Légende; SCHUMANN: Violin Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ () EMI mono 7 64251-2. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise, etc.; SARASATE: Zigeunerweisen; VIEUXTEMPS: Concerto 4 ()

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110938. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto; TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ()

Wieniawski's Second Concerto makes an unusual but apt bonus for Joshua Bell's outstanding triptych of Concertos by Brahms, Schumann and Tchaikovsky. It is a masterly performance full of flair, even if he does not find quite the same individual poetry in the big second-subject melody or in the central Romance as Itzak Perlman. Excellent recording, brilliant and full, and overall a remarkable bargain.

The Canadian violinist Juliette Kang plays with quicksilver brilliance. Dazzlingly clear as the playing is, this is a smaller-scale reading than most, largely a question of recording balance, with both violin and orchestra slightly distanced. So Kang, light and volatile in the rapid passagework, relaxes sweetly into the songful beauty of the motto theme, playing with a natural, unexaggerated lyricism. Both the slow movement and the outer sections of the Légende have a similar songful flow, natural and unaffected, while the finale has Kang and Comisiona choosing a speed that is fast and brilliant, allowing the dance rhythms to spring infectiously.

Heifetz is in a class of his own. The Concerto was recorded in 1935 with the young John Barbirolli, with whom Heifetz formed a strong rapport. It finds him at his most spontaneously lyrical, revelling in the rhapsodic argument. The central Romance in particular is magnetic in its hushed, meditative intensity, with the finale swaggering confidently. The sound is perhaps less vivid than the best recordings of the day, but both transfers are very good.

Capriccio-waltz, Op. 7; Gigue in E min., Op. 27; Kujawiak in A min.; Légende, Op. 17; Mazurka in G

min., Op. 12/2; 2 Mazurkas, Op. 19; Polonaise 1; Russian Carnival, Op. 11; Saltarello (arr. Lenehan); Scherzo-tarantelle; Souvenir de Moscou, Op. 6; Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 15

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.550744. Bisengaliev, Lenehan

All the dazzling violin fireworks are ready to bow here, from left-hand pizzicatos in the Russian Carnival to multiple stopping (and some lovely, warm lyricism) in the Variations on an Original Theme, plus all the dash you could ask for in the closing Scherzo-tarantelle, while the beautiful Légende (which Wieniawski dedicated to his wife as a nuptial gift) is both touchingly gentle and passionately brilliant. John Lenehan provides his partner with admirable support throughout. The snag is the very reverberant acoustic of the Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead – so obviously empty; otherwise the sound and balance are natural enough.

WIKMANSON, Johan
(1753–1800)

String Quartet 2 in E min., Op. 1/2

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3361. Chilingirian Qt – BERWALD: Quartet ***

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 33123 (2). Chilingirian Qt – ARRIAGA: String Quartets 1–3 ***

Wikmanson was a cultured musician, but little of his music survives. His three Quartets are all modelled on Haydn and were published thanks to the latter's acceptance of their dedication. While the Chilingirians do not always observe every dynamic nuance of the 1970 Critical Edition, they play the work with genuine commitment and, in the case of the slow movement, charm – though it is for the interesting 1818 Berwald Quartet that collectors will investigate this. The 1979 recording stands up well. The Chilingirian make out a persuasive case for this piece and are very well recorded. As can be seen, this work is available coupled with either Arriaga or Berwald.

WILLAERT, Adrian (c.1490–1562)

Ave Maria; Magnificat sexti toni; Missa Christus resurgens

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.553211. Oxford Camerata, Summerly – RICHAFORT: Motet: Christus resurgens ***

Over the first half of the sixteenth century this Flemish composer was one of the key figures in Western music, instrumental in the development both of the madrigal and of church music for double chorus. From 1527 until his death he was maestro di capella at St Mark's in Venice, but this music dates mainly from his earlier years, when he achieved nine settings of the Mass. This splendid offering from Summerly and his Oxford Camerata is the only one available, a magnificent 'parody mass', using as its base a motet by Jean Richafort, a piece included here as a prelude. Willaert's setting rises to a sublime conclusion in the extended Agnus Dei, in flowing polyphony. The Magnificat and Ave Maria offer inspired music too, performed with equal freshness and dedication. Vividly atmospheric sound.

WILLIAMS, Charles (1893–1978)

The Bells of St Clements; Blue Devils; Cross Country; Cutty Sark; Destruction by Fire; Devil's Galop; (i) The Dream of Olwen; The Girls in Grey; High Adventure (Friday Night is Music Night); The Humming Top; Jealous Lover; Little Tyrolean; London Fair; Model Railway; (i) The Music Lesson; The Night Has Eyes; Nursery Clock; The Old Clockmaker; Rhythm on Rails; Sally Tries the Ballet; Starlings; Throughout the Years; The Voice of London; Young Ballerina (The Potter's Wheel)

Ⓜ  ASV WHL 2151. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth; (i) with Elms

Rather like Henry Mancini and his Pink Panther theme, if Charles Williams had written only Devil's Galop (aka the Dick Barton theme), he would certainly be remembered, and it is brilliantly done here. Older listeners will surely recognize Girls in Grey and The Potter's Wheel from early 1950s television, and also High Adventure (used for Friday Night Is Music Night on Radio 2). Film buffs will know the themes from The Apartment and the pseudo-romantic piano concerto The Dream of Olwen – not in the league of the Warsaw Concerto but curiously haunting nevertheless, and certainly more durable than the film for which it was written (While I Live). Williams wrote a great deal of attractive, unpretentious music, much of it included on this generously filled CD. There are plenty of 'character' numbers, such as The Music Lesson, with metronome and scales interspersed with a most attractive theme, and the The Nursery Clock, a perky little vignette, just on the right side of twee. The Little Tyrolean gently evokes the world of the Strauss family, while The Humming Top is reminiscent of Bizet's Jeux d'enfants. England of the 1950s is evoked in Cross Country (1954) and London Fair (1955), while railway travel of the period is recalled in Model Railway (1951) and the even better remembered Rhythm on the Rails (1950). The Bells of St Clements is a charming fantasy based on the popular nursery rhyme, while the composer is in more dramatic mode for Destruction by Fire, depicting the wartime Blitz. In the 1960s, Oxford University invited Williams to receive an honorary doctorate. He declined, considering himself unworthy. It's hard to imagine too many composers of popular music doing that today! Recording and performances are both excellent.

WILLIAMS, Grace (1906–77)

(i) Carillons for Oboe & Orchestra; (ii) Trumpet Concerto. Fantasia on Welsh Nursery Rhymes; (iii) Penillion; (iv) Sea Sketches (for string orchestra)

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 323. (i) Camden; (ii) Blake; (i–ii) LSO; (iii) RPO; (i–iii) cond. Groves; (iv) ECO, Atherton

In the memorably individual Sea Sketches Grace Williams focuses her scene-painting more acutely than is common, while the two slow sections, the seductive Channel sirens and the Calm sea in summer, are balmily, sensuously impressionistic, the former taking a somewhat unpromising idea and turning it into true poetry. The other works here range attractively from the simple – and at one time quite well-known – Nursery-rhyme Fantasia (which is a good deal more than a colourfully orchestrated pot-pourri) through two crisply conceived concertante pieces, to Penillion, written for the National Youth Orchestra of Wales. 'Penillion' is the Welsh word for stanza, and this is a set of four colourful, resourceful pieces, easy on the ear but full of individual touches; although Williams does not use any folk material, she retains the idea of a central melodic line (on the trumpet in the first two pieces) in stanza form. The trumpet and oboe concertante pieces – superbly played by soloists from the LSO of the early 1970s – both show the affection and understanding of individual instrumental timbre which mark the composer's work. Excellent performances throughout (especially the vivid sea music) and very good analogue sound. This CD is surely an ideal representation of the composer at her most appealing.

(i) Symphony 2; Ballads for Orchestra; (ii) Fairest of stars (for soprano & orchestra)

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 327. (i) BBC Welsh SO, Handley; (ii) J. Price, LSO, Groves

In this Second Symphony, Grace Williams's most ambitious orchestral work, written in 1956 when she was 50, she aimed at greater astringency, just as Vaughan Williams himself had done in his Fourth Symphony. The writing is sharp and purposeful from the start, relaxing more towards lyricism in the slow movement (which produces an endearing pastoral oboe theme) and the finale with its darkly Mahlerian overtones. The Ballade of 1968, characteristically based on Welsh ballad and 'penillion' forms, also reveal the darker side of Grace Williams's writing, notably in the stark contrasts of the third ballad. The performances, originally recorded for radio, are expressive and convincing, and the recording good. Fairest of stars is later, written in 1973, specifically for this record. It is a relatively tough setting of Milton, and is strongly sung by Janet Price. The recording is first class.

WILLIAMS, John (born 1932)

Film Music: Close Encounters of the Third Kind; E.T.; Raiders of the Lost Ark; Star Wars Trilogy; Superman

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80094. Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel – COURAGE: Star Trek: theme

The Telarc recording is certainly spectacular and the concert has a synthesized prologue and epilogue to underline the sci-fi associations. The inclusion of the famous Star Trek signature theme (a splendid tune) is wholly appropriate. The orchestra plays this music with striking verve, and the sweeping melody of E.T. is especially effective; but the overall effect is very brash, with the microphones seeking brilliance in the sound-balance (though for some that will be its attraction).

WILLIAMSON, Malcolm (1931–2003)

Concerto grosso; Our Man in Havana: Suite; Santiago de Espada Overture; Sinfonietta

🔑  Chan. 10359. Iceland SO, Gamba

Our Man in Havana, based on Graham Greene's novel, is among the most colourful of post-war British operas, with its catchy Cuban rhythms and its tunes first cousin to those in Broadway musicals. Until this excellent disc, the first of a projected Williamson series, not a note of it had been recorded, and this suite of four substantial movements makes one long for a full-scale stage revival. The Concerto grosso and Sinfonietta are both exercises in Williamson's attractive brand of neoclassicism, and the Overture, Santiago de Espana, written in 1956, well before the rest, is even more approachable, one of Williamson's first essays in tonality after his early experiments with serialism. Rumon Gamba conducts fresh, crisp performances with the Iceland Symphony Orchestra, very well recorded.

(i) Organ Concerto; (ii) Piano Concerto 3; (iii) Sonata for 2 Pianos

(*) Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 280. Composer (piano or organ); with (i; ii) LPO; (i) Boult; (ii) Dommett; (iii) Richard Rodney Bennett

There are few more immediately rewarding couplings of post-war keyboard Concertos than this (and one could wish the Piano Concerto was better accompanied). Williamson composed them both in the early 1960s, and they represent two clearly contrasted sides of his creative character. The Organ Concerto, written in tribute to Sir Adrian Boult, uses the conductor's initials, ACB, as a dominating motive, and though some of the writing – for the orchestra as well as the organ – is spectacular, it is essentially a tough and ambitious piece, with the two powerful outer movements framing a beautiful and lyrical Largo for strings and organ alone. Piano Concerto 3 in four movements has immediate attractions in the catchy melodies and snappy rhythms, which ought to make it a popular success in the line of the Rachmaninov Concertos. Unfortunately, the performance has an accompaniment that is less than punchy, and the red-bloodedness of the writing is not fully realized. The performance of the Organ Concerto is quite different in every way. Excellent recording. The remarkable Sonata for 2 Pianos, inspired by the composer's stay in Sweden, encapsulates in six continuous sections (and just seven and a half minutes of music) a Swedish winter and the arrival of spring 'with the serenity of a great release into a world of warmth and light'. The performance is definitive.

Double Concerto for 2 Pianos & Strings

(*) Australian ABC Eloquence 426 483-2. Williamson, Campion, Tasmanian SO, Tuckwell – EDWARDS: Piano Concerto (*); SCULTHORPE: Piano Concerto **(*)

Williamson's Concerto for Two Pianos has been recorded before (by EMI), but that is not currently available. This performance of this distinctive, but fairly tough – though by no means unapproachable – work is committed, well performed and reasonably well recorded, and is part of a valuable trilogy of rare Concertos.

The Growing Castle

(*) Australian Universal ABC Classics, Australia (ADD) 461 922-2. Elkins, Bamberg SO, Gierster – SHIELD: Rosina; ELGAR: Sea Pictures *

This recording of The Growing Castle was part of a project, aborted owing to illness, to record a collection of arias, of which this was all that was completed. It was forgotten for 30 years but resurrected for this Australian Heritage release. A short work, it opens very dramatically before a rather beautiful lyricism takes over, and was specially re-orchestrated by the composer at the request of the singer, Margreta Elkins, for this recording. The performance is excellent, though the recording, while quite full and vivid, sounds a bit dated, with Margreta Elkins too closely miked. It makes an unexpected bonus for Shield's sparkling Rosina and a fine Elgar Sea Pictures.

Symphonies 1 (Elevamini); 5 (Aquero); Epitaphs for Edith Sitwell; Lento for Strings

 Chan. 10406. Iceland SO, Gamba

This second disc in Chandos's Williamson series offers weightier works than the first, starting with Elevamini, his First Symphony. This was written in memory of his grandmother, with the title Elevamini, Be ye lifted up, ye gates, drawn from Psalm 24. It consists of two elegiac slow movements, each starting with grinding dissonances, separated by a light and charming Scherzo, designed to characterize his grandmother in her life. Symphony 5, inspired by St Bernadette of Lourdes, has the subtitle Aquero, referring to the vision she saw. The five movements have programmatic titles, covering a wide expressive range, culminating in the fourth movement when the Aquero speaks to Bernadette, leading to a final Kyrie. The Epitaphs for Edith Sitwell, similarly elegiac, were arranged for strings from two organ pieces, while the Lento for Strings offers the most openly lyrical music on the disc, simple and tender. Excellent performances from the Icelanders under Rumon Gamba, very well recorded.

Agnus Dei; Benedictus; 'English Eccentrics': Choral Suite; In Paradisum; Libera me; Lux Aeterna; Requiem for a Tribe Brother; Sanctus; Symphony for Voices

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557783. Joyful Company of Singers, Broadbent

Peter Broadbent here conducts his fine choir, the Joyful Company of Singers, in a well-chosen selection of the a cappella choral music of Malcolm Williamson, much of it inspired by his native Australia, as well as by his Catholic faith. The writing is characteristically fluent and attractive, with one of the major items providing a fine contrast with the other works, the choral suite from the opera inspired by a book of Edith Sitwell, English Eccentrics. Although Williamson enjoyed much success in the 1960s, his reputation later fell into decline with his subsequent appointment as Master of the Queen's Music in 1975. The Requiem for a Tribe Brother (1992) is eclectic and uneven, but the eloquent early Symphony for Voices is alone worth the modest price of the disc. The sound is eminently satisfactory; the singing is good but falls short of real distinction.

WIRÉN, Dag (1905–86)

Serenade for Strings in G, Op. 11

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553106. Bournemouth Sinf., Studt (with Concert: Scandinavian String Music. ***)

The engaging String Serenade is Dag Wirén's one claim to international fame, and it is good to welcome an outstanding super-bargain version. The finale certainly earns its hit status, full of spontaneous, lilting energy. First-rate recording within an entirely recommendable concert of Scandinavian string music, not all of it familiar.

(i; ii) Miniature Suite (for cello & piano), Op. 8b; (ii) (Piano) Improvisations; Little Suite; Sonatina, Op. 25; Theme & Variations, Op. 5; (iii) 3 Sea Poems; (iv; ii) 2 Songs from Hösthorn, Op. 13

🔑  BIS CD 797. (i) Thedéen; (ii) Bojsten; (iii) Jubilate Ch., Riska; (iv) Högman

Dag Wirén was a miniaturist par excellence and few of the individual movements recorded here detain the listener for more than two or three minutes. The early (and inventive) Theme and Variations, Op. 5, is the longest work. Although it is slight, the Sonatina for Piano often touches a deeper vein of feeling than one might expect to encounter. Good performances from all concerned, and the usual truthful BIS recording.

Symphonies 2, Op. 14; 3 in C, Op. 20; Concert Overtures 1 & 2

 CPO 999 677-2. Norrköping SO, Dausgaard

Dag Wirén is in some ways the most appealing and natural Swedish composer of his generation, but he lacks the breadth and sense of scale of the born symphonist. The Third (1944) was broadcast frequently during the 1940s, but even at the time it seemed thin and short-breathed and the idiom in thrall to Sibelius. The Second Symphony (1939) is the finer of the two, though ultimately deficient in motivic vitality and too reliant on ostinato figures. Good performances and recordings of likeable but flawed works.

WITT, Friedrich (1770–1836)

(i) Flute Concerto in G; Symphony 6 (Sinfonie Turque) in A min.; Symphony 9 in D min.

 MDG 329 1299-2. Hamburg SO, Moesus; (i) with Barner

Friedrich Witt is primarily famous for his so-called Jena Symphony, which was at one time erroneously attributed to Beethoven. The Symphony 6 (printed in 1808–9), with its battery of Turkish instruments woven into the work's classical structure, is certainly a novelty. The opening movement has plenty of hearty rumbustiousness and the following slow movement (without percussion) makes an attractive lyrical contrast. The Minuetto has a lively rustic flavour, and the finale, with more Turkish flavourings, is enjoyable too. The Ninth Symphony (printed in 1818) has the lusty vigour of the Sixth, without the Turkish condiments, with Beethoven being an obvious model. Despite its minor key, the work is essentially optimistic and, like the Sixth, it has a vivacious finale. The Flute Concerto of 1806 is lighter in character, with plenty of classical charm and easy-going melody. The performances throughout are sympathetic and the sound decent. Witt was essentially a conservative composer and, if no masterpieces have been uncovered here, his writing explores pleasing musical byways.

Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, Op. 5

🔑  CBC MCVD 1137. Kuerti, Campbell, Mason, Sommerville, McKay – BEETHOVEN; MOZART: Quintets ***

Friedrich Witt modelled his Quintet with uncanny closeness on those of Beethoven and Mozart, though the Adagio cantabile – which opens with a bassoon solo – also brings a dash of Hummel. Unlike his predecessors, Witt also includes a Minuet whose Ländler-like trio is particularly engaging. Indeed, the quality of the invention is by no means to be sniffed at, with the good-humoured finale particularly successful in this vivid performance. The recording is first class – remarkably present and realistic.

Septet (for Clarinet, Horn, Bassoon, 2 Violins, Viola, Cello & Double bass)

🔑  MDG 308 0232. Charis-Ens. – KREUTZER: Septet ***

There is much attractive interplay between the instruments in Witt's pleasing Septet and, if it isn't quite as inspired as the sparkling Kreutzer work, it is still enjoyable, with its attractive melodies, a nicely varied Adagio and an easy-going manner – the finale especially so. It receives a first-class performance and recording.

WOLF, Hugo (1860–1903)

Italian Serenade in G

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82112-2 (2). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin – MOZART: Divertimento 1, etc.; SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht; WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll ***

Ⓑ  EMI 3 66557-2. Formosa Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet; MOZART: String Quartet 14; SCHUBERT: Quartettsatz ***

() Biddulph mono LAB 098. Budapest Qt – GRIEG; SIBELIUS: Quartets ***

Seldom heard in the concert hall (it is too short to fit in today's sparse two- and three-work programmes), Wolf's Italian Serenade used to be more familiar as it fitted neatly on two 78 r.p.m. sides. Menuhin's performance of the chamber orchestral version is full of charm and vivacity, and is vividly recorded.

The prize-winning Formosa Quartet from Taiwan give a brisk and incisive reading of Wolf's charming piece, which yet has plenty of sparkle, a fine fill-up for their brilliant disc in EMI's Debut series.

A welcome reissue on Biddulph – the first on CD – of the 1933 pioneering Italian Serenade. It has a spring in its step and a lightness of touch that are almost unique, and it is well transferred here by Ward Marston. The couplings also show how special this ensemble was in the 1930s.

Italian Serenade; Penthesilea (symphonic poem); Scherzo and Finale; Der Corregidor (opera): Prelude and Intermezzo

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49582-2. O de Paris, Barenboim

For those who only know Wolf's Italian Serenade and enjoy the subtle word-painting of the Lieder, this orchestral collection will come as something of a shock. The early three-part symphonic poem, Penthesilea (1883–5), is turbulently and voluptuously romantic in a style of post-Lisztian hyperbole, while the Prelude to Der Corregidor is Wagnerian in its expansive opulence. Barenboim plays both with uninhibited exuberance and almost convinces the listener that Penthesilea is worthy of standing alongside the music of Strauss. The Intermezzo, however, is almost in the style of French ballet music, and the well-known Serenade, of course, is similarly lightweight and sunny. The Scherzo and Finale of 1876–7 show the precocious skill of an 18-year-old: it is music of more than a little substance and felicitously scored, although Wagner briefly raises his head again in the Finale. Barenboim makes the very most of all these pieces, and they are played with much conviction. The recording is rather resonant but otherwise very good.

String Quartet in D min.; Intermezzo in E flat; Italian Serenade in G

🔑 Ⓜ  CPO CPO 999 529-2. Auryn Qt

String Quartet in D min.; Italian Serenade

 Häns. C.93024. Fine Arts Qt

Hugo Wolf's massive String Quartet may be a student work, but in its concentration and complexity it harks back to late Beethoven, as well as to Wagner. The formidable first movement leads to a slow movement of heavenly length, here interpreted with hushed intensity by the young Auryn Quartet. Both in the Quartet and in the other two works, including the winningly exuberant Italian Serenade, the playing amply makes up in its warmth and spontaneity for any slight lack of polish. Warm, full sound.

This Hänssler Fine Arts performance is the only other version of the Quartet currently available, and it is well played by this long-established American group in the pleasing acoustics of the SudWestfunk Studios in Baden-Baden. However, the CPO disc is even finer and offers more music.

6 alte Weisen; 18 Goethe Lieder; 3 Mörike Lieder; 6 Lieder für eine Frauerstimme; Italienisches Liederbuch (25 Lieder); Spanisches Liederbuch (2 Lieder); Sonnne der Schlummerlosen; Die Zigeunerin

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 3 80040-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Moore

These two discs contain some of the very finest singing of Wolf songs ever recorded. Walter Legge was the force behind the first major Wolf recording project on 78s in the 1930s, but in many ways the achievement of Schwarzkopf, and certainly her vocal finesse, go even further. The recordings, made between 1956 and 1965, still sound splendid and the glorious singing is matched by Gerald Moore's inspired accompaniment. The documentation includes photographs taken at the sessions, and full texts and translations.

Eichendorf Lieder; Goethe Lieder; Mörike Lieder

🔑 * EMI 3 42256-2. Bostridge, Pappano (piano)

Ian Bostridge here turns his very special vocal personality and understanding of word-meanings to a perfectly chosen Wolf collection with triumphant success. Antonio Pappano puts down his baton to accompany (or, one should rather say, partner) him with wonderful sensitivity. There is little point in detailing individual songs; everything here is wonderfully refreshing, and these perfectly matched artists are beautifully recorded.

Goethe Lieder

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67130. McGreevy, Johnson

Geraldine McGreevy, winner of the 1996 Kathleen Ferrier Award, makes a fresh and pure-toned partner for Graham Johnson in a challenging selection of Wolf's settings of Goethe, with all but two of the 24 songs coming from the great Goethe songbook of his maturity in 1888–9. As ever, Johnson provides the most searching and illuminating notes on each song, enhancing enjoyment greatly with his words as well as his playing, but it is good to welcome so sensitive and responsive a young Lieder-singer as McGreevy, who here triumphs over even the most demanding of challenges. So it is good to have readings of the four Mignon songs (the three regular ones plus Kennst du das Land), which bring out the mystery of the writing with the benefit of girlish tone, apt for Goethe's heroine. Kennst du das Land is the more moving for that, with McGreevy providing a thrilling crescendo in the last stanza, perfectly controlled. Yet she responds to the lighter songs beautifully too, with a fine feeling for word-meaning. Excellent, well-balanced sound.

Mörike Lieder: An eine Aeolsharfe; Bei einer Trauung; Denk' es, o Seele!; Heimweh; Im Frühling; Jägerlied; Lied eines Verliebten

 BBC (ADD) BBCB 8015-2. Pears, Britten – BRITTEN: On his island, etc.; SCHUBERT: 7 Lieder  (with ARNE: Come away death; Under the greenwood tree; QUILTER: O mistress mine; WARLOCK: Take, o take those lips away; TIPPETT: Come unto these yellow sands ***)

In the BBC's sensitive performances of seven of Wolf's Mörike settings – recorded at the Snape Maltings in 1972, not long before Britten was stricken by terminal illness – these unfailingly convey a sense of spontaneity, capturing the inspiration of the moment in a way that is rare on disc, thanks above all to Britten's accompaniments. Excellent radio sound.

(i) 3 Christmas Songs: Auf ein altes Bild; Nun wandre, Maria; Schlafendes Jesuskind; (ii) 3 Michelangelo Lieder: Alles endet, was entstehet; Fühlt meine Seele; Wohl denk' ich oft

Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCB 8011-2. (i) Pears; (ii) Shirley-Quirk, Britten – SCHUBERT: 11 Lieder ***

John Shirley-Quirk in his singing of three of Wolf's Michelangelo settings at the 1971 Aldeburgh Festival has never been more mellifluous on disc, just as sensitive in his treatment of Lieder as the others, and the whole programme is delightfully rounded off by Pears's charming performances of the three Wolf Christmas songs. Excellent sound.

Italienisches Liederbuch (complete)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66760. Lott, Schreier, Johnson

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 62650-2. Schwarzkopf, Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

(*) Ondine ODE 998-2D. Isokoski, Skovhus, Viitasalo

Graham Johnson conjures up music-making full of magic, compelling from first to last. Yet, so far from being intrusive in his playing, he consistently heightens the experience, drawing out from Felicity Lott one of her most intense and detailed performances on record, totally individual. Peter Schreier, one of the supreme masters of Lieder today, also responds to this characterful accompanist; and having a tenor instead of the usual baritone brings many benefits in this sharply pointed sequence. The triumph of this issue is crowned by the substantial booklet provided in the package, containing Johnson's uniquely perceptive commentary on each song – alone worth the price of the disc. Excellent sound.

Few artists today can match the searching perception of these two great singers in this music, with Fischer-Dieskau using his sweetest tones and Schwarzkopf ranging through all the many emotions inspired by love. Gerald Moore is at his finest, and the well-balanced (1969) recording sounds better than ever.

The Ondine version offers a well-mannered reading, generally well sung but undercharacterized to the point of blandness. One could never imagine that either of the singers in their painstaking politeness might represent a character close to the soil. The accompaniments of Marita Viitasalo are similarly faithful but dull.

Spanisches Liederbuch (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 726-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

In this superb DG reissue, the sacred songs provide a dark, intense prelude, with Fischer-Dieskau at his very finest, sustaining slow tempi impeccably. Schwarzkopf's dedication comes out in the three songs suitable for a woman's voice; but it is in the secular songs, particularly those which contain laughter in the music, where she is at her most memorable. Gerald Moore is balanced rather too backwardly – something the transfer cannot correct – but gives superb support.

WOLF-FERRARI, Ermanno
(1876–1948)

L'amore medico: Overture & Intermezzi. Il campiello: Intermezzo & Ritornello. La dama boba: Overture. I gioielli della Madonna: Suite. I quattro rusteghi: Prelude & Intermezzo. Il segreto di Susanna: Overture & Intermezzo. (i) Suite Concertino in F, for bassoon and orchestra, Op. 16

Ⓝ * Chan. 10511. BBC PO, Noseda with (i) Geoghegan

A warm welcome to a superb collection of Wolf-Ferrari's sparkling orchestral music. Beginning with the dramatic Festa popolare from The Jewels of the Madonna, Wolf-Ferrari provide an endless succession of sweetly tuneful music with ear-tickling orchestrations, lively dances contrasting with beautiful Intermezzi, such as the delicately delicious one from I quattro rusteghi. The Suite Concertino in F is a great rarity and what a charmer it is to, with the superb bassoonist Karen Geoghegan, bringing out all the colour of this score. The second movement, Strimpellata, is especially catchy, but this CD abounds in catchy melodies. The Overture to Il segreto di Susanna sparkles brightly, and the scurrying string writing in the Overture to the opera L'amore medico is exhilarating. The Chandos recording is first class, with the deep, resonant bass drum in L'amore medico marvellously captured.

L'amore medico: Overture; Il campiello: Intermezzo; Ritornello; La dama bomba: Overture; I gioielli della Madonna (suite); I quattro rusteghi: Prelude & Intermezzo; Il segreto di Susanna: Overture

🔑  ASV CDDCA 861. RPO, Serebrier

Although the situation is currently changing, Wolf-Ferrari has long held a permanent place in the catalogue only with recordings of his operatic intermezzi – not surprising, perhaps, when they are so readily tuneful and charmingly scored. Serebrier conjures at times exquisite playing from the RPO (especially the strings) and, even though he takes Susanna's sparkling Overture slightly slower than usual, it is hardly less successful. What is specially memorable is his delicate treatment of the gossamer string-pieces from I quattro rusteghi and the Ritornello from Il campiello, which almost have a Beecham touch. The ASV recording, made in the Henry Wood Hall, is open and indeed transparent and fresh.

Il campiello: Prelude; Ritornello; Intermezzo. The Inquisitive Woman: Overture. Jewels of the Madonna: Neapolitan dance. The School for Fathers: Intermezzo. Susanna's secret: Overture. Serenade for strings

🔑 Ⓜ * Berlin Classics 0091772BC. Berlin RSO, Rögner

Rögner's collection comes from the late 1970s and has the advantage of natural, warmly resonant analogue sound which gives these attractive pieces a pleasing hall ambience. He offers an aptly paced, sparkling account of Susanna's Secret, while the sprightly Inquisitive Woman Overture, with its songful theme for the oboe, is hardly less winning, and a real find. The Berlin Orchestra play it with the lightest rhythmic touch, and are hardly less persuasive in the Neapolitan Dance, a brilliant show piece of which they take full advantage. The charming Intermezzo from The School for Fathers is given with fragile delicacy and the music from Il campiello is just as delectable; both the Prelude and Ritornello have a haunting atmosphere. The programme ends with a captivating account of the String Serenade, which charms and touches the listener by turns.

(i) Cello Concerto in C (Invocazione), Op. 31; Sinfonia Brevis in E flat, Op. 28

(BB)  CPO CPO 999 278-2. (i) Rivinius; Frankfurt RSO, Francis

Wolf-Ferrari's Cello Concerto, like the Violin Concerto, is a considerable work and its title Invocazione is well chosen. The opening movements are both marked Tranquillo, and even the use of a theme very like 'Three blind mice' does not rob the first of its serenity. The gay, dancing finale maintains the work's lightness of texture and feeling. The first movement of the Sinfonia brevis tries to sustain this tranquil mood, and finally does so at the close, after frequent interruptions, often quite boisterous. The jaunty Capriccio which follows acts as a colourful Scherzo and might well be another of those intermezzi. The Adagio is both a barcarolle and a threnody, and again features a solo cello, pensive and darker voiced than in the concerto. The finale dances away in a jiggy tarantella rhythm and ends in cheerful buoyancy. The performances here are full of life and feeling, and are given a vividly spacious recording.

Complete Wind Concertos: (i) Concertino in A flat, Op. 34, for Cor anglais, Strings & 2 Horns; Idillio-Concertino for oboe & small orchestra; (ii) Suite-Concertino in F, Op. 16, for bassoon & small orchestra

🔑  CPO 777 157-2. O di Padova e del Veneto, Hamer; with (i) Ciacci; (ii) Carlini

A delightful collection. There is an unpretentious charm to the opening Idillio-Concertino; the slow movement is richly haunting, and a tuneful, pastoral quality pervades the other three movements. The Suite-Concertino's opening movement is an atmospheric Notturno with distinct colourings by the bassoon. This is followed by a short but tuneful Strimpellata which is delightfully catchy. A graceful Canzone succeeds this, and the work ends in a tuneful and lively Andante con moto. Both these works were premièred in Rome in 1933. The Concertino was premièred posthumously in Salzburg in 1955, yet it is imbued with the nostalgic charm of the earlier works. The quirky Capriccio movement is especially enjoyable and the rather regal finale is very memorable too. Sensitive and fresh performances in excellent sound.

(i) Violin Concerto in D, Op. 26; Serenade for Strings

🔑 (BB)  CPO CPO 999 271-2. (i) Hoelscher; Frankfurt RSO, Francis

Wolf-Ferrari's warmly romantic Violin Concerto captures the listener's ear from the very opening, and Ulf Hoelscher is a superbly responsive soloist. The Romanza opens with ethereal delicacy, but passion soon comes to the surface and is always ready to burst into the Improviso third movement. The jolly, sparkling Rondo finale is in the best traditional mode of classical concerto finales. Again Hoelscher is on his mettle: he never made a better record than this, and his exquisite playing of the long cadenza-soliloquy towards the movement's close is especially fine. The String Serenade is an extraordinarily accomplished and individual four-movement student work, genuinely inspired, and it is most persuasively played here, with a more passionate, less innocent performance than Heinz Rögner gives in his collection above. First-class recording.

The Jewels of the Madonna: Dances & Intermezzi; School for Fathers: Overture & Intermezzo; Susanna's Secret: Overture

() Testament mono SBT 1327. Philh. O, Mackerras – PONCHIELLI: La Gioconda: Dance of the Hours ; VERDI: Overtures and ballet music. ()

As the opening section in this mixed bag of Mackerras's recordings from the 1950s, the charming Wolf-Ferrari pieces are delectably done, not just popular favourites like the Overture to Susanna's Secret and the second Intermezzo from The Jewels of the Madonna, but the other miniatures too. The mono recording is clear and well balanced.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Piano Trios 1 in D, Op. 5; 2 in F sharp, Op. 7

 ASV CDDCA 935. Raphael Trio

Wolf-Ferrari wrote these two ambitious Piano Trios at the very beginning of his career. They may not be masterpieces, but the large-scale first movements show him as a fine craftsman, and more importantly, his themes already show the gift of easy memorability which marks his other major works. So the slow movement of 1 is like a Mascagni lament, and the chattering finale might be a sketch for an operatic interlude. 2 is odder in its layout, with the first movement twice as long as the other two put together, but with well-disciplined performances from the Raphael Trio, an American group, the colour and charm of the writing is persuasively brought out.

La vedova scaltra (opera; complete)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.660225/6 (2). Sollied, Muraro, D'Aguanno, Milhofer, Zanellato, Rossi, Esposito, La Fenice, Venice, Ch. & O, Martin

Wolf-Ferrari's La vedova scaltra is a melodic feast. One attractive melody follows on from another and the charm found in his better-known overture and intermezzi is in abundance here. The story about the heroine, Rosaura concerns her four hopeful suitors, whom she meets in various disguises to find the one who can demonstrate his sincerity, is written very much in the opera buffa tradition. The lead is very well sung by Anne-Lise Sollied, though her maid, Marionette, sung by Elena Rossi, is rather shrill. The men are quite characterful but some seem to have rather too much wobble. This live performance certainly sounds vivid, though the opera house acoustic is rather dry. No texts are included but it is an inexpensive way to acquire a rare and charming opera.

WÖLFL, Joseph (1773–1812)

Piano Concertos 1, Op. 20; 4 (The Calm): Andante only. 5 (Grand Military), Op. 43; 6 (The Cuckoo), Op. 49

Ⓝ  CPO 777 373-2. Kronenberg, SWR RO, Kaiserslautern, Moesus

Hardly a well-known name today, Joseph Wölfl enjoyed considerable success in his day, both as a composer and virtuoso pianist, in Vienna, Paris and London. Piano Concerto 1 is classically elegant, in the manner of a Mozartian concerto, full of charm and some nice colourings, such as the 'hunting' horns at the beginning of the finale. The Grand Military Concerto is much more dramatic, with its stormy introduction and military music elements running throughout the first movement. The slow movement is of delicate charm, and the finale is especially catchy and tuneful. The Cuckoo Concerto is so-called because of its 'cuckoo' motive at the beginning of the finale. It is another expertly written, charming concerto of much melodic appeal and a certain wit. The CD ends with a pleasing alternative slow-movement from the First Piano Concerto used in the London printing of the score. First rate performances and sound and copious sleeve notes, as usual, from this source. A must for all lovers of rare early nineteenth-century repertoire.

WOOD, Charles (1866–1926)

Anthems and Hymn Anthems: Ascension Hymn; The Earth trembled; Expectans expectavi; God omnipotent reigneth; Haec dies; I am risen; I will call upon God; Jesu the very thought is sweet; O King most high; O Lord rebuke me not; O Lord that seest from yon starry Heights; O Most Merciful; O Thou sweetest source; Sunlight all golden; This is the Day; 'Tis the Day of Resurrection; True love's the gift. (i) (Organ) Preludes: Martyrs; Old 104th; Old 132nd; Old 136th; Psalm 23; York Tune

 Priory PRCD 754. Gonville & Caius College, Cambridge Ch., Webber; Roberts; (i) Uglow (organ)

The career of the Anglo-Irish composer Charles Wood ran parallel with that of his better-known colleague, Stanford, whom he succeeded as Professor of Composition at the Royal College of Music. Wood's music is less flamboyant, less innovatory than Stanford's but his anthems and hymn-anthems form a rich part of the fabric of Anglican church music. If the opening O thou sweetest source is impressive in its very simplicity, the gleaming brightness of Sunlight all golden does not belie its title, and God omnipotent reigneth, underpinned by the organ, is boldly arresting. Yet one of the most memorable items, the unaccompanied Jesu, the very thought is sweet is quite brief, eloquently setting a melody from the Piae Cantiones of 1582. If Wood's harmonic language is not forward-looking, his music is of quality and often individual, as in his Latin settings, the jubilant Haec dies and the very touching Expectans expectavi, written in memory of his son, killed in the First World War. The Organ Preludes draw on old church melodies and are comparatively conventional in style, but very well played, and here used effectively as interludes. Indeed the presentation could hardly be bettered, the choir singing with fervour and rich tonal blending. The recording is excellent.

WOOD, Haydn (1882–1959)

Apollo Overture; A Brown Bird Singing (paraphrase for orchestra); London Cameos (suite); Miniature Overture: The City; St James's Park in the Spring; A State Ball at Buckingham Palace; Mannin Veen (Manx tone-poem); Moods (suite): Joyousness (concert waltz). Mylecharane (rhapsody); The Seafarer (A Nautical Rhapsody); Serenade to Youth; Sketch of a Dandy

🔑  Marco 8.223402. Czech-Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Leaper

Haydn Wood, an almost exact contemporary of Eric Coates and nearly as talented, spent his childhood on the Isle of Man, and much of his best music is permeated with Manx folk-themes (original or simulated). Mannin Veen ('Dear Isle of Man') is a splendid piece, based on four such folksongs. The companion rhapsody, Mylecharane, also uses folk material, if less memorably, and The Seafarer is a wittily scored selection of famous shanties, neatly stitched together. The only failure here is Apollo, which uses less interesting material and is over-ambitious and inflated. But the English waltzes are enchanting confections and Sketch of a Dandy is frothy and elegant. Adrian Leaper is clearly much in sympathy with this repertoire and knows just how to pace it; his Czech players obviously relish the easy tunefulness and the sheer craft of the writing. With excellent recording in what is surely an ideal acoustic, this is very highly recommendable.

A Day in Fairyland Suite: Dance of a Whimsical Elf; An Evening Song; Frescoes Suite; London Landmarks: Horse Guards March; A Manx Rhapsody; May-Day Overture; Paris Suite; Roses of Picardy; Soliloquy; Variations on a Once Popular Humorous Song

 Marco 8.223605. Czech-Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Tomlinson

The second CD opens with the charming May-Day Overture, with its dreamy sound-picture of dawn, giving way to the day's festivities. The Variations are effective, and the composer's Paris Suite introduces a distinct Gallic flavour: the Montmartre March is especially enjoyable. Wood's beloved Isle of Man inspired the Manx Rhapsody, which finds the composer again in his attractive folksy-mode, and the composer's most famous piece, Roses of Picardy, is a slightly dated highlight of this volume. The rest of the programme is equally enjoyable, and the performances, this time with Ernest Tomlinson, are excellent.

Piano Concerto in D min.

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67127. Milne, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – HOLBROOKE: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Haydn Wood writes fluently and attractively throughout the Concerto, both for the piano and the orchestra, with echoes of Grieg and Rachmaninov. With an English accent, it establishes itself as one of the more striking British piano concertos of the period. Brilliant playing from Hamish Milne and warm, well-balanced recording.

WOOD, Hugh (born 1932)

Symphony; (i) Scenes from Comus

🔑  NMC NMCD 070. BBC SO, A. Davis; (i) with McGreevy, Norman

Hugh Wood's powerful Symphony, written in the late 1970s and early 1980s, is a major addition to British symphonic repertoire, in a direct line from Walton's First. If not so immediately approachable, it readily responds to repeated listening, for it is cogently argued and gripping from the first note to the last. Drama of a semi-theatrical nature is the composer's springboard and the opening Tempesta is violently histrionic, yet has an underlying dark lyricism directly related to Wagner's Die Walküre and the passion of Siegmund and Sieglinde. Their love motif is quoted to make the derivation clear and the long Elegia slow movement is headed by a classical Greek quotation which draws a connection with Siegmund's Todesverkündigung. Later there is an unexpected fragment from Mozart: the flute-and-drum 'ordeal' sequence in Die Zauberflöte. The throbbing Scherzo draws on the work's basic ideas, but fragmented into a powerful con fuoco. The energy subsides and with delicate colouring from horns, piccolo flute and glockenspiel we are led to the disconsolate calm of the opening of the passacaglia finale, which is finally to end the work with a passionate, triumphantly positive acclamation.

The Scenes from Comus are not incidental music for Milton's masque, but a highly atmospheric symphonic narrative in eight sections with vocalizations, confidently sung by Daniel Norman (Comus) and Geraldine McGreevy. As the 'Lady' of the narrative, she is enchanted by the son of Circe after being abducted in The Wild Wood, where in Wood's setting she responds willingly to the following orgiastic dances. The finale duet Sabrina Fair brings a mood of ecstatic serenity and this remarkably imaginative work ends with a peaceful epilogue. Sir Andrew Davis conducts throughout with mastery and a total identification with the music of both works, each of which resonates in the memory, but especially the symphony. The recording is splendid.

String Quartets 1 & 2; (ii) The Horses (3 Songs of Poems by Ted Hughes), Op. 10; The Rider Victory (4 Songs of Poems by Edwin Muir), Op. 11

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 304 (i) Dartington String Qt; (ii) Cantelo, Hamburger (with PRIAULX RAINER: Quanta; String Trio; LENNOX BERKELEY: Duo for Cello & Piano, Op. 18, Part 1; PETER RACINE FRICKER: Cello Sonata, Op. 26; MARTIN DALBY: Variations for Cello & Piano; MCCABE: Partita for Solo Cello ***)

Hugh Wood's thoughtful music deserves representation on record, particularly in performances as strong and effective as these. The First Quartet, dating from the early 1960s, reveals a continuing debt to Berg, but with the Second Quartet Wood develops his own more concentrated style in a formidably argued single movement of 39 sections. The two sets of songs, also atonal in idiom, yet reveal a sympathetic reliance on conventional values. The recording matches the excellence of the performances.

WORDSWORTH, William (1908–88)

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 34; 3 in C, Op. 48

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 207. LPO, Braithwaite

William Wordsworth was a direct descendant of the poet's brother, Christopher; on the evidence of this disc, he was a real symphonist. The Second, dedicated to Tovey, has a real sense of space; it is distinctly Nordic in atmosphere and there is an unhurried sense of growth. It is serious, thoughtful music, both well crafted and well laid out for the orchestra. At times it almost suggests Sibelius or Walter Piston in the way it moves, though not in its accents; and the writing is both powerful and imaginative. The Third is less concentrated and less personal in utterance, but all the same this is music of integrity, and readers who enjoy, say, the symphonies of Edmund Rubbra should sample the Second Symphony. Nicholas Braithwaite gives a carefully prepared and dedicated account of it, and the recording is up to the usual high standard one expects from this label.

WRIGHT, Margot (1911–2000)

(i; ii) Cello Sonata; (iii) Improvisation for Solo Clarinet; (iv; ii) 3 Northumbrian Folksongs for Viola & Piano; (ii; v) Piano Quintet in D minor; (vi; ii; iii) Fear no more the heat o' the sun; 3 Songs with Clarinet Obbligato

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7109 (i) Phelps; (ii) Moll; (iii) Braithwaite; (iv) Wright; (v) Camilli Qt; (vi) Morgan

The earliest piece here is the Cello Sonata (1930) and perhaps the finest the Piano Quintet. Margot Wright was much in demand as a pianist and was Kathleen Ferrier's partner. Eventually her role as a practising musician and a teacher displaced composition at the centre of her life. Her language is conservative and diatonic but she has a natural feeling for line and development, as the first movement of the Quintet shows. There are many imaginative things in her music, which makes one regret that recognition was never sufficient to encourage her to pursue her own creative path. The Piano Quintet is a work of quality and played with evident dedication: the violist, incidentally, is the daughter of the composer. Very natural recorded sound.

XENAKIS, Iannis (1922–2001)

Antikhthon; Aroura; (i) Synaphai (Conxities for piano & orchestra)

Ⓜ  Explore (ADD) EXP 0047. New Philh. O, Howarth; (i) with Madge

Using higher mathematics as well as a computer (slide-rule and graph paper to hand), Xenakis manages to produce works which to some ears actually sound like music, but to others are incomprehensible. The composer's imagination, which defies any kind of technique, is in no doubt; however, for many the results are barren. The most ambitious of these three works, Antikhthon, is hypnotic in its range of colour, even if it fails to get you thinking of the infinite, as the composer intends. Excellent performances (so far as one can tell) and brilliant recording (from Decca, dating from 1975).

YOST, Michél (1754–86)

Clarinet Concertos 7 in B flat; 8 in E flat; 9 in B flat; 11 in B flat

🔑  MDG 301 0718-2. Klöcker, Prague CO

Not many collectors will have heard of Yost before discovering this CD. But here are four delightfully bubbly Concertos, brimming with excellent tunes and plenty of wit, with any moments of drama soon pushed away with sunny abandon. This is a delightful CD and it is hard to imagine better performances or recordings.

YSAŸE, Eugène (1858–1931)

Amitié, Op. 26

((*)) BBC mono BBCL4060-2. D. Oistrakh, I. Oistrakh, LPO, Sargent – SHOSTAKOVICH: Violin Concertos 1 & 2 ***

Amitié, for two violins and orchestra, is the last of Ysaÿe's six tone-poems and is a piece steeped in the post-Wagnerian tradition which he had assimilated so completely by this time. David and Igor Oistrakh play with great eloquence and were recorded at the Royal Albert Hall in 1961 with very good sound for the period.

6 Sonatas for Solo Violin, Op. 27

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555996. Kaler

Ⓜ  Oehms OC 236. Schmid

 BIS CD 1046. Kavakos

 Chan. 8599. Mordkovitch

Ⓑ  Nim. 1735 (3). Shumsky – BACH; MOZART: Violin Concertos ***

As is well known, the six Sonatas Ysaÿe published in 1924 were written for the six greatest virtuosi of the day: Szigeti, Kreisler, Enescu, Jacques Thibaud and (less well remembered nowadays) Manuel Quiroga and Matthieu Grickboom. They are held in special regard by violinists who enjoy overcoming the technical challenges they pose. Ilya Kaler was a gold medallist in the Sibelius, Paganini and Tchaikovsky competitions and is a virtuoso of the first order. These are commanding accounts, which characterize the particular qualities of each Sonata to impressive effect.

No one investing in Benjamin Schmid's recording (and the outlay is modest) will be disappointed, for these performances are full of imagination and this is satisfying in its own right. However, Kaler makes one see these pieces in a fresher light.

Leonid Kavakos came to notice when he recorded the first version of the Sibelius Concerto for BIS, and he impresses every bit as much here.

Lydia Mordkovitch also plays with great character and variety of colour and she characterizes 4 (the one dedicated to Kreisler, with its references to Bach and the Dies Irae) superbly. These Sonatas can seem like mere exercises, but in her hands they sound really interesting. Natural, warm recorded sound. Recommended.

Oscar Shumsky is a player of the old school. His artistry is everywhere in evidence in this 1982 recording, in the authority and naturalness of his phrasing, the sweetness of his tone and the security of his technique. True, there are one or two moments of imperfect intonation, but there are very few performances (as opposed to recordings) where every note in these impossibly demanding pieces is in perfect place. It is all wonderfully musical and splendidly free as if Shumsky is improvising these pieces. These performances now come in a bargain box celebrating his supreme artistry which can be strongly recommended.

Solo Violin Sonatas, Op. 27/2, 3, 4 & 6

🔑  EMI 5 57384-2. Vengerov – BACH: Toccata & Fugue in D min.; SHCHEDRIN: Balalaika; Echo Sonata ***

Maxim Vengerov gives dazzling performances of the four Ysaÿe Solo Sonatas, making light of the technical problems in warmly spontaneous readings, which are plainly a labour of love. It is a pity that the other two Sonatas could not be included, although the Bach Toccata and the Shchedrin Balalaika are so full of flair one would not want to do without them.

Violin Sonata 1 in G min.

 Sony SK 92938. Skride – BACH: Partita 2; BARTÓK: Solo Violin Sonata ***

Baiba Skride is a Latvian violinist, now in her mid-twenties, who won the Prix Concours at the Queen Elizabeth Competition in Brussels in 2001 when she was 19. She has a flawless technique and makes a wonderful sound, and it is evident from all these pieces that she is a musician first and a virtuoso second: in short, an artist first and foremost. In the Ysaÿe G minor Sonata she is highly persuasive.

ZANDONAI, Riccardo

Francesca da Rimini

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 363. Armiliato, Marchigiana PO & Ch., Barbacini, (Director: Massimo Gasparon; V/D. Rossi)

Dubbed 'the Italian Tristan', Riccardo Zandonai's telling of the legendary love story of Paolo and Francesca is drawn from a play by Gabriele d'Annunzio to a libretto by Tito Ricordi. It is a thoroughly workmanlike piece, attractive in its idiom but with melodies that only rarely stick in the memory. Tito Ricordi before the first performance in 1914 was much more concerned over the success of this piece, for which he had written the libretto, than for the latest opera of Puccini, the composer who brought profits to his publishing firm.

The performance on this DVD under Barbacini is a warm and purposeful one, recorded live in 2004 at the Sferisterio Opera Festival in Macerata. Singing is good if not outstanding, led by the Francesca of Daniela Dessi and the Paolo of Fabio Armiliato. Paolo is one of the three Malatesta brothers, but Francesca is betrothed to Giovanni the Lame, though she thinks she is going to marry the brother she loves, Paolo, dubbed 'the handsome'.

The story echoes that of Tristan and Isolde, and in the opening scene a Jester refers to that legend as well as to the legend of King Arthur and Guinevere. The climax comes when Paolo and Francesca are caught in flagrante and both are killed, a sequence that Zandonai passes over with surprising speed before the final curtain. A flawed work but one well worth hearing in a warm and sympathetic performance like this, with traditional costumes and a stylised, single set.

ZELENKA, Jan (1679–1745)

Complete Orchestral Works: Capriccios 1–5; Concerto a 8 concertanti; Hipocondrie a 7 concertanti; Melodrama de St Wenceslao: Simphonie; Ouverture a 7 concertanti; Symphonie a 8 concertanti

🔑 Ⓜ  CPO 999 897-2 (3). Neu-Erffönete O, Sonnentheil

A contemporary of Bach and Handel, Jan Dismas Zelenka was among the most original composers of the period but is still something of a mystery figure when no portrait survives. Unlike his great contemporaries, he remained an underling in the world of his time. Happily, his music has survived, and this fine collection of his complete orchestral works, is compiled from three separate discs issued earlier. All the works including the five multi-movement Capriccios and the oddly named Hipocondrie, involve elaborate concertante writing and, although the soloists here are not as starry as those on the earlier set (which involved Heinz Holliger and Barry Tuckwell), the use of period instruments instead of modern adds to the freshness and bite, with the natural horns, above all, breathtakingly brilliant in music that ranges wide in its emotions.

Concertante a 8 Concertanti in G, ZWV 186; Hipocondrie a 7 Concertanti in A, ZWV 187; Simphonie a 8 Concertanti in A min., ZWV 189

Ⓑ  DHM 74321 935532. Freiburg Bar. O, von der Golz – PISENDEL: Works for Oboe ***

This attractive coupling, with oboe works by his contemporary, Johann Pisendel, is an excellent way of sampling the somewhat quirky and always spirited output of Jan Dismas Zelenka, and the excellent Freiburg Baroque Orchestra ensures that the performances are both authentic and stimulating. Recommended.

Trios Sonatas 1–6

🔑  ECM 462 542-2 (2). Holliger, Bourgue, Zehetmair, Thuneman, Stoll, Rubin, Jaccotte

With such a starry team it is not surprising that these performances of Zelenka's Trio Sonatas are so spirited and accomplished. They are scored for various colourful combinations of (almost always) two oboes and bassoon, with continuo, the violin taking the upper voice in 3. Zelenka's movements proceed with breathless polyphony of mounting intensity, granting neither players nor listeners any respite. So these works are better approached one at a time, stimulating as they are. Excellent if forward recording.

Trio Sonatas for 2 Oboes, Bassoon & Continuo 2, 5 & 6

 Astrée E 8511. Ens. Zefiro

Here are three of the above Sonatas which favour the scoring for a pair of oboes and bassoon and very piquant they are, although not to be taken all at one go. The playing of Ensemble Zefiro is lively, expressive and polished, and the recording is naturally balanced, with the continuo providing good support. A good choice if you want just a selection of these works.

Lamentations Jeremiae Prophete (Lamentations for Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Eve)

🔑 ⒷⒷ * Hyp. Helios CDH 55106. Chance, Mark Ainsley, George, Chandos Bar. Players

These solo settings of the six Lamentations for the days leading up to Easter reinforce Zelenka's claims as one of the most original composers of his time. The spacious melodic lines and chromatic twists in the harmonic progressions are often very Bachian, but the free-flowing alternation of arioso and recitative is totally distinctive, as is the melismatic obbligato writing for oboes and recorders. All three soloists are excellent: Michael Chance singing with great beauty in the setting for Maundy Thursday and in the closing music, the bass Michael George distinguishing himself on Good Friday, and the tenor John Mark Ainsley equally impressive in the music for Easter Eve. The continuo is aurally beguiling, placed in an atmospheric acoustic, and the relaxed pacing very diverting.

Litaniae de Venerabili Sacramento; Officium Defunctorum: Invitatorium; 3 Lectiones. Motets: Regina coeli laetare; Salve Regina

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67350. Sampson, Outram, Blaze, Gilchrist, George, Harvey, King's Ch. & Consort, King

Though these works were designed for practical use in church and so are rather less radical than much of Zelenka's instrumental music, the substantial introductions demonstrate his skill and inventiveness with instruments, while the writing for voices is consistently fresh and lively. That is particularly so in the two choral works here, the Litanies in 12 brief sections and the final Invitatorium with countertenor soloist and chorus, which like the three Lectiones – each, in effect, a recitative and aria – comes from the valedictory Officium defunctorum, which Zelenka wrote at the time of the death of the Elector Augustus the Strong of Saxony

The magnificent Litanies, for four soloists and chorus with two oboes and strings, range wide in mood and expression, with the lively theme of the second Kyrie returning in the final Agnus Dei. The motet, Regina coeli, is in a simpler style but has a comparable freshness, and the Salve Regina, reworked from music by an anonymous composer in a manner distinctive of Zelenka, is a fine extended solo cantata for soprano. With excellent soloists, led by the soprano Carolyn Sampson, Robert King, with his King's Consort and Choir, directs performances that are both moving and exhilarating.

Magnificats in C & D, ZWV 107–8

🔑  BIS CD 1011. Persson, Nonoshita, Tachikawa, Türk, Urano, Bach Collegium, Japan, Masaaki Suzuki – BACH: Magnificat in D; KUHNAU: Magnificat in C ***

These two Magnificats are quite delightful, very fresh and inventive. Masaaki Suzuki and his fine team of singers and players serve them with enthusiasm and affection, and the recorded sound is absolutely first class.

(i) Missa in D: Missa gratias agimus tibi; 5 Responsoria pro Hebdomada Sancta; Antiphon: Sub tuum praesidium

🔑  Sup. 11 0816-2. (i) Jonášová, Mrázová, Doležal, Mikuláš; Czech PO, Czech Philharmonic Ch., Bělohlávek

This Mass (1730) is a splendid work; the Responsoria (for Maundy Thursday and Good Friday), were composed seven years earlier. The programme is completed with a movingly simple Marian antiphon, written after the Mass. These works could hardly be more authentically or persuasively presented than in these very fine recordings from 1984. Remarkably individual music, distinctively performed and very well recorded.

Missa Dei Filii, ZWV 20; Litaniae Laurentanae, ZWV 152

🔑 Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 82876 60159-2. Argenta, Chance, Prégardien, G. Jones, Stuttgart Chamber Ch., Tafelmusik, Bernius

The Missa Dei Filii ('Mass for the Son of God') is a 'short' Mass, consisting of Kyrie and Gloria only. Some of the movements into which the two sections are divided are brief to the point of being perfunctory, but the splendid soprano solo in the Christe eleison points forward to the magnificent setting of the Gloria, in which the first two sections and the last are wonderfully expansive, ending with a sustainedly ingenious fugue. It seems that Zelenka never heard that Mass, but his Litany, another refreshing piece, was specifically written when the Electress of Saxony was ill. Zelenka, like Bach, happily mixes fugal writing with newer-fangled concertato movements. Bernius provides well-sprung support with his period-instrument group, Tafelmusik, and his excellent soloists and choir.

I Penitenti Sepolcro del Redentore (The Penitents at the Tomb of the Redeemer)

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3785-2. Kožená, Prokeš, Pospíšil, Capella Regia Musicalis, Hugo

Though this second of Zelenka's oratorios, written in 1736 but apparently never performed then, hardly matches his instrumental music in daring, its five arias and linking recitatives are both lively and inventive. The poem of Stefano Palavicini, with an Italian text, brings linked meditations from three biblical figures, not just Mary Magdalene and St Peter from Christ's own lifetime but his ancestor, the Psalmist, King David. When the arias are extended pieces, drama plays little part in the piece, and this performance recorded in Prague in 1994, is not helped by the rather colourless timbre of the tenor Martin Prokeš as King David, making the first aria with its da capo repeat seem very long indeed. The mezzo, Magdalena Kožená, then at the beginning of her career, is quite different, singing superbly in Mary's two big arias as well as the recitatives, already an outstanding artist. As St Peter Michael Pospíšil sings vehemently in his characterful defiance aria, Lingua perfida, condemning the slander which made this outspoken disciple deny Christ, at the expense in places of clean vocalising. A fascinating rarity.

ZEMLINSKY, Alexander von
(1871–1942)

Cymbeline Suite; Ein Tanzpoem; (i) Lyrische Symphonie, Op. 18; Die Seejungfrau; Sinfonietta, Op. 23; (ii) Frühlingsbegräbnis

🔑  EMI 3 72481-2 (3). Cologne Gürzenich O, Conlon; with (i) Isokoski, Skovhus; (ii) Voight, Ray Albert, Kuebler, Düsseldorf Musikvereins State Ch.

This is an excellent collection, splendidly played by the Cologne Gürzenich Orchestra, directed by James Conlon. An experienced devotee of Zemlinsky's music, he could hardly be a more persuasive advocate. His account of the Lyrische Symphonie, with excellent soloists, is as fine as any available, and he is both tender and poetic in Die Seejungfrau, bringing out the evocative beauty; it is a ripely sensuous symphonic poem, based on Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tale about the mermaid. Ein Tanzpoem and the suite from the incidental music for Cymbeline are altogether lighter in feeling and more diverting. Both are imaginatively scored, with luminous textures and colourful use of trumpets and horns as well as strings and woodwind. The central movement of Cymbeline is an attractive setting of Horch, horch! Die Lerche, winningly sung by David Kuebler. Ein Tanzpoem is an ambitious one-Act ballet. Although the writing here is more luscious, Zemlinsky's music has more than a little in common with Glazunov's The Seasons, but with its four sections evoking the changing moods of the hours of the day. Frühlingsbegräbnis ('The Burial of Spring') is a fantasy Cantata in seven brief movements, each richly memorable, featuring soprano and baritone soloists and succulent choral writing. The episodes include a funeral procession of fairies and animals, a preaching woodpecker, and a thunderstorm. The Sinfonietta is a lively, stimulating work and is thoroughly typical of its composer's inventive resource. Altogether this is a highly recommendable collection.

(i) Cymbeline (incidental music); (ii) Lyrische Symphonie, Op. 18

🔑 * Chan. 10069. Czech PO, Beaumont; with (i) Brezina, members of the Bremen Shakespeare Co.; (ii) Karlsen, Grundheber

Along with Die Seejungfrau, the Lyric Symphony is the most performed and recorded of Zemlinsky's works, but this newcomer has a special claim to attention in that it is based on the new critical edition of the score by Beaumont himself. This clears up the odd engravers' and copyists' errors and expunges a few cymbal crashes, which Zemlinsky himself removed during rehearsals. Textual matters aside, this performance is very fine indeed, and in the Norwegian soprano Turid Karlsen and Jaroslav Brezina it has dedicated soloists. A further attraction is the incidental music to Shakespeare's Cymbeline, dating from 1913–15 and also edited by the conductor. Scored for a full-scale orchestra, including triple wind, harp, harmonium, celesta and a substantial array of off-stage instruments, it is full of resource and inventive sonorities. Recommended.

Sinfonietta, Op. 23; Symphony 2 in B flat (1897); Es war einmal: Prelude (original version); Der König Kandaules: Prelude to Act III (orch. Beaumont)

🔑  Chan. 10204. Czech PO, Beaumont

Zemlinsky's Symphony in B flat is rich textured and full of luscious ideas, the four movements linked by a haunting motto theme, with which the work begins and ends. The Sinfonietta, a late work of 1934, was written just after the composer was forced to forced to leave Germany for Switzerland, after the Nazis had taken over. Both these works are highly stimulating and played with great conviction. In between comes a passionately sensuous Mahlerian prelude for the opera Once upon a Time, with a radiant close from the strings and oboe, which is balm to the senses. The darkly passionate Act III Prelude to Zemlinsky's Der König Kandaules has been added for this Chandos reissue of a CD previously available on Nimbus.

Symphonies (i) 1 in D min.; (ii) 2 in B flat

(BB) (*) EMI Encore 3 41446-2. Cologne Gürzenich O, Conlon

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557008. (i) Slovak RSO, Rajter; (ii) Slovak PO, Siepenbusch

The D minor Symphony was the confident work of a 20-year-old student; the B flat Symphony is rather more exploratory, with a striking Scherzo and a strongly lyrical slow movement leading to a passacaglia finale which brings a flavour of Brahms, a wayward middle section where the tension drops, but it ends boldly and vigorously. Both works are scored in a post-Brahmsian way. Conlon is a highly sympathetic advocate and makes a good case for the Second Symphony, especially the quite memorable slow movement, which the Cologne Orchestra play ardently and sympathetically, with a very touching closing section. The recording is full-bodied and quite well detailed.

This apt Naxos coupling of the two Symphonies that Zemlinsky wrote in the 1890s is drawn from two earlier Marco Polo discs, differently coupled. The much more ambitious Symphony 2 of 1897 makes a far sharper impact, both through the performance and the fuller, brighter recording. It is a fine work that richly deserves revival.

Lyrische Symphonie, Op. 18

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 74321 27768-2. Vlatka Orsanic, Johnson, SWFSO, Gielen – BERG: Lyric Suite: 3 Pieces, etc. ****

At speeds markedly faster than usual, Michael Gielen conducts an exceptionally powerful and purposeful account of Zemlinsky's Lyric Symphony. Here the work emerges as very fresh and distinctive in its own right. The playing of the orchestra is outstanding and the two soloists are ideal, singing with clean attack and fresh tone. First-rate recording too. The only snag is that the booklet is totally inadequate, with poor notes and no texts or translations, and not even any identification of the seven Tagore poems used by Zemlinsky in the symphony.

(i; ii) Lyrische Symphonie, Op. 18; (i; iii) Eine florentinische Tragödie, Op. 16; (iv) Psalms 13, Op. 24; 23, Op. 14; (v) 83; (i; vi) Symphonische Gesänge, Op. 20

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca 473 734-2 (2). (i) Concg. O; (ii) Marc, Hagegård; (iii) with Kruse, Dohmen, Vermillion; (iv) Ernst Senff Ch., Berlin RSO; (v) Slovak Phil. Ch., VPO; (vi) White; all cond. Chailly

With the help of Decca's opulent and finely detailed recording of vivid immediacy, Chailly's 1994 account of the Lyrische Symphonie is moving and passionate on the one hand, rapt and poetic on the other, with the Concertgebouw producing ravishing sounds in playing marked by pinpoint ensemble. Håken Hagegård is an outstanding baritone soloist, illuminating in his pointing of words; Alessandra Marc may not have quite such clear diction, but she combines warmth and power with an ability to produce the most beautiful pianissimos. Zemlinsky's setting of the words in his Symphonische Gesänge, from the anthology of black poets in German translation, Afrika singt, brings a much more astringent style, which yet conveys powerful emotions, helped by the fine, intense singing of Willard White. The composer's aptly dramatic setting of Psalm 83 is beautifully performed and richly recorded. Psalm 13 reveals the urgency of Zemlinsky's inspiration – never a revolutionary in the same way as Schoenberg but always inventive and imaginative. Psalm 23 is warm in expression, airy and beautiful, but do not expect a religious atmosphere: this is sensuous music, beautifully played and sung. The rather disagreeable love-triangle story that is the basis of Eine florentinische Tragödie is persuasively done here with three excellent soloists, though one equally enjoys the richly textured score, and it is in some ways better suited to CD than the opera house. The drawback to this Double release is the lack of texts.

(i–iii) Clarinet Trio in D min., Op. 3; (ii–iii) Cello Sonata; 3 Pieces for Cello & Piano

Ⓑ  Naxos 8. 570540 (i) Ottensamer; (ii) Müller; (iii) Hintenhuber

Another attractive collection to demonstrate the melodic immediacy of Zemlinsky's appeal. The Clarinet Trio is lusciously fluent; the Cello Sonata is passionate and lyrical by turns, with a lovely, meditative central Andante. The Three Pieces for Cello and Piano (Humoreske, Lied and Tarantell) are as diverting, varied and attractive as one would expect from this very winning composer. The performances are first rate and the recording has fine immediacy and excellent balance.

String Quartets 1–4; 2 Movements for String Quartet; Malblumen blühten überall

🔑  Chan. 9772 (2). Schoenberg Qt

This set of the four Zemlinsky Quartets is very good indeed and the Dutch-based Schoenberg Quartet have the measure of this strange music. They convey the darker world of the Adagio misterioso of the Two Movements and the Fourth Quartet, composed two years before the Anschluss, as well as the post-Brahmsian gestures of the First. The Malblumen blühten überall is a setting for soprano and string sextet of Dehmel which the Schoenberg Quartet premièred (together with the Two Movements). Very good recordings on which much care has been lavished.

Choral Music: (i) Aurikelchen; (ii; iii) Frühlingsbegräbnis; Frühlingsglaube; Gheimnis; Minnelied; (ii; iv) Hochzeitgesang; Psalms 13, 23 & 83. Orchestral Lieder: (v) 2 Gesänge (for baritone & orchestra); (vi) 6 Maeterlinck Gesänge, Op. 13; (vii) Malblumen blühten überall; (viii) Symphonic Gesänge, Op. 20; (vii) Waldgespräch

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI Gemini 5 86079-2 (2). (i) Mülheimer Kantorei; (ii) Düsseldorf State Musikvereins Ch.; (iii) with Voigt, Albert; (iv) Blum; (v) Schmidt; (vi) Urmana; (vii) Isokoski; (viii) Volle; Gürzenich O & Cologne PO, Conlon

The major choral works here are Zemlinsky's passionate and intense settings of the three Psalms. In a manner recognizable from his operas, the first two bring sensuous writing more apt for the Song of Solomon than the Psalms; the third (83) brings dramatic martial music. Those three items as well as the cantata, The Burial of Spring, in seven compact movments, were recorded live in Cologne and bring warm, committed performances under Conlon as a dedicated Zemlinsky interpreter. The other lighter items were recorded later in the studio.

The two major solo works are both for soprano: Waldgespräch an Eichendorf/Loreley ballad, accompanied by a pair of horns, harp and strings, and Malblumen blühten überall inspired by Schoenberg's Verklaerte Nacht and supported no less alluringly by string sextet. Soile Isokoski responds with passion to both works, and Andreas Schmidt is no less responsive in the Zwei Gesänge , orchestrated by Antony Beaumont, both very Wagnerian in feeling. Michael Volle proves boldly dramatic in the Symphonische Gesänge, and if Violeta Urmana is less than ideally seductive in the Maeterlinck cycle, as always with Zemlinsky the orchestral sounds are as luscious as ever, with Conlon a splendidly supportive accompanist and translations are included.

6 Maeterlinck Lieder, Op. 13

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (IMS) (ADD) 444 871-2 (2). van Nes, Concg. O, Chailly – MAHLER: Symphony 6 ***

Beautifully sung by Jard van Nes in her finest recording to date, these ripely romantic settings of Maeterlinck make an unusual but valuable fill-up for Chailly's rugged and purposeful reading of the Mahler Symphony. The rich, vivid recording captures van Nes's full-throated singing with new firmness.

OPERA

Eine florentinische Tragödie (complete)

 Schwann CD 11625. Soffel, Riegel, Sarabia, Berlin RSO, Albrecht

A Florentine Tragedy presents a simple love triangle: a Florentine merchant returns home to find his sluttish wife with the local prince; but the musical syrup which flows over all the characters makes them repulsive, with motives only dimly defined. The score itself is most accomplished; it is compellingly performed here, more effective on disc than it is in the opera house. First-rate sound.

ZWILICH, Ellen (born 1939)

Symphony 2

 First Edition LCD 002. Louisville O, Leighton Smith – HINDEMITH: Piano Concerto (*) (with LAWHEAD: Aleost ())

Ellen Taaffe Zwilich was a pupil of Dohnányi. Her First Symphony (1982) won a Pulitzer Prize and prompted the San Francisco Orchestra to commission the Second Symphony in 1985. The work is called a 'cello symphony', since the cellos play a dominant role in the musical argument. The invention is solid and well argued, rather than inspired; it is music that commands respect, though it is not easy to discern a voice of strong individuality. Good playing and decent recording.

The two major works here are both for soprano: Waldgespräch, an Eichendorff Lorelei ballad, accompanied by a pair of horns, harp and strings, and Maiblumen blühten überall, inspired by Schoenberg's Verklärte Nacht and accompanied no less alluringly by string sextet. Soile Isokoski responds with passion to both works, and Andreas Schmidt is no less responsive in the Zwei Gesänge, orchestrated by Antony Beaumont, both very Wagnerian in feeling. Michael Volle proves boldly dramatic in the Symphonische Gesänge, and if Violeta Urmana is less than ideally seductive in the Maeterlinck cycle, as always with Zemlinsky the orchestral sounds are as luscious as ever, with Chailly a splendidly supportive accompanist and translations included.

6 Maeterlinck Lieder, Op. 13

(B)  Double Decca (IMS) (ADD) 444 871-2 (2). van Nes, Concg. O, Chailly – MAHLER: Symphony 6 ***

Beautifully sung by Jard van Nes in her finest recording to date, these richly romantic settings of Maeterlinck make an unusual but valuable fill-up for Chailly's rugged and purposeful reading of the Mahler Symphony. The rich, vivid recording captures van Nes's full-throated singing with new firmness.

OPERA

Eine florentinische Tragödie (complete)

 Schwann CD 11625; Soffel, Riegel, Sarabia, Berlin RSO, Albrecht.

A Florentine Tragedy presents a simple love triangle: a Florentine merchant returns home to find his slothful wife with the local prince, but the manic overlap which flows over all the characters makes them repulsive, with emotions only dimly defined. The score itself is more accomplished; it is compellingly performed here, more effective on disc than it is in the opera house. First-rate sound.

ZWILICH, Ellen (born 1939)

Symphony 2

 First Edition LCD 003. Louisville O, Leighton Smith – JOHN SANDERS: Piano Concerto (*) (with [illegible] **(*))

Ellen Taaffe Zwilich was a pupil of Dohnányi. Her First Symphony (1982) won a Pulitzer Prize and prompted the San Francisco Orchestra to commission the Second Symphony in 1985. The work is called a 'cello symphony', since the cellos play a dominant role in the musical argument. The invention is solid and well argued rather than inspired; it is music that commands respect, though it is not easy to discern a voice of strong individuality. Good playing and decent recording.

This completely revised edition of the Penguin Guide reviews the major classical recordings issued and reissued over the past five decades, many of which dominate the catalogue because of their sheer excellence, irrespective of recording dates. More comprehensive than ever before and now updated annually, it indicates key recordings on CD, DVD and enhanced SACD, including those in surround sound. If you want the finest available version of any major classical work (including DVDs of opera and ballet) you will find it listed and assessed in these pages.

THE PENGUIN GUIDE TO RECORDED CLASSICAL MUSIC 2010* OFFERS:

- The pick of the latest CD releases, as well as outstanding established recordings
- Assessment of the impact and importance of video and audio DVDs
- The greatest historic performances, many available in excellent new transfers
- The major period-instrument recordings
- An in-depth appraisal of the best of the budget-priced CDs, including countless recent reissues

◆

'The bible for the discriminating record collector'
David Mellor, Daily Telegraph

◆

'An indispensable and comprehensive survey. Anyone who wants to make sense of all the rival versions of classical music available will find a great deal of illumination' The Times

◆

'More valuable than ever to any serious collector of classical music'
Wall Street Journal

UK £40.00 CAN $50.00 US $40.00 PENGUIN: Music/Reference

read more www.penguin.com

ISBN 978-0-141-04162-9
9 780141 041629

Keeping woodland alive with WOODLAND TRUST